Keith said, "That's shit. They've never punished anyone. The most they did was with Ken Osis. They stripped him, hung him on an A frames thing, showed him lots of needles and whips and he gave in straight away. They'll chain you to that thing, you say, 'I submit,' and then you prostrate yourself in front of the bishop. You'll be naked, and then he will initiate you in the time-honoured way."

"I'll do it."

"Terry Barman will then use his good offices for your future, and you'll be fine."

"Are you here for a while?"

"I'm staying with Yojana for a few days. I sleep with her, as you know."

"Well, why won't you fuck me then?"

"I will if you want. Upstairs?"

Emerging into the hallway, Kathleen stood with her hands on her hips. I told her to mind her own business. Winnie was half way upstairs, and looked uncertain as I pushed past her. Keith followed me into my bedroom, and I both shut my eyes and opened them to look at him while he did the business.

"That was pathetic," I said. "You could at least have hurt me."

Keith then said, with his seed oozing out of me, "Terry will have to give you a shallow fuck. He is rather well-endowed."

"He could go in my rear."

"I think he'd prefer your vagina. But he will be surprised. You may have to explain first that you are not deep at all."

I started crying, and he just paused and looked at me motionless. Keith said that Adam would have to give up on his report completely, or I would not progress to Inglemire and Caffenmere, even if initiated. A printed report would have to be pulped.

"So you do know all about this," I said to him. "You know all about John Barman's plans for Jenny and me."

"For Jenny," he said. "You're optional. If Magellan produces that report, you are toast."

I told him to get dressed, leave me the keys and go. "I still want an uncontested divorce."

"That won't be our final fuck if you stay in the Vanguard."

"No, I suppose not."

He then told me while dressing that Colin Cromer wanted me gone as quickly as possible. "Whether you get the mothballed vicarage at Inglemire is another matter."

"Jenny needs someone to look after her."

"Rhiannon Fleetwood may do it - if not Wheaton, and certainly then not Wales. So you'll be dispensed with totally. Stop Adam and submit or you'll be out."

"Get lost, Keith."

He left me his keys in the bedroom. Kathleen came in to ask me why I'd taken him into my bedroom, so I told her again to mind her own business.

Despite time on my hands, I'd not watched Sea TV recently. On Thursday it had announced on its local news that SMS was closing, delivered in its usual deadpan and unillustrated way.

"This channel is shit," said Kathleen, on Saturday at 6 pm. "Repeats, repeats, adverts."

It did a follow-up report on the decline of the dock, and what this would all mean for our local area. Council politicians spoke of further railway restoration and recreating the casino into a bigger attraction. And up popped the Bishop of Bolingbroke himself - who else? - giving me a shiver. He said that the three towns could become a cultural centre for the east of Foss, as if this would draw in any more visitors. Also on was the local Member of Parliament for Serninsea and Eastern Foss, Stephen James Davison, usually an ignorant Tory twit. He was arguing for 'levelling-up' via better roads and a return non-stop express bus and even a guided busway to and from Wytham. He wanted to see an M16 to link down to an M17 and the M11 extended.

Sunday was next, and of course I would not be in the parish church. Where would I go, if anywhere?

Morning at Wytham (Sunday 15th September)

I decided to have a change of scene and go out to Wytham and a different church. I went in a blouse, a top, a jacket, tight trousers (that's what that minister wore), sensible shoes, and obviously no clerical markings. Why not that chapel I'd seen when at the ordination retreat? After all, I had some possible questions: what's the difference between the Wytham chapel, the Americans (including the charismatic bishop and the Zen minister in America), the independent bishop who had been Unitarian (plus those Free Catholics around him in Mayfair and Birmingham), and Transylvania?

So I parked ten minutes early. I was fortunate on arrival to discover that, whilst this chapel met only once a fortnight in the morning on a Sunday, this was the correct Sunday. Otherwise I would have to have stayed around until the afternoon service. How crackers is that? You can't build a church if it opens at different times on subsequent Sundays.

I was met warmly by an elderly woman at the door who gave me two hymn books, one purple and one green. The purple book was more recent, but the 1985 book itself seemed to have a radical edge for its time. I liked the words, as they were people-centred and didn't have a slavish, dogmatic content. However, I was only the fourth person in until a handful of people arrived more or less at the last minute.

I counted only ten when bearded Charley Darley, the minister, appeared in an open necked shirt and sweater and casual trousers to take the service. He seemed to have more at the top of his trousers this time.

He lit a chalice. There were prayers that seemed to me to be devotions, as no deity was assumed. One Cosmic Prayer linked all people and their unity to forms of energy, being and purpose; our individual lives are patterned under cosmic life and mystery is realised in truth. Well, could be, but how to anchor this? Another prayer linked us as growing from the soil, like trees, water flowing through, working with fungi. Charley joked that he was a fun guy afterwards. Not very solemn then, although he mentioned Schopenhauer and The Will in passing.

To Beatitudo (music) we sang a hymn that said we trust in life, each bearing a cross, praying for strength; given power and faith. It seemed theistic, this, but very loose. Another hymn had apparently familiar words of God giving strength, via difficult pathways, winning living fountains, and God as a guide. In what sense? I wondered. That was the green book. The purple book supplied us with the Hyfrydol tune and the idea that Earth was given as a garden to discover, within which to mature and be interwoven, and a Transylvanian hymn tune - ah! - Sigismund, with text from that land about a stillness and silence carried by the spirit to harmony and the essence of these allowing one to flower.

I thought my flower bulb had been choked off.

His sermon mentioned Paul Tillich in the usual inadequate selective way with his existentialism, and Schleiermacher before him on dependence, but Charley's message was mainly about how we are dependent on this life of localised chaos bubbling up into broader interactions and systems. There was a sense in which 'God' meant the interactions that resulted; indeed he said God could be for some what results from all the cosmic powers at work, and within which we were always dependent and could never be entirely free. Here the actual atheist Schopenhauer and The Will as a kind of energy, "was relevant but possibly misleading."

Jesus was never mentioned, and funnily enough I thought it all rather refreshing.

Afterwards, he and a few remembered me, and was told that the Friday small crowd was generally a different one from the Sunday few.

As for my criticism of the times of opening, Charley said they would be returning the church meeting to a once a week at the same time because it was the only way to build. It meant other churches in his Foss circuit not getting a morning opening. In fact there were three he catered for, one much further down our coast at Wulfstan and one outside some village called Chapel Abbey in a small lane near Thermaby. No one attended that place, but they still took four services a year to extract trust money from a corporation via some bizarre historical link.

Charley was crafty. He wanted to engage me into debate, saying, "If I spoke of resurrection it would be in the context of all that I had just used."

I didn't exactly want to debate, so I said, "I'd do the same."

"You agree with us? Or me - others might put it differently. Meet Doreen Sharp again."

"I agree," I replied. Doreen silently put a saucer with a cup of coffee on it in my hand.

"But you have a different liturgy," he said.

"Yes," I said, "deriving from post-Easter Christian communities. But what is it all about?" I asked.

"Presumably, a focus back on an individual messianic figure, an appointed one," he said, teasing again.

"It depends how you identify the wrapping paper and what is wrapped inside," I said.

He said, "That's suggesting an old fashioned, classical Unitarian, essence-of-it objectivity."

"Anyway," I said, "I don't wish to be rude, Charley, but I wanted to appreciate your service and participate without having to debate."

"Oh," he replied, "That's very positive and possibly revealing. A postmodernist likes particular wrapping papers."

"So do I," I said, "but I don't want to debate!"

"What's happened? Something happened? You remember Rose Barnes? She's our Secretary - our hymn books greeter today."

"Hello Rose. You are pushing at an open door."

"Who loosened the locks?" asked Rose.

"The locks are tightening, actually," I responded.

Another woman, said, "Except we had nearly a dozen people in today for a whole area, and you'll have more than a dozen in a much smaller area."

Charley said, "Bernadette Bolt."

I said, "Well, Bernadette, where I am likely to go next I'll have less than a dozen and likely that's across three churches."

"Bernie, please."

"You're moving?" asked Charley.

"At best, yes."

"At best? Do they know what you believe?" he asked.

"Well, it's not my job to tell them what I believe," I answered. "I tell them what the Church believes."

"You live a lie, then?" asked a man, adding to the crowd around me.

"Dennis Wigmore has been here fifty years," said Charley.

"I don't live a lie, Dennis. I'd rather give people the tools for the job of thinking for themselves," I said.

"Really? Like we do? Openly?" Dennis asked back.

"If I'd have anyone listening. After I teach what the Church teaches, what they then choose to believe is up to them."

"I couldn't do that," Charley said. "Anyway, my Church doesn't 'teach'. What do you mean 'if anyone is listening'?"

"Well, between you and me," I told him, and the others, "there is a possibility of events unfolding that will devastate the local Anglican scene and leave me up a creek without a congregation."

"You're in some sort of a scandal? Is that why you are here?"

"No, I'm not, but some might suffer a bomb-blast that takes in a lot of collateral damage. I just have to fall in and... Oh, I don't know."

"You okay?"

"Yes yes."

"You do look drawn, Linda. You look a little sad, if you don't mind me saying."

"I can cope."

"We have a room we can go in if you'd like to chat one to one."

"No thanks."

"Is all this over in your neck of the woods?"

"Yes, but across Wytham diocese several bombs might go off. Imminently. We get privileged access to the media."

"Yes your lot do."

"I have some other questions," I said. "Doreen, Rose, Bernie, Dennis, join in if you want. My friend's worker, who actually has been ordained as a doorkeeper by some tiny episcopal group, goes online to your lot. And then my friend's still wife and her daughter came from Rumania and their little chapel has got gun placements to shoot at any invaders - it is apparently a very olde worlde version of your outfit, with a catechism even though you reject creeds, and then this same little episcopal group told me about some Unitarian bishop a hundred years ago or so in Hereford or Oxford ordained in India who mixed with one Unitarian minister as high as a kite when in Mayfair. Where is the consistency? Oh - I mustn't forget, your American wing has a charismatic bishop and some retired minister does Zen Buddhism."

"Why do you want consistency?" Dennis asked.

"Well, surely there is a common strand?" I asked back. "I'm utterly puzzled."

Charley said, "It all evolved from the left wing of the Reformation, but a long time ago, some slowly and defensively, some more quickly, some more diversely, and then a few strange deviations and diversions perhaps. This chap ordained as a doorkeeper. Presumably, he - you? - have been in touch with people who refer back to - I know who he is - the Herford chap. Herford his name, Oxford place."

"Ah, yes, a Unitarian bishop called Herford."

"Well, Herford left us, but J. M. Lloyd Thomas didn't. But it was a diversion really, and both were involved a bit with the Mayfair Congregationalist chapel you mention. Lloyd Thomas was a Minister in Birmingham and the Society of Free Catholics constitution was signed in Manchester. So why the doorkeeper ordination?"

"It's something this Liberal Catholic tiny group do."

Rose said, "We have to be careful talking about tiny groups: we are going in that direction!"

"Yes, Rose, Charley - am I all right calling you Charley?"

"You have and you can. So did you meet them as well?"

"Via a friendship contact."

"We're all friends here, even though we're not Quakers! These clerical Liberal Catholics: how liberal are they?"

"Not very doctrinal at all," I replied. "But high. Strong on breeding."

"Hey?" asked Dennis.

"How they ordain. Lines of inheritance."

"That sort of nonsense," Charley said.

"I think so," I replied.

Bernie asked, "Do you envy them, Linda? Er, do you perhaps envy us?"

"Does it actually work?"

Rose said, "We carry on."

"But not with much impact - if I may say."

Charley said, "It's always more than we think. Campaigns, where we offer a niche, can work. Leading others towards equal marriage was one success. Important for me. Do you want to keep in touch with us? By the way, what of that other woman you came with before?"

"Christine is now in that Liberal Catholic group. They ordained her deacon sub-conditione, priest and bishop."

"Bishop indeed! Of whom?"

"No place as such. She does have a ministry."

Some older man listening in and coming nearer said, "Let's play a game then."

"A game?" I asked.

"Ian Doel," said Charley.

Ian continued: "Would you invite Charley to preach in your church?"

"Yes," I said, "I would, so long as he teaches what the Church teaches. I've been brought to a point to realise that Church discipline is important."

"And would you, Charley, invite..."

"Linda," I said.

"Linda to preach in exchange with you?"

"Yes - using material she actually believes."

I said, "So long as I could attempt to justify the connection between the wrapping paper, the goodies inside and the intended outcome."

Ian said, "Certainly. Shall we arrange it then?"

I said, "I'm afraid not. I'm already suspended for doing a liturgy in my church that I should not have done, especially as a curate. It's why I am here. I'm free to roam around. I'm suspended."

"Fascinating," said Charley. "Is that the bomb about to go off?"

"Actually, no."

"So will we see you again? It does not need to be reciprocal. Any time you want, come and preach!"

"That's very generous of you," I said. "But I doubt it really because I've agreed I shouldn't have done what I did; I'll submit to my bishops and obey the rules. If you are in a body, and approve of its purpose, then you ought to obey the rules."

"You erred," said Charley, "and now you won't do it again. But while you are suspended, you've come here. Are you erring again? 'Erring' has become a postmodern word," he added.

"Oh, I know who you mean: that postmodern theologian," I said.

"I've forgotten his name as well. There really is nothing between us, is there?"

"Much more is related. Mark C. Taylor, that's him."

"What else is related?"

"I'd have to whisper it."

"So to the room then, you and me," said Charley. "Thank you everyone, but I'm doing the confidential minister bit now."

So we took our coffees through a door to what was his vestry.

"Go on, I am the only ears here."

"Good. Well, I can tell that you are transgender, and I am intersex. They are different, but we are gender cousins."

"What form of intersex are you?"

"Complete Androgen Insensitivity Syndrome."

"Ah. Female but non-reproductive. And yes I am a female to male transgender. I've taken to changing the too obvious."

"I'm sorry but we had noticed before, Christine and me."

"And others too. I got into some trouble over that. Wood and brass it is for the nay-sayers now. Toleration is a funny thing: it is not quite whole and complete. If I may ask, now we are in here privately, why must you 'submit'? You are paid aren't you, like I am paid?"

"There is a 'What else would I do?' element to it."

"Oh, there often is," Charley said. "We have the odd vacancy - you know, historical trust money pays the wages - but you would have to train and learn, and show you are really interested in this odd and inconsistent small bunch of us."

"Yeah..." I said. (Crumbs, what was I implying?)

"Why do you have to submit?"

"I can't really go into detail because there are confidential aspects on the other side of this. I could choose you as a spiritual confessor. I don't have one at the moment."

"I'm friendly with a Presbyterian Congregationalist. It's not impossible. You sound like you are on a hinge or a doorstep."

"I think," I said, "I'm about to have the door shut."

He asked, "What did you do? Allow these Liberal Catholics to go mad in your parish church?"

"Well done: that's exactly what happened."

"Oh dear. It's a bit like us and the Baptist Union. The fault lines go back a long long way."

"Yes and why you can't be my spiritual confessor. I'll meet your folks back in there," I said.

Everyone else seemed to have a word with me, if only about where I was from. I just wished I'd been someone who might come again and add to their numbers. I'd been nosey, and left feeling a little envious. I was instead committed to becoming boxed in.

Then I was especially naughty. I just could not help myself. Returning to the trainee minister, I asked, "Tell me, Charley, how are you outside of these confines? I mean, are you married?"

"Yes", he said, "to Alan over there."

That snipped my personal enquiry. Becoming a bloke, married to a bloke.

"Religious traditions," I said. "they are something to think about."

He paused slightly with my sudden change of topic. "Okay. Religious traditions are like art movements," he said. "Carriers of memory down a collective river that has tributaries and joins together, and even - pushing the analogy too far - splits and divides. Well, humans build canals."

"Perhaps I must now get back on my boat," I said. "Loos?"

I thought the disabled toilet was really good - full facilities and nappy changing too.

Back with them I said, "I'm going, and thank you ever so much."

I left, asking myself: when all the detailed theology is done, what is left? Liberals ought to be glad when anything is left - a sort of theism, and plenty of individual varieties of interpretation. Stick with the wrapping paper, perhaps. I didn't like his misuse of Paul Tillich. He was a systematic theologian, and I was not. Schleiermacher spoke to people of his time. Schopenhauer's The Will confuses.

I looked a round a few nearby shops but went back towards the car to drive home.

A car pulled up. It was Diana driving.

"Linda," she said. "Get in."

"What are you doing here? Are you following me?"

"Linda. My aunt Frances has a place for you to stay here in Wytham. You need to get safe. It's not safe in Serninsea."

"Get lost," was my response, and I walked on in the other direction from her car's.

I arrived at my SUV and at this point Diana walked over. "Jenny World says they are going to hurt you and we do not know where."

"Good. Then perhaps I can get on with my life and take up John Barman's offer. So thank you but hop it, Diana. Perhaps I can put right what has been so wrong. Go to your aunt's yourself and stop following me."

As I drove home I realised that I wasn't like Jenny, all secularised. There was something left and surely I could develop this. I could imagine being like Charley, although his church was too thin for me.

Too thin? What's that? So what about Geoff, Luis and Christine? I couldn't but think that their route was a fantasy of clergy without people, a fantasy of clerical nothings. Theirs was a 'play Church' that ignored the reality on the ground of struggling through secularisation to keep a congregation.

There was nowhere else for me to go. I would just have to take my punishment and fall in. I arrived back at the tied house in Sutton and felt weary.

Someone had posted the new parish magazine by hand. My written apology was not in there. There was a bland notice instead:

Special Notice: the Reverend Linda Jupitas will not be present at St. Sernin parish church pending decisions about her future. She is not available for contact or comment and please direct any enquiries to the parish priest the Reverend Colin Cromer or any of the Wytham diocese bishops.

That's all it said, but it explained the complete absence of anyone telephoning me about my situation. My name was off the staff list as well. I tried the local parish website. Yep, I was off that. They weren't messing about. I must have become a serious persona non grata. I assumed that there must have been an announcement to the congregation to shun me completely. I'd been disfellowshipped far more effectively than the Jehovah's Witnesses do! My future in a real Church, and not a supposed (by me) play-Church run by Geoff and company, was set. The bishop had given me a road forward, and I would be ready.

A Call and a Vision

I went into the kitchen to prepare tea for myself. Kathleen and Winnie were dolling themselves up for a Vestal Virgins introductory social dinner, Winnie popping in for a third of a glass of red grape juice.

"Just before you go," I said. "Winnie. Sometimes you're here and sometimes, what, you're at your flat? It's fine you being here, but you realise I will have to move out."

Winnie said, "It might be difficult at my place. I don't have a flat; I am at my parents' and Kathleen has never stayed with me at my parents'. You've been very kind. We want to see first how we two get on before moving in with each other, whatever my parents think."

"Very wise," I said. "I'm pleased you're getting on so well. But this house goes back to the church soon. If I did move to Inglemire, and I was allowed to give you a room, well it is a commute for you two back into Serninsea."

Kathleen said, "You're really great, Linda. There is the new tram, we know, but when you have no job you can be stuck in a village and the trams aren't cheap."

They went out.

I went in to the kitchen but just could not be bothered to cook anything. So, I grabbed a loaf to carve, with mature cheese cut lumpily and chutney scooped from a jar into two large rough sandwiches, put on to an oversized plate placed on the table. So unbothered I was to even fill the kettle up, I grabbed a second glass from the cupboard like the one Winnie had put on the draining board and poured in some more of the red grape juice kept in the fridge.

I was sat looking towards the window, seeing the garden and boundary fence, holding and biting into one of the sandwiches.

Hang on. A man, darkened by the window light behind him, was sat on the other side of the table with the other sandwich in his hand and was about to take a bite. I put mine down directly on to the plate.

I said, mouth full, "Who the hell are...?"

He consumed a mouthful and swallowed. "What yer going to do to renew things, like?" he asked, looking directly at me.

I swallowed. "I don't know - how, what, how..." I was compelled to look down at the big plate, and it was empty. I took a bite at my sandwich again and so chewed some more. What was going on?

He, however, holding the sandwich in one hand, drank from a glass of red juice. I swallowed bread and picked up my glass of red juice to take a swig.

Putting his glass down he said, "I'll say yer need a complete change; it must all end and come to new beginnings."

I looked about. Was there anyone else also suddenly present? No. Just him. He looked directly at me. He seemed real enough. But who was he?

He said, "Linda: hear me. All manner of things will be well."

Ah, I knew who it was. I looked directly at him.

"Ken? Ken Osis! Ken, what do you mean?"

I must have blinked. I did a double take, because nothing was blocking the window. There was nothing missing from the other sandwich now on the big plate. But a drop of grape juice containing a crumb of bread were on the table near that far edge. The seat he'd used was tucked-in. Winnie's glass was where it had been.

I think I was suffering from stress, and becoming delirious. When I picked up the other sandwich, I ate it all. Looking again at the wine drop I dabbed my finger on to it to taste it in my mouth as real, and it came with the bread crumb. Grabbing a cloth I'd dropped no crumbs on the table, although I did wipe it, and I completed the washing up.

Ice Baths (Monday 16th September)

The doorbell woke me on Monday morning. The CCTV showed Connie Wilson in black top and skirt and she let herself in with a key. I hadn't any chance to wash or prepare. I went to the stairs, with my wardrobed white cassock thrown over my head. "It's time," she said, inside. "Use your last minutes of freedom to brush your teeth. Black cassock and collar on."

"It's hanging in the downstairs toilet, which I need. I want my bag."

"Leave your phone here. You won't need it. You can have your bag."

A few minutes later I heard Jim Wilson and someone called Blackberry come in the back door way. After completing a shit, she was in the hall in a black cassock and collar and a long blonde hair wig.

"Keys," he said, "to your SUV. I'm insured to drive such a vehicle."

So I gave him them. Blackberry left the house by the front door behind Jim Wilson, to get in my SUV back seat, which he then drove away.

"Wait," said Connie. "We'll go out the back way in five minutes. From now on, 'Yes' is the only answer I want to hear, when it must be a yes, or 'no' when it must be a no."

After a long silence we left and approached her white Astra. If Jim had driven his bottle green Escort, I did not see it. She said, "Get in the back seat and lie down. Answer me!"

"Yes."

She leaned in and bound my wrists behind me in tight cloth handcuffs using velcro. She did the back seat belt and then she got in and drove off.

As we journeyed, she asked, "Have you got knickers on or a bra, Reverend Jupitas?"

"No," I said. I realised I needed another wee.

"Your car Jim drove, that SUV, is the product of your illicit life. Answer me."

"Yes."

We arrived down the side of the two-storey Blue Diamond Club, in Titansea, a wall to the left and a side door into the club on the right. I struggled out and into the building to meet a female assistant in a corridor by that side door. The assistant, in black blouse and trousers, was wearing a white plastic badge with a B and a goose on it.

Connie told the assistant, "She needs a proper bath; don't let her out of that bathroom. It has a toilet?"

"Far end. Disabled."

I said, "I need to go."

"That is not a 'yes' or 'no' statement, Reverend Jupitas. If you speak out of turn again I will punish you. Don't let her out of your sight, Honey - yours or Strawberry's. Now then Reverend, you do what the two assistants tell you. If they have any trouble from you, they are to tell me, and I will punish you. You can go to the toilet when they say. You will have an ice bath in there. Do you understand?"

"Yes."

"Soon, Stephen McPhail will join me and tell you what is going to happen. For now we clean you. If the bishop comes here to see you, you will kneel immediately and not look at his face directly. If you do not kneel or you look at his face, I will certainly punish you. Do you understand me?"

"Yes."

Connie then said. "With no knickers on you won't be on your period."

"No."

"Shame. We might have used that. Over to you, girls. Start with the enema."

I went into the large bathroom with Honey to meet Strawberry inside, also dressed in black and with the same badge on. I reckoned they were in their early twenties. Strawberry took my cassock and collar and hung it on the door peg inside. My shoes were off and I was naked. Strawberry then left the room.

Inside this tiled room was a large free-standing central bath, a disabled toilet behind a door at the far end, with a large vertical mirror to that door's right. On the left side wall was a sink with a cupboard below it and a mirror above it. On the right hand side beyond the tall mirror there was also what seemed to be a massage table against the right wall and a long vertical rod on a stand with a liquid container on top and long tube downwards from it to a plastic tap and inserter at the end.

"Toilet," said Honey.

"Yes, thank you."

"Do not say more than yes or no!"

So I went into the disabled toilet, and pissed and shat as Honey held the door open. When I was done, she shook her head as I therefore didn't pull the loo roll.

"Now is the best time to have an enema."

Honey gestured for me to put my right leg up on to the massage table, which I did.

Strawberry came in pushing a trolley carrying a bucket of ice cubes and water, a sponge, two blocks of hard soap and a tube of some gunge.

Honey stretched up to disconnect the container with tube and took these to the sink to fill it with water. Strawberry knelt and wiped my backside with the very cold wet sponge.

"Filthy cow." Strawberry then cleaned the sponge in the sink.

Honey stretched to reattach the container. Strawberry then greased my anus and the tube was pushed in. With the little tap turned, the water in the container back on the pole slowly disappeared into my bottom. So Honey repeated the process so that my bottom took in a second helping.

Strawberry found a large syringe in the sink cupboard, filled it and used the direct method.

"I don't think..."

"Be quiet," said Strawberry, and pushed on the syringe harder. "One more I think."

After one more I was ready to burst. At least she gave me the dignity of returning to the toilet cubicle where I ejected the water and everything else still up there.

While I was doing that, Honey was filling up the bath with cold water. Strawberry tipped in the ice cubes. Strawberry shook her head at me and so applied the sponge again and washed it in the sink.

Honey said, "Sit in the bath."

In it, I became freezing cold and my teeth started chattering. Then Honey partially filled the bucket from the bath, and tipped the water over my head, some ice cubes hitting me.

Honey said, "We have to keep her hair wet."

Honey and Strawberry then got me to stand in the water, and they soaped me with a hard block of soap each and their own hands. Nothing of me was left untouched as I tried to keep steady on my feet. They went between my buttocks. They even lifted my breasts, one each, to rub the soap bars under them. When I got down into the bath again, I was freezing. My feet seemed to be turning blue.

Stephen McPhail and Connie came into the room. She shouted at me, "Stand up straight when we come in!"

I got up, feet and shins still in the freezing water.

Connie then said, "Look straight ahead. Are you clean, Reverend Jupitas?"

"Yes."

"What have you prepared, Stephen?"

"So the double A frame is up, and we have a wooden bar to go between the two As that we raise to her crotch. Before we attach her with chains, there is a metal topped triangular 'horse' for her to sit on and wait."

"That's new," said Connie.

"It introduces pressure," he said. "The beam across the A frames has been adjusted to raise higher than before because she's got such long legs. I've taken in a good cat o'nine tails, a bullwhip, and various canes thick and thin. Helen has taken in a variety of sterilised needles and some large very sharp metal spikes like skewers. These are for her labia, breasts and hips. Jim can use them when releasing her sins through her blood flowing."

I felt sick, my lower legs and feet freezing cold. I could only think he had said this to frighten me and that they couldn't possibly do it. Nevertheless, my guts were churning again. I let out a fart.

Connie put her hand to Stephen. "I'm sorry Stephen, but I am going to have to do this."

She punched me in the stomach, and I slipped and fell in the bath on to my knees. I was desperate, clamping my rear with my hands.

Then Connie said, "Take her to the shithouse, you two. She can empty her bowels."

Honey said, "She's already been and had an enema."

Connie said, "Well, we'll watch you give her another enema. Just the syringe. Four times of ice cold water."

This happened first, and I ran to the booth, to shit out the water and what else had come down.

Stephen said, "She'll need a whole new ice bath and soaping, and check she is as clean about her arse as if appearing in a DVD. The bishop indicated he wants to see her here."

Jim Wilson came in. "Hi. I don't think anyone followed us."

"Right," said Connie. "Let's leave Honey and Strawberry to their work."

The assistants both nodded and the three of them left.

Honey emptied the bath and Strawberry then left the room. I stood, waiting and shaking, as the cold water filled up. Honey instructed me to get in, and I was already so cold. I sat in and Strawberry returned with another bucket of ice cubes and tipped them out to bounce off me. I stood for the repeated hard soaping, with extra emphasis around my bottom, and then sat so they could tip recovered ice cubes and water over my head several times.

I was told to get out and stand near the tall mirror, and I would have to wait there. At least I was out of that bath.

Stephen McPhail came in again, holding a rectangular wooden slab that had wooden triangular raised edges along it. "Reverend Jupitas, come up here to me and face the door." So I did. "Kneel on this. You are about to receive a visit from Bishop Terry Barman. You speak only when spoken to. Do not look at his face. In fact, keep your head bowed. I cannot emphasise enough the amount of punishment you will receive if you so much as glance at him."

He went out. One triangle length went pressing under both knees, the next one missed, another two dug into my lower shins and the tops of my feet were pressing down on two more across.

Strawberry and Honey were by the sink. My legs were killing me. Then in came a naked man, and all I saw was his enormous penis. I thought that if he could get twenty per cent of that into me, he'd be doing very well. So, the Bishop of Bolingbroke had a huge curled downwards member.

"The Reverend Linda Jupitas. Soon a most holy act will take place, when I initiate you into our authority of the Principatus Theocratic Confraternitati admissis in Ecclesia Anglican Nationalabus. It is otherwise known as the Confraternity of the Theocratic Principality of the English National Church. It is our precious Vanguard. You will then be able to function in The Worshipful Company of the Serninsea Theatrical Players. Recently you were visited by your husband, and you also made love with him - which is very good. You indicated to him that Adam Magellan has become distracted by buying George Wickenby's business and lost interest in his report on my activities. You have not seen him since. Are these matters correct?"

I had to decide to be affirmative. "Yes."

"You see, on such news I have dropped resistance to the Report on the Managerial Efficiency of the Wytham Diocese, now that your ex-temporary lover has lost his interest. It might even be that the report forces the Diocesan to resign and I take his place. More likely me than Julian Worsley. Do you think so?"

"Yes." I kept my head bowed.

"Thinking of that is making me a little erect. Look at it."

"Do you want me to suck it?"

"Now then, the Reverend Jupitas, don't talk out of turn!"

"I'm so..."

"Take your shoe off and kick her back with your toes, Strawberry."

That hurt, on my upper backbone.

He said, "Speak only when you're spoken to! 'Yes' or 'no' is enough. Do you affirm that?"

"Yes."

"Kiss my feet. One each."

I did kiss his bare feet, each one, as my legs went into bruising agony.

"Ah yes. Reverend Jupitas: your husband was so kind in buying out information about me from the Wickenby business. That information is too valuable for a useless prick like Magellan to possess. What you saw in him I do not know. I was Wickenby's client, you know, and he often followed you. And there's your friend, Diana, one of those who persecuted our late friend Ken Osis. Tantamount to murder, really. I'm so pleased about the way you dismissed her in Wytham, after your visit to the heretics on Sunday. And no doubt Christine wants to press her claim on you as her slave. She'll have had sex with you recently, to get her way. Am I right?"

"Yes."

"We are about to prepare you and we are thankful for the creative efforts of Mr. Stephen McPhail, his wife Helen, and of course Mrs. Connie Wilson for looking after you and to the Reverend James Wilson for his diversion with Blackberry and his up and coming theological preparation of you. Don't shake, the Reverend Jupitas". Say 'yes' to Honey and Strawberry in gratitude for their work."

"Yes."

"Soon you will have to indicate to Jim and Connie that you will submit to me, and, given your avoidance tactics recently, only when they are satisfied that you mean what you say will I do the initiation. But then your world will open up. You will be able to take up your duties in the Worshipful Company, initiating others. I will see about installing you as the curate of the Reverend Jenny World into the Inglemire and Caffenmere parish. You will both be very important in serving the Vanguard locally, as well as having occasional travels to Harwich, Hartlepool and surely South Wales. I am sure you will enjoy those trips and initiating new people. You're shaking. Are you cold?"

"Yes."

"Are you a little anxious as well?"

"Yes."

"You should feel some nerves. I will expect you to orgasm; I certainly will, inside you. Look, I'm getting hard already. Remember that we must praise God, the creator and recreator of all we can experience. Touch it with your tongue for my anticipation."

My tongue made contact with the bishop's penis end. He placed his hand on my bowed head and its wet hair. Without further comment he turned and left the room.

Strawberry then tipped ice cold water over my head and down my back, followed by helping me up as I could hardly stand with horizontal indents in my knees, lower legs and feet.

Helen McPhail came in. "Cassock on and collar! Bare feet! I've had a warning call. Honey: please strip off, get a cream sheet from the stores, wrap it around yourself including up your head and get in the back of the second taxi."

With Strawberry's help, I put my cassock back on with the clerical collar properly positioned. My hands were bound in velcro restraints again around my back. My shoes stayed where they were.

Helen said, "Strawberry: thank you. Take your badge off."

Two black cabs faced the direction we'd arrived in and would continue on to rejoin the streets.

Helen said to me, "Look to the right when outside. Helen went first. "Face me." I got into the first taxi's back seat. Helen said, "Lie down and stay down."

At the exit back into the road system, my first taxi cab felt like it went into local streets.

Narrator: Adam Where's Linda? (Monday 16th September)

With Linda gone somewhere I moved swiftly to the curate's house and Kathleen let me in. I asked Kathleen, "You're sure neither of them gave any indication where they were going?"

"Jim Wilson and a woman were a decoy and then they left five minutes after."

"Who was the decoy woman?"

"Likely some sex worker."

"How did they arrive?"

"Walked, I think. They must have parked elsewhere."

"Connie Wilson has an Astra, Jim Wilson often uses it but also drives a green Escort."

"Where are you?" I asked Peter Marshall by mobile phone. He was at a visual observation distance from the casino building.

"Connie Wilson's Astra did not arrive here. The SUV is not here. I saw a woman going to the far door, and a bloke came out as well. They kissed. She went in, he went down the road and got in a car. She then came out, locked the steel door, joined him and they drove off. No one has come back yet."

Kathryn Wickenby was driving towards the Wilsons' vicarage, in the Serninsea Marshes. I received a call from her. She said, "Connie's car, from your description, is not back here, but the green Escort is here."

"All right. Let's try the Blue Diamond Club. Use the bypasses."

Diana arrived at the curate's house. I told her that Christine Vine was in London, but Christine was now aware that Mrs. Wilson had come to take Linda away. I showed Diana the house's outside CCTV recording.

Diana said, "The bastard even let herself in. The diocese will have the keys. I bet that's how they got into Ken Osis's house, when he was found dead. She is in real danger."

All of a sudden we had to get to the back of the house, because the SUV vehicle came back, accompanied by another vehicle. Jim Wilson alone got out of the SUV and into the other vehicle. I passed on to Peter the number plate. I could see Wilson looking around at the extra vehicles in the street.

Diana said, "Do you want me to follow that car?"

"No, we do better to predict where they've gone. You go to the parish church, I'll go to the bishop's house in Caffenmere."

On my way south I paused to receive calls that Diana had arrived at the church and then Kathryn had arrived at the Blue Diamond Club.

I asked each, "No white coloured Astra?"

"No."

"No."

I waited at the front of the bishop's house.

No one was reporting activity until Kathryn rang. "Two black cabs have gone down the side of the club. They're waiting."

"Two taxis?"

"One behind the other. Hang on. I can barely see a blonde haired - I think - woman wrapped in a creamy gown. If that's white her hair is darker. She's getting in a taxi."

"Which one?"

"Second. A woman has come out and now a blonde haired woman in a black cassock. First taxi."

"What they'd do to have a decoy, surely."

"They're going. Hang on. The first cab has turned left, away from the bypass. So there's the dock and Caramel Club that way. The second cab has gone towards the bypass. Ah, a woman has come out of the club's front door. She's smoking."

"Describe her."

"Black trousers, black blouse, twenties."

Anything unusual about her: headgear, badges, tattoos?"

"None of those. I wouldn't be able to see tattoos from here."

"Try the bypass but drive carefully."

Peter said he could see nothing at the casino.

Giving Christine the information so far, a reply suggested Wheaton and especially its old vicarage going up for sale.

Kathryn diverted for Wheaton and I told her to be careful looking around. I decided to call everyone else back to the curate's house, where we could have a conference on what to do.

Gathered together, we decided that Peter would contact the Unitarian minister in Wytham for anything he might have heard to give a clue of her whereabouts.

Keith had visited Linda before Sunday, when Linda had wanted to be treated like rubbish.

"That might have been to show willing," I said.

Diana said Yojana Asthana's SMS job had finished early; she had already retreated to work at the Maa Skelter Guest House of her parents. So Diana set off there.

Peter rang the number on the Wytham Unitarians' website for Charley Darley the minister. Peter utilised the speakerphone. The man with a high-pitched voice said, "She was anxious, but seemed to indicate that she could cope. She'd become free-wheeling with her religion, but was committed to serving the institution despite being suspended or its equivalent." He added that there were a number of half-used larger Anglican properties in Wytham and so would take a look. He'd go as far out as Rabbi Neptune's property for extra parked vehicles.

It took some time, but I received a call from Diana: that she had even asked if a long blonde haired woman had checked in, perhaps with another smaller woman, but the receptionist's denial seemed genuine. "I think I was speaking to Yojana," Diana said. "I didn't see Keith. No Astra."

The only thing for it was to leave Diana in the area, to watch incoming roads, for Peter to go back to near the casino building, and Kathryn drove to be near the Blue Diamond Club again. A thought was the treatment of Ken Osis and that Linda herself might be hung up for punishment. It would need the right sort of room to do it. The McPhails reportedly had strange activity rooms and he made devices. So I went near there but there were no additional vehicles outside or near.

Kathleen and Winnie stayed at Linda's house, in case the telephone rang. (Neither could drive: Kathryn had passed her test and Kathleen had not.)

No one was seeing anything. Linda had simply disappeared. I asked Peter to think outside the box, but he had no ideas. Then he thought of the car showroom. Yes! Sanjay Bunker's money-laundering space. I went there.

When I arrived there were a few people coming out and going in. They were prostitutes and clients. I decided to go in as a potential punter. I could hear noises going on, but unless Linda was held captive in one of the booths or in a small room upstairs, she would not be there. The biggest space available was, really, the showroom - and it was filled with cars. I reported back to the rest my negative impression.

Kathryn said that everything at Wheaton was closed and she was coming back.

Of course it was still possible that Linda was in one of these places, but we had drawn a blank on all of them. The terrible prospect was that she was somewhere else entirely, via the bypass.

I ordered everyone back to the curate's house for a second time so that we could come up with a strategy.

Narrator: Linda Second Location (Monday 16th September)

The taxi arrived behind the casino building, in a minor Titantsea street. The route bumped over the preserved rail tracks to the dock; the road was for the dock itself. I was still down on the back seat, and then Connie Wilson opened the back door. She was now in black leather and shiny black plastic. Her breasts seemed to be covered by leather flaps probably held up by high press studs. A broad leather vertical belt was all that went around her crotch.

"Reverend Linda Jupitas: remember it is 'yes' or 'no' only to anything you are asked by my husband or by me. Otherwise you do not speak. You may have cause at times to cry out. We appreciate that, in our compassion. Do you understand?"

"Yes."

"Now here's a funny thing. There are two security steel doors, in a wheelie bins containing passage from the main road behind a bit of the wall there, one door for our floor above and one for the casino, and yet, here we are, at an outdoors fire escape staircase to such a flimsy door above. I'm right behind you. The door will push open, and we'll be straight into the upper hall, where you will await instructions."

So I climbed these metal steps, still barefoot and with my wrists bound by velcro cloth restraints behind my back. When I arrived at the top, I had thoughts of rolling over the handrail to seriously injure myself or even die on the pavement below. I didn't: I turned right to shove open the fire door with its frosted glass, and when it opened easily I saw what I feared. The double A frames contraption was instantly menacing, laid out on translucent plastic sheets and some black bin bags partly unfolded. Around the hall and its carpet were beds, sofas and low tables. There were windows out to both long sides, curtains across them all, except for this fire door. At the far right narrower end there was a door and, I assumed, space behind. On the narrower wall far left was a single door and window from its left and double doors to its right - presumably for the main entrance and exit involving stairs behind the steel door.

The A frames' central feature was a low central plank - edge up - that could be hoisted up and down on a runner-ratchet device each end that was linked to a handle. A pole went along between each A at the top and one for each foot of the As - three poles in total. There were pulleys and moveable chains with wrist constraints on the top pole across; below on these lower poles were moveable short chains with ankle restraints. Nearby and separate was a 'horse' in the shape of a triangular prism of varnished wood lengths, with a shiny metal strip across the top of the inverted V.

Near the double doors was a box of top soil, alongside which was an emptied bag. We went past this through the double doors on the far right, and these led to a landing. The stairs indeed went down to a steel door. I guessed that it was an inner one of two that led to the dead end passage - turn sharp right to get to the main road.

On this high landing we turned left, directly into a compact area of clothes pegs, two showers and two toilets. There my cassock came off, placed next to my shoes already brought there. I was released from my wrists constraint, and I was walked to a toilet cubicle. Connie waited, door open, while I pissed. I wanted to shit but couldn't.

When I came out she said she'd had enough of me going in these places, and had this 'butt-plug' that went into my rectum. "That's where that's staying," she said. She didn't reattach the velcro handcuffs she held, but she did pull apart the press studs to reveal her breasts.

Marched back completely naked, other than for the insertion, I was paused at the top soil. It must have had honey added, because she rubbed some over my breasts and around my crotch and bottom, and it made me dirty.

Then she pushed me to the prism-shaped 'horse' and I had to struggle to climb up on to it. Connie Wilson's shove on my backside nearly sent me over it. I had to sit on this and view the A frames contraption. The blunt and polished metal edge pushed into my literally soiled crotch, and now the velcro wrist restraints went on again but at the front. It meant that my close together hands and crotch were all I had to stop me falling off, and the focussed narrow pressure came upwards.

Connie Wilson went behind me into the room behind the narrow wall, with a window but its blind down.

My feet could not get a purchase on this 'horse' and thus my crotch hurt more and more. My close together hands hurt as I pressed them down to relieve my crotch. I feared losing balance and falling off and the honey with soil was an extra small irritation. When Connie Wilson came out with a trolley on wheels, I gasped. On the trolley were whips and canes as had been described back at the BDC.

Then she went back in the room, and was gone for some minutes. Next time she came out with a second trolley, and on this were vibrators of various kinds, short needles in clear packets and what looked like skewers in clear packets. I felt sick while still trying to steady myself.

Connie Wilson seemed to be arranging things on these trolleys when Jim Wilson in ordinary clothing and clerical collar came in front of me. He offered me a glass of water, which I could grasp and drink from but it meant me balancing by crotch only on this triangular horse. Given my dry throat I drank it all.

After drinking it I realised I felt a little drowsy but Connie and Jim told me to get off. In my attempt I fell in a heap to the carpet. Getting myself up, my walking was awkward, and only then did the Wilsons grip my arms. I walked on to these clear and black sheets and arrived alongside the A frames contraption. They turned me to face the narrow wall room with its door and window and the double doors to the right, to get my left leg over this low plank edge.

My right leg was stretched out straight and at an angle to have my ankle wrapped in a soft padded cuff with velcro fastening connected to a chain from large metal ring around the pole. My left leg went out straight for the same restraint and connection at the other lower pole. Thus my legs were wide apart. Connie Wilson then raised my wrists to connect with a chain contraption from above. My arms were bent but she then operated these chains so that my arms stretched straight and my heels left the ground. All Jim Wilson did was watch. Then she turned the handle so that the plank rose and pressed into my crotch.

Still drowsy, I wondered at what point Ken Osis had submitted: I recalled then that he did so when faced with instruments. Keith had said they had never actually punished anyone. I had wondered if all this and the displaying was to frighten me.

"I submit," I said, speculatively. I had to: I was hurting.

Jim Wilson nodded, so Connie came forward and punched me hard in the stomach, as she had at the BDC.

"I told you, 'yes' or 'no' are your only words as answers. Stop being insolent."

I started coughing, hanging on those chains and the plank was pressing upwards as I could not get my feet flat to the ground.

Jim Wilson pointed at my crotch area as pressed on to the plank, and Connie looked at him. So she asked, "Have you shaved that?"

"No."

"Have you waxed it?"

"No."

"You're obviously not pre-pubescent. Actually, I can't see any body hair." She was looking all around me very closely. Going behind me, I felt her hands push apart my buttocks. "There's nothing around your anus, either. You must shave under your arms."

"No."

"You've got a lot of hair on your head." She pulled my damp hair, from her lower height. "Are you some kind of freak?"

"Yes."

"We might be getting somewhere."

She and Jim then walked away to that room, and I saw a cooker when the door opened. It was a small kitchen. He was last in and they shut the door, leaving me stretched and pressed. My leg muscles were tensing more. Words I could hear included Jim Wilson saying, "an opportunity," and "now is our chance." After some minutes they both came back, Jim now with a black preaching gown on.

These two came out and walked up to me. The busty, leather clad woman pushed her finger along the plank top and up into my vagina. "I can't understand it, Jim," she said. "Hey you, how come an alley cat like you is as tight as this?" Then she pushed with two fingers and it was quite unpleasant. She said, "Blimey, it doesn't go very far. Do you get decent fucks?"

"Yes."

"You do, do you? Hmm. Time for a device." She sniffed through her nostrils. Then she said, "Your young friend fancies himself as a bit of a magician."

"Who? Peter Marshall?" I asked.

She walked over to me and punched me in the stomach again, and with even greater force this time. She knew how to punch.

"Twist her nipples." said Jim Wilson.

"She is weird. There's hardly anything of them to get hold of."

For the first time, Connie Wilson picked up one of the instruments, like a microphone. Jim asked her, "Did you get that from the sex shop?"

"Yeah. While Honey and Strawberry were bathing her, I bought these vibrating things from our Titansea sex shop. Reverend Jupitas, these are all brand new and for you. This here is called a magic wand. Let's try it ourselves." So it was placed on the plank edge and on to my crotch, vibrating on the wood and over my flesh. "Perhaps your Peter Marshall could use it to make you disappear in a puff of orgasm. That's hellish big clit for a response wouldn't you say Jim?"

"Heavenly."

"We should be able to do something with that." She was already. "You are quite smooth skinned except for that exhausted arse spot. How old are you?"

I was silent, in fear of being punched again.

"Oh, quite. Well, are you forty yet?"

"Yes."

Placing the vibrator down, she picked up this multi-strand whip or cat o'nine tails.

I had to say, "Please don't. My skin mustn't break. I get easy infections. When I sat on my hairbrush it became infected. That's the old spot you can see."

She made the action of punching me again, but stopped short. She went behind me, and pushed me forward along the poles, rubbing along the plank edge. Its friction almost burnt. She did it in order to swing the cat o'nine tails more freely and it cracked across my back, stinging me.

"A few more for speaking out of turn, yet again," she said.

Ken Osis might have capitulated before anything happened but this option clearly wasn't for me. I was in real fear, because those needles and skewers were not for show after all.

Preparation Begins

"I think we should begin properly," said Jim Wilson. "Now then, the Reverend Mrs. Jupitas, I am going to prepare you for the bishop and his initiation of you, by removing your sins. This is very serious biblical work."

"I submit. I tell you I submit!" This was shouted through my drowsiness.

He said, "Connie. Two cane strikes on each breast. If she carries on like this, we will just have to do so much more to remove her sins."

Connie Wilson now pushed me backwards, my crotch burning again on the wood. She chose a thin, bendy cane, and from my right side cracked two painful blows on my right breast and then walked around to crack two more on my left breast. The sting was incredible each time and I suppressed my cry out for fear of more.

She then said, "I don't know why I am being so compassionate towards you." She then twisted my left nipple again. "They just don't look very developed to me, and on big tits as well."

Jim Wilson asked me, "Are you going to submit to the bishop?"

"Yes," I replied. I felt relief. She was going to stop. My arms were stretched, my crotch heated with legs apart, and my toes were losing feeling.

"The problem is we don't believe you," he replied. "We've had such a breakdown in trust. You were told you had to submit before and you refused. You ran away. You cavorted with the Vine woman. You helped her extract Sanjay Bunker from assisting the bishop's efforts in the divine erotic. It is only when the bishop offered you a future that you changed; you realised that your own sheer arrogance had upset your own selfish material wishes. Your case is infinitely worse than that of the late Reverend Osis and we must extract your sins. And we have a reliable model for it."

"No, please don't."

"Connie, love, she doesn't get it."

Connie came close and behind me, and inserted two fingers directly up my rectum. Surprisingly there was no particular pain from this ungreased insertion.

She said, "Hmm. Not sure about that. Anyhow, in these packets are some sterile needles and skewers. We are going to use these on you."

"No, you mustn't."

Jim Wilson said, "We'll just have to press on to stop the insolence. Do a couple early. Small pin in each labia and then the small vibrator upwards to the pins."

I screamed as she put each one in. And then she indeed took a standard vibrator, and slid it up my divide until it met the pins that had pierced me.

"No!"

A few minutes later she took the vibrator back to the trolley and went further back into that kitchen.

Jim Wilson said, "The Reverend Mrs. Jupitas, we've got to remove your sins for good. Can we?"

"Yes..."

Connie returned with papers.

"I have a sermon. Thank you, my darling wife. Let God approve of my words and our actions.

"O Lord above, the soldier's spear opened the side of your Son, our Lord and Saviour, on the cross, and from that gash flowed the mysteries of our redemption. Jesus is our true man-mother who gives us new birth through his body and feeds us with his flesh. His arms out wide invite everyone to embrace him. Before his necessary death, his body was wounded."

I could only think, as he turned into some mad horrific Puritan, that this man was mentally crazy.

"Blood protects you! Exodus 4:24-26 and 12:27 tells us that blood circumcision and the blood of the passover lamb have the power to ward off the destroyer! Animals were sacrificed at the altar to make peace between God and the sinful community. But they needed a correct attitude. Sacrifice is part of prayer, according to Isaiah 56:7, so blood intercedes for you! Genesis 4:10 has Abel's blood crying out to God, and blood is better than words in drawing God's attention, and Hebrews 12:24 tells us: 'But you have come... to Jesus, the mediator of a new covenant, and to the sprinkled blood that speaks more graciously than the blood of Abel.'

"Blood establishes a covenant! Think of Genesis 15, the covenant with Abraham, Exodus 24:3-11 for the Covenant at Sinai, and then no less than Matthew 26:28, 1 Corinthians 10:16 with 11:25, and Hebrews 9:16-18 for the 'new Covenant'. Yes, these Covenants are set or sealed by the letting of blood.

"Blood makes atonement! Amen.

Have you, the Reverend Linda Jupitas, the right covenant with us for the blood you must shed?" he asked.

"What?" I asked, being half-dazed already.

Connie Wilson pushed me forward on the plank, and then took a heavy cane and struck my back before replacing it. She moved to punch me this time upwards below my right ribs, which so winded me that I started coughing, hanging with greater dead weight on my arms, and my crotch was burning hot. For good effect, she repeated the blow.

"It is a simple question," he said. "Are you willing to spill your blood for your redemption? If not, we will have to beat you until you are willing."

"No," I mumbled out.

"No?"

I was breathing heavily, or trying to. "No."

His wife went to the table and picked up the cat-o'-nine-tails and, pushing me back again along the plank, lashed it across my breasts. Shit that hurt.

"Are you willing to spill your blood for your redemption?" he asked.

I was breathing heavily, with a drowsiness that could not hide massive enveloping pain. "Can't."

She lashed me again.

"I'm trying to say..."

She lashed me again plus another upper cut with her fist.

I was shaking and coughing more. "Yeah."

She put the cat o'nine tails down on the trolley.

Jim Wilson then said, "Make sure blood flows from her."

"As we heard from my lowly husband - who knows his Bible - you are to be shed of your sins to become acceptable to God. To be acceptable to God, you must shed blood."

"No no... I get infected. My skin is clear, very clear."

Jim Wilson said, "Don't punch her. We will get her sin out."

So Connie Wilson didn't. "Jim, I am so puzzled. She must have had spots as a teenager at least. That one on her arse is recent, and it is the only one. Reverend Jupitas, did you have spots?"

Breathing heavily, coughing again, I failed to answer.

Louder she barked at me, "Have you ever had any spots? Jim, look, I am going to hit her so hard she will probably pass out."

I was able to manage: "No."

"Hang on." (What else was I doing?) She walked off and went through the double doors. Coming back from my bag near my clothes, I realised, she had my hairbrush in her hand. "You sat on this mangy, spiky, plastic thing for that mark on your bum?"

"Yeah... yes."

"Seems to have lost some of its little balls on top of the spikes."

"Yes."

The bastard scraped it across my chest above my breasts. It really hurt, and left scratches. Oh no, now she ran it down each breast. Struth it hurt so much, especially across my nipples. I was becoming a dead weight to myself.

Oh no. Placing the brush down, she opened the first packet. She said, "Let's get to the business at hand. If you are fortunate, the blood will only run when I remove them. It will run, though, because if it doesn't, I'll make sure it does."

"No, no, please not my areole or nipples. They are under-developed."

Jim Wilson again said, "Don't punch her. Sin is surfacing: it will come out."

Connie Wilson said, "You really are so compassionate, Jim."

My mouth was getting so dry.

"I'll be kind then. This mid-length needle is going in to the side of your nipple."

It was my left breast first, and I clenched my teeth through searing pain as this needle held by its plastic tip was pushed in and poked out, and there was instant blood. Once the needle was in, that pain subsided somewhat against all the rest. Then she took her time to insert another needle in symmetry on that same breast, and I gasped as it went through but drew no blood. And then two more went into and out of my right breast, with no blood, and I was shaking on my toes.

I was cold, and now my shaking had become continuous and vigorous.

She bobbed down with another needle. "No please, I beg you." This next one was destined for my labia again. "It won't take it. No, please."

As she clenched her fist, Jim Wilson shook his head. She looked at him, and unclenched it. She said, "You are so strange. I thought about your inner labia, but there's hardly anything there. I'll be compassionate again. What about through your clit?"

"No no!" I started crying with real flowing tears.

"That is good," said Jim Wilson. "We have a real vale of tears. We're getting there. Go around it to begin."

Shoving a needle hard in and out of just beside my pubes, on the left, I screamed as loud as I ever have, to compare with Keith stabbing my spot in swift surprise. It was left side blood again, and I could see it dripping in large globules. I was violently riving on my lower left side.

"My gonads, my gonads."

"It is sin," said Jim Wilson, "Look. She is sobbing. She knows."

The next small one went into my clitoris, and I could have hit the ceiling, screaming out.

"Now next up we have these skewers," Connie said. "They're not really. They look worse because they remind people of eating barbecues."

"Short pins first on the rear," said Jim. "The anticipation is breaking her. I think we are getting her now."

Connie opened one packet of pins. I was having difficulty focusing because my eyes were full of tears.

Round the back she said, "This careless spot. Let's jab it in there."

I screamed the loudest and returned to sobbing and shaking on my tip-toes.

"These tears are so good," said Jim. "Ken Osis cried so early we just had to prick his thumb. But this one, she's been such a problem until now. At last, some success, Connie. But..."

So the truth was they pricked his thumb and did draw blood. In contrast, I was inside a vortex of hell. I'd no idea how long this would go on. She was now putting pins in around my back and bottom like she did not care. It was like I was entering another condition, and it was so bad I was giving up responding.

She was walking around me, and looking. I was hanging with arms numb, my crotch was on fire, and I had the previous canings and whips still stinging and many points of pushed in pain. But when I saw the skewer held to my face and he nodded, I heard the female sadist say through my uncontrolled sobbing, "I am so compassionate I will thrust it into your right side, near your kidneys."

"Yes," said Jim. "The blood will flow from her side, and she will be God's."

This was such a searing pain I yelled the place out and then just collapsed and hung. My head was heavy to my right side. She had found a little bit of fat - my body is lean - and pushed up, through and out. She waggled it, and in a blur I could see the red liquid running down my leg. She had got my right side to bleed like my left. Blood was running on the plastic sheeting under my feet and the A frames.

The Jim said, "The blood of the sinner flows! Out comes her sin, and now you are going to obey. Answer me. Is obeying now your everlasting response?"

"She's a bit dopey," Connie said.

He repeated: "You are now going to obey. Answer me. Is obeying now your everlasting response?"

After I realised he'd asked me a question, and had asked it twice, I gave a quiet answer: "Yes."

"This is a wonderful time, for now everything is ready. Let us start to raise her orgasmic responses to receive her bishop. Insert those egg shaped devices, dear lovely wife."

Narrator: Adam A Location Announced (Monday 16th September)

We were all back at the curate's house, sat around, and I said, "Look, we're not solving anything sitting here silently. We need ideas."

Peter said, "Perhaps they've taken her to Wytham, Adam."

"Or Eslaforde, or Wulfstan, or Gravelby, or anywhere for that matter. On that basis, where do we start?" I asked.

"We start with patterns," Peter said.

Kathryn said, "Two vehicles."

"Yes, a decoy each time," Peter responded.

I remarked, "One cab turned left, away from the bypass. One went to it. And that's all we know. What else do we have?"

Peter again: "I saw those two leaving above the casino, but no other movements. If she'd have gone there, I'd have seen something."

"Which two?" I asked him.

So we looked at the photos he took in his camera, and tried to come up with names. Diana suggested Stephen and Helen McPhail.

I said, "Right. Stephen McPhail was Linda's mentor. Let's look them up."

We did Internet searches, and found them. Exhibitionists.

Diana said, "But he stopped being her mentor."

I said, "Consider that Osis had been frightened into submission by hanging him on an A frames contraption, and Stephen McPhail made these devices.

"Ingle Barrow. Perhaps Linda is down at Ingle Barrow."

"Then why were they at the casino building?" Peter asked.

"Collecting supplies, for all I know," I said.

"Or delivering supplies," Peter responded, "before I arrived."

Kathleen decided that Kathryn would drive her and Winnie to the McPhails. I said that no one was there when I had looked. No, I hadn't been to the beach, I answered them, as I had seen no advantage in doing so. They still decided to go, on the basis of doing something, and they might take in Caffenmere, and anywhere else they could consider.

Twenty five minutes on a call came from Winnie. "Helen and Stephen McPhail are sunbathing nude on the beach outside their flood defence steps. I've just walked past them and said, 'Hello, it's a nice day for it,' with a smile." I'm still walking north.

Peter said, "So they are not involved now. But they had been there, perhaps preparing something."

"Was it a distraction?" I asked. "You know about distractions. But don't let me think like a magician. I want you to think like a magician!"

"Lying on the beach nude could be a distraction," he said. "As in, 'There's nothing unusual about today,' when there is heavy stuff going on. Plus they may know Winnie."

There was a ring on the doorbell. It was Jenny.

"What are you doing here?" I asked her.

"Trying to do something about Linda. They are probably hurting her now."

"We know that. Where?"

"I contacted Stephen McPhail but he wouldn't tell me anything except they would lie in the sun. I told him they must not hurt her."

"Winnie says they are on the beach."

Jenny said, "They would be in the garden. They're on the beach so that they are seen."

"Interesting," said Peter. "They assume we are looking."

"Anything else, Jenny?" I asked.

"Terry is not answering, and nor are the Wilsons. Liz Huett again promised me they won't hurt her. I said they are furious with her and will. Jonathan Eyre told me that Linda has been very resistant, so I pressed him where they'd taken her but he said it is all need to know stuff. I told him not to hurt her."

"Is he involved?" I asked her.

"Not unless it involves sex. He's in Worthing."

"It does involve sex. It's possible they are taking her right out of the area."

"Nah," she said.

"Okay, then, in your opinion, where is she most likely to be?" I asked Jenny.

"Above the casino."

Peter said, "No one else went through the near steel door and not when Linda was being moved."

"There is the fire escape, dummy."

"What?" asked Peter.

"It's at the back street. It's daft when you go in there because there is the dead end passage for those hefty steel doors, but at the other side of the building there is the metal staircase to the crap fire escape door. It is a simple lock and stays open when people are inside."

Peter said, "That taxi could have gone over the preserved railway sidings."

That was it. Diana went in her car, Peter, Jenny and me in mine. Kathryn and Kathleen with Winnie were to make their own way to above the casino.

Narrator: Linda Preparation for the Bishop

Getting the small vibrating eggs past the needles caused more agony, but I was in such pain more hardly mattered. My tears were continuous.

Connie Wilson said, "I just don't get this. I should get twice or three times of these things in there. Huh. I've got a pack of six and I've inserted two only."

"Use the magic wand," he said. "Her clitoris makes up for it. Go for that."

"I think we need something from the kitchen."

I shuddered, like what was in the kitchen? She came back with a blindfold, that went around my head and was connected at the back. Now I could not see and my eyes started stinging.

These two eggs suspended inside me weren't going to stop. The magic wand joined them, and the combination was intense. I was half dead, aching, numb, with hot pain spots. I was more likely to completely pass out than come to orgasm.

She pulled out the vibrating eggs without any care, "I'm not letting you come to satisfaction."

Satisfaction? Satisfaction?

"Hmm, dribbly runny blood. I like it," she said. "There is a lovely long run of blood from your breast right down your front and, hey, it's joined another."

He said, "It's not a question of liking but purpose."

What she was doing was removing the needles, one by one, and ended with the pain of evacuating the skewer and its damaging consequences.

Then I felt the plank released from my crotch area, and suddenly her hand was slapping me on my crotch with short blows. The intensity of pain from removed needles was made ten times worse from her short slaps. Then there was a pause, and I felt the whack of her hand across my backside.

After another pause of unknowing, I experienced that leather multi-strand whip again right across my back and arse. There was a further pause, and then it was sprayed across my front, and several times across my breasts. I'd no idea where or when this was coming next.

I could hear but not see both trolleys going along with two sets of feet walking. I could hear the kitchen door opening. I'd lost all energy, and now, bizarrely, there was no plank for support. I was literally hanging from my wrists. It was a welcome pause; perhaps she had stopped. I could hear inaudible chat and items placed on far away surfaces.

Then I heard a trolley coming again with only two feet walking. I expected something very violent while blindfolded. Instead, she stretched to take the blindfold off.

"Ugh! It is soaking wet, cry baby."

So Connie Wilson splashed my face with water from a glass and placed it back on the trolley among possible (out of focus) hair dressing items. My crying had stopped anyway, as if I'd ran out of water. As my eyes regained some focus, I could see my brush along with scissors, thinning scissors and a battery hair trimmer on the trolley next to the glass. My left side had blood all over it to the plastic sheets and bin bags covered floor below and the right side had one long run of blood from the side.

She said, "I am going to cut your hair. It's too long. It needs to be a new length, a length that represents your submission. You will look different. I think it needs to be thinner too."

"Please! This is my hair. I never have it short."

This time she did punch me, in my guts, with no husband present to restrain her. Then she tried a new one: an elbow in my back.

"Shut up. The bishop needs to see a new you. It will show him your neck, all round. He might want to love bite you, to make you his. You will not be a long-haired Reverend Linda Jupitas for anybody, but a short-haired Reverend Linda Jupitas for him. Hmm. The hair cut will be our final preparation for him."

So she altered the chains and my feet went flat. Except I was now leaning over to my left side in a curve because my legs could not hold me up any more. My arms ached all the more.

"Jim! Come! This will be quite a simple haircut. Nothing elaborate at all."

Jim Wilson came back from the kitchen, with the preaching gown gone. First he rearranged some plastic sheeting to the foot of this nearby bed. Both of them then freed me from the A frames contraption below and above, and they held me up. I was a dead weight.

"What a lump," said Connie.

I was moved under my arms to the nearest bed end, where I was turned around and placed to sit upon the plastic sheeting at its foot. My head fell forward, my body went forward, and I was going to fall on to the ground. So Jim Wilson pushed me up from the front and gripped my head with two hands.

Connie Wilson picked up two pairs of scissors and my hairbrush. She ran the brush through my hair, and cut around as if she had an invisible bowl, Jim Wilson adjusting his grip accordingly. She took to the hair trimmer. Then came the thinning scissors; they have an edge that sort of drags at the hair and takes only some of it at a time. Its tugging made me hurt more elsewhere. She took hold of my hairbrush again, and scraped it through what was left of my hair. There was now much more hair on the floor than on my head.

"Perhaps she'll clean up her own mess afterwards, Jim. The Reverend Jupitas: have you been a sinful dirty bastard?"

I breathed first, in and out, and then said, "Yes."

Connie said, "There's no actual blood on her back and the sheets can be washed."

So they heaved me up and my arse touched the end of the bed

"Lie back, feet on the floor more apart: get those legs open and wait."

Off they went to the kitchen. This time they left the door open.

I heard Jim Wilson say, "You should have her in the presence of her blood."

Connie came back with a bowl of some water and a cloth and she cleaned my feet. She did not clean any marks or blood deposits. She returned to the kitchen with the bowl and cloth on the trolley.

This time Jim Wilson only approached me. He asked, "As a woman, shed of your sins, and compliant, do you agree to Bishop Terry inseminating you? You can say 'no', but if you don't agree, then our session is ended and you can make your own way home, and you can count your time in the clergy well and truly over. And don't forget, we have evidence on you. We know what you did with that poor man Ken Osis - and with so many others."

"Yes. Yes."

"Have you taken any birth control?"

"No."

"I shall pray for you. O God we recall Genesis 29 where Leah lends Jacob her servant Zilpah for childbearing. In Genesis 30, Leah's sister Rachel says to Jacob: 'Here's my maid Bilhah. Go and have sex with her. She can bear children on my knees so I can have children through her.' She subsequently had Dan and Naphtali. Lord, if this fertile child of yours here present bears the bishop a child, let the child grow in wisdom under her care and with his support. Amen."

I was in a complete madhouse. I could not move despite being unrestrained.

Now he said to me, "The Reverend Jupitas. You should ready yourself in a prayerful state. First the bishop is going to enter you. Once his sperm is in you, you will get off that bed and lie prostrate on your front on the floor. Will you then give him your life-long fealty and obey all the Vanguard bishops?"

After some breathing I said, "Yes."

"I will go and tell him that you are ready. Contemplate what a beautiful moment you will experience. You are now ready for your resurrection, from absorbing his seed into your womb and giving your commitment. When he stands between your legs, he will say a prayer and he will enter you. Are you joyful?"

"Yes."

"It will be the beginning of the rest of your life. A touch of the Kingdom of Heaven will come into you. God be praised."

He returned to the kitchen and closed the door behind him.

I started shaking. As much as I could, I decided to convince myself that what was coming ought to happen, and all would be well thereafter. My shaking did reduce.

Narrator: Adam Friends (Monday 16th September)

Diana's car and mine arrived slowly at the back of the casino building, having driven mine to the dock and seen the Wilsons' white Astra and the 2006 Lexus LS430 owned by the bishop. Kathryn, Kathleen and Winnie were around at the front.

Diana rang through to Kathryn that we were in position. Peter, Diana, Jenny and I went slowly up the steps in that order, to make as little noise as possible. No one was to tackle anyone physically. Kathryn and Peter each had a camera.

The plan was for Peter to photograph the evidence, Diana to attend to Linda, Jenny to try to confront the Wilsons, and me to run through and down to the steel door below and get them open for the others.

So, pushing the fire door open, in we went, but when we saw Linda lying there naked and blooded we were simply diverted by the truly appalling sight. Her hair was horribly chopped. It was an horrific scene of blood over her body, what looked like spots of soil, large clumps of hair on the ground. Peter was the only one staying to task: he did photograph her. As we froze, three burst out of this far door - a kitchen behind - and ran to and out of the fire exit, and I said to Jenny to go after them, but she was still frozen in horror, so Peter gave me the camera as he went in pursuit.

Diana was weeping her own tears bending over Linda. "What have they done to you? What have they done to you?"

Jenny went past two largely wooden and metal contraptions for the double doors to the right of the narrow wall with that kitchen window and door to the left. I forgot my role to obtain a glass of water from the kitchen.

"You bastards," Linda mouthed and whispered. "You have ruined... everything."

Diana looked at me, tears falling. Linda took all of the water in gulps.

Linda added, "One more step and done. Inseminated; initiated."

Jenny was back, alone: "I need keys. I'll try that kitchen." She took the glass back.

Peter came back in through the fire exit. "They went in three directions. I've never seen people clatter down such steps and run so fast, including the fat woman". He retrieved the camera and took another picture of Linda.

Jenny said, "Got them," and went back down those stairs.

Linda spoke further, very quietly, "Why interfere?"

Diana said, "Stop talking shit."

"Terrible person, taking my punishment."

Diana advised, "Let's get you up."

"The Bishop: let him complete his holy task."

Peter then took photographs around the A frames contraption and then looked at this triangular 'horse' with its metal edge at the top.

I heard clunking footsteps: Jenny returned through the double doors followed by Kathleen, Winnie and Kathryn. Jenny said, "I knew it. Wait 'til I speak to Liz Huett."

"Linda," I said. "My report is off to the media tonight. You'll be all right, trust me." I realised that this was hardly appropriate at this juncture.

Diana looked at me with incredulity.

"You bastard," Linda whispered. "I want the bishop."
Diana said, "He has fled. All three of them have gone."
"You bastards."

Peter now looked at a box. "Top soil with honey in it. How odd." He photographed that.

Diana asked for someone to go out the front, to see who if anyone was around. Winnie went out but turned left (and right) and returned with a bag, shoes and a black cassock with collar, which she laid on and near the triangular contraption. Then she went out again.

Peter went into the kitchen to look in there. Diana and I now started to slowly get Linda to sit up. Slowly, we made an effort to get her on her feet. Linda screamed and stayed put and sat. She started crying.

Jenny and Kathleen came to her, while Kathryn joined Peter in more photography.

Finally Linda stood up, helped specifically by Diana and Kathleen. Jenny removed a plastic butt plug from Linda's bottom, and the cassock only was dropped over her. I made myself useful getting the double doors to stay open. We brought up the stair lift and Linda sat in its chair. Kathryn and I went in front as it descended. Diana (with camera) was alongside and Kathleen behind as we all descended these steps.

Part way down Linda urinated, so we all just let it happen. Diana and Kathleen gripped her to get her to stand at the bottom.

Jenny and Winnie checked the showers and toilets and then zig-zagged back to descend the stairs like everyone. Peter, still with his camera, picked up her shoes, bag and hairbrush and also descended.

Moving past some very puzzled punters heading for the casino on the ground floor, we managed to get Linda into Kathryn's car back seat. (Actually, it was one of her uncle's cars.) Peter joined them too in the front passenger seat. Winnie stayed out with Jenny, Diana and me.

Before the car set off Linda said, quietly, "I'm sorry." She had defecated a small amount on to the back seat if inside her cassock. "I can't help it."

"Not to worry," said Kathryn from the driver's seat.

Kathleen alongside Linda then said, "We must contact the police over this."

Linda managed to say, slowly, "I gave consent."

Diana said, looking in from outside, "She's in shock, Kathleen. She is shaking. Try and make her warm; put your arm around her."

They set off. The rest of us returned to the side passage with the steel doors for above the casino and the casino, but because of the blocked end we had to go back in, lock the steel door from the inside, ascend the stairs, go through the fire escape and descend the metal steps to get to the street level again. Jenny and I in my car, and Diana with Winnie in Diana's car, drove off to Sutton.

At the house, Peter, Kathleen and Kathryn did not know what to do, because Linda was shaking in the car and wouldn't move.

Neighbours were looking but we didn't care. Mainly Diana and I got her out, and indoors, and into her front room, sat on her soiled cassock. I had to leave, because I had a preparatory appointment with the media. I left an instruction that was very obvious: no one was ever to leave Linda alone.

When I got back there late, I heard about a neighbour calling round asking if the reverend was all right. Kathleen had told her she'd had an accident, and all was in hand. Evidently Diana had managed to persuade Linda upstairs, and was giving Linda a bed bath. Kathleen and Winnie were ready to remove the bedsheets made instantly grubby and add new ones. Linda had the equivalent of a potty to wee in.

It was heartbreaking because her naked body looked an utter mess, including her hair. I said to Diana that we had failed her. "We messed up because no one had ever gone to the other side of the casino building."

Diana said, "Why would we? I work in the casino; I've lived here pretty much all my life and I have never gone to the other side of that building."

Linda managed to say, "The Reverend Wilson gave me a sermon. Blood flowed to remove my sins. I was going to submit, and now I haven't. I'm finished now. Thank you all."

Diana said, "I'm going to sleep alongside her again, Adam. I'll be here for as long as it takes to see her well. You make sure you handle the media, Adam, and destroy them all. You destroy the lot of them."

"Oh, we're ready to run. Barman had dropped his opposition to the diocesan report. And the money we'll make: Linda will have her own church. I promise her that now. Ann is determined. And we will have an investigations workplace and people here will have places to live."

As I left the house, Jenny approached the front door, staggering around in the street. She was already drunk. So I helped her in, and placed her in the larger lounge, nearer the downstairs toilet. Peter emerged from the kitchen, with Kathryn, and attended to Jenny.

Jenny said, "It was my full. Thedde. El. I could ha' tol' you. I was ringing, ringing around, yeah, thinging they'd listen. Listen to me. Them. But they... didn't. Listen to me."

"It's not your fault," I told her, and then said to Peter, "Should mention that I might need you at the office day and night. Diana, Kathleen, Winnie: they'll look after Linda. Jenny can see to herself. Long long hours very soon, I'm afraid."

"Okay boss."

I went off to my office and accommodation alone and was ready to use the media and build a church.

Narrator: Linda Medical Check (Tuesday 17th September)

I'd pulled my knees to my breasts. A crab crawled out of my vagina and sealed it like it shut the door. Then came the Bishop of Bolingbroke with a penis that reached the ceiling and hung over my face. The head turned into Diana's face.

"Kathleen and Winnie have brought you a spicy soup, dozy."

I didn't want it. Aching and hurting, I started crying again as I had before sleeping.

I told Diana, "You've taken away what I wanted to do. All I wanted was to submit, move to Inglemire, just live a life."

"No," replied Diana. "These are horrible, horrible people."

Christine Vine arrived. Diana barked at her: "What do you want? You're half the problem."

"I've brought with me a nurse-practioner. This is a Senior Nurse, Sister Mabel. I use her private work for bondage and sado-masochistic injuries up here. Seriously, she can get rid of marks you think might become permanent."

"We know one another," said Sister Mabel Thorp.

"Try and sit up, Linda; you never know," Diana said, from within the same duvet. "Clear off, Christine." We both had nothing on, but it didn't matter, and Christine left the room.

Nurse Mabel removed the duvet cover exposing us both. She inspected me all over, used some creams to gently rub in, and had some tablets. "They weren't being very responsible," she said, expecting perhaps some sort of game had taken place. "There are criminal happenings here."

"I consented," I told the nurse-practitioner.

"To be clear, were the needles causing all these marks sterilised?"

"They came out of packets. They had plastic ends: the woman disciplining me held those ends. The skewer thing was different."

"Christine isn't as stupid as this."

"I didn't do it."

"Let me look at your vulva and vagina. Push forward a bit. I'll try to avoid any speculum" She pushed the labia aside.

"This bishop, Terence Barman, has an enormous penis."

"Have you seen it, nurse?"

"I shouldn't say but yes."

"I did, early on."

"Did he try and shove it into your small space?"

"They came in before he did. All I wanted was his sperm."

"What for?"

"To join his group."

"Hmm. Let me see your back. Turn around as you can." More cream went in. "Now raise up: let me see your bottom."

"They put in a butt-plug."

Still more cream went in. The nurse-practitioner made out a prescription for drugs. "I want two people responsible for seeing creams go on regularly and drugs are taken."

Diana said, "Kathleen and me."

"Full names!"

"Diana de Groot and Kathleen Wickenby."

"You are in bed with her: are you her partner?"

"No, I am her friend. We're naturists, if you are wondering. She had very limited mobility, though I suspect it is coming back quickly."

The nurse had her advice. "That's nothing but being in bed do some exercises, less stringent at first and more later. These are creams that heal from within outwards rather than from the surface first. You have smooth skin but it will never return to its former condition. There will be evidence of what has happened, unfortunately, even if slight. I can provide description if you need to go to the police. I will take photographs with your consent and need to write a description on my tablet here."

"For the police?" I asked.

"No, for medical reference. How you will heal. So we can monitor progress."

"This would not be NHS but private?" I asked.

"The NHS will receive all the details." Then the nurse-practitioner asked, "What is your mental state?"

"How do I know?"

Diana said, "Things have not gone well lately and this has been the worst. I'm here with her as much for her mental state as her physical ailment. She's a bit Stockholmish."

I said, "I don't need you for that. I do not show Stockholm Syndrome. I told you, I consented! I knew what was coming. Well, I sort of knew what was coming."

"No you didn't," said Diana.

Diana shook her head as Christine came back into the room, and presumably had been listening. Christine said, "I think Connie and Jim Wilson saw their chance to do something they've always wanted to do. They probably wanted to turn over Ken Osis, but they didn't get their chance. Did she punch you a lot?"

"In the stomach, mainly. Once in the kidneys."

The nurse-practitioner said, "Well thank you for telling me that. I'm going to perform a basic examination with my hands. It may be sensitive."

"It is," I said as she began.

"I don't get a sense of damage. If you start spitting blood or your water gets discoloured, you need to act quickly. How is your wee?"

"Same colour as it ever was."

Diana said, "I didn't notice anything."

"Defecating all right?"

Diana again answered for me. "Loss of control with shock, loose later, seems okay. She was forced to have enemas. She has problems in that department anyway."

"Have you been sick?"

"She has," Diana again said.

"Soups and simple meals, then. Go slowly at first, then try to recover. Who is Kathleen Wickenby?"

She was called in to the room, and Diana and Kathleen were told to rub in these various creams three times a day - some for some injuries and others for others, to make sure my drugs were taken, and to go and get more from the chemist.

Christine then said she would arrange for a hair-stylist to call, again at her expense. Christine then left with the nurse-practitioner.

Later I did try Kathleen's offer of soup and she offered some bread. The last time I had bread a certain Ken Osis was seen opposite me. I decided not to tell anyone.

Diana said, "Did I tell the nurse right about the enemas?"

"I told you all the sequence. It wasn't random violence. They were early on at the Blue Diamond Club. Above the casino was a sermon on the righteousness of blood-letting. I recall Jim said everything and Connie did everything. Very Protestant, evangelical."

Diana said, "More like black magic to me."

"No," I said, "It was full of Bible quotations. He also said a prayer in case I ended up having a child."

"Oh lovely."

"They didn't know I can't."

"Neither did I for a long time. What do they call it again?"

"Complete Androgen Insensitivity Syndrome."

"Ah yeah. They didn't know. Does Christine know?"

"Christine was suspicious after I went to the gynaecologist with her. But she doesn't. The nurse should keep quiet."

"She didn't about Barman's prick."

The conversation stopped when Winnie came in. "The Serninsea Vestal Virgins are gathering tonight with special prayers for you."

My stomach felt like wrenching - not from that news, in particular.

"Get me a bucket."

Winnie went, and returned with one. "So Kathleen and I are going out."

I threw up into the bucket. "If you must. Don't spread it in public!"

"We wouldn't do that," Winnie replied.

Kathleen came in and took the bucket to wash it, bringing it back in, and soon after I heard the front door go.

"I must sleep. I realise that Adam was never going to hold back his report. He is a good bloke really. Did he say I would have my own church?"

"Yes he did. Adam and Peter feel guilty that they didn't get to you earlier. Peter feels especially guilty because he failed to examine the whole situation: a magician makes you look the other way and not see what actually is the case, but crucially he didn't see. He assumed the steel door was such that it was the only entrance."

Before I could drift off to sleep, Jenny came in.

"What do you want?" I asked, my head on the pillow and Diana stroking my hair - what was left of it.

"Elizabeth Huett is very annoyed at what happened. She says you were mistreated, and she was misinformed. I rang her when she was talking to Sheila Patterson, otherwise known as Anong. Anong contacted Carrie Chopin and that group is thinking about you tonight."

"That's how they know." I said.

Jenny said, "A lot of intelligence runs through the Holy Order of Sophia with Miriam Magdala and they are committed to spread details along confined routes. Elizabeth got me to tell her all what happened: first at the BDC and above the casino as according to your story. I don't think the Confraternity will stay together if the 'need to know' has excluded her."

Diana said, "She is complicit. I've never asked you about Linda being intersex - male genes."

"I've never discussed it with anyone, even when I hated her. And it's not something to reveal to the prejudicial National Church."

Jenny departed and at this point I drifted off to sleep.

Confined to Bed (Wednesday 18th September)

Later Wednesday I had a visitor from Wytham: the Reverend Charley Darley. He was brought to my room by Kathleen, and met me with Diana, both of us in bed.

Diana seemed embarrassed, pulling the duvet up. I said, "She's a friend."

She's looking after me and telling me what to do. We're naturists."

He said, "Fine. It's all about identities these days, isn't it? Don't worry about your appearances. I have mine removed on Monday."

"What?" asked Diana.

"My breasts. I've flattened them by wrapping. I'll have the operation and be fitted with a binder in theatre after my surgery. It's padded with cotton wool to help keep the suture lines flat and are supported post-surgery. Keeps the scars flat and not raised."

"Perhaps I could benefit from that," I mumbled.

"Six weeks I'll have to wear that binder followed by a micropore tape for three months. I'll have a physiotherapist to regain the full range of movement. There might be liposuction around the armpits for a flatter appearance still."

"Crumbs," Diana said first. "So you are a minister at Wytham?"

"I met Linda recently. I didn't then want to mention my operation. You felt tense."

Diana said, "Linda had a nasty run-in on Monday."

I said, "I'd been effectively suspended, like I said on Sunday. My training vicar had disowned me. On Monday they physically suspended me: this group used violence on me to force me to submit."

"I've heard of conforming to creeds," Charley said, "but not quite like that."

"It's not funny," said Diana.

"I apologise profusely," said Charley.

I asked, "Are you going to lose your vagina, Charley?"

"Yes, goodbye to all that - eventually. The brass and wood will no longer feature. Alan will have to adapt. It is difficult for him."

"Mine is so shallow, Charley. Like I told you." Now Diana was staring at me, rather fiercely. "I can tell him," I said to her.

Charley said, "Ah. Diana, you have to realise that friends are often the last people to find out."

"Well," said Diana, "when your sister told us of being accused of being a bloke, some of us had to do some mental adjusting."

"I am not a bloke, Diana, as I told Adam at the time."

"I didn't say you are a bloke."

Charley said, "Phenotype is very important. This is what I am changing."

"I am genetically male, with a female phenotype, identify as a woman, and I am bisexual."

"But you've never had a period because you would have been a bloke."

"It's not that. Diana!"

"You walk around in a naturist club. By doing that, you're saying, 'Look at me I'm female!'"

"I walk around naked because I was brought up that way, and I do affirm my body. As do you. Why is this so difficult for you?"

Charley said, "If I might say. Linda has grown up accepting the make-up of her identity, but it is still an unusual thing for someone else to learn - someone so friendly who did not know."

I said, "There was no reason for Diana to know until recently."

"And is shitting a lot part of this?"

"No, Diana, that is thanks to Keith making a different way in."

"Oh dear," said Charley. "I think I am learning too much. Perhaps I'd better go."

"Stay please Charley," I said. "Too many people have given up on me."

"I wasn't giving up on you; you two still have matters to discuss."

"You didn't answer my questions, fully," I said to him. "So don't go. All you really did was ask back why Unitarians have to be the same. Just saying."

"Ah, in Wytham. To make amends: the Hungarians and Transylvanians are down to one bishop only, and there is indeed that charismatic bishop in the United States and a Zen one. The Zen one has a history of being in the Independent Sacramental Movement and Sufism."

"That's new information," I said.

"I don't know if you've ever seen our Americans worship," Charley added. "It is more charismatic, often. Americans sing about justice and peace; it's a sort of left-wingism religion, at least for them in their context. The country is so far to the right it sees itself as a kind of middle class protest movement. I must be going. I'd like to call in on Georgie Smith before.... I can visit again but not for a while after my operation. If you can't do an emergency stop, like you can't after breasts removal, you can't drive. I'll be relying on others."

I said, "You'll always be welcome. See you Charley."

"So are you only suspended or, after such brutality, is it all over?"

"It's all over," I said. "I can't see how I can get back now."

"And the police?"

"I don't want the police involved."

"Then come and preach some time. You would help us. We have some gaps in the coming weeks, obviously. Let me or the Secretary know. Bye!"

First he shook Diana's hand, and by leaning forward Diana revealed her breasts. Then he shook my hand, but my breasts stayed covered enough.

Diana said, "You lot are weird, but interesting."

"Always interesting," he said.

"I meant her and you," she clarified. "Sexual minorities."

"Double tick," he said.

He left us.

I said, "You might want to go back to Aardse. He'll be worried if he thinks you're sleeping with a bloke."

Diana kissed my cheek. "Just to reassure - I do not think you are a bloke."

"I thought you only kissed blokes. Go in my drawer there and get the torch. I'll try and pull myself open."

Holding a torch, and me trying to open myself open with the pain it generated, Diana looked quite intently.

"That's where you pee and - yes, there is nothing. Oh, poor Linda. Linda!"

"Give it a break, Diana."

"What about Charley?"

"What about him?"

"His vagina?"

"He has a womb. I don't."

Kathleen put her head around the door. "Fancy something to eat you two? It's your next creams time, Linda."

So Diana said she would do it, and she did so, going around my breasts, front, side, my back, bottom and finally my vulva. She said, "We are getting like John and Yoko."

"A love-in, a peace-in?"

"Yeah, it's nice," she said. "I like being in bed with you. Pity about the circumstances."

"I'm not stopping you coming to my bed at other times."

Kathleen returned with stew for two. Asked what was in it, she said aubergine, okra, squash, potatoes, beef and cornmeal dumplings.

"Winnie was a good find," I responded, before Kathleen left us.

When done, my friend with a lovely arse and breasts took our used food items downstairs. She returned with a drink. Then her husband Aardse visited, causing Diana to get out of bed and give him a hug. Yes, he could look at my injuries.

"I'm horrified," he said. "You've had a really bad time. Has Diana been helping?"

"Definitely."

"Aardse," she said, "her bruises are going down but there are mental issues with this sort of thing. I need to stay with her longer, and perhaps take her out when she is ready, and then I'll come home. Are you and the kids coping?"

"Yes, we're all right. They know you are here. How is Adam, Linda?"

"He's all right; he's very busy."

Diana got back into bed and Aardse sat on it to mention some difficulties at work at the college, to keep her informed. Then he said, "You've not been in bed, continuously, for such a long time since our honeymoon. Our honeymoon wasn't anywhere significant, Linda, and we were in bed having a love-in."

She said, "We can do it again, Aardse. One weekend we can stay in bed for two days."

Much later, with Aardse back at home, I was lying in bed on my better left side and I was looking at Diana very close to her face. Then Diana pulled me close with her enveloping arm, and kissed me. Now her hand was on my back, and went down to my bottom, and she pulled me closer.

"Be careful. It's sensitive. No - leave your hand there. It's nice."

She looked dewy-eyed at me, and gave me a kiss, and stared at me. I thought, Okay, so this isn't sex, this is just my naturist friend being very close. I put my arm around her waist, under the duvet of course.

"Good evening," said Christine, upsetting our closeness when Diana seemed to have drifted off. "This is Erika Küng, from Herr Dezzine, who does a lot of my women's hair. She's comfortable with your nudity and does more than just the hair on your head..."

I said, "Diana. Wake up. A woman has come to do my hair."

So here was an odd situation. With Christine gone downstairs before Diana saw her, I put my arse on to a seat while Diana stayed in bed. Erika Küng identified the useful electric point. "Do you mind if I wash your hair first. You have a bath?"

"You and me bathe her," said Diana. "I think you need a bath, Linda. You wash her hair. How long have you got?"

"Christine said your appointment had to be open-ended. I have finished work elsewhere; I can stay as long as you need."

"Oh," said Diana. "Her again."

So I moved from the seat and slowly turned right into the bathroom. "I'll have a wee first."

With the door open I could hear Diana calling Christine downstairs.

"Oy, Christine. You may as well be useful. Where's the hottest place to go for a night of dancing in the region? Ardse and me!" she called out even louder.

Christine appeared downstairs to shout up. "It's actually a choice here."

I turned both bath taps on and in came Erika, Diana and Christine. It was quite busy in that bathroom.

Christine said, just inside the bathroom, as the bath filled with me in it, "My women, and blokes, go to two of the hottest places in town. They are better than anything in Wytham, Eslaforde, Rasa Market, Spaldswick... Saturday night the BDC has a dance night. It is expensive to join, though, and it's still a performance club with stage acts after all."

Diana said at her: "You cunt, Christine. How can you be so insensitive?"

Then I said, "Diana, I am feeling cold."

"It is warm," Diana said. "We can have it hotter. Put the cold tap off."

Christine said, "It's the ice baths. It's affected you. Best thing is to have this bath - don't make it over hot. I was going to say that the best place is the Caramel Club. It has a one night joining fee, or double for three months, and it is the place for continuous pulsing music that gets mesmerising after a time. It is not a performance place, but there are male strippers going around the audience and a few merging-in paid females, and it all happens on the dance floor. There are also dance hall bouncers for people who can't observe the boundaries. You must buy a drink..."

"I think it's full enough," I said. "I know it is warm: I'm still shivering a bit."

Christine continued, "If you go in the art room before nine pm and they do a geometric design or an animal design up your front and back, you get five free drink tokens - and those drinks in there are really expensive."

"That implies..." said Diana.

"It does," said Christine. "Indeed. You display body art."

"Aardse wouldn't like that. But I want to treat him, spending so much time with Linda."

Diana took a sponge to wash about my body, while Erika washed what was left of my hair with a shampoo of her own selection. Erika rinsed my hair, but then Diana told me to stand up and bend over. "I thought you would be, just a bit..." said Diana, as she applied the sponge between my buttocks.

"Can I sit back in a bit? I want to absorb the idea that this is a normal, pleasant bath."

After ten minutes of sitting, with Christine elsewhere, Erika said she didn't want my hair to dry itself.

"Right, out you come!" said Diana. Diana gave Erika a towel and took one herself. So Diana towelled my front, and Erika my back. Diana advised Erika to be gentle as there were still bruises and pains to consider.

"I know," said Erika. "I do Christine's hair."

"She does," said Christine, from outside the bathroom door. "Erika was at the Titansea Grand for me."

"Fancy mentioning that place," said Diana. "Did you go to the car showroom, Erika?"

"No."

Sat back on the seat in my bedroom, Diana took Erika's hand dryer to dry around my body, using warm air. Erika, however, took to the scissors to make my hair neat. Erika then used the dryer, once the styling was done, and the mirror showed that my new short hair was neatly arranged - simple, really.

Diana stood with her own attractive front and said, "You look delightful."

"Are you partners?" asked Erika.

"Just friends," said Diana. "Seeing that we all love her."

With Erika and Christine gone, it was back to bed, and Diana got in as well, and said I now looked beautiful.

This continued, and continued, and it was like being love bombed by Diana. There was one moment in particular where she kissed my mouth, then kissed it again.

To sleep, she moved herself as close to me as possible. I was a little confused, but it was very pleasant.

I had to ask her, "Are you trying to seduce me?"

"Not at all. But I am trying to tell you, somehow, who your real friends are and not those who turn up with nurses and hair dressers full of guilt."

Narrator: Adam In Wytham (Thursday 19th September)

I went to Wytham alone, and in her dinner hour met the Reverend Margaret McEnhill in a park. It was partly cloudy and just under 20 degrees. She was with her partner Penny Schofield, who had Margaret's little boy, Kevin, playing there in the early warming afternoon. Margaret was an administrator at the now troubled diocese headquarters (near the cathedral) and often saw the three bishops and their officials. With her known lesbian relationship, Margaret had Permission To Officiate in her Wytham parish, but no position. She made herself valuable by feeding information about diocesan workings and certain individuals to Bishop Barman. Sometimes she hired George Wickenby. However, she worked both ways and also approached me as his competition to feed information.

The tension was high ahead of the publication of the The National Church Report into the Managerial Efficiency of the Wytham Diocese, as Margaret said it would be called. She knew that my report was coming out at the same time.

"Tell me," Margaret said: "Do you have a grimy office, with a frosted-glass door, half-open venetian blinds, and a cheap open bottle of alcoholic drink?"

"Nope. And when the new premises are done, at what were Wickenby's, they'll be bright and modern."

"Barman sort of trusts me. His last phone call had a woman in the background, suggesting he is with Huett in Middlesbrough. Jonathan Eyre is likely with Julie Manns and her new baby in Worthing. The Wilsons are not in their parish."

"What does Derek Imperial think?"

"He's narrowly focussed on the administration report, and thinks Barman has become unavailable because of that. He has learnt about independent bishops and the curate at the altar table in Serninsea, and is mystified."

"He approved of Linda."

"He is thinking of offering Linda a counsellor, probably via a York diocese, which would mean someone like the Reverend Cornelius Beddoe. If Linda can no longer function as a parish curate, the idea is to offer Linda a temporary administration job here, like this one I do. Linda's no administrator! And I don't want to lose my job. Bizarrely, I could lose Barman's protection."

"Ann thinks Linda should tell all. We're giving her a church, so she would have to resign to use it. Maybe no one will come to it, if she's no good as a minister, so then - depending on Christine Vine - we'd turn it into some sort of office and small conference venue with a few massage and supporting facilities."

"Massage?"

"Relaxation. Some sort of attraction like that."

Penny approaching said, "She could keep her mouth shut and refuse any administration job. They're desperate for priests now, and no one will consider this diocese once these reports come out."

Margaret said, "Bishop Derek speculates that Linda must know these independents via Gretta Cox-Jenkins because she was once independent herself. But she is a Lutheran now."

"My focus will be on this Worshipful Company and other groups under this so-called Confraternity."

Margaret said, "I think your press reports will give rise to the question: 'How much did Linda contribute to her own downfall?' She and her friend did upset the priest to take his own life. People are very loyal to their Church; she has rocked the boat."

I asked if Barman would take revenge against selected people, including even my informants here.

Margaret said, "He'll be exposed for the manipulative person that he is. Even the brooch was an act of a conman among conmen, trying to be very significant in the community and overstretching. All charlatans communicate well."

"What about the situation in Hartlepool and Middlesbrough? What is the gossip there?"

"From what we hear, office to office, Huett has an arrogance of played innocence. She'll want to deny everything and then claim a different purpose. In one sense her outlook is similar to the innocence of Derek Imperial, but then his innocence is because his head is in the clouds."

Penny said, "Elizabeth does with Sarah Deimos and Harriet Leda what Barman does with me and Margaret. Sarah isn't stupid, but her hands are tied."

"Then I'll untie them."

Margaret said, "We're selfish too. Being here like this helps prevent ending up 'initiating'?"

"Nah. Husband Keith made all the difference for them and him to select Linda. The only person you can't pin down among that lot is Rhiannon Fleetwood, a priest emerging from Eyre's camp and was likely off to Wales. She keeps her distance, waits in the wings.

"That's where you have the Bishop of Mynyw: she's fifty-five with a string of lesbian lovers and the wopper of a rumour of a long-standing incestuous relationship with her niece, now forty. Bishop Niall Ifan at Casnewydd is just rampant. Huett and Asthana will have shagged them both."

Margaret said, "I think these personnel you take out may have to go independent."

I said, "Whether reassigned or removed, I'd like a person in Linda's new church who could be close to what they do. This Rhiannon Fleetwood could function in our new church for Linda."

Margaret said, "She'd most likely stay..."

"Kevin! Closer!" Penny shouted out. Margaret's young son was soon to return to his infant school.

Margaret continued. "Those who knew her in the south west and then in Rochester say she is a really slimy and despicable person. Huett would at least act the innocent, of having her own agenda, if she can be detached from Barman."

"How can she be detached from Barman?" I asked. "They're lovers."

"Huett will want her innocence underlined in public."

"Assuming so, can this be bought about?"

"Jenny World has been in Fatima Tamuuz's vicarage for far too long. Get Jenny World to connect with Huett, fast, and they might both escape from the coming disaster."

"There is something called the Secular Clergy Foundation website. It's for priests who continue to function after completely losing their beliefs. There is one bishop who is a member: Sarah Deimos. One of the priests on the list is Jenny World."

Margaret asked, "People who've lost all their beliefs?"

"Completely. They want to leave but can't for the time being."

Margaret responded, "We didn't know that. You and we have a good two-way exchange of information."

"Just wondering if Sarah Deimos might have some scores to settle."

Penny said, "She doesn't function like that."

"Something else," Margaret said. "Christine went independent and acted in competition with Barman. I watched him become paranoid up here and he was forever asking me what I knew. So ask yourself how Huett would function in Serninsea for Barman if Christine takes over what Barman used to do?"

"So Barman and Eyre and the lot of them could themselves want Huett working with Linda and Christine."

Penny said, "There operates a twisted mind."

I suggested to Margaret and Penny that they might consider themselves moving to a new and independent church, and then at least they could get married. Linda might introduce a naturist, polyamorous, fully inclusive, liberal church.

Margaret said, "I need a wage."

"We might need an administrator," I said.

"But then Jenny World was trained as an accountant, wasn't she - it's on the Hartlepool website - and she won't be a minister again."

"I take your point," I said. "Accountants become administrators."

So it was time to arrange a rapid interview with Sarah Deimos herself, and consider the possibilities of Huett with Jenny.

Jenny came in with me overnight at my accommodation; she was easily persuaded to join me with her own task to look for "cruel Barman" (my words - she agreed) in Middlesbrough.

Interviewing Sarah Deimos (Friday 20th September)

"So today was the day that the Report on the Managerial Efficiency of the Wytham Diocese would have come out. But it has been delayed until Monday. And you may wonder what this has to do with you here in Hartlepool. Coming here I dropped off one of your priests, Jenny World, in Middlesbrough, to look up the diocesan bishop, if possible."

"So you know Jenny World. She comes from Serninsea. She is the curate here under Fatima Tamuuz. Hmm. I can see something nasty is about to emerge."

"I'm going to show you and Louise some photographs. Jenny was present when these were taken, and so was I. You will need a strong stomach to see these. The woman injured grew up with Jenny at school, and they are both in the same profession. Her name is the Reverend Linda Jupitas, a priest in Serninsea in the Diocese of Wytham. She tells me to put a 'the' in front of 'Reverend'."

"I know whom you mean," Sarah answered with reciprocal pedantic wit. At first the bishop received the photos in silence. "Ugh. I feel sick. What has happened to her?"

Her sister Louise looked away.

"Well, people in a group decided to teach her a lesson prior to sexual intercourse from a suffragan bishop intimately connected with your diocesan and a related group."

"Rumours. Rumours that I thought had something to them."

"May I call you Sarah? And the reason I asked Louise to be here is because your sister was Linda Jupitas's spiritual confessor."

Louise now said, "This is terrible. What the hell has been going on? This is hell."

"What I want to know, maybe to adjust my report that is coming out, also on Monday, is what you understood to be the rumours, Sarah."

Louise Deimos said, "What I want to know first is what state Linda is in - can I come to see her?"

"She is recovering. She is being looked after; she has spent most of her time in bed. She has creams and drugs, her skin will never be the same again, and I think she must have taken a mental hit."

Sarah Deimos said, "You tell me more, Mr. Magellan, because I am going to go ballistic over this."

"Please. This report of mine, coming out on the same day as the Diocesan Report, will have that impact. If you go ballistic now, there'll be less impact. Three directly involved have already run away and others are hiding. Once this is out, you can then go ballistic. But, before you do, let us co-ordinate around what you know about the rumours."

"Why, Mr. Magellan, did you not come to me earlier?"

"For precisely this reason. I have been carrying out an investigation on these groups in their attempt to recruit Linda. One group is in Hartlepool, and has been for some time now. Those photographs are the result of Linda's resistance. She was being punished - cleansed of her sins, they called it - prior to her capitulation that did not happen. Before I tell you any more, I want to know what you thought was happening."

Louise said. "We can say what we discussed."

"Yes please," I said.

"My view was," said Sarah Deimos, "that the situation in the vicarage was unhealthy. I knew that Jenny World had undergone various mental breakdowns. That's not quite right: let's call them episodes. So she was never going to be any more than the curate. But Fatima has been very controlling. She treats her own child better, and I don't know who is the father. But there were rumours of visitors to the vicarage, including episcopal. I could never substantiate the rumours. I did substantiate my diocesan bishop doing rather a lot of travelling out of the diocese, and it seemed with a bias towards the Wytham Diocese. She started covering her tracks too, so she would visit somewhere within the Tees Diocese having come back from Wytham. What this is about is a long standing affair between her and John Barman. That gossip was in some places and not others. The problem is she has come on to me about my partnership with Harriet Leda, who lives with me. I want to marry Harri, but I can't, obviously, and I haven't even found a way to make her public. There's not even a civil partnership. She never goes to any function with me. It is very annoying and the diocesan has pressed me to keep my secret, given where things are, because revealing her opens all sorts of questions - could be scandalous."

"She's got one on you. And there is the other matter."

"What other matter?"

"You, like Jenny World, are on the Secular Clergy Foundation website."

"Ah. I'm afraid you've now said something Louise did not know."

"What is that website?" Louise asked her sister.

She replied, "Can I tell you afterwards? Back to this horrific group."

"Up here, Liz," I said.

Louise said, "I've said to Sarah to go public with Harriet to break Liz's hold on her. I gave up Anglicanism for this local denomination, the Free Liberal Church, to encourage Sarah in her known doubts and with Harri. But it didn't work."

"Louise, I'm a low-level suffragan. My job is to do the diocesan's bidding. We of all clergy are the most constrained. Liz has all knowledge of Harri, stronger than my hearing rumours of Liz's behaviour. And when it came to Fatima, Liz told me to let her get on with looking after Jenny's welfare."

"You've been made passive," her sister replied.

"Does Liz know about my secret?" Sarah asked me.

"I don't think so. Jenny has said Barman knows she's on the website but I don't think he does."

Louise asked, "What does this website imply?"

Sarah said, "It implies that I ought to be doing something else, and, until I do, I act the part of a believer. All right?"

"I didn't know. I thought you were going a bit more liberal but hiding it. I'm the one who went independent, I thought for similar reasons. But now..."

"No. You thought. I stay traditional, in public. We need to stick to why Adam is here, principally. Look, there is something else. There was a proposal to start a place in Hartlepool called The Green Diamond Club. Hartlepool has this ongoing regeneration plan, and the councillors in their wisdom decided that it was not the kind of establishment they wanted. I gave my opinion to support them. So Elizabeth said it was her 'joke' that Middlesbrough would be more accepting of such a place. When I had a go at her over this, she said I should stop being so prudish. It's about doing massages and extra services, and then all these erotic dancers and so on, and parties. But the proposer, Sanjay Bunker, he's called, said these establishments are very highly regulated. You cannot have orgies in them, for example. Well, thank goodness for that, but we don't want the rest either. Elizabeth said she won't waste her time or promote a prudish reputation by opposing it."

I said, "So if I tell you that Sir Sanjay Bunker partly owns The Blue Diamond Club Serninsea, would that surprise you? He officially shares ownership with a Mr. Stephen McPhail, but the real joint owner is the Bishop of Bolingbroke himself. There is a similar arrangement for the Red Diamond Club in Felixstowe, where the real part owner is Jonathan Eyre, Suffragan Bishop of Margate, and he cannot make up his mind whether to open one in Worthing, Brighton or Margate. Mainly they follow the restrictions of regulations, but they find nearby alternative venues for orgies. Linda, before she had the more systematic violence on her body, was taken to the Blue Diamond Club and subjected to ice baths and initial pain. The photos were taken nearby."

Sarah said she had to pause, and Louise brought her some water. Sarah then asked, "So how many of these places are there?"

"Three groups, if soon to be five: Serninsea, Margate, Hartlepool - they call it 'Hereteu' like your ancient name. Serninsea was named as if a theatre group. Margate is more complicated, because it covers areas around the south coast from Worthing to Ebbsfleet. There's Jonathan Eyre and there was Christine Vine."

"Somehow I've heard the name."

"We think Jonathan Eyre has spawned about twenty-five children, one recently. Jonathan Eyre had sexual intercourse with Linda, and reported it back to the group. Linda's husband was a member of the Serninsea group. Barman may have five or six from various mothers."

"Is she pregnant?" Sarah asked.

"No," I replied. "Louise: you left after John Barman was installed. You experienced the Wilsons in the Serninsea Ings deanery, and it is said if they weren't involved in the church they'd be in prison. They are sadists of a serious kind - demonstrably. What was your opinion of John Barman?"

"He was progressive, but it went with a huge ego. I read about that Serninsea Cross brooch, how it wasn't ancient and yet he still thought it useful. Very strange, that."

"Well here is something for you to contemplate. They considered recruiting you, Louise. But they decided they would have no purchase over you. Had it been Sarah, I think it might have been different, being Anglican still and your relationship with Harriet."

"Recruited to do what?"

"Have sex: with them, and, more to the point, passing body fluids to newcomers in the initiation process."

"I haven't had sex with anyone - ever!"

"They initiate business people, self-made people, people of some significance, into these groups. It is what they call 'theosexual', which means that initiators must be bishops or priests under apostolic succession, as they call it."

Sarah commented: "They apply Catholic theory to such sordid goings on?"

"It's an ecclesiology, I'm told, to facilitate and fix orgasm as the route into the divine."

"Utter drivel. And then they beat up people like Linda, when she resists?"

I said, "Linda partly agrees with all this, and Christine Vine is the intellectual behind it - now split away from them."

Louise said, "Ah yes. She walked out of the retreat for women becoming priests in the Wytham diocese. She and Jenny were in that bank."

"That's it," said Sarah. "I wondered what Jenny was doing down there. Fatima again. Yes, Vine was the other priest putting fear to one side during the robbery."

"Trouble is, Linda gets on rather well with her. My report seeks to keep Jenny out of this, and you too - but I am going to refer to rumours in the Tees Diocese. Hang on."

My phone was ringing. It was Jenny, who said, "She let me in and listened. I've come away to a safe distance."

"Jenny, I am talking to Sarah and Louise now. And, hello, it seems Harriet as well. Hello Harriet."

Jenny reported to me: "Liz said she is upset. I showed her the photos. She said she was promised they'd lay off. I told her I didn't like the Wilsons, Connie being Terry's backbone, and Jim preaching violence. By the way, Liz became very uncomfortable - his car is outside! The impression she offered is she won't accept it if he's been lying to her."

"Where are you?"

"Two hundred yards from his car."

"Keep a watch. She might chuck him out."

"Might? You're right. Front door, right now, suitcase too, and they are having a barny. Hey, I need to move a bit to be unseen. He's gone to his Lexus. Gosh, Adam, she's actually chucked him out."

"Brilliant work, Jenny. I must go. Bye!"

"I heard just about every word," said Sarah. Louise nodded. Harriet twisted her mouth. Sarah asked, "What do you want us to do, or not do?"

"Well, do nothing until Monday. The media burst will be Tuesday, because otherwise they might read the press Sunday night and then pull the diocesan report at the last minute. If you are asked, say what you told me, and I will back you up. The only problem, Sarah, is that this has gone on under your nose. Oh, one more thing. Do you know a woman called Anong?"

"Sheila Patterson?"

"You do. Well, she has had dealings with the Hereteu group. Extreme sex in Fatima's vicarage! I thought you might like to know that. Anong is background to the origin of several female spiritual groups up and down the country, and there is one in Serninsea. My information is that they are now harmless, if a little strange."

Sarah sat with her mouth open, and slowly looked at Louise.

Louise said, "I hope Akemi wasn't there."

"I might have to resign," Sarah said. "I've done nothing wrong, but what can I do? Anyway, if I can go cleanly, this might be the time to do it."

"I'll back you up. This disgusting occasion with Anong is in my report. Linda's husband was involved. By the way, he is with someone else now, and he is having an affair with Sanjay Bunker's niece. So, when married to Linda, he had, in effect, two affairs. His wife to be is now pregnant. Imagine how Linda feels about that. You know, don't you Louise?"

"This would be confidential."

And with me passing on that little bit of news, the interview was over. I left the shell-shocked sisters plus Harriet, and returned south to Jenny in the street near Liz Huett's in Middlesbrough.

I took Jenny north, so I was back in Hartlepool again.

"She might not have chucked him out, but put on a performance," I told Jenny.

I watched Jenny with bag approach the vicarage front door, and Fatima put her arms around her and then started waving her finger at Jenny. Jenny gave me a glance.

So I drove back to Serninsea.

Narrator: Linda Dance and Bed (Friday to Sunday 22nd September)

Whether actual or theatrical, Barman's Lexus was no longer at Liz Huett's. He was definitely not at Caffenmere. Jim and Connie Wilson were still missing. The question was whether any of these three would surface by Sunday.

Friday was the first day I tried to spend any significant amount of time downstairs, shaking off a horrible dream of being beaten by Colin Cromer (!), and I spent more time downstairs on Saturday. Diana and Kathleen still did the creams, and monitored my drugs. There was a positive effect already. We also went shopping.

The Caramel Club date was not for Diana and Aardse, but Diana and me, she said Saturday afternoon. The lights would disguise the bruising and marks, and I would get to move less or more to the music. I confirmed I was willing and able to go for a dance.

We prepared with a little make-up (using hers: I actually did not have any!) but casual gear to go in. My short hair was still good from Christine's hairdresser.

The taxi we took paused as we used a cash machine. It took us on to Titansea, which made me shiver a bit. The Caramel Club was located at the Ingle Drain outlet north of Ingle Barrow, in Titansea, on the edge of the whole urban spread of the three coastal settlements.

Our approach was via the edge of the dock. We could see a dredging machine working, even in the dark, with its lights blazing. Diana said to me, "That's why SMS has gone, I think. The dock and the entrance is a no win situation. Leave it to silt up and make a sitting area on grass and flowers."

We arrived to quite a few parked cars in the street and in parking areas, and other taxis coming and going. We entered an area with a reception desk to our right side. There were entry doors to the dance area ahead and a door to an art room to the left. Beyond the reception desk further right was a short corridor. As it led to cloaks, toilets and showers, it reminded me of above the casino and sent another shiver down my back.

A small-breasted topless woman called Cashew (on her collar) behind the desk asked, "Membership is individual, £10 for two weeks, £20 for two months."

"Do we pay now?"

"You must pay before anything else."

We paid. "What now?"

"Entrance is £10 each, but we only take pairs. You are a pair. If both of you undress over there at the cloaks to nude or bottomless, there is no entrance fee for either of you. No knickers, tights or stockings, but put your shoes back on. It helps create a great atmosphere."

"Same for men, Cashew?"

"Absolutely. You can hire a face mask for a £10 deposit each. You can only go in with at least one drinks voucher each, £6 each, so buy a voucher here or at the cloaks; or go in the art room there, for a design for only £10 each and we will give you five drinks vouchers each - and you can buy some more there. By the way, there's under twenty minutes left for the art concession.

"Does this apply to men as well?" I asked.

"Of course. Please go to the cloaks now because there is a queue behind you. Pay any entrance fee at the cloaks desk for a token because clothed entrants must hand over a token to security."

As a naked couple passed us and went into the art room, Diana asked me, "Do you want a mask, Linda? You'll want anonymity with your vocation."

"No, my time in the National Church is over."

"You don't know that," she responded. "Okay. We'll be nude and do some art," said Diana.

At the cloaks area we received a paper and first had to stand away and read its Boundaries Notice:

We say that the Caramel Club is the hottest dance venue throughout Foss. Therefore it is strictly for 18 years and over. If you appear to be younger than 25 years old, we require age ID. We can remove anyone off the premises at any time without explanation. We only accept pairs or multiples of people at entry, once you are a member.

You will see nudity and sexual acts. You may be approached by one or more of our dancers: they all wear white collars. They make themselves available for your entertainment.

We have a strict policy of consent. Those wearing red collars are enforcers. If you do not want to have contact with anyone, or end contact, you make it clear by standing back, closing your fist, raising your index finger and clearly waving it from side to side. No means no. An existing contact seeing such a gesture must end immediately. Any problem? Summons a red collar person.

There is video surveillance for your protection held by us securely for twelve weeks. At the clothing desk you may receive artistic masks if you prefer anonymity, for a cash deposit. Keep a close watch on your bags or use the locker facility.

Next, and strangely, there was a curtain area behind which to take everything off, so we did and then approached the cloaks desk again, who had the many lockers in their protected space - free on a first come and first serve basis, otherwise clothes and anything else would be in a pile behind their desk. There was one left, which we shared. Our bags were pushed in there too. We each received an elasticated strip to put on an arm - it would hold vouchers and immediate needs, and in our case meant a ten pounds note and five pounds note each. We said no to masks and ear plugs. Diana offered our own code word plus number for the locker content - 'MacCoinnich1743' - which they recorded. We went to the mixed loos thereabouts, quickly.

Drinks? In the toilets we saw this notice:

1 voucher = half litre soft drink

3 vouchers = litre alcoholic beer

5 vouchers = a short

10 vouchers = elaborate cocktail

Buy at cloaks, art room, bar right hand side

Up to five unused vouchers per person will be refunded

Naked, we avoided the double doors and the naked beefy red-collared security man there. In fact there was a further set double doors beyond him. Instead, we went through a single door on the left into the art room as the music boomed more inside there. We were just in time, arriving for the concessions, but had to wait.

Once the male artists were available, we lay down side by side and paid our £5 each. Diana opted for a reds and black geometric mirror design up her back and up her front drawn by Gauguin. I wanted a fox, in red, green and black, including its eyes around mine, its fur, and on my back, and a bushy tail down the back of my right leg, as created by Rembrandt. For this we collected five drink tokens each and put them in our elasticated strips and we bought five more each with the notes remaining.

I liked this art aspect. It was encouraged, and obviously added a little extra to the experience. "BDSM," I said to Rembrandt, who used some visible scars to assist his artwork.

Having those ten vouchers each definitely allowed us to go past another red-collared naked security man through the door directly from the art room into the dance hall.

The noise was deafening, but it kind of became mesmerising after not too long. It was minimalist music, and I had no idea when one piece finished and another started. But it did achieve a pulsing rhythm into the body, and I was pleased that my body could cope.

Diana and I danced and danced, holding hands, she going around me, coming in front of me, pressing me to her. She was the lead all right. After all, when had I last been to any dance hall, never mind one quite like this?

An incredibly muscular man with a white collar and long penis approached us. Diana raised her fist and waved her index finger. He went away.

Time just seemed to be lost. I'd no idea how long we had been there when we went and obtained alcoholic beers, using three tokens each. It was time to pause and drink.

We resumed dancing and she was brushing me with her breasts on mine. I paid attention to the dancing crowd, some of whom wore face masks, like butterflies with eye holes, a number of whom weren't naked and so must have paid the entrance fee. There was this naked black guy with a white collar on. I said to Diana, holding on to her and shouting down her ear, "I rather fancy him."

"You serious?" she bawled down my left ear.

"I wanna grab it!" I bawled back down her right ear.

Careful not to use the 'no' hand sign, he was beckoned over. I thus grabbed Walnut's large penis in my left hand, and started masturbating him. That was his job, after all. It wasn't long before I bent my knees, and started to use my tongue. Diana followed me in bending her knees to my right, and we shared him.

When, by going behind his collar, he produced a condom, Diana rose and waved her finger side to side, and as a result he was gone. She grinned at me as she grabbed me for a woman to woman gyration, pressing her crotch to mine.

Suddenly we had a jolt. It was Winnie and Kathleen with sweat-faded designs on their naked bodies, the metal dog collars dangling from their vulvas. So now we made a female foursome. Some men without white collars were approaching us, but every time we gave the waved finger. One of those who touched another female was thrown out through those double doors by a big-breasted hefty woman with a red collar on.

We noted how intimate, really intimate, Kathleen and Winnie were with each other, and Diana started stroking me on my front and back in similar fashion. Anyway, rightly so, Winnie and Kathleen did go off into the crowd, to be on their own, leaving me with Diana. The whole experience was turning into a kind of waking, pulsating dream within a wall of noise taking over the body. I vibrated simply through the pulsating, dominating rhythm. This was infused with the blur of Diana's body in front of me with her roving hands. After nights of waking and sleeping alongside her, I wanted her sexually.

Yet it was she who bent her knees and dropped down, and put out her tongue. I did not wag my finger! In fact I moved closer, and put my crotch above her tongue. She was licking and making sure she was going in. Oh, she was good. After some time of this and starting to hold on to her shoulders for stability, we swapped, so now I was exploring her - and let's say she was a bit runny. Somehow, doing this, we were also dancing. I wanted to carry on and on, but instead she pulled me up to kiss me, and she meant it.

Now we were close, bodies pressing, and yet again we were waving fingers at interested blokes. And then one bloke ignored our dismissals and rested his hand on to my shoulder. Within seconds this black guy as enormous in stature as I have ever seen pulled him away and simply sent him through the first main double doors out. Wow.

On his return I wanted to suck that chap off as well and beckoned him over, but he pointed to his red collar and smiled.

We went into some directly available unisex loos. We were hit by their coolness (and smell) and my ears were singing and numbed, but, passing a slightly breasted and hugely muscled red-collared security woman, I said to Diana, "This is fantastic."

Given they were busy, we both pissed in the same cubicle, taking turns. I noticed just how much our obvious body sweat had smudged and deteriorated our body artwork. The security woman prevented a woman punter hoisting her bottom on to a sink. Anyway, we were soon out to adjust back to the volume and the hot humidity.

I still had no idea when the music pieces started or stopped. On and on it went - and soon we could see some women had their legs up and guys in white collars were fucking them. And then there was a woman with a white collar on and she was on top of this bloke. Gosh.

I got close to Diana's ear. "Shall we have a couple of blokes?"

"No way!"

"Just wondered."

"We're all right together. Just you see."

For my compensation, Diana's hands were round my backside and going around, and then I realised she had a finger inside my vagina and one sensitively rising up my anus. She grinned at me and then put her head close and licked my sweaty (odourless) face.

Pulling her body to me even tighter, I shouted down her left ear, "Go on, get them right in!"

I widened my legs to help, and I was gyrating to the music with her fingers in me. Her face was so close I just snogged her, and she responded.

"Me!" I demanded. So she pulled me close, widened her own access, and yes I pushed a finger up between her buttocks and kept going. Two fingers slid in and up her long vagina.

"It's fifteen," she said.

"You're forty!"

"Centimetres!"

She was now gyrating around my administrations. At the front insertion she was spongy and wet and at the back insertion warm and pressing.

We snogged, and she was alternately extracting my tongue and getting hers down my throat. We were in complete harmony, and she hung on to me with one arm and slipped two fingers up my anus. And we stayed like that, clamped together for maybe five or ten minutes or more, but I couldn't tell how long. What did know was that both of us were perspiring over each other in the humidity. Any air conditioning was overwhelmed by all these bodies, all around, and us: so many engaged in open sexual activity.

Confident of resumption we relaxed from each other to obtain more drinks. We had them, and then indeed resumed.

It wasn't long before desire took over again. In a change I grinded my crotch on her right leg. Wonderful, and of course I reciprocated the facility of my right leg for her pleasure. Then I dropped down for tasting her gunge running down my chin, all the time going to the continuous beat beat beat sound. Reciprocating was the rule.

The music reminded me of Jean Michelle Jarre, but it may not have been his. Internalised, I'd become unaware of all other people.

We gravitated to holding hands both again, looking in each other's eyes, still gyrating, still pulsing, pulling us together, frequently kissing, then stroking, then more inserting. This was getting ever more intense, and my desire for Diana was overflowing.

I had a tendency to fall for individuals: Christine had been the latest. But Diana was different. I had a deeper, longer term love for her, and in this place she had overcome all her self-imposed restrictions regarding me. I was in her actual sex and she was in mine, and nothing was off-limits. The music pulsed on, and we pulsed in each other.

And then there was a change of music, and it slowed right down. So we took the cue, and danced together, holding on, slippery body to slippery body. I can't think that two people as supposed friends could be so comfortable with each other. I wanted to be all over her, and I reckoned she wanted the same. And this was how we wanted to be, and stay.

The sex had become intimate, as if all else had disappeared beyond the rhythm, and then the rhythm broke to a loving finale. Five hours we had been there.

And... it ended. It was time to go. All this had passed, and it must have been two in the morning.

We had to leave, to return to the cloaks area. We asked about our vouchers left over: yes, they'd give us cash. The code 'MacCoinnich1743' put the cash into our lockers for the time being, because the woman said we could have a brief shower if we wanted, and so we did, sprays of warm water for anyone to walk into. The showers didn't quite get rid of our well-smudged patterns. We were given a towel each. All sorts of security red collars were gathering as people were showering, drying and dressing and collecting their items. I recognised the white collared black guy labelled Walnut on his collar that Diana and I had shared, so before I dressed I gave him a hug and kiss. Diana did the same, and then we two kissed rather more.

This time 'MacCoinnich1743' meant collecting our bags and clothes. Thus we put on our clothes in the dressing and undressing space.

Outside in the instant cool there were licenced taxis offering to take us home. I felt a little deaf, and my ears continued to ring. We approached a taxi for us arm in arm. In our taxi Diana said to me, "What happened in there stays in there."

"Yeah," I said. "It was great."

"It was."

Back at mine we showered each other to remove the art design remnants. We dried each other for convenience, and got into bed all fresh and cool. We looked at each other, held on, kissed a lot, stroked one another in intimate places and eventually went to sleep.

Next day she was only my friend again, rejecting me in bed with a clenched fist and waved index finger. She said I should contact Adam, and tell him to come back.

When we got up naked I was stiff again, but this was a happy stiffness unlike the blows I had received above the casino.

We ate, and Kathleen and Winnie came down together to be four naked people around the table. But afterwards I felt tearful as Diana dressed.

"Don't cry," she told me close-to, and kissed me on the lips. "I was loving you yesterday, and all last week. I think you were loving me too."

I said, "We should be talking here not in the past progressive but the present continuous tense. Or the present perfect: 'I have loved you so much I cannot stop.' No?"

"The past continuous is right," Diana said. "I am returning to Aardse. But be assured, of the present perfect continuous tense: 'I have been loving you all my life.' You understand that."

Diana went out of the front door and gave me a little wave. She'd left me, and I went to the nearest settee in the long lounge and I did start crying. Kathleen came in with a box of tissues. Several times thereafter I tried to get hold of Adam, on this late Sunday morning, but there was no reply via any method of contact.

I went upstairs to find Kathleen again, knocking on her bedroom door. Invited in, Winnie was ascending up Kathleen's body under the duvet. I said, "If you get in touch with Adam, Kath, can you tell him to come back to me?"

"Sure," Kathleen said. "But can you believe it? They've published that diocesan report today, on a Sunday. I bet it's so that it makes less impact."

"Did you enjoy the Caramel Club?" I asked.

"We do. Third time. We never have sex with anyone else."

"I don't suppose I will ever go there again. They only let in pairs of people. I shall remember Diana and me there until the day I die. You know, I'm clear of Christine and now I have to get over Diana."

"She replaced your pain with love," said Kathleen receiving Winnie's attention.

"But I want to love her!" I exclaimed back, and felt utterly frustrated, and was alone all Sunday. Hearing Kathleen and Winnie yelping did not make me feel any better.

Later on Kathleen came to me to rub in creams and supervise my drugs. I felt so sad. At The Caramel Club they all wore collars, and I wondered what would be my future in a clerical collar.

Chapter 19 Exposure and Restoration

Narrator: Linda Diocese Exposed (Monday 23rd September)

Monday morning I recovered from another bad dream, this time of Connie Wilson chaining me up for Colin Cromer to direct the violence, and this time happening in my bedroom against the wall.

The only person now rubbing in my creams for me was Kathleen. Despite the dream, I wasn't getting out of bed; she brought me breakfast on a tray.

"Cereals, toast, orange juice. Is that all right?"

"Fine. Your metal disc: had I gone through with it all, I would have received my own badge. The B and a goose."

"You didn't want one of those," she said.

"Linda, I've already seen the newspapers," said Kathleen.

"Bring me one."

"I mean online. Use your phone." Kathleen made herself scarce again.

I didn't. I felt my fingers freeze despite my brain's initial instruction.

Adam phoned me. Had anyone shown me today's The Daily Morse?"

"I'm a bit slow. I'm a bit fearful, Adam. I thought I'd read the diocesan report first."

"Yeah, and coming out yesterday made no difference. Well, our contribution to the show is on the road."

"Did you take Jenny back to Hartlepool?" I asked.

"Yes. Via Middlesbrough. And I interviewed Sarah Deimos in Hartlepool, and this is squeezed in to the report, and my paper asks how the Tees Diocese knew so little when its own bishop was running wild."

"Are you coming back to me?"

"I will; I have been working directly with The Daily Morse."

Finally, I looked around online. They finally called it the National Church Report into the Managerial Efficiency of the Wytham Diocese and it made terrible bedtime (!) reading, even at glances through it.

I got up. I saw the lunchtime regional news. Kathleen and Winnie decided that my bedding was disgusting after Diana and I had been rolling over it for a week with the creams and perhaps the odd secretion smeared in. So they washed the bedding while I watched the telly.

The bureaucratic mess had been mentioned on Sunday's television, but weekday regional news came into its own. The news summary on the report was that the diocese was incompetently managed just about everywhere. It had inept oversight in its management and the finances were in meltdown. The cathedral was at war with its bishop. Weak churches staying open should be shut down - I thought of Inglemire and its parish. The functioning churches had inadequate resources. Wytham diocese had the worst figures in the country for decline in attendance. The most failing deanery was Serninsea Ings itself.

But now this was being overshadowed by the splash in The Daily Morse. This laid out that under the umbrella of inefficiency, the Suffragan Bishop of Bolingbroke, John Terence Barman, was one of three bishops who ran secret sexual orgy groups that forced violent sexual activity.

Adam had hardly left me out. In The Daily Morse report across four pages, I was the victim, big time, as was the late Ken Osis. Keith was described as grooming me, his wife, for the Serninsea group. It said there were sex parties for swingers in Serninsea, known to insiders as The Worshipful Company of Serninsea Theatrical Players, located in part of a former theatre. These involved clergy, local business people, other denominations, even reaching parts of Judaism and Hinduism. The Titansea Grand Hotel was mentioned, that Barman organised for accommodation and some events there - but not Christine's alternative.

Named as perpetrators were the three bishops; the brutal Wilsons (brought from the Midlands); the McPhails as exhibitionists, forgers, and builders of victim equipment. Business people were recruited. Available prostitutes - called 'Geese' (although all the initiated were 'geese' in fact) - provided services. The apostolic structure was explained, at least to the extent that ordinary people could get a hook on Catholic theory.

Elizabeth Huett with Hindu Yojana Asthana toured Wales to have sex with the bishops of Mynwy and Casnewydd in order to recruit them.

Suffragan Bishop of Hereteu Sarah Deimos was uninvolved but naive in not pursuing rumours, with all the gory details of happenings at the Fatima Tamuuz vicarage - Jenny not named.

The emphasis on Christine was on walking away and being in dispute. Jenny and Christine were mentioned at the bank robbery, putting them in a good light, but then they must have been at a sex orgy!

Jonathan Eyre had fathered an estimated twenty-five children. Julie Manns was named as the latest pregnant by him - Adam and the newspaper should have left her out? Rhiannon Fleetwood got a mention as a mother of two of his.

Sanjay Bunker didn't even get a mention, which was incredible, and obviously reflecting his power, but his niece was given as the Hindu in SMS and linked to my husband in Adam's search for Keith's affair.

Rabbi Maurice Neptune of Wytham was mentioned as knowing the perpetrators, as part of the wider religious connection.

I wondered what Colin Cromer would make of this, compatible with when I told him to 'follow the rumours'. He was mentioned as an innocent and unaware.

The diocesan bishop, another leader who knew nothing, made a statement.

The National Church Report on our administrative inefficiencies needs leadership to implement recommended improvements. As for the revelations of a sordid sexual nature, involving the Suffragan Bishop of Bolingbroke, and other bishops: as his diocesan I will accept his immediate resignation - not just suspension. The reports are deeply distressing.

Strangely, by the afternoon, Suffragan Bishop Julian Worsley of Screddington had resigned with immediate effect. The Bishop of Bolingbroke, John Barman, could not be contacted.

Christine rang the doorbell. Kathleen let her in and I was in bed again. Christine brought with her The Daily Morse in paper format. She had her own news that Liz Huett had become unavailable to anyone, Fatima Tamuuz had fled with her daughter, somewhere, and we did not know where Jenny had gone. Julie Manns was in distress and unavailable, as was Jonathan Eyre.

"He's the wrong one," I said to Christine about Julian Worsley. "Maybe he has gone related to inefficiency."

"Maybe. Maybe he fears more. Listen, I'll tell you. The Right Reverend Julian Worsley doesn't do ordinary sex. You didn't see him at any of the parties either. He stayed clear of all that, unlike me. But look at his body. Well, I have. He has scars and puncture marks and all sorts. He has a bolt through his penis, the Prince Albert itself. Jonathan Eyre knew. It is why I came to Wytham Diocese from Kent and I made a one to one connection with Julian. But he has ecclesiology, whereas Barman doesn't."

"What?"

"It wasn't one-way with him. I had a safe word but I wouldn't use it: I took it all. He ripped my flesh. He did spare my breasts but did not between my legs. Worsley tutored me in suffering and I gave it back, but he did use the safe word."

"So Adam's report is incomplete!"

"It's a separate matter."

"He resigned!"

"Because he's principled. I am going to see Julian now. He knows I was coming here to see you beforehand. By the way, we stopped when he was no longer my bishop. My scars are authentic sacrifice."

"But where is Barman?"

"He's cancelled the forthcoming civic function: a lunch to discuss a proposed art gallery. Tomorrow The Daily Morse will refer to the fake Serninsea Cross brooch as arranged by him," she said.

"That's separate."

"He's become fair game on all his dodgy goings on. The paper will do more on the pals: him and Jonathan, and the affair with Liz Huett before she was a bishop. There is a lot of mileage in this for days."

"Barman and the Wilsons have got the missing diaries. Adam hasn't mentioned them."

"If you are concerned about their use, I'll ring Adam on a number he'll answer. Hang on."

"Oh great. A number he's kept from me?"

Christine asked Adam to speak to me and passed her phone to me.

Adam said, "Hi Linda. Yeah."

"Why haven't I got this separate number?"

"To keep it restricted. She can give it to you. But if you get asked for an interview, put them on to us on the usual number because this is all under contract. The Daily Morse has first rights to everything. What you can do is write a first person piece for the newspaper. But you'd have to resign, I think, and probably Jenny too. I am receiving requests to name the visiting initiating clergywoman to Serninsea - people assume it is Jenny. Will you do it, via The Daily Morse, for more payment?"

"The diaries, Adam, the diaries," I said.

"Tomorrow is also about the diaries," he said. "We can't prove that they've got them, but we can say they have the house keys: Osis made daily entries regarding what the coroner said on the missing books. If you do your own account, we neuter the diaries - I hope. My whole report will go public in a few days. Delaying allows The Daily Morse to control the news. I have a suggested title for your piece, although sub-editors do change things: Drawn into the Anglican Sex Cult or something like that."

"What about 'From deacon to priest to resignation in months' or more like that?"

"Too neutral," he replied. "Shall I make the deal for you? It will go towards a new church for you."

"May as well. It is only yet one more humiliation."

Christine gave me the special contact telephone number, to be used only by me and when necessary.

I asked her to rub in creams for me, and tick a document Kathleen created to monitor that I'd had my drugs.

"Have you had sex with Adam?" I asked her as she pulled the duvet off and rubbed cream, starting with my breasts.

"No."

"You seduced me. Diana is right. Christine: I'm sorry, but you really are stark raving mad. Does nothing come outside some sort of religious explanation? "

"You're entitled to your opinion. Your back and arse, please, Linda."

"Do my upper legs first because I want to look at you. Jenny says you're an atheist really, beyond all this institutional guff."

"You are both entitled to your opinions. Let me do this."

After a pause I said, "Oh fuck it, I may as well sell my story. Do my arse."

"And your back and the back of your legs. Start with your back. The Anglican diocese will be weak for years to come. A lot of lay folk will leave, some priests will transfer. Suffragans will be hard to find."

Then I said: "That magic show, I did: I showed the outline of my vulva. Do I write about that, dear Christine?"

"Of course. And how you'll be in the diaries. Better get ahead of the curve. You never know: you might not have to resign. You could even be the one who forced them to clean out the stables. You control your account: make the case for yourself."

"You do realise what is in my story?"

"I do. Make it comprehensive."

"I think I hate you, Christine."

"Well, some do. It is the cost of discipleship. Diana does."

"You're manipulative too. Diana seems to dislike Adam, under her breath."

"I can't think why."

"Hmm. I've had a thought," I said, sticking my rear out further for her attention. "Barman wanted me to do as he said. Now Adam is getting me to do as he wants."

"No. Not the same."

Kathleen suddenly came in as Christine creamed my buttocks saying that I should take my antibiotics, holding a glass of water. And then she said, "Oh Christine, you're doing the creams. Look, she is getting much better already. Her bottom has improved a lot. Hopeful."

Christine said, "Some of mine were left untreated."

"Linda had such smooth perfect skin," said Kathleen.

"In a year there'll be the odd smudgy mark," confirmed Christine in that lost hope.

I took my medicine while Christine went over my legs.

"Done. You'll live. I'm afraid that, after the rainbow, nothing is quite the same again. But there is a Covenant and you are, like it or not, Linda, mystically attached to the Church."

"And, yet again, Christine: you are nuts."

"May God go with you, Linda."

After Christine had gone, Kathleen came back, stripped off, and got into bed with me

"You don't have to. Diana was doing this when I was spitting at everyone and yet really needed someone. Where's Winnie?"

"Visiting her mother. Diana is your friend. You are my friend."

Later on I woke to answer the telephone. Local commercial radio reporter Bill Battersby called me for any comment about the diocesan report.

I said, "Please contact the national newspaper The Daily Morse. Or, er..."

"So you've no comment at all, other than that."

"I have none at all. But I can give you Adam Magellan's usual contact details. He's the private investigator with all the source information and he can comment. After all I've been through, I am being looked after by my friends. You can say that if you want."

Developments (Tuesday and Wednesday 25th September)

Next day The Daily Morse went into detail about the 'Worshipful Theatre Company' with tales of Church framed orgies. There were many and these were news to me. There was element of initiating, of course. Jenny was now named as:

...the sexed-upon travelling initiating curate. Her Hartlepool vicar joined her Middlesbrough bishop in forcing Jenny World into sexual services.

Bishops sprinkled holy water and hands held high for the divine to come down in ecstasy. Crazy people! The newspaper did refer to the diaries written by Ken Osis that had gone missing, that would reveal all of the Wilsons' and the bishops' behaviour. The emphasis was on them.

The news element was that they'd all done a runner, with Julian Worsley the only one so far to resign publically, and the question was whether any of these Bolingbroke, Margate and Tees bishops would appear for Sunday services.

Then there was a whole article about Kay Sally Parker, the headteacher for decades at the secondary school, including about Annie Fenwick 'groomed' as a former head girl and leading sex worker. So now the school was embroiled in the scandal. Portrait pictures were published, including mine as: Victim: the Revd. Linda Jupitas, married to the sex cult member Keith.

Adam sent me a link, and so I found Annie Fenwick on Goosechat, naked and masturbating, talking away about her time in the sex cult as if she'd enjoyed every minute. Any newspaper could transcribe this stuff. Customer tips responded to every lurid detail.

Of course there wasn't enough on the theological construct all around these colourful events, as people would not understand. Did Adam understand? The press wouldn't go deep enough on that. Barman was thus described in places as 'the worshipful bishop', 'the bedding bishop' and 'the very well-endowed bishop'.

I tried to sit up and type my own story on my laptop but I lost the energy to be bothered. Was it to entertain as well as be shocking? Doing this - or, indeed, not doing this - Jenny rang via Skype.

As soon as her face appeared, she started. "He's mentioned me. Is Adam doing it just for the money?"

"He wanted to keep you out. It's your prominent role - he can't."

"What about me warning you?"

"You knew what was coming: how I'd be abused: whipped, pierced, sex devices used, punched, all ahead of expected sexual intercourse and prostrating. Jim Wilson said my blood must flow, and it did. You knew this."

"I didn't! I only guessed they wouldn't spare you."

"I'd accept them and they'd still punish me. He wanted to come up with all this biblical stuff. You knew their thought processes."

Jenny said, "She should have given you a safe word. She didn't."

"No, Jenny; it was never a BDSM game. I was being punished. I was being prepared. I was supposed to take that man's enormous penis. I even had a prayer given if I was to get pregnant and have a child. Don't start imagining another reality."

"You said you consented. You did say that."

"I thought it would be the line of least resistance, for you and me to then function in Inglemire."

"Too late for that now."

"Are you with Fatima?"

"She's gone to who knows where."

"Who is with you? Anyone?"

"Yes, but I'll tell you later. I'm all right. Are you all right?"

"I'm coping."

"Does Christine keep making love with you?"

"No."

"Does Diana?"

"No, certainly not. Not Christine, not Diana."

"My clerical career is over, so I'm forced to move on now. I think yours is over too."

Diana called round later if briefly this time to ask if I was coping with the news. She knew all that had happened so could hardly accuse me again of being sluttish or on the game.

"Yes, but what about you and me as private news?"

Diana at my bedroom door said, "Don't push it, Linda. I'm married to Aardse and you have Adam. See you very soon."

Next day (after no Adam again) national television broadcasted the basics. The local radio made reference to 'the Church scandal of Serninsea'. I put my house telephone on answerphone and answered none other than supposed friends. The 1 pm regional TV news pictured the parish church plus a photograph of Colin and me at the ordinations - when he had nothing to do with this - with another separate photo of Bishop Barman. The TV news said Barman had now resigned, according to the diocesan, Derek Imperial, whereas the whole diocese needed his own leadership. As for Elizabeth Huett, this was on social media from the Archbishop of England, Right

Reverend David James Fraser:

For her despicable unChristian behaviour and associations, I have called for the immediate resignation of the Bishop of Tees, the Right Reverend Elizabeth Claire Huett, and will arrange for pastoral and administrative cover during the interregnum from the Suffragan Bishop of Hereteu (Hartlepool), the Rt. Revd. Sarah Deimos. Counselling is available for all those adversely affected. I give my sincere apologies for all who have been wronged in this scandal.

Adam rang and I took that call, "Adam, before you start, that TV report: Colin has nothing to do with this."

"I did tell them that, but it's right on his parish. Yeah, apparently Bolingbroke has gone."

"Where geographically?"

"The Daily Morse is asking me that you make your article revelatory and show what you were forced to do."

"Oh crumbs. I was going to start it, but didn't have the energy or will."

"Size of a long sermon," he said. "Your story."

"Yes I will. I've become very lazy."

"What they'd love is a book and to have first British serial rights."

"This is getting out of hand," I said.

"Linda, we have to manage this the best we can. Skirt round the people you want to protect. The way to stop Barman approaching The Red Giant or similar is to write your story."

"Adam, I want our relationship to survive this. If you're exploiting me, it won't survive. I want to stay with you, so please don't let me down. I couldn't stand it if you are being two-faced."

"I get it. I'm handling this best as I can. Write the article. Do a good one, Linda. Oh, social media, the Archbishop of All England."

"I've got it. hang on. Ah, they've shared some phrases. Always a bad sign, that."

It is with not a little frustration and indeed surely justifiable anger that one of the suffragan bishops in my diocese has indulged in despicable unChristian behaviour and terrible associations of inappropriate personnel. I am therefore calling for the immediate resignation of the Bishop of Margate, Jonathan Hopkirk Eyre, given the emerging reports that have come to my attention recently. Stories emerging of his licentious sexual life and parenting some twenty-five or so children from many different mothers are unusually horrifying. I have asked for all those affected to be approached for counselling. The Bishop of Folkstone, Sarah St. John Spinks, will provide pastoral and administrative cover during the interregnum. I give my sincere apologies for all who have been wronged in this scandal, with not an unexpected reaction coming from many and thus damaging (yet again) the reputation of the wider Church.

"Verbose tosser. So my story produces a whirlwind that throws me out,

Adam."

"Think of a renewal away from all these people. Do your ministry like Christine."

"Well, she's a bishop, but a bishop of what? And would I want to be her priest, given what she does? She's as mad as a hatter, Adam, with her crazy theology and ecclesiology."

"It's only a suggestion, but it's not my field."

"Anyway, I'd want a church and a congregation, and a congregation isn't going to happen. Christine and the rest are bishops without anyone else."

"Ann and I will give you a church. The congregation may follow. By the way. I've redirected a received call back to your phone. It's on voice recording. I've heard it, obviously. Let him go to The Lakes, the miserable sod."

I found it and I pressed to listen. It was Colin Cromer.

"Pass this on, Magellan, seeing as everyone is directed to you or the press. It's me, Linda, and please don't ring back. I'm very disappointed, with all I have learnt. You obviously knew more when you told me to follow the rumours, but you did not tell me about John Barman. I'm retiring, early, quickly. Bishop Derek says he'll see it's easy for me. But I want you to resign, to leave the Church, as well. I'm retiring; you're resigning. My telephone has become my enemy. I've had nothing but press, radio, TV, calling me. I'm going to stay somewhere else, leaving tomorrow: the Lake District probably. Why would I want to stay here? Write your resignation to Bishop Derek. Tell you what, why don't you move away? Perhaps you could do us all a favour, and take Adam Magellan off to Wales or somewhere like that. Nottingham was once good enough for him, before he returned and took Mirela from me to be his lawful wedded wife, which she is still. Join the rest of your strange family in Wales. But, wherever you go, don't come near Cumbria."

The recording ended.

Future Ministry Suggestion (Thursday 26th September)

I was told that builders had begun at Adam's and George Wickenby's old place. Kathleen told me that Ann had a plan months back. A church for me was always on the agenda.

I said to Kath, "It's like there's someone else running your life; they seem to know what you'll be doing before you do it yourself".

Bishop Geoff Virgo rang, seeing the national coverage, the angle being about the 'sex cult and swinging' group run by a bishop. He remembered that I'd hinted at odd things locally. I said I would be writing my story and resigning.

"Easy," he said. "We can incardinate you into the Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia."

"Oh, yeah, great; but where do we here get our income?" I asked. Then I added, "I can answer that myself. All the money from this scandal - but it isn't going to last. And none of it is a salary."

Geoff said, "Do a useful exercise to help frame your mind: write down what sort of ministry you would do, or could do, because that's the way we would consider you for our expanding operation."

"Join Christine?"

"Yes. But you will need a Disclosure and Barring Service Check."

I fell about laughing.

He asked what was funny.

"Everyone in this scandal has one of those!"

"Well, it is required as independents are especially vulnerable."

"The point is, I'm not sure I could be a priest under Christine. In my own church I'd not want to take her orders."

He said, "We'd elevate you. You would be equal to Christine. You'd have different ministries."

"Me a bishop? Don't make me laugh again, Geoff."

"It's no laughing matter, being a bishop."

"How many words?" I asked.

Oh, about the size of a sermon," he said. "Essay or enhanced bullet points. Must rush - I'm going to a paid-for pastoral consultation. We do receive payments; we do have an income."

Two pieces of writing, then, I thought to myself, as alternatives to sermons. One for a newspaper on my bad times, and one on the good times to come. Except, as I began to think about it, I wasn't sure what to put at all, beyond doing parish-style ministry.

Then I became more creative in my mind. I started to consider what sort of liturgical changes I would make from the Anglican fixtures. They seemed to be more and more considerable as I sat with scraps of paper and the Anglican worship book. Perhaps a newer liturgy or liturgies could be done via an audio-visual method, or I could get liturgical materials published by a local commercial printer.

Adam at last came to my bed. He'd spent too long away, but all the time he was planning and carrying out his exposure details for the media that works late. He was consultant to all the journalists' articles. He was also considering my future.

I welcomed him back in, literally: we made love.

"Are you my future?" I asked him.

"Yes."

"Let me ask you a question: does everything come through Ann and Labhaoise?"

"Ann. Ann consults Labhaoise of course, but my business and personal support comes through Ann."

"So it does then. But if I'm your partner?"

"Don't question it too far, Linda. She won't interfere with us, just as I am not a father to their children, even though biologically they are mine. She approves of us and the rest is up to us. So far I've been your mate: you're now suggesting more."

"Possibly. I've grown distant from Christine. Diana is just a friend."

I realised that George Wickenby's place, now Adam's, would be at least a bolt-hole for him, as there were two bedrooms there where Peter and Kathryn might live. George had not lived above the shop for some years. Adam was completely gutting his present premises and next door, including incorporating its double garage at the end, around which went a tenfoot. It meant a small church and accommodation.

The Daily Morse, having effectively forced headteacher Kay Sally Parker to resign instead of retire - a sad end to a long career - now named participants at the 'Worshipful Theatre Company' orgies. Some were in the police: a male Chief Inspector and two Detective Inspectors, one of whom was a woman. They were likely to face disciplinary action of 'conduct unbecoming' by police officers.

The Daily Morse gave permission for one television and one radio documentary, so long as it was referenced on key matters, and this would earn Adam even more. We were quickly descended on for interviews, and these went on for several hours, and some (like Christine) took part and others refused, with camera crews seen taking shots around the locality.

Meanwhile the newspaper wanted to make use of my naturism, so it did a kind of Mothers' Union style Calendar shot of me. We went to the moribund UPCC chapel (I don't know how they obtained the key) and used its reading lectern to hide my bits. At home I did a back perspective shot of me writing a sermon - naked.

I learnt that Adam was refusing requests for pictures of me and about me; they all had to go through our chosen newspaper. Of course there were pictures of me clothed on various websites; then some clever journalist had found two pictures of a younger me at the Saxiclite Naturist Club, my previous club, where in one I was lying on my front on some grass talking to a small group of people and in the other I was cross-legged and my breasts were for all to see. I was thus depicted in The Red Giant.

Other channels were doing their own thing in town, and of course interviewed people who were in the congregation at the parish church. Some remembered me as a weird child in a weird family - mentioning my elder sister and mother. Somehow my father and elder brother seemed to escape scrutiny, and Leila was missed out.

Counselling? (Sunday 29th September)

I'd decided to skip all churchgoing for Sunday, and instead Diana called around. We were moving about naked indoors, and she had a look at some of my writing for both articles.

Diana said to me, "Don't do the dirty on Osis, and keep me out of it."

About two in the afternoon, Adam had a shared lunch with Diana and me without shedding anything. The feeding done, he was on his way out for more media work when there was a ring at the door.

"Some clergyman," Adam called back as he half-opened the front door.

The visitor glimpsed me as I found my cassock in the below stairs toilet, still functioning as a quick wear device, while Diana put her knickers and bra back on.

"And you are?" I said approaching the door with Adam laughing outside.

"I am the Reverend Cornelius Beddoes, sent from York in fact, at the Archbishop of England's behest from a suggestion by the Bishop of Wytham."

"Don't you make an appointment first?"

"I thought you might be in. I did go to speak with Colin Cromer, the Vicar of Serninsea. His Grace also wants me to investigate the fabrication of the Serninsea Cross or Brooch, the end of the marriage between Jeremy and Emily Symes, and the vacancy of Caffenmere and Inglemire that not in the gift of the Suffragan Bishop of Bolingbroke."

"Are you decent yet?" I called out to Diana.

"It'll do."

"You did put on your black Anglican cassock," he said, still at the door. "I take it you intend to remain a priest in good standing."

"Oh, come in. You may as well."

Diana was in the lounge with her blouse over her bra, knickers on, but bare legs and feet.

"All I'm doing is coming to ask you if you would like to receive counselling. I am a trained counsellor myself, or we have the Reverend Billie Thatcher, a female counsellor, if you prefer."

"I prefer none of you," I said.

"I can imagine," he said.

"Sounds like you're here for more than offering counselling."

"I am but I am asking whether the aftermath of what has happened is traumatic?"

"Yes, with needles and skewers pushed through my flesh, and being beaten up by crazed individuals."

"Quite. The intention of these people was to 'initiate' you, was it?"

"That was the bishop's task, to get his enormous penis into my very small vagina."

"So he had shown you his penis."

"He did, earlier, at the Blue Diamond Club, after ice baths and having to kneel on wooden ridges biting into my knees and lower legs."

"And at the top floor of the casino?"

"It's not the top floor of the casino: it is above the casino. He stayed in the kitchen and was about to come out and penetrate my bloodied body."

"Oh dear. Quite. You were not given a code word by which they should stop this?"

"As I told someone else who asked that: this was not some BDSM game."

"I told Colin Cromer that this Vanguard decided that it overruled the Diocesan structure."

"It did."

"Initially you went into their mentoring, I understand, so a point must have come when you withdrew your consent."

"I was investigating them, as they were secretive. I wasn't happy with how others had been involved."

"Quite."

"Why are you asking?"

"I suppose because I am trying to measure the extent of the mental trauma."

"Because I normally like this sort of thing? Do you know what it is like hanging with your arms trying to come out of their sockets and only your toes on the ground, with a plank of wood on your crotch?"

"This is absurd," said Diana, alongside me.

"My questioning?" asked the Reverend Cornelius.

Diana said, "The measure of her trauma is her experience evidenced by her injuries. Undress, Linda, and show him."

He said, "I'm not sure that..."

I stood and got the cassock off. "Look," I said. "And these are a lot better than they were. I've taken tablets and had creams rubbed in many times daily." I did a turn so that he got the back as well as the front.

"Quite. I sense a sense of hostility towards the Church," he said, calmly.

"He's good, this one, isn't he?" said Diana. "Put your cassock back on, Linda."

"You are?"

"Diana, her naturist friend."

"Being from the northern province, they reckon I'm less attached considering your future career - given all the revelations. Your training priest, the Reverend Colin Cromer, thinks you should resign. His review of your curacy so far is, well, pretty damning."

"Because the suffragan, who had me followed, was always undermining me. Those photos that Colin was sent anonymously, for example, were from the bishop after Ken Osis took them years back."

"When you were a model. Being a model, one time, indeed demonstrably being a naturist, and known locally about your past: this is a difficult background from which to find you a suitable role as a priest in the Church."

"What suitable role would there be?"

"Well, we think we could value you in administration and preparing theological documents; the diocesan bishop could value you as a theological advisor - to flesh out his own theological investigations."

"Hidden away, you mean?"

"Your curacy here is ended, unfortunately - it's a question of loss of confidence. We could do a formal appraisal."

"Well, let me help you. Forget the appraisal and I don't want your administration job in Wytham; I thought I was being selected for parish ministry."

Diana said, "Instead, she was being prepared to be Bishop Barman's concubine."

"Not quite that, Diana."

"Ask the Wickenby twins. The elite in society took concubines, many of whom were slaves. Some of these women served as priestesses and held a very high social rank. They carried out an honourable fulfilment of religious duty."

"I wish I'd have known that," I said to my friend. "I'd have signed up straight away! Did they say this to you?"

"Kathryn did, talking at college."

Cornelius then said, "More seriously, parish ministry wasn't what you had expected. Right? Would you like systematic counselling, to examine your inner feelings and reactions?"

"No."

"Not even with the Reverend Rosie? She can go very slowly."

"No. I'd like to go very quickly. I'll publish my article - you'll have to wait for that - and then I am resigning. I might, just might, go independent; I also might go to the family farm in Wales and disappear into that."

"Don't go," said Diana. "You went to university once, and I was back from Rasa Market."

I looked at her.

She then asked, having looked back at me and pulling a face, "What about you and Adam?"

The Reverend Cornelius said, "So I report back that you are considering your future outside the Church and you don't wish for counselling. I'm not sure if we provide counselling for a priest who leaves."

"You look after your own only, then, when ordained?"

"It might be about available resources."

"Well, the Reverend Cornelius, you've said very little and far too much at the same time. I think it is time you went so that my friend here can remove her textiles and me my cassock and we can play a good board game or something like that. I'll dig up my own old box of Coppit, and we can have three colours each, and I'll thrash her."

He said, "Perhaps we should choose our words..."

"Let yourself out because I want this cassock off and I don't want to put this back on again. Indeed, I don't want to put it on ever again."

"You realise," he said, standing up, "that this house comes with your Anglican role."

"I do. So when I resign, they can give me a date to get out. Here the bed is mine, and the telly, and computer, but much else isn't."

He said, "I'll report back to the counselling team."

"Bye! Get 'em off, Diana."

Once he'd gone, Diana said, blouse, bra and knickers off, "For a moment I thought we were doing another Ken Osis."

"Ken had more about him."

"My gaydar was operating," Diana said.

"Anyway, I'm back with Adam."

"Hmm. Adam," said Diana. "I don't like him. He's paid more attention to the media opportunity than to you. You probably can get along with him, in a sort of 'fuck-buddy' way, you know, but when it comes to women he is just unreliable. It's a pity there isn't someone capable of loving you."

"Like you, perhaps?"

"We've been through this. I want to be your mate, your friend."

"You don't like Christine and you also don't like Adam?"

"We're surrounded by people who are in it for themselves. Christine is self-obsessed and I don't know what goes on in her head, and Adam is just unrelating. That's all. You need someone with love and purpose, who draws you in. Aardse loves me and draws me into his life and me into his. I dream of a romantic past and communities of women and men among the hills and moors and all that romance, but I am grounded too. Someone will come along."

A Building Plan and Resignation (Monday 30th September)

I checked on progress for the uncontested divorce from that bastard Keith, especially after he was named in Adam's revelations. There was no delay and there had been no adverse response. The process would still be quick. Good riddance.

I met Christine and Adam outside a sudden building site. Adam showed me his (Ann's, more likely) paper plans. His coming earnings from the newspaper were such that he had at last bought the next door property he had wanted for so long - from Ann, at a discount, who'd bought it much earlier and secured planning permission. In knocking the two properties together, incorporating the garage and extending it all backwards on two floors, there would be an energy efficient compact chapel complex on the lower floor for Christine and me with accommodation upstairs and in the current loft.

The location was thus at the south end of Upper Road, north of two mini-roundabouts, one block away from the coast-facing properties of the Promenade Road, divided from them by a tenfoot and the gardens of those properties. The tenfoot at the back was tight and not easy for parking.

So I looked inside. We all wore hard hats. The double garage would be widened and blended in. It would be a chapel, and then a seating area linked to it to double for dining. Along the rear side a kitchen and several rooms were to be situated, and at the front side there would be a cloaks area and toilets. There would be only one staircase at the far end from the original two. The first floor would have a staircase starting alongside going up to the loft. The upstairs two floors would be private, with two large double bedrooms all ensuite and a kitchen diner on floor one and a large double bedroom with ensuite, lounge and study in the loft derived from both buildings (no extension up there). Adam suggested I would live there.

Adam said, "This is a draft plan. Offer your own ideas. There's a robing room, and there is a vestry, and then a consulting room cum library at the far southern side."

Christine said, "For downstairs, the seating area from the chapel, a dining area from the kitchen, incorporates the removed staircase space from that house. At the front side I'd like a wet room next to the cloaks. Look, I've got plenty of money: I can donate to running costs."

"Wet room? More showers?" I asked.

"It's a facility. Cloaks dry, alongside. People come for rest and relaxation, and this can include massaging and washing."

"Not sure about that." Gosh, I was considering a future!

Christine added, "Kathleen could bring her Serninsea Vestal Virgins in to the place, couldn't she?"

"Good idea," I said. "Why not a naturist ministry right here in town? But, more so, have art groups, meditation classes, and adding activities in this place. I dare say even do amateur dramatics."

Christine asked me if I had written out a ministry proposal.

I replied, "Yes, but only initial thoughts."

She asked if I had formally resigned.

"Not yet."

"Do it," she said, and then we can get you across to Bristol and incardinate you. Or, if you'd wait, they could come here when the whole building is done. If they make you a bishop, then that takes away any fears you may have that you must follow me."

"Can we even function together?"

"We can provide collective episcopal leadership, but also use the veto system we'll have to prevent unwanted impositions."

"The thing is," Adam said, "the place has to pay for itself."

"How?" I asked.

"Ann Dromeghda backs us initially but how you make it pay is yours to work out. Do courses, like meditation and so on. I don't know. Do massages!"

"I'd pay for my share in the use of these premises," said Christine.

"I don't share your theology."

"You don't have to agree with me. Yes, I may be drawn to a more normative twelfth century incarnate overall sacred theology, but all I need is to be satisfied that the Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia ecclesiology is sound. You are allowed to develop your own eclectic theology, and I am not going to interfere."

"Another thing," said Adam, "is that if you want you can apply for government training internships: I think the latest scheme is Tasks with the Unemployed for Labour force Investment Purposes. Get one for administration. I've now taken Peter on as a proper employee, as you know."

"What about your work - investigating - in the building?"

"Oh, I shall become a commuter," said Adam. "We're now decorating George Wickenby's place. I have promised Peter and Kathryn a suite upstairs there. We'll keep one bedroom spare there. See, I'd want to live here - with you, properly, Linda."

"Properly?"

"Properly."

"Well, I have my story outlined - needs a lot of editing - but not towards a book."

"Soon as possible," Adam said. "We need to strike but the iron cools."

"And I'll complete a ministry proposal. I suppose I should give it to you, Christine."

"Yes."

I decided to go from here to meet Jagjit and Gurinder Kapoor, newsagents and shopkeepers, with little Nashika playing around.

Jagjit said to me, straight away, "We have read the news with alarm, what has happened to you. We want to say that you, yourself, are always welcome in our company."

"Things came to a violent conclusion and I am resigning. It looks like I'm going to run my own church - independent. We'll have a kitchen. I understand the Sikhs are strong regarding the service of a kitchen. I might learn something."

Gurinder said, "We do have a darbar sahib - the worship space - in our terraced house gurdwara in Serninsea. At the end of the service we give out karah to the sangat, a halva made with equal portions of whole wheat flour, clarified butter, and sugar that indicates the equality of men and women. It's a sweet treat and should be accepted when offered."

"I'd want a food ministry."

"Prashad is blessed by offering of Ardas, a prayer. At any time we can provide a meal using the langar in a room in which there also is a couple of low single beds also acting as seats. The meal is given free to anyone who comes to the gurdwara, anyone who wants one. We two take our turn with the others in preparing food, which is most weeks because we are only about a dozen, as sewadars cooking and serving the food, and we all finance the meals too. Although we can eat meat, food in the gurdwara is vegetarian."

"So if we did something similar, would you object? It might be low cost food in our case."

"Absolutely not. There is a big demand. You might find many come to you who would not come to a gurdwara. The gurdwara is also our social space, so we have classes and clubs there and of course Nashika joins other children for some education in the faith and more formal learning of Punjabi."

"So your place is a single terraced house?"

"Yes. One of the Victorian bigger ones, however."

"Just that if we have a good kitchen, and I think we will, you are always welcome to use it. I'd hope we could share some services from time to time."

Jagjit asked, "Would we be able to carry out the akhand paath, the continuous unbroken reading of the scripture Guru Granth Sahib?"

"I'd love it; we'd be free to do all these sacred activities."

I went home - home for not much longer. I settled down at the opened out table in the long lounge. I used a word processing letter template, and wrote my letter of resignation. Part of it said:

I am aware that my training incumbent has lost confidence in me, telling me to resign, and he will retire completely. Given all that has been revealed, I do indeed resign as of the date of this letter or after any notice you require. I thank you for your support in the past, shown especially about my theological focus, but I now must move on. Tell me by when I must vacate the curate's house. I will sign all relevant documents to be released as a priest in the diocese and from the National Church.

I posted the letter in the very traditional manner: via a walk to a post box.

Newspaper Article (Tuesday 1st October)

Meanwhile, my piece in The Daily Morse, worth - in a package of new material - an incredible £10,000 for Adam, was published in full. I wish I received anything like that for a sermon!

My Encounter with the Anglican Sex Cult

I am the Reverend Linda Jupitas, and have been an Anglican priest and curate in the parish of Sutton-on-Serninsea, Serninsea and Titansea for less than two years. It has been an eventful two years, during which local Anglican leaders and others attempted to recruit me into their secret sex cult. As I discovered what it was, they took it upon themselves to punish me physically and sexually for my resistance and leave me injured.

As well as a priest I am also a naturist and have been all my life, as I am from a family of naturists. I also declare here what many people do not know: I am intersex. This means that although I look completely female, I am in fact genetically male. Let's put it this way: had my Church still not ordained women, I could have argued that they should ordain me genetically! And then there is a problem of whether I have been involved in a same-sex marriage! No one asked, because I do look female. My brain also tells me that I am female. However, I do not menstruate, cannot have children, and cannot even use IVF. I'm tall and beyond a head of hair and eyebrows, I don't have body hair and don't smell when I sweat. My hands and feet are large and so are my breasts. Folk like me undermine biblical fundamentalists insisting on binary genetics, who demand to call us men, as God made us male or female, when until recent times we were regarded as 'barren women'. Up in my family tree, Jane Margaret, born in 1852, my three times great aunt, a barren woman, may also have had CAIS - Complete Androgen Insensitivity Syndrome. The genetically altered copy of the AR gene on one of two X chromosomes happened twice in my mother's offspring.

I am now separated from my husband, who started an affair with a colleague. He intends to marry her and I wish them all the best, except that he has a further affair with a woman who was in the sex cult group. His partner for marriage nevertheless will have a child from his seed that I could never use.

I was selected for ordination after my husband was rejected. I know that this involved a positive intervention by the suffragan bishop, the Right Reverend John Terence Barman, the former Bishop of Bolingbroke and the centre of the sex scandal in my town. His reputation at large was as a progressive and an in-touch minister, whereas I was one person recruited by him for sex cult purposes. My training vicar in Serninsea knew nothing about this.

As reported in this newspaper, three bishops headed a sex ring on a belief that the orgasm was a direct route to receiving the divine. It was established under the principle of Apostolic Succession, that this Confraternity Vanguard group needed properly ordained bishops and priests to give it full legitimacy. By 'vanguard' they meant the group was giving history a push, and prompting God, being a fantasy that it was a leading Christian organisation to help bring in the Kingdom, based on the Divine Erotic.

This followed an affair between John Terence Barman and Elizabeth Claire Huett, who later became the Bishop of Tees until her very recent resignation following this scandal. Their orgasms gave rise to their theological insight. At the same time, Barman was a long time friend and sharer of sexual partners with Jonathan Hopkirk Eyre, Suffragan Bishop of Margate - including Huett herself. As has been reported here, Barman has probably six children from his activities with different women, and Eyre has an estimated twenty-five. I could never have any, of course. The difference is probably something like Barman's low sperm count, because none of these people believe in barrier contraception. Many of the mothers of Eyre's offspring are ordained. One evangelical priest considered for our diocese, with two children by Eyre, was redirected to Wales on the basis that I would be in the area with a new parish to do the sexual initiating. Of course, that won't happen now.

These bishops' theology involve passing body fluids securely at a time of initiation. (The nearest comparison I can make is the third level witches' initiation through sexual intercourse.) Their problem, in Serninsea, was a lack of women to pass their body fluids to make initiates. So they had plans for the Reverend Jenny World and myself to move into a parish, living in the same vicarage. Their initial intention was that I'd be the vicar and she the curate, but after my resistance they'd have made her the vicar and me the curate.

As they slowly revealed their otherwise secret Vanguard existence to me, by use of membership badges and suggestive remarks, I decided to investigate and then Adam Magellan incorporated this investigation into his professional processes. It meant that I entered into a phase of being mentored, involving having sex and once, in effect, being treated as if raped.

Theatrical talk was their deception, based on the fact that many orgies took place in the upper floor of a 1960s closed down theatre building. Upstairs was where I received the most intense sexual and violent abuse, as already reported in this newspaper. Downstairs and entirely separate is a casino. The talent scouts wore white badges (a black goose and B on it, in Serninsea) to raise the curiosity of those who were to be recruited. When lay people 'of responsibility' were considered able to keep confidences, they were finally asked to join. They could refuse, but clergy ordained by a bishop and under National Church authority could not refuse. This was due to Catholic ecclesiology that a priest is the extension of the bishop, and is why a bishop is never invited to a parish church. When the bishops of the Confraternity Vanguard chose me, I had no choice. When I resisted, I was severely punished.

Bishop Barman knew that my marriage was in trouble and that I had taken a lover, Mr. Magellan, which I admit is against Church rules. Barman knew that I am a naturist, with progressive values. He constantly undermined my ministry, to disturb my confidence, wrecking my relationship with my training vicar in Serninsea. He tested me also if I could keep it all discreet.

You have read in this newspaper about the roles of lay people Stephen and Helen McPhail of the Serninsea parish and of the Reverend Jim Wilson and his wife Connie Wilson from the neighbouring parish to mine. For a time, Stephen McPhail was my mentor and had sex freely with me. This was before my resolution to extract myself from the group's grip.

Free of them, I made a huge mistake: I allowed a friend, who was an independent bishop, with others, to carry out a Eucharist and ordinations in my parish church on 9th September. I thought it was private and it would have disturbed no one, but CCTV still recorded and transmitted our activities. I was suspended, and faced being dismissed for polluting an altar table. However, the Bishop used his influence to promise me a ministry if I at last submitted into the sex cult arrangement. He'd got me. At the same time, I had to be punished for my resistance that had nearly succeeded, and at last gave the sadistic Connie Wilson and her biblical blood of salvation husband, the Reverend Jim Wilson, their chance to practice their violent evil on someone on 16th September. Jim Wilson wanted me to bleed on the biblical theology basis that loss of blood removes sins. As an intersex woman, I had particularly smooth skin, free of adolescent angst and body hair follicles. Piercing my delicate skin when being of my form of intersex is very dangerous: I can get infection easily and my undescended gonads are at risk. Now I have whip marks and punctures from pins, needles and a skewer that caused blood to flow. In a family newspaper I cannot go into further detail into what they did, but I was naked, hanging on chains, only my toes touching the ground, with my ankles chained to wide-out poles, and a smoothed plank of wood was pressing upwards. This followed being forced to have ice baths, kneeling on ridges of wood, and sitting on a triangular shaped 'horse' to wait for the main punishment event.

I am no angel. I enjoy sex and, yes, I have had multiple partners. I fall in love too easily, and I become obsessed by some individuals. Sometimes I cannot help myself.

At a conference in Margate, 23rd-25th April, I became obsessed by the attractions of Jonathan Eyre, Suffragan Bishop of Margate, Jonathan Eyre. With my husband discovered having an affair, I thought I could be in love with Jonathan. I had no idea that he was reporting on me back to the sex cult. A pregnant Methodist minister at the conference gained her condition from his seed.

All the time my husband was also informing the Confraternity Vanguard about me. I had no idea that he was constantly undermining me. Of course he was partnering someone else, and another as well, and was sexually promiscuous with the group's members.

The now resigned headteacher of the local secondary school flashed her badge at me. (She was also my headteacher!) I went shopping with Connie Wilson to fall asleep on her bed, to wake to her having sexual intercourse alongside me with her reverend husband. Her shopping included a sex shop where, as an early threat to my disobedience, I might have had to offer myself to customers for sex, as well as approach people on a train for sex.

The Suffragan Bishop John Barman appointed a counsellor, also a member of the cult, who committed suicide. He had himself shown resistance, and so was hung up naked as I was later on, but on seeing what could happen to him, with whips, vibrators and needles on display, submitted immediately and obeyed. Although I tried the same strategy, I wasn't spared.

I became suspicious of this man as a counsellor. My naturist friend and I set up some naked based tests for him, to see if he'd tell on us. He never did. He was an honourable man. He confessed to me Connie Wilson's influence over him. At first he advised me to get closer to the Bishop of Bolingbroke. Then he warned me (based on his own experience).

I did not know it at the time, but Ken Osis kept daily A4 writing book diaries. My naked and sexual activities with him will be in them, but not my confessional material. The Coroner was frustrated that many recent volumes are missing. But this is simple to investigate: the Wilsons and Barman took those diaries. They were to taken to embarrass and constrain me more, as well as protect them from their wrongdoings. But it is too late for them: Adam Magellan has presented the whole story to this newspaper.

Some locals remembered me as a naturist child and teenager. My parents had a farm just north of Sutton-on-Serninsea. We had a shop, and we weren't naked all the time, but sometimes we could be seen as such out in the fields. There was a well-remembered incident when, as a young teenager, I came naked into the farm shop and my mother made no effort to shoo me out. The family had a naturist club, but when I was ordained deacon I had moved my club to another much further away from the east coast.

My older sister was discovered as intersex at puberty. She underwent operations by doctors. I also hit puberty with no periods, but my mother changed her view: I did not undergo operations to remove my undescended testicles and increase the size of my vagina. My eldest brother is genetically male and phenotype male. My youngest sister is genetically female and phenotype female. I am also bisexual, although my intersex sister is heterosexual only.

Friends matter to me. My close female school friend became ordained quite separately from me, and yet ended up in the same sex cult in its Hartlepool variant. Another friend at school became an investigator and is now my partner. My husband was a year above me at school, and I saw him as a home from home person at East Midlands University. I moved in with him, and supported his religious activities. I did not know the extent of the number of sexual partners he'd had. He systematically changed my body to give him sexual alternatives to vaginal sex. When you don't have a cervix, the vagina is like a small pouch. But, as a young woman, I felt it my duty to give him those alternatives, but his alterations led to health issues since, including how I swallow food with little sensation and dispose matter once the digestion process is complete.

I think my Hartlepool based friend, who has had issues of mental stability, simply ended up being in an exploited situation, despite her own love of sex. So she was coupled with me in plans to initiate people into the sex cult around Serninsea.

My punishment above the casino in Serninsea happened until my friends knew where I was and came to rescue me. The suffragan Bishop of Bolingbroke and the Wilsons fled the scene. Initially, I was angry, because I'd been punished for nothing, when I had expected his sexual penetration of me. I was in considerable pain and I spent a week in bed, traumatised, on antibiotics and having friends rub in creams for my injuries. I came to my senses regarding whom to blame.

I kept being intersex as my secret, and the internal sex cult members did not know about it. At least my husband respected me this much, as did my Hartlepool based friend. Perhaps it was a line he could not cross; I would never doubt my Hartlepool based friend, who is herself another victim of these exploiters.

The diocese is in a spin because an official report also attacked its mismanagement.

There has been another somewhat related matter. Serninsea is rich in archaeology, as it is an area once used for repairing fine metallic and imported items especially in Roman and later Saxon times. The suffragan bishop promoted a fine piece called The Serninsea Cross, a brooch. He knew it was a fake, a product of the creative abilities of Stephen and Helen McPhail of the internal sex cult themselves. Stephen was my mentor! The bishop wanted to continue its promotion even after its fakery became public.

Serninsea is a somewhat isolated set of three seaside settlements with many people on benefits, with high unemployment and underemployment, and an active leisure sex industry. This suffragan bishop exploited this, adding to its problems. He has now been exposed to the world, along with his sex cult colleagues. It was a cult, because it relied on their authority; the cult has now been destroyed.

With all the revelations there have been, many have resigned, and I have also decided to resign. Too much has happened, and I intend to begin my own independent ministry. Some knew about my naturism but most didn't, few knew that I am intersex. Now these are on the level.

So I will open my own chapel in this town. It will be based on Serninsea's character and needs, but allows me to develop a theology with less emphasis on doctrines. I will join my colleague, a bishop of an independent Liberal Catholic Church, who before my investigating took a decision to leave Anglicanism and escape the clutches of the former Suffragan Bishop of Bolingbroke. I enjoy sex and I am proud of my body and so I have limited agreement with her 'theosexual' views. I will continue to promote the normality of social nudity.

Serninsea is going through the agonies of losing Systematic Measuring Services (SMS). There is the high cost of maintaining the inadequate dock and it is likely to be abandoned. With the collapse of the Confraternity Vanguard-led orgies, and loss of Systematic Measuring Services, I have been told that, already, prostitutes are cutting prices. There is a strong online provision; one female who masturbates to a webcam was part of the sex cult.

Serninsea needs to become better known, but not because of the scandal. It needs improved transport links and means to rejuvenate its coastal economy - rather than holding sex orgies to attract in other business managers. Anyway, we've stopped them.

Cheryl Mould Calls

I answered the door to my curate's house. "Cheryl! What are you doing here?"

"Visiting my mother."

"Nice lady of the parish."

"I read her newspaper and your article. I want to talk about Keith. He's not the person I thought he was."

"He turned out not to be the person I thought he was, either. Would you like a drink?"

"I had one before coming out. What am I to do about him?"

So I directed her to sit down in the lounge.

"I don't know. He did keep my main secret from the group, that I am now telling the world; even while he was preparing me for the group, unknown to me."

"Is he preparing me for the group, with these other pregnant women you mention?"

"I doubt it: because you're not an apostolic minister, nor any faith minister, nor a manager, nor a business person, nor a prostitute."

"I'm just a pleb."

"The group doesn't exist any more."

"This is awful," said Cheryl. And you say he has an affair with this woman: she is Yojana Asthana."

"I understand he's staying at hers now; it's a bed and breakfast but I don't think he's a paying customer."

"He's not here at all?"

"No: not here. I wouldn't have him here now."

"He effectively lied to me, and made me pregnant."

"I have to say that you knew he was my husband. This should have given you an insight into the character of the man. He cheated me, so why wouldn't he do the same to you?"

"I wanted a baby but I don't want to be a single mother. Is there any way to stop him seeing this Asthana woman, do you think?"

I doubt it. Yojana probably doesn't expect anything of him. She accepts that he is a cheat. As for the group, I don't doubt they will all try and set up something similar."

"I'm still having the child."

"So you should. And if you were up in these parts, I'd christen him or her."

"You're so good. You didn't like me at school."

"You've flowered since, that's for sure."

"I should have realised: Keith's school encounters with me were probably exploiting my reputation then. 'Mouldy by name, mouldy by nature.' I knew the phrase at his End of School Party, when Keith watched me in the lower sixth lower myself and urinate in the garden. Does this shock you?"

"No."

"Adam Magellan inserted his finger up me, also outside. At Malham and the Geography field trip, obviously before that, Adam saw me naked because I went into his and his mate's next door room to tell them to make less noise and I lifted my nightie. I was a..."

"Adam felt you up? Oh."

"I was a bad girl. But Keith didn't have a go with you at school."

"Because my family were weird and his family were upstanding. He did, a little, at the party. My sister Lucinda claims to have had something to do with him before me, but I think it was after. She was one of many, I'm afraid, Cheryl. But I do have a question I'd like you to answer. Has your affair with him, and you now likely to change your surname to Jupitas, been running for six years ago or two?"

"It's true this much: I met Keith six years ago and had full sex. It was after open air fish and chips. I did with one or two, I'd say. Perhaps I'd better not say, Linda. No, I should tell you. Adam Magellan. I got my divorce nisi from Frank Little through, and I saw Adam in Titansea and he had me up against a building."

"You had sexual intercourse with Adam," I said slowly.

"That was the second time. Ten years ago, right, Adam left the police to start his own agency in Upper Road. One of his first jobs was investigating Frank Little for me; he discovered the affair and we had casual sex. Six years ago I had fish and chips with Adam followed by sex after my divorce."

"Does fish and chips have this effect on you?"

"And maybe the open air. I expected nothing with either of them. Adam married that Rumanian, didn't he, just after our second sexual encounter. I wonder if she ever knew."

"He is still married to her. She is one of his influences. The biggest is Ann, who taught us, and, by extension, Labhaoise who was beginning as her lifelong partner. He can't move without Ann's say-so. So I've learnt to tolerate that, perhaps. But I didn't know that Adam had been with you. He told me he'd had fish and chips with you, when we went to the restaurant after he did my investigation. He didn't mention the pudding."

"I wasn't a pudding."

"I knew about the Geography field trip and Adam; I knew about the party and Keith. Like Keith, then, he's been around the block somewhat. Not that you are a block either. I'm thinking about Adam being more like Keith than I thought."

Cheryl said, "They say that Adam cannot love."

"His formation as a teenager wasn't very good. Thing is, Cheryl, we're all damaged."

"Me too, and why I saw Adam and Keith. But two years ago I wanted to be serious with Keith. Now it looks like if I become a 'Jupitas', it won't be for that long either."

"You either tolerate him or become a single mother. So..."

"When I went to Harwich, that was a chance to start a new life again, with SMS likely to close down in Serninsea, as it is now clearing out. I'd become Cheryl Jupitas in time, I thought, also based on what he said about you - and nothing was said about exploiting you to a group. But... Perhaps he was into my bed like he was into anybody's."

"I should be mad with you, but you've taken him off my hands. I do have some reassurance for you as well. From how I've heard him, Cheryl, he does treat you like his future. He sees you as domesticating him, in tension with being a wild animal. So you might be his future, but what future for you?"

"That's what I'm asking."

"Can you tolerate the actual man? I did, but I wouldn't now. You might be in a better position. Back at school, no one would have thought you would have domesticated anyone. He realises now that you, over in Harwich, actually want to settle down."

"Linda. You've helped me. I say to my mum that you are good."

"She joins others in her low opinion of me as a minister of religion. Well, they can move on now. And so will I. I still like your mum. But, Cheryl, I also like you, and glad that you took so well to naturism."

"Yeah. My wild side, but in a container. I'm going. Thanks. Thanks Linda."

"Decisions, eh?"

The Rabbi (Wednesday 2nd October)

Tuesday night I was into Adam's somewhat grubby bed in the sense that his sheets and duvet were little washed. This was a final night before the extensive building work downstairs would come upstairs. The before sleep fuck wasn't repeated in the morning; instead he put the wall-hung screen on before it was taken down. It wasn't for television but a morning of looking at 'Headgirl' or Annie Fenwick.

"She's got a special guest today," as indeed became evident as he started to view two naked women basically chatting to each other. "It's the barmaid Jördis."

"I thought you didn't drink."

"I don't, but I can still go in a pub occasionally. I do sometimes to track movements of people for clients. Annie goes in pubs a lot."

"To do things she hasn't experienced before."

"Here we go, she's starting..."

"Hi guys! We have a special guest today, and like me she's shed everything but has got a lovely butterfly mask on because this voluptuous lass I know is a bit shy. I won't repeat where this broadcast is from, but our guest is a local barmaid I met. She's called George, everyone. Go on, tell me some of the things you said."

Adam said, "I'm going to encourage them."

I said, "This is pathetic, Adam."

Adam has entered the room.

"Oh gowd," I said. I decided to grip him under the duvet to demonstrate real female contact.

Adam has tipped 10 tokens.

"Thank you Adam!" said 'Headgirl'.

"Thank you Adam! added 'George'.

George thus put out her arm to brush the breast of her host.

"Tweak my nipple and look at it carefully," said Headgirl, "By the way, guys, we're going fifty-fifty on tips today so if we get a lot George might do her own show."

"Don't know about that," said George.

Adam has tipped 10 tokens.

Tracey has entered the room.

Tracey has tipped 50 tokens.

Cumface has entered the room.

They both had Internet connected remote vibrators inserted, so each tip caused a buzz based on the level of the tip.

Headgirl said, "Finger in my bum. If our friends tip enough, do you want to experience that?"

"Just a little way in."

Adam has tipped 50 tokens.

Tracey has tipped 50 tokens.

Cumface has tipped 20 tokens.

Both responded to the buzzing stimulation. Headgirl turning her back to George told her to insert one finger up to her knuckle, and feel her anus's warmth and moisture.

"Adam," I said, "If you want that I've got one that was prepared earlier."

"She's doing new things, new experiences - Jördis."

"I somehow doubt it."

"You don't have to watch this. Your mate called me yesterday. Used my number."

"What mate?"

"That rabbi chap. I didn't think you were interested, now they've all run for cover."

"I think - I hope - he was different. I've had enough of this," I said. "What did Maurice Neptune want?"

"To see you."

"You should have told me," I said, getting out of his bed. "When?"

"Today, before lunch."

"Oh great. Look, don't you decide whom I can and cannot meet."

"Okay. Sorry."

Out of bed I pointed my arse his way and spread my cheeks. When I looked round, he was viewing the screen and not me.

"Linda, it's not the same. I'm interested in Annie's and Jördis's progress."

"And I'm interested in mine. I'll get dressed and go."

"To actually see that rabbi, in Wytham?"

"Why not?"

"His address, then..."

I put off seeing Diana in the afternoon. During the time of The Worshipful Company, Rabbi Maurice had shown some independence from them. Whatever, a trip out would give a change of scene. I still wanted to interrogate his intellectual mind So I headed directly over the Wolds to a rural road just this side of Wytham, and a string of spacious houses before reaching the city. I still wore sensible shoes, slacks, a blouse and a sweater.

"I'm Mrs. Roberta Garfield," said a middle aged blonde haired apron wearing woman at his front door. "He asked me to let you in; he will be back very soon from Wytham, once you said you were coming."

That was my opportunity to be in the loo before he came. It was separate, this one, and was as big as a disabled space with such facilities too.

I looked out of his front room of many rooms, a house on three floors too. This was a man of means. He arrived driven by a chauffeur, no less.

He came in to the room, "So wonderful to see you, and here."

"Yes, this is an impressive place. They must pay good salaries to be a rabbi."

"Ah no. I made a pile in London, in banking. I still dabble, some days, but I had a change of emphasis in my life. I did my training and I came here, a vacancy in the Reformist tradition, and I built up the shul here. So Mr. Magellan passed on my message."

"I get the essentials; he's very busy as you can imagine. You can also imagine that I am angry with that group and all that it did."

"So am I, still. Let me show you the house."

We went up in a lift! The largest bathroom on the uppermost floor had a central double-sized bath, with various controls. It was a wet room, and a shower that covered a large square area with its various sprays. The lighting was variable, and giving different colours. The toilet was joined by a nearby urinal. There were even air dryers for the body. All bedrooms also had ensembles.

Having moved down two staircases, we came to the main kitchen (there were two more). It was fabulous: roomy, three major ovens, an island and more preparation areas. Mrs. Garfield was his cook as well as housekeeper.

"This whole place lacks one thing," he said.

"Oh? What would that be?"

"A woman of the house. No, I do not mean Mrs. Garfield."

"Oh. Surely this place could turn any woman's heart."

"Moving on," he said. "Please come to my lounge." This was large. "I have held discussions in here."

The sofa I sat on was wrap-around, and would hold eight people easily. He indicated that I could put my feet up, with my shoes removed. So my bare feet went on the sofa.

"I will be going into Wytham again later; I'd like you to come with me and visit the shul."

"Yes, most interesting."

"Something I must say," he told me. "The Worshipful Company has collapsed, and indeed the Confraternity has gone as well, and I have to say 'good riddance' to it. From its actions it wasn't the set-up I had assumed."

"The logic of no choice for priests meant sexual violence."

"Contrary indeed to the pleasure that was Terry Barman's claim. He was my associate, my friend, even in another faith, and why I was involved. Accepting the Wilsons' sexual violence has broken my friendship with him."

"Christine Vine was opposed to his pleasure basis, as she sees it."

"I think she once said the difference between her Catholicism and Jim Wilson's evangelicalism was that she had it done to her and he did it to others. She insisted that it had to be one's own service and sacrifice and not imposed. But I reject both approaches."

"I've sent in my National Church resignation. I'm hoping to go independent. I'll have a church and accommodation, but it needs income."

"Ah. I would like an occasional base in Serninsea, for a small number of families there."

"Would you want to have access?"

"I'd like to see a mikveh built under Jewish principles."

"Explain."

"Six days down to wholeness and completion means six steps down towards a water pool, although not necessary. There needs to be a place to inspect and wash before submerging, and it is full immersion for ritual purity, for marking a change in life, and for conversion to Judaism. I told you much at the school. To repeat: many Jews immerse before the Sabbath and High Holy Days; many women immerse days after their menstruation; marriage partners immerse before their wedding day; and there are life-cycle events such as important birthdays, getting beyond personal loss, or after an illness. Indeed you could use it opening the building and starting a new ministry."

"It might enhance naturist ministry but I would not separate male and female. It could be used for baptisms, but I like 'moving on' ceremonies too. Good idea. What is the blessing you use?"

"It goes: 'Blessed are You, O Lord, our God, King of the universe, who has sanctified us with His commandments and commanded us regarding the immersion.' This is said before every use, except with the convert."

"Remind me of the structural regulations."

"Place it into the ground or the structure of the building at a minimum of twenty-four cubic feet of water or some two-hundred gallons. The water level should be nearly a foot above an average person's waist when stood up, to allow reasonably easy full immersion. Some of the water must be freely entering rainwater, but it must not flow when in use."

"We'll do this, Maurice," I said, "and your community can use the building. We will have toilets and a shower room, and there's talk of a massage room in the more religious and body sense - I hope. The chapel will be small, in what was the double garage, but open out into a sitting and dining area. There is a space to add on a mikveh at the end of the chapel because there is a back extension planned. You might want facilities for Jewish worship in the chapel, for the Torah scroll for example."

"That would be most generous. I'll send you all the details. Now, I have to level with you. There is a possibility that I will go independent too. If you will wait for me, I shall be examined for my involvement in the Vanguard group."

"When?"

"This afternoon: very rushed. At the shul. So I might be investing personally in your premises in Serninsea; I might have to open my own kehilla."

"A what?"

"Another word for shul. Synagogue. We can have ten in the congregation."

"Talk to Adam Magellan, then, as well. I'd value your theological and historical input. You might have to break all links Barman and the rest of them."

"Thank you."

"I also want to learn from the Sikhs and the community kitchen as well, though we won't have the resources for free meals. I envisage low prices and lower for people on benefits. If we don't have a congregation, at least we can have people coming in and out."

"You will be able to pursue your own theology," he said. "I could pursue mine."

"What is yours?"

"Hmm. Think of Joseph ibn Gabirol, the Platonist theologian. Twenty past ten to three minutes to eleven."

"Ah. 1057, he died."

"Matter - and I would of course include our bodies - are associated with God. All forms of matter derive from the essence of the Creator, although the Creator stands separate from them. The light and goodness of the creator leads to all our cosmic experiences. From memory:

"Thou art wise and from Thy wisdom didst cause to emanate a ready will, an agent and artist as it were, to draw existence out of non-existence, as light proceeds from the eye."

I said, "Sounds like one of Aristotle's observational misunderstandings."

"Why not?" he said. "Surely now you can become a rabbi. Surely now, just possibly, you will consider being my wife?"

"Oh, Maurice, please! Accepting that my Christian theology is rather tenuous, I still want to refer to the Christian Testament. You make me blush like a young girl entering puberty."

"I take the view that Paul took ex-Pagan Pagans, if you like, to be adapted Jews. His outlook was essentially Jewish. Christianity became distinct in the mid-third century."

"Tell me. Who was the first female rabbi?"

"It's a tragic story, of course. Regina Jonas born in August 1902 was the first woman to be ordained as a rabbi. She started out as a teacher but joined the Higher Institute for Jewish Studies in the Academy for the Science of Judaism and enrolled in the same seminary courses for liberal rabbis. Her thesis was on Can a Woman Be a Rabbi According to Halachic Sources? Using Biblical, Talmudic, and rabbinical sources, her answer was yes. But not according to the Talmud professor responsible for ordinations, nor later Rabbi Leo Baeck for reasons of relationship problems with the orthodox. But in 1935 she was ordained by the liberal Rabbi Max Dienemann based in Offenbach am Main. She became a prison rabbi whilst trying to find a pulpit.

"The Nazis placed her in forced labour but she still did her rabbinical work. In November 1942 she had her property confiscated and was forced to go to into internment at Theresienstadt. She continued as a rabbi and assisted Viktor Frankl, the psychologist, to help prevent suicides by questioning arrivals at the railway station.

"For two years she gave lectures, and helped organise concerts, all as a kind of distraction from the harshness of living. In 1944 she and most of the town were deported and killed at Auschwitz. But she was forgotten, deliberately even, by witnesses to Theresienstadt. She was rediscovered in 1991 as part of a research project on attitudes to female ordination in 1930s Germany by a Dr. Katharina von Kellenbach, a researcher and lecturer. Details were within one-time East German archives. In 1999 her thesis and witness were published by Kellenbach.

"Bea Wyler, who had studied in New York, was the first female rabbi to serve in postwar Germany, in Oldenburg, from 1995. Alina Treiger, who'd studied in Potsdam, became the first female rabbi to be ordained in Germany in 2010, followed in 2011 by Antje Deusel, the first German-born woman to be ordained as a rabbi."

"And all I know about is Constance Coltman, the High Church Congregationalist first trinitarian ordained minister, and Getrude von Petzold before her, a Unitarian minister. She was German, and went back to Germany to help her fellow nationals struggling under wartime conditions."

"Linda, future rabbi or not, please stay the night, here. Enjoy the house more.

There's a spare bedroom. Drive back tomorrow."

"There are several! Oh, I don't know," I said. "I've brought nothing with me."

"You're a naturist: your shoulder bag is enough. Roberta will find you everything. So come with me to Wytham now, and, after my meeting, do see our mikveh and let us have a meal out."

I sent a message to Adam. I'd see Maurice's shul or synagogue and the attached mikveh, and have a meal.

The chauffeur Joseph Meiman came to us and told us we should leave very soon. We both were driven to the place of worship. Joseph then went out of the building.

I loved its layout where the congregation met. Seeing the mikveh would give me a clear idea of what was needed, even if mine might be for wider use - but Maurice said we had to go to a particular corridor outside a room suitable for interviewing.

Rabbinical Discipline

A woman and two men arrived in the kehilla or shul, wearing long black gowns, and Maurice suggested that we sat down as these three stood above us.

The female introduced herself to me. "You are the Reverend Linda Jupitas? I am Rabbi Lily Jonas, the dayan of this beth din gathered to interview Maurice Neptune, using halakhah laws and customs, about his participation in the Worshipful Company of Serninsea Theatrical Players. Being the dayan means I am adjudicating this case and we seek to come to a rapid conclusion about it."

"I'll go for a walk or something. How long will you be?"

"We may be up to an hour before we would then like to ask you some questions - alone."

"Me?"

"You are in the media as the victim of what took place."

"I was the victim, yes." Ah, this was the basis of my invitation.

"I am accompanied by Rabbi Evan Kaplan and Rabbi Solomon Kohler and we form the beth din to examine this situation."

"He wasn't involved at all in damaging me," I said of Maurice. "I wouldn't be here if he was."

"We wish to understand his involvement in this peculiar interfaith involvement. We will interview him in this room here, then you, and then him again, and then we shall go away to consider our decision."

"What for?"

"Possibly conduct unbecoming. Sanctions can be from nothing to asking for his resignation for gross moral turpitude."

"I'll wait then," I said, and did as all four went in.

With my guts churning somewhat I found a toilet and later returned to the seat. I couldn't hear what they were saying inside the room.

Then Rabbi Evan Kaplan called me in, as Rabbi Maurice walked out. I was at once side of a desk and these three at the other, with Rabbi Lily Jonas in the middle.

Once settled, Rabbi Solomon Kohler asked me, "What do you understand by the term 'Abramsexual'?"

"I've never heard it. Oh, I think I can work it out. I've heard of Christosexual. It must be the Jewish equivalent."

"So Maurice Neptune has never used this term with you. He hasn't said he must be Abramsexual with you."

"No. He didn't get the chance."

Rabbi Evan Kaplan asked, "You had a time when you were 'investigating' this group, and you did have sex with individuals. Did you have sex with Rabbi Maurice Neptune? I'm thinking of the summer."

Rabbi Lily Jonas said, "I'd like you to give a full account as possible. Do not spare us the details."

"Oh, well, I met Rabbi Maurice first in June at a school in RE teaching time. I knew then he was connected to this shadowy group because he wore this badge that others wore. Then in mid-July some point, my suffragan bishop - he was Maurice's friend - had contacted my training vicar that I was to do some interfaith work with Maurice. My training vicar Colin Cromer joked that with my theology Maurice - Rabbi Maurice - might be arranging my transfer to Reformist Judaism."

"You call him Maurice. Are you familiar with him?" she asked.

"Only like politicians use first names! So in July I met him in the Serninsea area and walked in a park, and had some historical theology discussions that certainly tested my knowledge. Well, he was well beyond my knowledge. The idea was to stay overnight at the McPhails - that would be at least four of us - and to be honest I was attracted to him. This time he talked about a relationship with me, and the difficulty of me a Christian priest and him a Jewish rabbi. I remember he said in the park that if there was a conflict with them, he would be on our side."

She said, "He was, as they say, chatting you up."

"You can imagine that made me happy. Don't forget, this was in the context of that group and hierarchy forcing me to be a member, priests having no choice, so he was taking my side and opposing them. And what happened with me and him sexually was nothing, absolutely nothing."

"Nothing?" asked Solomon Kohler.

Because he was with someone else, a regular partner, I think, and he said I'd get on with her. She rejected Augustinian theology, and was clever. She was younger than me, but I thought she could be knowledgeable. That's right, it was all about somebody who was influenced by some Islamic Kalam school and Greek philosophy, rational arguments."

"Saadiah Gaon," said Rabbi Solomon.

"That's the fellow. Oh, and there was something about time flowing implying a beginning. Much was Aristotelian. These two talking were a bit like us two. The woman is younger than me, half my age, and she was sexualised, really. She's a webcam performer; I know a man obsessed with her as a performer."

"Rabbi Maurice, by any chance?"

"Definitely not."

"Maurice is older than you."

"In the context of tis group, the young woman fell asleep between us and so I had no sexual contact with Maurice at all - even if I'd wanted it."

Rabbi Solomon said, "You were in the same bed as Maurice and his young lover."

"I was being acclimatised to multiple partners and people in a group having sex with each other."

"Who, on this occasion?"

"At breakfast there was Stephen and his wife, Maurice, Annie the young woman, and me. And then I said to him one to one that it must be him and me only next time."

Rabbi Lily Jonas said, "I see. We've asked enough. I'd like to say thank you. I have to say that you are making a sordid set up sound almost honourable."

"I think it was, in his case. First of all, we were all duped by Bishop John Barman's shop window of being progressive, when in fact he was corrupting. All I'd say is that Maurice was in that group because he was looking for a partner. And I found him interesting. Clearly he did not mix with that group very often, but he turned up because he'd heard I was to be there, and I found him engaging one to one and later with the others. He is a minister and acted like a minister. And another thing. I'd no idea I was coming here for some interrogation or interview. Perhaps I have come under false pretences but Maurice and I have had genuine discussions about my independent chapel having a mikveh, where I will be a minister of religion myself."

Rabbi Lily Jonas said, "Again, thank you. If you would ask Rabbi Maurice to come back in."

I waited outside after he went in.

When he came out fifteen minutes later he said that we would leave them to begin their deliberations about him.

There was a local park nearby where Maurice told me about a once prosperous Jewish community in Wytham. Like him they were involved in banking but in the mid-thirteenth century the locals skapegoated them over an injured child. Later that century came the nationwide expulsion of all Jews. Their exclusion lasted until Oliver Cromwell's time.

Water and Food (Wednesday 2nd - Thursday 3rd October)

At a distance we could see the three rabbis leave. So Maurice invited me back in to the shul.

I now saw the mikveh and he asked me directly if we should use it there and then.

"Not if you're under discipline!"

"Forget that. Hopefully they'll provide a script to read out that clears my name enough. Meanwhile I want to mark the beginning of a friendship and co-operation. It is unusual for a man and woman to mix, but I was in this Worshipful Company and you are a naturist. Shall we do it? Come on!"

"Yes," I said. "I love rituals that I don't know. I experienced a creative one among some women of concern for Serninsea and its area. Very strong, very powerful."

The shul had its own toilets and shower cubicles, male and female, close to the mikveh. So we went in the respective places, to urinate and evacuate and wash, and thank goodness there was a bidet - a belt to add to the toilet paper braces.

No clothes on and outside the mikveh itself we inspected each other's orifices for absence of blockages. We checked our mouths, noses, ears, anuses, genitals, and that we had no jewellery or similar being worn. I didn't wear jewellery anyway.

He said, "I shall give the general prayer, and you are not a convert:

"Barukh ata Adonai Eloheinu, melekh ha'olam, asher kid'shanu b'mitzvotav v'tzivanu al ha't'vila.

"For you, I translate:

"Dear God, you created the universe from a womb of water. You made me in your image, pure and holy, according to your divine will. I thank you for my body of beauty that has rhythms like the sun and moon, the seasons, the Shabbos and the Holy Days.

"You go first, Linda. Submerge completely, and stay under for a few seconds. I will then come in, submerge, and we can leave together."

I descended into the water, submerged and held my breath. He followed and submerged. I reached out for his hand and so we came up for air, walked up and out together. We dried ourselves together, in the male bathroom, and got dressed. Joseph was found in a small lounge or waiting area.

I said, getting in the car with him, assisted by Joseph, "We are a team."

We went to Luciana's Restaurant for a meal, facing each other across a table, behind a curtain from a few other diners.

"They have here mainly, but not exclusively, Ashkenazi dishes. Choose something different from the usual."

"How about some borscht: beetroot soup with sour cream? I've not had that before."

"From Ukraine," Maurice said. "We'll both have that. Let's order it all. Go on."

"Hmm. Brisket - braised meat from the chest of a cow. Not sure. No. Cholent. It's a..."

"Slow-cooked stew of meat, potatoes, beans and barley. Eaten on the Sabbath, often - but not exclusively. You didn't fancy stuffed fish - gefilte, filled with chopped fish, eggs, onions, matzo meal or crumbs, spices? They do it here the old way. These days it often means poached fish cakes, with a matzo meal."

"Let's do that then. Yes."

"Sweet?"

"I'm looking. So much is unusual, but clearly people are coming in."

"Distinctive cuisine is favoured these days."

"Rugelach?"

"Chocolate chips or jam in a flaky pastry spread with cinnamon sugar. It is rolled, and baked."

"Jam," I said. "Prefer honey."

"Then look at teiglach. These are marble size balls of dough in a honey syrup."

"What is flodni?"

"Sweet pastry, layered and contains apple, walnuts, currants and poppy seeds. Hungarian."

"That," I declared.

During what was a delicious meal, and so different, I asked Maurice, "Do you, being, you know, more liberal than most, demythologise - that sort of thing?"

"Let me tell you. Judaism is already demythologised. Genesis 8, after the flood. Read it later. But I can recite to you something that is its source, and almost romantic. It's the eleventh canto of the Gilgamesh epic."

"You know that? Your memory for facts and beliefs!"

*"I sent forth a dove, and let her go,
The dove went to and fro,
But there was still no resting place and she returned.
Then I sent forth a raven and let her go.
The raven flew away, she beheld the abatement of waters,
And she came near, wading and croaking, but did not return.
Then I sent everything forth to the four quarters of heaven, I offered sacrifice.
I made a libation on the peak of the mountain.
By sevens I set out the vessels,
Under them I heaped up reed and cedarwood and myrtle,
The gods smelt the savour,
The gods smelt the sweet savour,
The gods gathered like flies about him that offered up the sacrifice."*

"Wow!"

"Genesis 8 demythologises all that." Maurice resumed eating and I looked at him intently.

"So like me: But there was still no resting place and she returned."

"Yes," he said. "Marry me."

"Maurice. It's so complicated at present," I said. "I am with Adam, and he has money to spend on a church."

"Very important connection, but I want you in my bed."

"Ah, well, 'Ceci n'empêche pas cela,' I would say."

"Which means?"

"Something like, 'This is not counted out by that,' or, 'This does not prevent this,' so that both can exist."

"I might have thought also that you were sensitive after your ordeal," Maurice said.

"I'd have thought you were cautious after the beth din."

"Absolutely not," he responded. "You know, you did suit that group: if only they had treated you properly. Well, I will treat you properly and I hope you treat me properly."

"Of course."

Thus it was that back at his pile I had my first ever direct impact on a somewhat desensitised circumcised penis. I adjusted my effort for the years of rubbing on underpants. I began to work on it by hand in his jacuzzi bath situated in the centre of his large bathroom. And I continued in his large bed, with lights made red and blue in the room.

"So much sex is a ritual," I said. "But I like rituals."

He knew how to sweet talk a busy girl while being masturbated. "I mentioned a Platonist theologian before. I have another. Joseph Pakuda, ten to eleven to eleven twenty. Keep going! He said there was too much ritualism in rabbinic Judaism. You have to add the... inner life duty to the ritual and observance duty. The striving for the inner life... that rose in stages towards meeting God. God gave us our, phew, souls, placed into our bodies. Revelation and reason can... overcome tendencies towards evil. Be sincere, humble, repent, self-examine and be... ascetic."

"I am being sincere with my hand, and humble, and in fact I think I can work you now inside me."

It was so pleasant the next morning to wake in his luxurious and large bed and to be fucked again so nicely. We walked in his wet room and shower sprays were coming from different directions over our bodies. And Mrs. Roberta Garfield cooked a Jewish-compatible English breakfast.

Before he went off to his shul to do some work, pending a decision, he spent an hour (with me by his side) doing some financial dealing. There were rows and columns of figures, and graphs, and he was buying and selling shares and bonds, losing money in some cases, but making large instant profits in others. He said he could now afford the month's mortgage, but then told me he'd been joking in that he owned the house outright.

As I got into my SUV, I said, "I will consider your suggestion seriously and carefully."

"The mikveh?"

"No. That is settled. I mean, marrying you. You are a wonderful man."

"I am very pleased."

"I cannot decide soon, but I am thinking hard. But I am useless domestically."

"I have Mrs. Garfield. I cannot drive, and so I have a chauffeur, Mr. Meiman. Whatever you do, however, keep Adam Magellan on board. We need the chapel, the synagogue."

I drove myself back to Serninsea, feeling somewhat recovered from recent events. Whilst I wanted to stop 'falling in love' with these people, I'd make an exception for Maurice. I felt relaxed and good, and it was back to somewhat secretive Adam (both ways, now) and the plans.

Adam fucked me on Thursday lying in our bed, but I was thinking of Maurice's skill in me. Adam had nowhere else to go presently.

Resigned! (Thursday to Friday 4th October)

Later Thursday Adam left me a text message:

Cheryl has thrown Keith out, although gossip from Harwich and Felixstowe (I have acquired some contacts) is that because of the widespread announced child on the way she may try to reconcile if he can commit to her. Keith is in Serninsea staying with Yojana, even with no SMS and no sex group here any more.

Tough shit for him, I thought. It wasn't his own bed any more but he had to lie in it. Cheryl - brave enough to come to me in person - had to decide whether to reject the Keith she had discovered or tolerate his wanderings. Meanwhile, at my home, I'd received a posted letter from Derek Imperial. This was super-quick, given all that must be on his plate. It said:

I am sorry to receive your resignation letter. I accept, reluctantly. Administration has added some documents for you to sign. You have been caught up in a local scandal of unprecedented proportions, and you have caught the ill-wind of the recent diocesan report. There is much to put right, needing my leadership. You have the makings of a fine theologian and I watched your progress with interest. I hope you can put these talents to good use in the future. You do of course remain a priest. If you try a different diocese I will give you a good reference, and the same with a secular job.

++ Derek Wytham

He wasn't resigning, despite another typically turgid website piece from the Archbishop of All England, the Most Reverend William Blair Rothach:

Whilst it is certainly not the case that the Diocesan Bishop of Wytham, Dr. Derek Imperial, has indulged in the organising of inappropriate sexual activities in the east of Wytham Diocese, and nor has he any any connection with such activities in a limited number of other dioceses, including my own, nevertheless the tenuousness of his position is related to the conditions that have passively facilitated such activities throughout, the negligence towards which The National Church Report into the Managerial Efficiency of the Wytham Diocese makes thorough reference. This negligence derives from active inefficiency and incompetent management. It is not for me directly to dismiss (or indeed appoint) brother and sister bishops; nevertheless, my position does have some moral authority at such a moment as this. The timing of a private investigation with media exposure - unearthing strangely ritualistic sexual practices - with our own (more mundane) investigation into overall incompetencies, hardly gives excuse to assume a renewed leadership when it was precisely such leadership that has been lacking up to this point in time. The Wytham Diocese cannot be expected to recover unless at first the extraction of its fundamental problems of oversight and action are completed, for that is the personalist (and personnel) model we understand: that new life and strength comes after a painful action of severing. Every gardener knows the value of hard pruning for the removal of dead wood along with the weeds for achieving the transformation beyond. The current diocesan bishop surely appreciates this theological insight and should so act.

+++William Kantos Albion

He never could say something in a few words when twenty were available. And to think what his own suffragan bishop was doing with me under his own blocked nose when I was at Margate, and with the suffragan's latest pregnant result in attendance. Bill Blair Rothach's head was loftily in the clouds.

It took one day to see a response from the Bishop of Wytham:

The Rt. Reverend Dr. Derek Imperial, Bishop of Wytham, welcomes the words of the Archbishop of All England, the Most Reverend Professor William Blair Rothach, and commits to the effort to prune and remove dead wood in the diocese towards its transformation. The bishop gives his prayers and good wishes to the Archbishop in his retirement and taking on the Oxford Lord Skidmore Chair in Contextual Theology.

My own guess is that Derek Imperial fancied himself for the Lord Skidmore Chair in Contextual Theology just like he wanted to be in the House of Lords.

After One Night (Friday 4th October)

Adam at my house, with news of the builders making good progress already, asked me about what happened with the rabbi.

"I stayed with him overnight. He is a lovely man."

"You see, I thought I would try and arrange something where we - you and me - started to have a more normal life. Our accommodation together, coming up, and then you go off with another man again."

"I checked on the mikveh, Adam, because I want that, given the nudity involved. I'm not saying the church is going to be like in a naturist club, but I want a nod to it. And the Reformists will have a base they can use in Serninsea."

"You didn't have to go on and sleep with him."

"I seem to recall I was in your bed before it all gets changed there, and you were more interested in two women online than me - one of whom indeed the rabbi and I have slept alongside for real."

"That's just it: she was on a screen only. You went with a real man."

"I just loved his posh bathroom and his huge bed: a bath that is a jacuzzi with electronic controls and showers that spray from different angles, and an enormous bed. After the Ashkenazi meal I didn't want to drive back."

"You didn't have to sleep with him."

"I was offered a separate room, but I wasn't going to sleep in a separate bed."

"It's as if you've learnt nothing."

"Adam! You've never been bothered about this before. Our relationship has been loose. You've been absent so often I don't know what you think."

"It's not as if I wasn't busy, and you had Diana for company. One bedroom above that church will be ours. That's what I think."

"Well, now you say so. The three bedrooms could have been my bedroom, your bedroom and the bedroom of Winnie and Kathleen."

"We'll have a spare bedroom, maybe for visitors," Adam said.

"So you're disappointed in me. Well, I'm not blaming you, but communicate better to me. You've not said from where you'll run your business in the short term."

"I am disappointed. Anyway, I suggest you read John Barman's article. There might even be some truth in it. All right, Linda, we will incorporate the mikveh, all the ensembles can be wet rooms, and we'll have your bed taken over that easily fits three. After all, if Maurice Neptune should call..."

"He won't, to stay over. Wytham is his present base. I was more interested in his house. And his historical theology. But what about when Jenny calls, Adam? Remember her? I'm not going to stop you."

"We'll deal with Jenny, as and when. So you like posh, but I'm afraid our accommodation won't be posh. It will be enough. There'll be an upstairs small kitchen and a seating space, but you can get all communally downstairs."

"I'll find out, shortly, by when I must leave here."

Bandyopadhyay? Barman Writes

Adam let me use his phone with his subscription to The Daily Wireless:

The ex-Bishop of Bolingbroke, John Terence Barman, breaks his silence on the Serninsea-centred National Church sex scandal, with his own exclusive account of what happened regarding its organisation. He writes:

'Calling the Confraternity of bishops and its authority system a 'sex cult' as the Revd. Linda Jupitas has done in The Daily Morse is a glib piece of journalistic misdirection. Our operation was no such thing: it was properly thought through, based on sound Catholic and ecclesiastical principles, with a collegiate bishops-based structure, and employed the incredible yet simple insight that our sexual selves are - as Sigmund Freud came to recognise - primary drivers in the body and surely constitute incarnate access to the divine.

And, if we ask the Revd. Jupitas about this, she will surely agree. She approved, as a naturist, of the central status of the body in all things religious. We do, however, question the extent to which her naturist view is Pagan, whereas the source of our operation was incarnate Christianity. We did not practise some third-degree Witchcraft ceremony but an initiation based on the deeper meanings of body and blood - the material and life-giving energy together - as revealed throughout the biblical witness and in how God meets us as corporeal sexual people.

We had a properly constituted Confraternity, a leading Vanguard structure of guidance and activity, and we bishops consulted widely.

The fact that the Revd. Linda Jupitas agrees is reflected in her continuing association with the Revd. Christine Vine, who, now in an independent setting of 'wandering bishops', is establishing precisely the same vanguard structure of recognising the divine through the sexual body.

One day our revelation will prove to be the most valid, giving us the means by which we can all see the beauty of the divine through the very active being of ourselves and in the man who was human and God at the same time - for in this actuality we glimpse the beauty of holiness.

Just because an investigator and his priest-lover can make money by breaking us up does not mean that this truth will be silenced. The Revds. Vine and Jupitas are, after all, acting our way. In the end, theirs has been nothing more than a turf war against the properly constituted Confraternity Vanguard within the National Church. The Revd Vine in particular, joined by Jupitas, set out to substitute this with their own.

++Bishop John Terence Barman

Not true! After Adam had gone I contacted Christine, who gave permission for me to write a reply as she was included in this, although she said herself that the reply would have to go through The Daily Morse, as this was indeed a press turf war.

"Where did they find him?" I asked her by phone. "He was thrown out by Elizabeth Huett."

"He obviously found them." Meanwhile, Christine said to me, "By the way, if you want to earn a lot of money fast, to help finance your new project, you could always go and see San Bandyopadhyay again."

Having had Adam's rebuke about Maurice Neptune and read what John Barman wrote, I decided to turn down the idea. "Yeah I could, but I'm done with all that. If I don't stop, I'll never escape this pattern of behaviour."

"He'd still pay you handsomely if you did some naked housework and that sort of thing. It's money for old rope. He would be hands off. He'd like you to help out in one of his offices and reward the workers by your naked presence. Bethany his housekeeper might also fancy a break."

"Well, Bethany the housekeeper will have to arrange her own holiday and how he can keep his hands off her."

"Two thousand quid?"

"No thanks, Christine. Speak to you later."

Replying to the Resigned Bishop (Monday & Tuesday 8th October)

Monday and Adam had gone off to London 'for meetings' - I'd learnt not to enquire too much on this score. I was getting a little paranoid: was he 'seeing' Christine? Of course he could - but was he?

I did call round at Adam's to look at the noise and dust everywhere. Ann and Labhaoise were present, monitoring the situation, and then Ann made it clear without prompting that she would not accept any investment money from San Bandyopadhyay. She went on that if I wanted money from him, it would be up to me and at my own personal risk.

"No sweat. I'm not interested. I told Adam so."

Ann pointed out that my letter had been published in The Daily Morse, for no payment to Adam this time, and because it was a letter, they allowed The Daily Wireless to reproduce it, less the square brackets.

Readers may be aware that [in a rival newspaper] Bishop John Barman has surfaced to write his own account about me. He makes factual errors, as I have come to expect of him and his self-promotion.

The then Revd. Deacon Christine Vine walked out of the retreat before ordination as she was disgusted with Bishop Barman's desire for sexual entertainment. The structure and purpose he claims for the Confraternity was principally her idea, and yes she joined another group to put it into practice and became a bishop to do it. But hers is now based on consent and, although she is positive about sex, she has shifted the emphasis to service and sacrifice that we make personally, and not in sexual pleasure as with Bishop Barman's pursuits.

To my personal cost I'd tried to investigate what Bishop Barman and company laid out for me, only to grow increasingly concerned, and yes, I flipped sides to the new Bishop. Bishop Barman should use her proper title.

Cults are defined sociologically as leader-dependent. The three bishops took authority upon themselves, and, like a cult, when they ran away on exposure the structure collapsed. They certainly had none to force people like me and the late Ken Osis to participate.

I am very positive about my body and sex. I am an intersex woman and proud naturist. This does not mean I approve of what I discovered to be the case in the Anglican sex cult: that the pleasure of some relied on the abuse of others, including me.

The Revd. Linda Jupitas

Ann asked me, "Can Adam use your house for working, because the other place is also being extensively redecorated?"

"Sure," I said. "He didn't really have to ask."

"Adam is actually in London today, consulting his wife and Christine, but is travelling back and will see you later."

I pointed out that I was going to take a break in Wales, with my family, and I'd very much like him to accompany me.

She said that with all the media contact pretty much done, and a pause in his work, and with places being trashed and rebuilt, he would probably accompany me. Indeed, she would recommend it.

I contacted Christine by text to tell her I was going to Wales, and surely Adam would come too - especially if Ann recommended such a break. Christine sent a reply:

Before you holiday in your wellies, can I have that ministry plan of yours? Soon as possible. I'm having my own trip to Bristol. Adam was positive today. Don't forget to renew the police criminal record check.

What had been done to me was beyond the criminal. Nevertheless, I drove to Ingle Park and got on with the listing task, and tried to be creative:

Ministries:

Local congregational (like a parish) ministry

Ministry to Naturists throughout the UK - mission to known clubs (Gymnology)

Ministry to Intersex

Minister to people with alternative consenting sexual behaviours (Marcella Althaus-Reid?)

Minister to polyamorous and variable consenting relationships (Marcella Althaus-Reid?)

Ministry through using theological training and education

Ministry analysing the local economy and culture with a religious response

Support for others regarding mental and other health issues

On the latter I was thinking of Jenny. The list was sent straight away to Christine. I did not do an essay the size of a sermon after all.

Back at home, late on, Adam arrived back. His wife Mary Ann had given approval to his accommodation and working changes, sharing a room with me, and my church. I just wondered, listening to him, what was it with him and getting consents? He saw Yootha Ann as well.

Adam had been messaged by Ann about my holiday. Unsurprisingly, therefore, he said to me that a holiday would be a perfect idea for us while the builders were making both places unusable. Peter and Kathryn were at his father's.

Adam then said, "Introduce me to your family."

"I'd love to introduce you to my family, Adam."

"Let's go then. Tomorrow? Is this possible, or do we have to wait at yours for a few days?"

I rang my mother in Wales. The only change was that Lucinda and hubby had moved to the town. The farm annexe they had lived in was soon to be used as a holiday let. Mum would like to see Adam; she remembered him as a teenager (though we avoided my parents when sexually experimental).

Adam decided that Peter could look after the little jobs, to be closed off with reports. As a result I gave Kathleen and Winnie an extra set of house keys to pass on to Peter. Peter and Kathryn could even stay over if they liked.

We went in the dark to Ann and Labhaoise's house for his clothing and items in bags as recovered by Ann and washed. They were washing all his bed linen. Their house was modest, given the money they were making. The two children (sired by Adam) were upstairs.

I took him back to mine for an overnight sleep. Given the long journey ahead, we resisted sex. At least he saved me the indignity of going online, and neither of us mentioned Annie Fenwick as 'Headgirl' or Jördis appearing as 'George'.

In the morning Labhaoise contacted Adam for us to travel via his place under transformation. I was worried: was there a hitch? Post had arrived there. So we got out and looked from the doorway. We saw lintels going in and all the banging and crashing for joining up with next door to the north.

Klärchen Sisse came out of the end terrace to the south with her dog Dieter.

I said, "Sorry about the banging and the crashing."

"I know it is temporary. I just need to reassure Dieter more, cuddle him and let him lick me. We go for a walk away from the noise. We go to see my friend Salome Lichtblau and her lovely dog Hendrik, and all have some fun."

"See you later," I said, without further judgement as she bent down, the dog licked her face and they walked off with her hop and a skip.

Now Labhaoise with a hard hat on came to the door and out to us. She gave Adam a letter. He read it and gave it to me.

Dear Adam Magellan

I am Roland Mitton, Professor of Interpretive Sociology at the Glastonbury School of Folk and Ethnographic Studies at the University of Somerset. I specialise in the Sociology of Religion, ethnic expression, and folk histories. The School of Interpretive Sociology hears that you and your associate, the Reverend Linda Jupitas, have been pivotal in the recent exposure of the activities of the ex-Suffragan Bishop of Bolingbroke in the wider context of his diocese under investigation for inefficiency of practice. We further understand that you have building works in progress to begin a new independent church.

I am tutor to my mature Ph.D student, Alfia Shrimpton, who wishes to make a study of how you will establish and develop your new church. If you agree, she proposes to use ethnographic methods, although there may be some confidential interviews. We cannot show you the progress of her work as it might affect your decisions. Her intention is to be as invisible as possible.

We will reimburse all costs that incur to you as a result of any of her activities. We also propose a one-off payment of three hundred pounds to compensate for her presence, that may last a year or two. She would like to visit, and I would come as well, initially, once the church is ready to begin.

Please let us know if you agree to this using the above address as soon as possible, so that she may get started as you get started.

"What do you think?" he asked me.

"I'm always in favour of helping researchers. Three hundred quid will be good. Why is he contacting you?"

"Christine told me in London that the professor was approached last week by Geoff Virgo and Luis Callas; they'd thought the professor might be interested. Obviously, he acted for his student. He's in Glastonbury; Geoff and Luis live in Bristol and they know the professor. Peter has spoken about this chap before: he appears on television a lot."

I rang Peter, with Adam close.

Peter told me that Roland Mitton's most recent programme was all about how the mediaeval monastery system had 'total ideological domination' via the Church year and control of many economic necessities. Feudalism operated for sure, and the Church calendar produced a year-round thought world grounded in the economy - and the monasteries owned so many farming and production facilities. One can even talk about a mediaeval industrial revolution, with different mills on monastery land and obligations on locals to use them. This was all busted by Henry VIII. The need then arose for a poor law by the State, administered locally. Mitton also studied Pagans new and old, helped by the fact that he was one.

I said, "Christine said she's interested in a twelfth century universe of theology."

Peter added, "The professor could be interested in our archaeology."

I told him he could use the curate's house for business and personally with Kathryn, with Kathleen and Winnie looking after the place.

That was that. I switched off the phone and we got into my SUV to drive to Wales.

Heading towards Wytham Adam said, "I fancy a week of fuck all."

I responded, "Reverse that to 'All fuck' instead. And when they are banging through walls back there, I hope that we'll be banging each other. You all right with that? Are you?"

"Yeah."

"I'm liberated, Adam. All that horrid shit is behind me. I want wasting. Gather all your bodily forces and waste me rotten."

"What's the farm called?" he asked.

"Ystad Bodaod Bacsiog."

"What? Us tad what?"

"Rough-Legged Buzzards Estate. We had them on the marshes during winter and into spring. Now it sounds like Bode. Clever."

The route took us eventually on to the Shrewsbury bypass and then I tried the B road that Lucinda uses. The B4386 took us along a Roman road in part, and into Powys and Trefaldwyn, and then on to Y Drenewydd, and then Caersws for the B4569 and Trefeglwys and past Ystradfaelog.

Chapter 20 Holiday Breakdown

Narrator: Linda Holiday Break Begins (Tuesday 8th October)

It was typical to see my dad in his wellies and nothing else pissing freestyle into a manure box near the farm house and its garden, holding a mug of tea with a hand above.

Halting the car to our mutual laughter, I said, "This is my dad, Leonard, you can see, and in there at the window is my mummy who likes to be called 'Lavender' not Lilibet. Her real name is Elizabeth but we are all the 'els'."

"Els Bells," said Adam. Getting out of the car into some drizzle, my partner told the old man, "Hello! I'm Adam."

"So you're the Keith replacement," my father said, helpfully. Trust him!

Already getting out of the car from the driving seat, I said quickly, "Keith is history now and gone his own way. Probably already separated from another woman and now with an affair."

My large hanging breasted mother appeared to greet Adam, "Hello Bach, as they'd say around here."

"Adam," I said, to introduce him. "Do you remember him?" I think his eyes were falling out of their sockets.

"Barely," said mummy, appropriately, as Adam looked down at her extensive pubic hair and mother looked at my head. "You've got the annexe because Lucinda and Dyfed are living above the shop. The furniture shop will become flats only and they'll move to a tourist shop with a little basic cafe and accommodation above. The furniture business will be online only."

"Everybody's doing it," said Adam to me.

"Doing what?" she asked.

"Rebuilding, renovating."

"Do have a meal with us tonight. It's one of our chickens. Running around it was. Larry is here."

"Why?" I asked.

"Because he is visiting from London."

"Oh." Larry came out of the door, naked too, shook hands with Adam and looked at me.

Adam said, "You're not vegetarian then: not alternative that way," Adam looked at me.

I said, "Now they look after these animals best they can."

Mother said, "Can't beat a chicken that was running around. And the eggs have such rich yolks. Different coloured egg shells and Dyfed and Lucinda will sell some in town and tourists can choose their eggs in a nice little cafe. What happened to your hair?" Father was staring at me as well.

So the annexe was the place to strip off and empty my bowels before going over for the evening meal. "Come on," I told him, once out of the bog. "Get the textiles off."

He obeyed. Walking over to the farmhouse, Adam said to me quietly, "When everyone is like this, it's easier to be the same." That was better. Leila arrived back from college as we stood in mummy's kitchen.

At the table Adam sat and said, "I think I need to tuck my bollocks in."

My mother responded, "Then careful leaning forward when you eat, Adam."

"I will, Lavender."

Father said, "Pull 'em out lad and lay them on the paper on the seat. Welcome to our table." I started chuckling.

Leila came to the table wearing nothing but knickers.

Mother said to her, "Take your knickers off."

Leila replied, "We have company and the string is showing."

The meat and the arable was all from the farm. My father said about the learning curve he'd been on, with help from other farmers, and both mother and Leila were attending Welsh classes. Leila at college was expanding her employment chances by adding the language to her office training.

Adam was well-satisfied by the meal volume and variety. He told all how he'd had a lifetime of not eating properly, and relying on instant meals and fast food, trying to add in vegetables.

"I don't exactly cook very well either," I told him in support. "Be careful. Get to fifty and you'll be stuck overweight on the muck you eat."

There was an obvious enhancing activity for us in that annexe, and to take our time too. It was quite pleasant that first night, feeling somewhat tired. A good sleep followed.

First Full Day (Wednesday 9th October)

I knew that Adam wasn't perfect. He was just familiar and I could live with him. He wasn't deceitful, like Keith. Adam had his weirdo aspects, but who didn't?

He needed encouraging, so first thing first morning was connecting our genitals again and encouraging his emotions. He did without Annie on her early shift, on his tablet, but then Jördis wasn't appearing for instruction.

A little later in the morning father knocked on the window, and the two men went off on a tractor and a trailer (one on each) to go and see the extent of the farm. Adam took a windbreak anorak and in case of rain. My father's skin was leathery and the rain never bothered him.

Eldest sibling Lawrence knocked on the door. I opened it. "What do you want?"

"It's time we squared up. You know Lucinda is avoiding you - again."

"That's between me and her. She took my stuff, I took hers."

"You were jealous of her cuddle time with dad. Can I come in?"

"If you must." He did and he shut the door. "Well, say your piece. What has it been - ten years since you last tried to excuse your behaviour? Come to say you're sorry. You nearly choked me to death with that thing. You were a bastard then, and a bastard now. You could have left cuddle time alone in my mind. It was like more love from him."

"More love? Only like what I did. And later you went off with him - Adam - for more. How come you've got back with him now?"

"None of your business."

"You're so naive and you always were - you were sixteen and stupid. The likes of your subsequent husband and Magellan were fucking around all over the place."

"Nothing to do with cuddle time then, your visit now."

"Luce and dad were doing fellacio and fucking."

"So you said."

"He's stopped now only because Dyfed is on the scene. Probably mum has had enough. Tell you someone else dad fucked. Oh, find out for yourself. You envied cuddle time. You encouraged me."

"I didn't and by default I don't believe you."

"You asked, 'What's it like?' and I showed you."

"I didn't ask you to do what you did."

So why did Luce stroke herself when looking at you?"

"She gestured with her hands and arms. Dad used to pull it a bit, but you were always masturbating in front of me. 'Look at this,' you said. So when I asked, 'What's it like?' it didn't mean you had to do it. I expected words. It was about them. I thought they were cuddling, and why was he cuddling her and not me?"

"You wanted it in your mouth and up your cunt. You wanted to know what it was like."

"You knew I had broader questions: like how someone was going to do it in my case. I didn't ask for a demonstration."

"You're naive but you're not that naive!"

"People avoided me, because of this fucking family. But I didn't ask you to show me in me. And then, when you held my head, I thought, shall I bite you so hard it could injure you for life? You pushed it in me so hard. Daddy wouldn't have been doing that to Luce."

"She was operated on, and you weren't. That was his chance."

"Her mouth is the same size."

"She sucked him off as well so she had control and didn't choke."

"You are sickening. You are just horrible."

"You wanted to know what it was like. Anyway, I've heard you don't choke with Keith. Want to show me?"

"None of your business."

"Look, it's going hard."

"Thank you brother for spoiling my life-discoveries later on. Yes, Jenny and I got Adam to come along. I was asking, even two years later, 'Are blokes the same as you did to me?' So we controlled him. Fucking hell, I was a month older than my sixteenth when you did what you did to me."

"You were old enough. You never forgive anyone. Wank me!"

"Why should I forgive you? It's still rape, especially if there's fuck all down there."

"I remind you that you asked me why anyone would put that in their mouths, never mind that dad was doing it with Luce. You could do it now."

"Why would I do anything now?"

"If you've gone back to Magellan you can come back to me."

"I asked for words."

"We've all read online about you going through the Serninsea population. You gazed at all those cocks and fannies at Saxiclite. I bet you imagined those lads at school."

"That's exactly the point. I wasn't like that at Saxiclite or school. And thanks to you raping me I didn't go after boys until the Adam opportunity arose. I talked about what girls at school were saying and wondered why anyone would want to put that in their mouths."

"Anyway, you're lying. As you always do. You secretly knew what cuddle time was."

"I did not! I did not know secretly what was meant by 'cuddle time'. Leave me alone."

"We were teenagers; you had changed; you were sexy."

"No excuse whatsoever. There's no other name for it, what you did."

"You could have taught me. I bet you can now."

"You stupid sod. Why do you think Jenny and I received Adam? We knew nothing. All I knew was what you'd done."

"Because you wanted to know about cuddle time. Practically."

"I've had enough of this. Fuck off Larry and go back to London. Don't talk to me."

"Suck me off then, for old time's sake."

"Why didn't you stick your cock in Luce? Perhaps she wasn't quite young enough, naive enough. Go on, fuck off."

"Because dad was doing it! You weren't. Why should dad have her and me no one when you were having no one? We could have set something going ourselves."

"Fuck off," I said again. "Just get out of my fucking life. Just go, Larry, go."

"What do you lot call it? 'Reconciliation'?"

"Don't you fucking quote my religion back at me. Has that been up anyone's arse lately?"

"Then let me put it up yours."

"This time I'll fight back and do you physical damage, like I've had done to me."

"We could have had our own cuddle time, back then. I wasn't damaging you with what I did." Larry left the annexe.

As for his core point, at that time I did not know what was cuddle time. But after Larry's actions on me, I did know if not for sure. I was always trying to give daddy the benefit of my remaining doubt. I didn't want a cuddle time from my brother but from my father. I wanted to lie down with him and let him stroke my body and I'd stroke his, and I'd have learnt about what the penis did, but it was always with Lucinda.

I came to realise that 'cuddle time' was daddy taking advantage of Lucinda's vaginoplasty. Perhaps mummy said no to the doctors not simply because she'd read all this literature but because she knew what daddy had begun with Luce's vaginoplasty.

When Adam returned he asked me what was wrong.

"Just my brother. We don't get on. I only really get on with Leila, and then only a bit because she laughs at me. You know my sister is CAIS like me, but guilt and sympathies went her way first. Larry thinks he's okay because his androgens obviously worked. Leila is genetically female."

"You have biologically created tensions. I guessed that a while back."

"Forget it Adam. Adam, I am so sorry about how I once treated you when you were a teenager. So can you say nothing more, and just be my new loving partner please?"

Adam and I (clothed) went out and saw the nearby reservoir and forest, though in the forest we got up to some clothes removed naughty business, which I really needed from him. We braved it, and fantastic to shag without any time pressure on an open hillside and to get a bit muddy and mucky, to wash after in a flowing stream and dress again.

Adam spoke to me, mutually clothed again and walking. "You said about being sorry."

"I am."

"What I don't get is this. Geoff and I knew your family was a bit weird. I'm not criticising."

"No."

"And on a farm as well."

"Yeah. Some people thought we imitated the animals. It's not as if we had many animals."

"So we thought: Linda, she'll be a bit advanced, like, surrounded by nature. There it was otherwise: the situation of you two playing around, finding out, and not much knowledge."

"There was an inverse effect. When you're surrounded by flesh, when you have some animals, you think you know, but it turns out you only know your narrow universe. It was only with Keith that I got to learn more, widened my outlook, took on new ideas, experimented, and was physically changed. I owe him a lot, strangely. My family looks liberating but it was suffocating. The best thing they did was come here. I love my mummy and dad, Leila, even Lucinda, not Larry, but every time I come among them, and I try, I start to suffocate again. I wanted you to see them, and now I want us to go home."

"Why not Larry?"

"Because he's been a bastard all his life. Leave it at that."

We arrived back to the farm. Dad had an outdoor shower made in the farmyard - he would get muddy through work of course. Stream or no stream, we made use of the outdoor shower.

I learnt that Larry had gone, no messing, while we were away in the forest. Mum looked at me. Perhaps she suspected more than she was letting on.

Our evening meals were to be in the farmhouse, and a chance for this family to gather (except Lucinda and Dyfed, so far).

Leila was completely shaven below, re-exposed post period, and had a habit of raising her legs up on the seat and so giving Adam an eyeful. Oh dear. What did she know about now absent Larry and me? This was the point. As far as I could tell, mummy suspected something and I supposed daddy knew nothing of that day. Leila made fun about Lucinda and me as competitors, at any opportunity.

My mother tried to manage the family, with schisms from sexual abuse. I'd now experienced more, in Serninsea: she'd asked about my hair to no reply but had said nothing about the marks that were on my body. She and the rest of them could read the news like anyone else, but no one beyond Larry was saying anything. Maybe they were waiting for me to say something, and assumed that, perhaps like they were doing, I was putting the 'sex cult' abuse into a box to be concealed out of sight.

Lucinda Sets Up Adam (Thursday 10th October)

Mummy found a moment next late morning to ask me alone, in the yard, "Why did Larry suddenly go? What happened?"

"We had an argument."

"You've had an argument for years. All I'll say is that naturist girls often see erect penises even of their brothers and learn to accept that boys are rude."

"I have to ask you - what was 'cuddle time' between Lucinda and daddy?"

"All you need to know is that your dad comforted Luce after her operations healed. Lucinda was upset for ages and also because you were left untouched. He cuddled her because of her 'why me? going on to HRT and all that.'"

The conversation was cut short because Lucinda and Dyfed were calling in just to say hello to Adam, with some food shopping brought with them. Adam came out of the annexe.

Lucinda said to Adam. "You're the replacement man."

"That quip has been made," he said. "I'm my own man."

"You're an investigator and, well, we have Harrington and Mathias, a private investigator firm, just getting started in Y Drefnewydd and with an office in Caersws, not far from Llanidloes; Mr. Harrington bought furniture off us, and with Mr. Matthias is setting up home and office. They'd like to compare jobs and how economically sound it is as a career."

"Difficult, usually. Did well recently. Would you like to meet?"

Luce said, "What he'd really like to do is draw on your experience for a job he's got on. There's a little bit of travelling around mid-Wales involved."

I said, "Could be interesting, Adam. Thanks, Luce."

"I can arrange it for tomorrow, if he's available."

Daddy came down from the field and waved.

Then Dyfed, saying very little, and Lucinda both went back to town.

Adam and I only were soon in a field, with windshield anoraks on, and Adam referred to Lucinda. "She is one fine beauty. Leila is like, em, taut."

"Am I not so proportioned?"

"You and Lucinda are so similar."

"Perhaps if Leila went online?"

"Wouldn't work. I don't know Annie at all. She's a sister of someone where we have history."

"I want to ask you about Cheryl Mould. You found out from me about Keith and her, but since I've found out about you and her."

"Who from?"

"From whom. Cheryl. Ten years ago, six years ago. I took you for a meal and then we fucked. You'd done the same with her."

"Cheryl was a one off."

"Two off. It doesn't matter, Adam. Was there anyone else I'd know?"

"You're asking?"

"Curious."

"I don't know all those you know. You know of my significant others," he said.

"But watch your diet, chubby. Fish and chips before sex."

He said, "There might be aeroplanes overhead so keep the anoraks on. I've no fish and chips now. I fancy landing in a good place, even if there are pilots passing by above thinking we're cuddling."

"Yeah, we can have our own cuddle time." He landed his plane in my short runway.

Daughters and Father (Friday 11th October)

It was the third full day there, and the two of us visiting were indeed invited to go into the town and see my sister and brother in law's business changes. There was rain in the air. However, on arrival at the new cafe and trinkets shop, she wasn't present. Dyfed was busy preparing the premises, with accommodation upstairs. He wanted to offer the widest choice of coffees, including my use of honey, spray cream and chocolate powder!

Lucinda came in, and she said the aforementioned Mr. Harrington wanted to see Adam; he was a private investigator and she'd just told him that Adam was in town.

"I'll take your Adam to the investigator," she said. "He does want you to put your fresh mind to an existing missing person enquiry."

Adam said, "I'd be interested in this."

They went off. I thought, why didn't the investigator, Mr. Harrington, come and pick him up directly? Still, I was alone with Dyfed. We continued to talk a little more, and then went outside for a walk down the street.

I just could not help myself - I responded with desire when he looked at me and smiled. This was happening yet again and I had to fight it.

He said to me, eyes sparkling in the light, "I always like walking and talking with you, isn't it."

I said, "We had a good time, you and me last time, and we behaved ourselves."

"O Duw, rwy'n amser da."

"Dew?"

"Yes, a good time," he translated. "Lucinda wasn't too hapus [happis] though afterwards."

I said, "There's no boil on my bum, this time, but a residual mark. Other marks now, I'm afraid. I'm trying to be uncomplicated with Adam, at last."

"I think I understand."

Lucinda appeared walking down the street.

Once near she said, "Adam and Elwyn have gone off now. There's a train at Caersws and, if they are on time, Elwyn can go over the sites where she had an affair and where she may have gone missing."

"Who?" I asked.

"The student who went missing."

"What was her name?"

"Dunno. There's no trace of her. No money transactions since. Probably dead."

"This is a very serious case," I said. "Adam says he often helps the police. He can review documents, check their procedures and revisit sites."

"It's not the police. This Harrington chap is being employed by her family to put some extra perspective in because so far the police have drawn a blank. The family wants some hope.

"Adam does that too: provides some hope. That's what I was supposed to be doing, too, as a minister."

"As a minister?" Lucinda asked. "Some hope, more like."

"Well."

"Anyway, I'm going back to the old shop flat to sort stuff out before we leave that place. You still showing Linda around?"

"Only a little bit," Dyfed said.

"Don't be too long. Don't be tempted."

"We are not tempted," I said, firmly. Off she went. "How can she say that?" I asked him.

"Because you always take what is hers, she told me."

With her gone a while, and walking around with him, looking at the variety and style of shops, I asked Dyfed if there was a place I could go for a pee.

He asked how desperate I was, and so was able to piss for Wales and more in the new shop.

"All right?" he asked. "You were quite noisy."

"Yeah. Fine. Oh, hang on." I'd received a text on my mobile phone from Adam.

Just parked in time! The train is coming and Elwyn and I are going as far as Llanbedr Pont Steffan where this missing person was a student. She had taken part in the food festival they had a year ago, based at the college.

I texted back a message.

I'll come and pick you up when you are back. It all sounds fascinating. Enjoy the experience, but sad that someone's gone missing for so long.

Dyfed walked me back to my car. When we arrived, I turned and gave Dyfed a kiss on the cheek. I then apologised. I went back to the farm alone in my SUV car. Grrr.

So I joined my naked and wet father - me wearing an unbuttoned plastic coat only and wellies - going around doing some farmwork.

He said to me, "Larry had a chat with you about 'cuddle time'. I haven't done cuddle time with Lucinda since Dyfed, of course. How would you like to have cuddle time?"

"Er..."

"You're never too old to be with your dad."

"Like Lucinda used to enjoy?"

"Yes, exactly the same way. I don't regret it. I have my own room high in the farmhouse where I retreat. Even your mother asks before she can go up in there cleaning."

"Yes, daddy. Yes."

"You won't regret it if we have cuddle time, you and me?"

"No, daddy. Yes."

We walked back towards the farmyard and house, him pissing as he took his fancy, and I squatted too, feeling comfortable about that too. Cuddle time and me!

Inside, our muddy wellingtons came off, and my wind-breaking coat. Dad grabbed a towel and rubbed himself all over. My mother took the towel off him; her face went wide eyed when my daddy said to her, as we moved on, "We're in my room."

Up the stairs we went and a further flight into the roof space with skylight windows and a door at the far end side alongside a double bed. In between there was a decent landscaped train set and another table with two computers on it and a fifty inch television.

I said, "Your man cave. Yes, you had one at Serninsea."

I got on the bed from the left side and he from the right near the door. "Come to your dad."

I put my right arm around him - still a bit damp - and he put his left arm around me, and pulled me to him. My breasts squeezed to him, which had happened before, but now his hand roamed around my buttocks.

This was an actual cuddle, a time to be close to my dad. He was going stiff, and I was oozing inside.

"Well?" he asked.

"I touch it?"

"It sure wants cuddling too."

"Of course, daddy."

I took hold, and for the first time ever masturbated my father. He'd tugged at it before, in front of me, but now I was doing this seriously and properly, looking at what I was doing.

He asked, "What's it going to be cuddled by?"

"It will... go in, daddy. Years of dilation, like."

I slightly jumped as his hand touched my crotch. It was such a very intense moment. His fingers slipped in me. I must have been pouring liquid by now.

He said, "You are so wet. Lucinda was, when younger. I'm swelling up and everything. This could be so quick."

"Put it in daddy. Come inside me."

"Let me look, first."

He did, as he adjusted position. I opened myself, and I told him to taste me. From applying his tongue - he said it was sweet - it was easy for him to move above me, and he went into me with a thrust of his rock hard penis.

This was something I wanted. I knew all the objections, but this is what Lucinda had experienced and bragged about, and now I was taking something she had enjoyed - if she'd enjoyed it. I was enjoying everything. Never mind Dyfed, this was daddy!

Daddy said, "Yeah. I can feel it's different. I'm pushing up against something whereas with Luce I went in deep. They did a very good job on her."

"It's amazing," I said. "But... if you want to go deep, there is another way."

"What if I come in there?"

"No problem. It's better, actually. But look, you might get something unwanted."

"I'd still like to try it." He came out of me.

So I turned about and got on to my elbows and knees, and daddy paused a little to look because he was trying not to come instantly. Nevertheless, up and in he went, and he went in deep, and it took only a few thrusts, and he ejaculated deep in my rear.

"I never did this with Luce," he said to me.

I felt great. I'd not only levelled her with cuddle time, I'd done more. And when he came out of me I turned to make sure I did more again, by absorbing his penis in my mouth to my throat, and despite the taste of my rear I took him so deep I licked his balls.

He said, "She never did this, either. How do you do it?"

I didn't answer - couldn't, but set to work this way to prevent him going soft. He was excited enough to stay hard. As a result he was able to go into my vagina again, pushing, and working me with a little more freedom.

He soon ejaculated into my vagina, and it all ran out.

What followed was a lot of strong cuddling and mouth to mouth kissing after this, and then he said, "I never ejaculated twice with Lucinda, not even when she was seventeen and in the early days."

So that was three things I had over her: he'd been down my anus and not hers, deep in my throat and she couldn't do it, and he'd ejaculated twice.

Soon the grip and kissing lessened and I looked closely at his face.

He said, "I did not love Lucinda more than you. I helped her. Larry was right but he was uncooth with you; he couldn't control himself."

"You knew about what he did?"

"Weeks after he'd done it, it turned out. Your mother was suspicious something had happened. I didn't object in principle. So when I thought about giving you cuddle time as well, I didn't, partly because of your reaction, but also I did worry about your plumbing. Lucinda did need my comforts."

"Did mummy refuse my operations because you went with Luce?"

"No, not then. She knew, eventually, what we were doing, but Luce was always positive, so your mother tolerated it. She was pleased to know something similar had not happened between you and Larry."

"Thank you daddy, for this today. It was beautiful."

"I think we'd better finish," he said. "Tell nothing to your mother. If she asks - insists - then just say you lay down with me and chatted."

"Yes, she'd better not know."

"And don't brag to your sister or she will create a stink."

"No. I'm just so satisfied, daddy, that I have had cuddle time with you."

"You could have one each time you visit."

"I don't know; I'm really happy at the moment."

He had a sink, shower and toilet beyond the door, so I cleaned myself up.

Narrator: Linda Dishonesty (11th to Saturday 12th October)

We walked past my mother, who was baking and she gave us a look of thunder. As I said nothing and she asked nothing, I could see Dyfed's car arrive outside and he go into the annexe. So I put the wellies back on and went across into the annexe. Dyfed was sat there, handling some furniture magazine, his body going on display again.

"She wants her space every so often, to do something different. I think she's taken this habit from you."

"Is that what she says I'm like?" I asked him.

"That and the unending competition between you two."

"So she told you to buzz off."

"She's probably testing me," he said. "Testing me near you."

"Oh right," I said, "We had better behave ourselves again. I might see where Adam is going, do some Internet searching and map work."

I then thought about my daddy, and that I must never mention this to anyone.

"You look a bit reddish, flushed, glowing," Dyfed said.

"We went into the fields."

"Do you fancy a game of Reversi, bach?"

"What's Reversi Back?"

"No, Reversi. You don't want to be on the computer or phone all the time. It's in this box here."

"I wasn't."

"Searching about Adam and his colleagues."

"No. Right. Well, okay."

He told me that on an eight by eight board, it's all about strong squares, weak squares and opportunities. You can only go when you reverse a line or lines, by placing a counter at one end that turns the opponent's counters to yours up to where you have a counter on that line, starting with four in the centre as black-white, white-black. But there are risks, especially turning over a line of five, he indicated. You win when most of the completed 64 squares are covered with your colour.

I had flashbacks to my daddy fucking me, licking my crotch and me sucking him off - affecting my concentration.

Dyfed actually spent a lot of time advising me on where to go, not to go, and why. He said, "You think you've got everything, or at least enough, and suddenly it reverses. And you can occupy a strong square, say at the corner, too early, and your opponent late-on sneaks in alongside and gets the benefit, and nothing can be reversed back."

Hmm. He might not have been talking about Reversi.

I lost the game. Dyfed said the extent of the number advantage reflects the comparative play. I had 24 of mine at the end, and he had 40.

Mummy came over and, looking at him and not me, said we could have our tea in the house now. So Dyfed and I went over, and we explained that Adam was going to Llanbedr Pont Steffan on a mystery case of a disappeared woman.

For some reason Leila sniggered and I could just hear her say, "Disappeared man more like." She pointed at her visible crotch. Daddy gave the odd smile towards me.

I got a sense after the meal and a bit of television that Dyfed and I were being watched, and watched more when returning to the annexe. I put my hand on his waist as we went, partly to reassure my mother.

This time I set about Internet searching on the annexe computer, but before I got anywhere he said, "Oh come away from there; come and lie with me. Let's lie on the bed and talk about good things."

"I'm getting suspicious, Dyfed."

"Yes I know," he said.

"You know, Dyfed?" I asked, in the room and lying alongside him.

"What do I know?" he asked.

Silence followed! Then there was a text message about the train journeying and being at the college. Elwyn and Adam were staying overnight in a bed and breakfast Gwesty Teifi in separate rooms at Llanbedr Pont Steffan. I looked it up, just on my phone, and it was a real place.

I said to Dyfed, "So it is real."

"It's as real as your body here."

"Your wife is my big sister, and she is jealous about you."

Then I shivered as he raised his hand and lowered it to my crotch.

"What are you doing, Dyfed?"

"Open it," he said, as he fumbled his fingers between my legs.

"Dyfed, I'm lying down talking to you. Stop it."

"You've hardly said a word, isn't it!"

He paused his hand. Then a phone rang in another room, almost as if expected.

"O cachu," he said.

"Leave it," I said. "Pick up the message later."

"No, of course I can't. She will want me to go back. She is either at the old place or at the new."

The call taken, his expectation was confirmed.

"Are you going back?" I asked.

"Oes, Duw. Rhaid i mi fynd."

"It's a shame."

"Pity," he said. So he dressed up. He left me on the bed and soon drove off in his car. Indeed feeling horny, and with dew, I finished myself off, thinking of daddy, and eventually dropping away to sleep.

It was in the night when I returned to Internet searching, on the annexe computer, diverted by some very personal pictures of Lucinda and Dyfed, and I became satisfied (if that's the right word) that I was being told something that simply wasn't so.

Llanbedr Pont Steffan once had a railway station, but not any more. And it had a shorter, awkward, anglicised name.

More than this, when I looked to see if Harrington and Mathias had a website, I discovered instead that Richard Harrington played Tom Mathias in a series called Hinterland, or Dusk when translated from the Welsh language version. The fictional base was Aberystwyth.

Next day, Saturday, having mulled things over, with a tasty breakfast alone, Dyfed turned up, on his own again.

"To be honest," he said, as his first words, "I think she's avoiding you." He came in and started undressing.

"I'm ringing Adam."

"Is that wise? He could be busy." He completed undressing. "Don't ring him if he's busy. I've not eaten; fancy something?"

"No, I've eaten. I'll cook you something. Did you have any supper with Lucinda?"

"We got a Chinese in. Ordered two chow mein at the Chinese."

"You'll be getting fat. Mother's grub was enough for me. But today is another day."

I cooked him rich eggs and solid flavourful bacon. When done, I said he could show me the local countryside from his car.

And so we were dressed again, and off we went. We went into a number of small towns, passed a few reservoirs, and I enjoyed the trip. But my mind was elsewhere.

"Why do you resist me?" he asked.

"Because I want to demonstrate that I can. I need to resist."

Back at the annexe I said he should stay with me. So he did.

Dyfed said to me, "I'm sure Adam will be home tonight. It will have been an exciting two days for him."

"Dum de dum de... Hello Adam. How are you doing - where are you?"

"Er, yes, Linda, so good to hear from you, so far away still, and we left Llanbedr Pont Steffan station earlier and the college there."

"On the train?"

"Yes. Stopping train, and a long way. Yesterday we paused from the train on the way at Cyffordd Dyfi and its view out: it's where the student went missing. The outside camera there wasn't working. She was not seen again. They say there was a sighting beforehand in Machynlleth. So the way the timetable works, we went back to Machynlleth and it's an interesting place with the clock tower. Then we took the train into Aberystwyth, and then the connecting train to Llanbedr Pont Steffan for overnight and this morning got some background on her and looking at some police papers. We're back in Aberystwyth now. Coming back very soon."

"You stayed at the Gwesty Teifi, you told me. I looked it up. Very nice."

"Oh yes. Two rooms. I'll be back later today. The trains aren't exactly fast. Elwyn has his own notes; we have been comparing methods of archiving and cross-checking. I got to talk to her college lecturer early this morning, but I can't see how he was involved, same as the police. She is missing, but not necessarily dead. Machynlleth is her home town and the question is why she vanished at Cyffordd Dyfi."

"Quite a mystery," I pondered aloud. "What was her name?"

"Er yes, Sian Lloyd."

"Oh, like er... presents the weather forecast?"

"Nothing like this happens in Serninsea," he added.

"No, very rare, except on television," I added.

He said, "Perhaps there is more opportunity for investigating in this sort of hinterland."

"Probably. Well, I'll see you much later today then. Dyfed is with me. He went home overnight but we did play Reversi yesterday. I'll have to teach you. It's about strategy."

"I'll come directly to the farm. Bye then."

"Bye then from here."

"So he was at Llanbedr Pont Steffan," I said to Dyfed. "Tell me about it. It's a sort of hinterland, he said."

"I don't know. Do they call it that? I suppose so."

"There's a railway there, and a college," I said.

He was looking at me.

"But there isn't," I pointed out. "It isn't a college, either, but a university. It was once a university college, but now it is a university."

"Coleg, prifysgol...."

"Dyfed, there's no railway there. It's Lampeter in English, the university town, but it's a long bus ride from Aberystwyth. Cyffordd Dyfi..."

"In English 'Cyffordd' is Junction," he said. "Railway station."

"Yes. Back to Machynlleth. There is indeed a complicated timetable. He's right about that. But not about the other."

"Beth?"

"Who's called Beth?" I asked.

"Sorry. I meant 'what', isn't it."

"He is just giving me a load of porkies. Aberystwyth to Lampeter? That's by a bus. My sister, your wife, is doing this. She has fed him the story, and he hasn't checked it, and she knows I will find out that he was lying. Your wife, Dyfed, has been fucking my man, and I'm supposed to perhaps realise it too. And you know it."

"There must be another explanation," he said, feebly.

"What's more, Richard Harrington is an actor. And you were called away last night and I think you saw Adam. Did you two men bang her together? Has she got one up on me?"

"I think this is ridiculous, Linda. I wanted you alone, remember."

"My sister steals whatever is mine. This was supposed to be Adam and me getting close before we go and live together in our redone premises."

"I think she thinks the same," he said.

"What?"

"That you take everything that's hers. Only when your family sort of left Serninsea did it change and she met me of course. But I'm worried about her appetite."

"Appetite?"

"Sexual appetite. She has been round the farm a bit."

"Leave that thought alone," I said to him. "I'm considering why, if Adam and Lucinda can do this, why can't we?"

"Indeed. Come on!" he said.

We went on to his and her bed. He started playing with himself, and touched my breast. Having thought otherwise I told him I couldn't, not now, but he could play with himself if he wanted. I watched him, and pulled my leg open for visual assistance.

Somewhat later on I said, "Sorry but come on your own body, Dyfed." I suddenly sensed that what had happened between my father and me was wrong, competing with my sister.

I got up to find some kitchen towel and handed two squares to him. I said I wanted to try at least a more conventional life with Adam and do more in terms of a relationship.

I wasn't going to let Lucinda win. I couldn't tell her about me experiencing cuddle time. Rather, just as I'd told Cheryl Mould about being prepared to tolerate, I was going to have to do the same. After all, my man fantasised about an online performer.

Moving about the annexe I said, "Before I kick you out, Dyfed - don't you dare go yet - I've an idea based on mobile phones. Calling a friend... Hello? Peter!"

"Good to hear from you, Linda."

"You are my lamp, Peter. I suppose it costs, does it, to ask your engineer friend to tell us about mobile phone use and where from. I want to demonstrate Adam's location to a friend."

"Nope. Adam has an app in his phone, as I do, to tell each other where we are."

"Oh, and do you know where he has been recently?"

"Yes, it also gives a list."

"Simple question then. Has Adam been to Aberystwyth, Machynlleth, Cyffordd Dyfi..."

"Er... nope. No, he's been in one place and overnight. But I do believe he is on the move at present."

"Oh. I wonder which train he caught, Dyfed?"

Peter said, "He hasn't been to Dyfed. I just told you."

"Dyfed is the name of a man here, Lucinda's husband, giving me a fiction that Adam has been on a journey."

"Oh. Oh dear. Has he been with someone else?"

"He's been enjoying my eldest sister. Thank you Peter. You're a good man, a lamp indeed. Bye. You see, Dyfed, Peter once had every opportunity to fuck me and yet he didn't. I later saw his penis and didn't succumb. You wanted me to take you, because your wife has been taking what is mine."

When Adam was back, with Lucinda, I dismissed Dyfed and demanded that Lucinda say nothing. I barked at Adam to come into the Annexe and slammed the door.

Narrator: Adam With Lucinda (Thursday 10th to Saturday 12th)

On Thursday I was told by Linda's sister Lucinda that there was a private investigator firm called Harrington and Mathias in Y Drefnewydd and with an office in Caersws. Next day, despite drizzle and rain, we went into town and saw the new cafe Dyfed was busy preparing. Lucinda joined us with a message that Mr. Harrington wanted to see me. She took me to see him as he wanted a fresh mind to a missing person enquiry.

I was naturally curious and interested, and followed her, but we only went to their old furniture shop. With no furniture downstairs, except the odd seat and empty cupboard, she took me up a bare staircase to the accommodation upstairs, and led me into a bedroom about to lose its bed, other remaining furniture and carpet. She said he would be along shortly, but asked me to sit and hold on to the seat's back behind me as it was old and unstable - the sort with vertical wood slats within the frame.

"What are you doing?" I asked her.

"Stroking your arms."

Then I realised she had quickly attached a pair of handcuffs to my right wrist, attached to the seat back slats, and this left me dragging the seat as I stood up.

Next she showed her strength, similar to Linda - both of these women had strong muscles. And so it was her two arms versus my one arm, and therefore my other wrist also became connected to the seat back slats.

Lucinda said, "They'll come off in a minute, but I don't want you running out. I am, however, going out. See you shortly. Mr. Harrington may let himself in, and if he does he can unlock you."

I was left handcuffed to the slats of this chair. It would have been possible to smash the chair, but sometimes letting someone do something initially leads to finding out more.

Lucinda wasn't long gone. "Hello dear Adam," she said when back. "I've told them you're getting the train with Elwyn Harrington. Unfortunately, Messrs Harrington and Mathias are fictional, I'm afraid. The thing is, as we speak, your partner, my sister, has the hots for my husband. She took him last time and she'll take him this time, only because he is weak and she is sexually aggressive. So it is about time we evened things up, and you can spend some time with me."

"Really," I said. "She said she didn't."

"I remember you vaguely as a teenager. There was the rumour then about you and a teacher, never mind about you with my sister and Jenny Masters. I know that your life since has been complicated and wasted when it comes to women. But my bisexual sister has that advantage over me, so I stick to a lesser pool available of men only."

"A man eater," I said.

"I want what is mine. She steals what is mine, like Dyfed, and I'm taking what is hers now."

She undid the handcuffs, so I bade her goodbye, and walked out of the bedroom door and went down the bare stairs to find all ways out locked.

"You disappoint me," Lucinda said, from the top of the stairs. "No one is coming, so you may as well come back upstairs. At least let Dyfed and her get started; they won't have started quite yet."

"Are you serious?" I asked her.

"Deadly. I can show you that your new partner is disloyal."

"Actually, we have a loose relationship. I've never had a claim over her."

"Really? Suits me no end. Come back upstairs then, Adam."

I ascended the noisy staircase. "No claim at all. She's been with a chap called Maurice Neptune in Wytham only a week ago. Stayed overnight and in his bed. I was disappointed, but she showed loyalty to Keith in a way I've never expected or wanted. Be nice if it changed."

"So my husband really is in danger - again."

"He might be."

"I want your mobile phone, Adam, and we can tell her stage by stage that you are on your way. You'll be able to tell her afterwards about the important missing person enquiry and how you offered your services. So when I send it it'll say that you and Elwyn - that's Harrington - have gone by train to look at where she may have gone missing, if there is time according to the train timetable."

I gave her my mobile phone and told her to get on with it. I sat on the seat and she sat on the bed.

I said, "I think you've thought this through quite well."

Then she undressed, telling me not to read anything into it because, as I knew too well, she was a naturist, just like Linda. It was only when she had undressed that she pressed send.

Just parked in time! The train is coming and Elwyn and I are going as far as Llanbedr Pont Steffan where this missing person was a student. She had taken part in the food festival they had a year ago, based at the college.

"Oh look," said Lucinda. "She's sent a reply. Hook, line and sinker."

I'll come and pick you up when you are back. It all sounds fascinating. Enjoy the experience, but sad that someone's gone missing for so long.

She lay on the bed and told me to join her. She said, "She's not expecting you back any time soon, and that means tomorrow, laddie." When I didn't join her by invitation she said I should suit myself.

What did happen was that I talked to her about me being in the police, about how Ann Dromeghda had always featured in my life, and, with her partner Labhaoise Vlahos, I was helped to start the private investigator business. Indeed, they were now helping me renew the two sites after the retirement of my competitor. And I went through the news of the two reports that shook the diocese and making me a lot of money, and what may emerge afterwards, for Linda and Christine Vine.

Sitting on the seat was having an effect on my backside and back, being very basic, so in the end my resolve melted somewhat and lay on the bed with Lucinda, although I was clothed. She started touching my clothing.

She said, "We're still paying for the heating in here. You could at least loosen up." She unhooked my trousers and unbuttoned my shirt, and then I heard a noise as she put her hand down my trousers.

It was Dyfed coming in, and he saw her deliberately compromising me and herself.

He said, "I will say it for the hundredth time: I did not have sex with Linda."

"I know you did, and you will later."

"For a wife not to believe her husband is a serious matter," Dyfed said.

"I'd believe you but it's the way she denies it. What do you think, Adam?"

"I don't know."

"She's just had sex with a Maurice what?"

"A rabbi."

"A rabbi no less! Is she changing her religion?"

"It's not as far-fetched as you'd think. 'It's an ecumenical matter,' as Father Jack would say."

Lucinda said to Dyfed, "You heard him. Go on, prove yourself as resistant then. I'll give you a chance. You fancy her don't you."

"She looks like you but I do have you; it's she that fancies me."

"Ah," said Lucinda. "What did she say?"

"She said she is resisting me."

Adam sighed.

"That's my sister," said Lucinda. "Adam is staying with me overnight."

"Am I?"

"Yes you are. She won't suspect anything, Adam, because as far as Linda is concerned you will spend the night in a guest house at Llanbedr Pont Steffan. I looked it up."

"Tell you what, Dyfed," I said. "You've just let yourself in with some keys. Toss them to me, and I'll go to the farm instead of you."

Lucinda said, "What shall we eat later, Adam?"

Dyfed said, "Much as I'd like it otherwise, my wife has to carry out her feud, Adam, and if I was you I'd just let her get on with it. I'll bring you some Chinese food from down the road - later. Two hours."

I realised that if he went through the door, I could jump him and get out myself. Trouble was Linda's resistance was low. I owed her a church, and Ann and I would stick by this, but suggestions that Linda might move towards a normal life with me seemed a limited hope at this point.

When Dyfed came back I'd already passed the point of resistance. I was kissing and discovering Lucinda's body. I'd stayed clothed, if accessible, simply because I knew he'd return. So it was that he brought back two meals, and a furniture magazine arrived in the only and late post, and he made it clear he wasn't staying.

After we'd eaten I did strip off, and decided to make hay with Dyfed's wife. And she was so like Linda, except that when I entered her I went much further in. I started to enjoy how the schemer could space things out and make things last. She was just fascinating. Her appetite for sex outstripped her appetite for food. I found an energy for sex previously lost: with this woman who looked like Linda but wasn't, her very open access sister.

Later on Lucinda gave me a text message to send and I was more than willing to make out I was innocent in all this.

It's all been very interesting today, backwards and forwards on the train, and eventually took the slow stopping train to Llanbedr Pont Steffan and the college where the missing woman was a student. I am staying with Elwyn - separate rooms! - at the Gwesty Teifi in the town. See you tomorrow when I can tell you all about what we have been doing.

Then she thought I should ring Linda, but when I rang up Dyfed answered and he ignored what I said to tell Linda, and used the call as an excuse to leave there. Lucinda was unconcerned: Dyfed was going to the new premises to sleep there.

I suggested it was evidence that they had not had sex.

"No," Lucinda said, "what's happened is she has either tried to seduce him or has seduced him, and he is running away. He can't risk staying overnight with her."

Lucinda was working on me again, like a whore on piece rates. Still, I enjoyed her company overnight, and she showed me a warmth that Linda had not. She did become close and sweet and we slept together in close, physical contact.

Then Lucinda looked at her mobile phone. "Oh. My app says that Dyfed is at the farmhouse annexe for his breakfast. Did he ever leave her?"

In the morning I was all over Lucinda and she was all over me. I was enjoying her, and I bet this is how Linda had been with Maurice Neptune. Linda and Lucinda obviously each had a voracious sexual appetite that one man (or woman too in Linda's case) could not contain.

The holiday turned out to be 'all fuck' except with Lucinda. I looked into her of course: these surgeons had done a fantastic job with a make-believe cervix too. I really wondered why Linda would prefer to keep pushing her vagina with dilators every day.

At this point I was quite happy to go down the road with Lucinda and enter a cafe - not Dyfed's, as his wasn't operating yet - and enjoy a full breakfast. But Lucinda wanted more sex and storytelling.

After he thighs gripped hard, Lucinda gave me a summary of my time with Elwyn Harrington. It was up to me to add my own imaginative narrative as I did often in reports to gloss over what had happened minimally.

But before I might ring Linda, she rang me. So I had to be positive and welcoming of her call, with Lucinda grinning alongside me.

"Er, yes, Linda, so good to hear from you, so far away, and we left Llanbedr Pont Steffan station earlier and the college there."

"On the train?"

I described the zig-zag journey Lucinda said was necessary yesterday because of the timetabling on the line. Cyffordd Dyfi was supposed to have a camera outside that might show the student's movements but it was not working - of course it wasn't. Machynlleth next was to check out an earlier sighting. Lucinda mouthed 'clock tower' so I got that in as a point of interest. So then it was to Aberystwyth and on to Llanbedr Pont Steffan. This day we'd come as far as Aberystwyth to interview her professor - I could not see how he'd be involved - and we'd be back soon.

Linda said she'd looked up my apparent accommodation online and it did exist. Phew.

I came up with some nonsense about Elwyn having his own notes and comparing how we archived and cross-checked material. I further said that Machynlleth is the student's home town and the question is why she vanished at Cyffordd Dyfi.

"Quite a mystery. What was her name?" Linda asked.

I hadn't thought of a name. I invented Sian Lloyd.

Linda recalled she presented weather forecasts. I skipped that and mentioned an unknown motive. We'd not had a case like this in Serninsea.

"No, very rare, except on television," Linda said.

Lucinda whispered that there was more similar space across west Wales, so I said, "Perhaps there is more opportunity for investigating in this sort of hinterland."

She told me that Dyfed was with her, and how he went 'home' yesterday after playing Reversi. She would teach me how to play and use strategy. I said I'd see her at the farm, and bye from where I was supposed to be - Aberystwyth.

The call over, Lucinda opened her mouth with delight and then hugged me. Gosh, it was yet another session with her. This was more than brilliant.

To be honest, she was wearing me out. I was reverting to using my fingers and hands. Still good.

She said, "I haven't had a sex-shock session like this for a long time. Well, since meeting Dyfed. He didn't know what had hit him."

"I can imagine," I said. "I'm shell-shocked."

"Sex-shocked," she said.

"I'll have Post Traumatic Sex Disorder."

"Good," she said.

Lucinda explained that Elwyn Harrington would have dropped me off in town, so she would drive up to the farm with me. However, she also told me that her ideas came from a television series, where Richard Harrington played Tom Matthias. I wondered if Linda would know this: she and we hardly watched much television. So we arrived at the farm, and immediately hit a wall of hostility from Linda - including towards Dyfed, surprisingly.

"Well, it's bye bye Dyfed. Sorry but fuck off Dyfed. Get lost Lucinda. No, I don't want to hear anything, Lucinda. Get lost. Adam: in! In here now!"

Linda slammed the door on grinning Lucinda.

Inside Linda clenched her fist and I was keeping away from her. I admitted that Lucinda told porkies from the off. She'd said about Richard Harrington playing Tom Mathias in Hinterland, and that's what Lucinda thought up, if using the name Elwyn.

When Linda told me there is no such railway to Llanbedr Pont Steffan, closed due to Dr. Beeching, I claimed that this was my doing so that she'd know it was not true. Linda had also discovered that I could not have visited a college because it is a university there, as at Aberystwyth.

I told her that effectively I'd been kidnapped, and I expected Dyfed had enjoyed sex with her.

"No." All this was enough for Linda. We were leaving. We would find a room at her naturist club.

"Aye."

"Adam, we have too much to lose, you and me. She has again taken what is mine, that's all. Get undressed, let's go to bed for sex and sleep, and we will pack for tomorrow, and just go. I'm really horny and he nearly tried something on, and I said he would not."

"Yep."

"I am glad my family are here in mid-Wales, because any closer to Serninsea and I think they'd do my head in."

Unfortunately, regarding sex, she found me incapable. "I fucking hate her," Linda said. "She's used you up."

"Yes," I accepted. "It'll have to be fingers."

Narrator: Linda A Different Holiday (Sunday to Thursday 17th October)

I sent an email to my mother wishing her the best and that we had to leave in a hurry.

We stayed, of course, at The Bever Wood Naturist Club. Adam had his tail between his legs, almost literally. He did as I told him, and I took the sexual lead. My sister would not wreck my relationship. So I literally put my family in another mental slot, including daddy, and decided that Adam was still my man. In any case, I needed a home and a church, and he was providing it.

Who should come along into this place on Monday but Keith, with pregnant Cheryl on full display. She wanted to meet me again, so she dismissed him and we two sat on seats facing each other. Cheryl said they were coping if still going through a difficult time.

"You knew about his unfaithfulness all the time," Cheryl said.

"Originally I thought that Yojana was a distraction. She wasn't."

"You knew about this group. I didn't. How can some of them have been religious?"

"Belief in an incarnate body. Describe your toleration for reconciliation."

"Oh yeah. He is with me only from now on."

"Good job the group collapsed then."

"I suppose I should thank you and your new partner for that. I forced Keith to come here, because you came here. I didn't know you'd come here. I wanted to see here and her at the coastal accommodation."

"Cheryl, I've no axe to grind with you. But I warn you. He was very attached to Yojana at that accommodation. He wasn't attached to her because of the group, but despite the group. Our information is that the group tried to spread him and her around a bit. He was her mentor, and they grew too attached. Plus the fact that she was the big boss's niece. How is your pregnancy?"

"I think I'm over the worst. Or the birth is the worst."

"Right."

"The child needs a father," she said. "I'll go and find the future father now."

"That's up to you," I replied, getting up. We gave each other a naked hug and her round tummy touched my flat one.

"I'd like to find a club near Harwich or Felixstowe. It feels free, this."

"Yeah," I said, and I left the room, saying, "See you around."

Tuesday morning my father directed my brother to have me, in all orifices, with Adam and Lucinda looking on. I opened my eyes and shook away these moving images, prodding Adam to perform in reality.

Adam had a message from Ann and Labhaoise that progress was good back in Serninsea. Peter let it be known that all was ticking over. There were now standard answers going out about the scandal, when there were requests for information. He said there was mail for me from the diocese.

I asked him to open it, and it was a month's notice to leave the tied house. I was sure we'd be out before then.

Keith kept his distance while Cheryl said hello as many times as we saw them.

Jeremy Symes and Lindy Peacock returned from a time away, so we had some incidental chat with them.

In the computer suite on Tuesday I sat on my towel and found the National Church website. Derek Imperial put on it that these had been very difficult times and he thanked people for their prayers. He had considered resigning but management for change was needed. He thanked the Archbishop of All England for his concerns. He said that he would appoint in an emergency a Priest-in-Charge for Serninsea. Serninsea would be extended to include Caffernmere and Inglemire. The priest would also cover Serninsea Marshes. This was a huge area.

Colin Cromer was on leave, but he would retire immediately after. This seemed sad to me: some thirty-six years in one place that had come to a rapid end.

Feeling tired, I lay down at the indoor pool, under the glass, and I asked Adam what we would do about Jenny. He said that we should at least invite her to stay at the new accommodation in the spare bedroom.

So, back at the suite, I found email addresses for Fatima's vicarage, although the website referred to ongoing replacement services, readers and visiting priests. She had fled as well as the Wilsons, as well as the bishops. I sent a message there, and then sent one to the diocesan bishop's place, though Jenny might have fled as well.

We would like to invite you, Jenny World, to a live-in administration job in the new church and accommodation emerging in Serninsea. Linda and Adam.

There was a reply by Wednesday morning. Jenny sent it. It gave no details of where she was.

Sorry, but, I don't go anywhere without Liz Huett. It's a positive development. It has to be a no. We are having a difficult time trying to work out a future. Jenny.

"Leave it then," Adam said. "Let them sweat. But we might have to be flexible."

"Huett?"

"With Jenny."

Having given an indication of perhaps pursuing a naturist ministry, with positive interest from Jeremy Symes, Adam and I left Bever Wood and headed for the Saxiclite Club on the Wednesday. I was known there, and on the brief stopover they said they would be interested on an more interfaith basis. Fine.

Then it was on to Wytham, and Maurice Neptune knew that we were both coming along. That Adam felt unsure about this stopover was his hard luck. Inside, Mrs. Roberta Garfield gave us a tour of the house, and so Adam saw all the fixtures I'd told him about. So he knew that what I'd said about the place was true.

Maurice arrived back from the shul.

"It's all been explained to wider numbers," he said about the scandal in as far as he was affected in his ongoing ministry. "I'm still waiting for the Beth Din."

So we three went into his long, broad garden, with a wild flowers area, and it was rather cool. Maurice conversed with us about Jewish rituals, and I said that I wanted to adapt some of these without 'causing violence' to their integrity. I told him of wanting to develop a liturgical book, and he expressed an interest.

He told me that if I wanted him to do an inaugural sermon that suited Serninsea, then he would preach on Hosea chapters 1 to 3. I knew what they were about: the prophet and the prostitute. "For your new Liberal what?"

"Apostolic Ecclesia..."

"I will preach a full postmodern interpretation of Hosea and Gomer, but you will have to include it as a reading. I don't want to have to explain the whole thing. It needs to be read well," he said.

I replied, "It's not well-read."

"Adam," he said, "are you intending to take Linda as your wife?"

"No, I am married."

"You are going to be together, committed to one another?"

"I will live with Linda. She's like a good mate."

I felt a little deflated at that.

The rabbi asked Adam, "She will be your closest love, your advisor, the one to whom you turn?"

"No," he said. "My wife is too far away, but my close advisor on all things Ann is a lesbian. I love her very much. I did father her child, and Labhaoise's as well, but the relationship they have is with each other."

I was starting to think I might punch Adam.

Maurice said, "Linda is special to me because she has a most interesting theology. Why is she special to you?"

"She's another piece of my life's jigsaw. We go back over twenty years, Ann a tiny bit longer. Mary Ann is the newest woman on the block, I suppose, and she has an adult daughter."

Maurice asked him "Do you stray from Linda?"

Offended by being a piece of a jigsaw, I said, "He's just enjoyed my sister."

Adam then said, "Linda likes to see other people; yourself, I understand."

"She needs a husband," said Maurice. "Be her husband or let her find deep company with another man. One who understands and can develop her personal religion, for example," he said, meaning himself.

Amazingly, we were invited to stay overnight. So we did. Adam and I had our own room, with a roomy ensuite. The bed was superb. I demonstrated that I was with Adam and not with Maurice.

Another dream had my mother telling me to accept Larry forcing himself on me; she nodded that daddy had penetrated me. I woke to realise this was opposite of the truth.

Thursday then and Mrs. Garfield cooked us a nice breakfast before we said goodbye to her, Maurice and his chauffeur Joseph.

We returned to my tied house, soon to be untied. Kathleen and Winnie had looked after the place while we had been away. Peter and Kathryn had enjoyed the place too. We didn't say too much about our time away.

Chapter 21 The New Church

Narrator: Linda A Nightmare Turns Real (Sunday 20th to Tuesday 22nd October)

Keith was present, and said, "He cannot hurt you with my instruction." I was breathing heavily. "Do what I have taught you."

So when Larry grabbed my head from behind and shoved his hard penis into my mouth, this time I did not choke but stared at him as it went to my throat.

Daddy was going to take me from behind, lifting himself high.

John Barman behind Larry said, "I'm impressed. We need you in our group."

I had a sense of the dream going into reality. Breathing heavily and out of control, Adam asked me what was wrong. I was struggling at each breath. It was just getting worse. Also, I had diarrhoea as well.

Adam decided to call an ambulance. The act of calling an ambulance bizzarely helped me calm down but I felt very weak.

I was breathing badly though, and with weakness. Two hours later and with Diana present, and Kathleen with Winnie looking on, two male paramedics ran me through some tests. They were concerned about my erratic breathing and weakness, and so off I went in an ambulance accompanied by Adam (not Diana) all the way to Foss Hospital Trust in Wytham. Kathleen and Winnie had packed a bag for me. On arrival I was wheeled in and received tests at Accident and Emergency. Adam was nearby while this happened, and later sat with me while I waited in a booth for entry on to the wards.

I was found a ward and Adam left before the darkness came. He said he'd get the last bus back to Serninsea.

Next day, Sunday, the main medication seemed to be rehydration via my wrist, and mainly water with antibiotics. A nurse pointed out that I was peeing a lot less than I was drinking, saying it while she creamed my scars. This nurse had read about me in the media.

Time dragged and I spent a lot of time having naps.

Diana turned up to visit. She told me she went to Wytham Unitarians first! A local man had preached. She wanted to experience them first hand, given her one-time impersonation of being one.

"What did he say?"

"About sixty-five years ago a Unitarian called Monroe Husbands went backwards and forwards in America putting adverts into newspapers asking whether you were a Unitarian without knowing it. Unlike what happens today, he started fellowships when he could collect together some interested people. An example was Anchorage in Alaska. Today Anchorage says it is a fellowship of diverse people who nurture each other, attempt to act ethically, try to develop spiritually, improve their minds, to help create a caring community of justice. The place is rooted in its local community and the landscape. We in Wytham and Foss should not hide our chalices but light them in public."

"Very good," I said. "Someone was listening."

Then Diana said she spoke to the nurses before coming in. She'd said that she thought I'd been exhausted by too many traumatic events, one after the other.

My physical health had taken a knock. The nurses said I have pneumonia with a lot of phlegm in my system, diarrhoea, and some mental confusion early on.

"They also suspect you've had anal sex, and might have been infected that way. Have you persuaded Adam to have anal sex?"

"Er, yeah, I insisted."

"So you've also got diarrhoea, despite more control over your bowels now." Diana also said that my short hair was a constant reminder of the abuse I'd received.

So I told her about Larry confronting me again over what had happened when I was sixteen.

"Your brother raped you? I didn't know that either. And you without a cervix - and I didn't know about that for such a long time."

"The rape was two days after a hospital visit that meant no operations."

"What date? I bet you remember the date."

"6th May, 1995."

"Your brother - not your father?"

"Father? Why do you ask? My brother... is bad enough. I don't know how to relate to you Diana. I treat you as a friend. I'm not telling you everything, but you think I should. I'm trying to make a relationship with Adam, but I don't fancy him like I do others. I fancied the rabbi when I was with him; I fancied Lucinda's husband, and resisted him; and I love you but you've only responded the once and I'm supposed to think no more about it. This positive side of my balance sheet is as confusing to me as all the horrible things."

"And you thought you could cope."

"Diana, I love you."

"But I am married and I can't do two people at once. Anyway, I don't respond to women."

"I am not a man!"

"I didn't mean it like that. You're in a weak state, so this conversation is badly timed; I'm trying to be honest here, which you haven't been with me."

"I don't want to argue," I said. "I'm not up to it."

"No, my point exactly. Can we change the subject? I've been fascinated this week about the filming and editing with The Jacobite Gap Years new season. I was investigating - remotely - the Factory Studios at New Lanark."

"Diana," I said, "you're starting to bore me now."

"How could we be lovers if you don't share my interests?"

"There's an admission!"

"I love the books and the TV series."

"Not the same thing."

"I've just finished book three again."

"I see. And I'm the one with some mental confusion."

"I just love to imagine myself back then; it's so romantic."

"It's historical bollocks," I said. "At least, Diana, you're raising my outlook beyond self-pity."

"I've brought you book three, if you want it. At least look at it. Pass the time."

"I gave up on book one and book two. I've only ever glimpsed three."

"You don't want it then."

"Yes, I'll take it. Something to look at."

Soon Diana had gone, and the long hours stuck in hospital continued including more hydration treatment with antibiotics, with added paracetamol, plus nurses doing my creams. Perhaps I could change my name to Philip Marlowe.

On Monday the doctors did their round, and they decided that I could be discharged next day. I was sufficiently well (if weak) to return home if looked after by friends. I was prescribed oral antibiotics to begin on Tuesday as Monday included my final and short hydration treatment with injected antibiotics. Certainly I was peeing a lot more.

So on Tuesday there was a long exit process from the hospital, at which point Diana met me to drive me home. Her kiss was on my lips and she put her arm around me.

I told her in the car, directly, "I want opportunities to make love with you. I mean I want you, Diana. Stop holding back. Tell Aardse that you have to do it. He'll understand. And don't worry about Adam."

"I don't give a shit about Adam," she said. "He's the last reason preventing me."

"What happened with him that has caused such hostility?"

"If you don't know... Well, look at him and his women. That's all I'm going to say."

"I'm one of them."

"You're at the end of the queue. Ann comes first, then Mary Ann. You're third."

"Then I want to share a bed with you: Wednesday afternoons."

"No, Linda, no. Aardse has accepted as much as he can, staying with you. He thinks my mind is in the fictional clouds and neglecting my emotions towards him. I'd better stay at home this time."

"On which point," I said, "you can have your book back."

Adam slept alongside me and Kathleen monitored my drugs and creams. Nurse Mabel Thorp called in. Kathleen and Winnie said that the Serninsea Vestal Virgins were praying for me.

Ministries for a New Local Church (Friday 25th October)

I ventured out on Friday. The rebuilding now looked good.

Adam told me that in the subordinate church business I would have complete controlling rights to use as necessary. However, his holding business could dissolve the church business. Christine Vine would have access, he said, but it was up to me how she came into the church building - I should be reasonable.

While there, Christine indeed came in and already knew these arrangements.

Having asked about my health, she said, "We'll have anything from sharing to me just having a base and you and I being separate."

"If we are in the same ecclesia, we must be sharing somehow."

"Or acting independently. Ministries under the same ecclesia can be very distinct. Bill and Pauline have theirs."

"I'm just getting to understand all this," I said.

Meanwhile, Christine invited me to view her ministry, so that I did not accuse her of attachment to sex for the sake of entertainment.

"I haven't."

"Nevertheless, do you want to come out this evening?"

"Yes. I'll see what you do."

As a result, I sat in the back of her car, with Leon Agnew driving, and I was alongside a rather heavily built chap - all muscle I was told. I shook his hand as he said, "Fawn Bold."

Leon drove down Titansea and some nearby Serninsea streets. Christine said, "I haven't seen her before."

Christine's window lowered and she spoke to this street sex worker. "Twenty-five quid but only after you get in, talk and listen."

"Are you the police?"

"No. These are my friends. Have you heard of Mar Werburga?"

This woman got in alongside Fawn. She called herself 'Barley'. She said she took a mixture of crack-cocaine and heroin, and needed to fund this.

Christine stated: "Fawn is showing you some free condoms and sterilised needles. Do you want them?"

"No."

"Look, Barley, you take those drugs and you risk becoming paralytic and in pain immediately afterwards. Instead, I'll take you off the streets into one of my terraced houses if you go on a detox programme."

"Can I have my twenty-five quid?"

"Only after you take this card. It's got a number on it to contact me or my people. If you are being controlled by a pimp, ring. With our work the police will leave you alone, but they will go after the pimp."

"He's my boyfriend."

"Take the card. Right. Here's twenty-five quid. Think about becoming a Weburga Goose to help improve your life."

Off she went.

In these hours of several street encounters, one prostitute called 'Mag' said she wanted to get off drugs now. So Christine drove her to a house where she was received by some scantily clad women, and she received fifty quid.

"This all needs financing," said Christine, "but I can afford it. My leading client after all is that man, Bandyopadhyay, with too much money and who thinks he can buy his pleasure and control people. Well, I'll take his money off him and I call the shots. You knew him all too well, but the shine has gone off you now that you've resigned from the National Church."

"So have you."

"I wasn't a priest when he was my client."

This street experience was indeed the rough end of the Serninsea sex trade: I'd spoken about it, but never seen it. Christine was hoping to mop it up, eventually. Apparently she had been doing this in some other places, such as Eslaforde and Wheaton.

She said, "This is my ministry, and while I'd be glad of help you should do your own ministry in the future."

We called in at the police station that stayed open overnight. They knew her, and she reported on what had happened. This desk sergeant wrote down some details for a file they kept.

Back in this car Christine also told me that Yojana Asthana with more responsibility on her shoulders had started to develop the coastal guest house. The place was receiving a cash injection from Bandyopadhyay, her uncle, and would be expanded. It needed trade, said Christine, which meant more conferences.

Christine revealed that she had been to Bristol in her helicopter, so I asked what she had discussed.

"Your likely incardination and ordination, and my ministry you've just witnessed; and about Jenny with Elizabeth Huett, and whether Huett could come into the Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia."

She commented that Elizabeth Huett was 'the best of the old bad job' and that she could work with her again.

"Is this wise?" I asked.

"You've been a bit out of touch, understandably. The thing is, if we incardinated her, that would satisfy me," said Christine. "She'd come with your friend Jenny."

"Make her...?"

"Yes, an LAE bishop."

"Surely not."

"If you are bishop, we can out-vote Huett, although she could exercise vetoes. So I want to be sure of her good intentions. The diocese of Tees is now vacant for a bishop. Let's hope Sarah gets it."

I said, "I doubt Sarah will accept that. Have you been in contact with Jenny?"

"Jenny was in contact with me. I said you were in Wales, in the bosom of your loving family."

"Are you being sarcastic?"

"I was being positive. I was being flowery. Truth is, she thought I was being sarcastic as well."

"It's all chiefs and no indians in the LAE," I said.

She agreed with me, as it is often the case in independent sacramental ministries. Christine wanted to incardinate me very quickly, but they in Bristol did not. "They want to come here and do everyone in one grand ceremony in the new church. The LAE Confraternity Vanguard needs a relaunch, probably before you are elevated."

"So I am going to be 'elevated', as you put it."

"It makes sense. Your rights to run the local church ought to be matched ecclesiastically."

"Well, thank you for telling me, in a car, seeking new street sex workers."

"Now's as good a time to say as any."

"I'm going to contact Jenny," I said. "Perhaps we can tell her that Huett doesn't love her and is using her."

"Love is a tricky term regarding those two. More like dependency, now, with each on the other."

"Jenny's all right to come; Huett is different."

"Jenny doesn't trust you; she is not sure about Adam, and sees me as blunt and uncaring. Tamuuz was harsh and overpowering but Huett reassures Jenny."

I said. "This will be Jenny's chance to become secular."

"And therefore Jenny would not do any more initiating."

"Surely no one is going to do any more initiating," I said to Christine.

"What we do has still got to be eucharistic."

"I would incorporate the mikveh or something like that. Do we really need an exchange of body fluids?" I asked her.

"Here is your liturgical task, Linda: produce a substitute demonstrative ritual to indicate that the orgasm is a divine insight."

"Ah. I'll try and come up with something."

"One more thing," said Christine. "I have no objection to Professor Mitton and Allie Shrimpton coming to do research, but you might have asked me."

"Sorry. It was last minute as we were leaving for the bosom of my family. Adam received a letter and it was a quick decision."

"I have been fairly pivotal in events," she said. "I did have some influence in gaining a new church, a new place for you."

"Thanks. No, really: I mean it. The professor is her tutor and she will do it. She'll do 'thick research' and all that, I'm sure, so she will have to be in on decisions-making and so on. For the most part, we shouldn't notice her. As I understand it, the initial interviews she'll do ought to be brief. Could be interesting."

Christine said, "I've sent you a link already so that you can download my Body Eucharist Initiation ritual and try to adapt it. Don't make it too liberal, or at least keep its ecclesiology sound."

"You've already thought of this."

"Indeed."

Leon dropped me off at my soon not-to-be curate's home, and Adam was already in bed and I joined him.

I said to him, after telling of Christine's approach, "So my idea of a Body Eucharist initiation is to use the mikveh, of bodily submersion and re-emergence, to then go on somehow to the more standard gift-exchange symbols of bread and wine. Christine still somehow wants the orgasm recognised. I need to be creative."

"Your business."

"I'm informing you."

Adam then said, "Perhaps someone like Carrie Chopin has an idea."

"What a useful point, Adam! Yes, she just might. I want her group in the new church as well. It's so exciting for me."

"Good."

"A new dawn."

Jenny, Elizabeth and Another (Tuesday 29th October)

They were in my tied house lounge. I asked the Reverend Jenny World and Bishop Elizabeth Claire Huett, "Are you both staying at Yojana's?" I sat with Bishops Christine Vine, Bill Masters and Pauline Junor.

Elizabeth said, "Before we begin, I want to give my profound apology for what happened to you, Linda. I did not think they were going to harm you. I took him in first as the scandal broke but I threw Terry Barman out for lying to me. However, I did not like your article or Magellan's various writings."

"You were involved with them and you can't deny it. You had the affair with Barman."

"He was a single man and I am a single woman."

"Well, it's not exactly Church rules."

"Church rules are wrong. Even you think that."

There was a ring on my doorbell.

I went and opened a door to a tall redhead in black leathers and high black boots, like in a Girl on a Motorcycle. I said to her, "Yes?"

"Been told you're having a meeting," she said in a Somerset or Norfolk accent. "I'm the new researcher. My professor said he will meet you another time. Alfia Shrimpton. Allie."

"Do I know you?"

"We met at Margate."

"Oh wow! We did. Come on in. How did you know about here?"

"Professor Roland Mitton and I were peerking at Adam Magellan's church and saw only builders. They're tricolating the church suffin masterous. We went to the other place, also with builders, and a chap called Peter told us of your having a mardle here."

"Norfolk words?"

"Sorry. Bit nervy. Try to avoid them, bor."

Inside I introduced her.

Alfia said everything would be done in confidence, and she would make notes afterwards, and hopefully the professor and she would introduce themselves properly fairly soon.

I said that Elizabeth had just apologised for what had happened to me earlier.

"What was in The Daily Morse?" asked Alfia.

"Yes. She didn't agree with it," I said. "Apparently."

"I meant what I said."

Alfia then said, "I won't ask any more questions. I will interview - soon."

"All right," I said. "We have to decide to take you in, a bishop who once ran a diocese. This is very different. To me, the Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia consists of loose chiefs without indians, or at least the indians are like hunter-gatherers, forever moving through, unlike farmers on fixed land."

"Interesting thought," said Pauline Junor.

"I sort of understand that," said Elizabeth Huett.

Christine Vine said, "We have our own Confraternity. I decided, and the Reverend Linda agrees, that it needs adjustment in the new situation in the whole LAE ecclesia. Meanwhile, we'll have our own ministries. If you want to join us - you don't have to - then you need to draw up a document to suggest your own ministry. And you would have to be self-supporting."

"I've come in a relationship with Jenny."

Jenny said, "I want her here or I'm not staying."

Bill Masters said, "We'd like you to stay, my niece."

I said, "I thought you were in a relationship with Fatima Tamuuz."

"Fatima is a bit cold-hearted," said Elizabeth.

"A bit?" asked Jenny, rhetorically. "Anyway, she's vanished."

"Does Adam approve?" I asked, thinking he must or they would not even be here.

"Yes," said Jenny. "Adam said Elizabeth can move in."

I said, "In which case, there will be a room for you two, with a wet room ensuite. There is no general bathroom on either floor upstairs. There's to be a double bed in your room. There is a kitchen and a seating area in the upstairs with ongoing stairs to the high loft bedroom. But you may prefer the busy - we hope - kitchen of the church downstairs. It will be quite communal."

"Fine. I'll sleep with Jenny. We have been."

Jenny looked at her uncle and said, "Well, you're gay."

"I've said nothing."

"Adam and I will be in the top bedroom, and Kathleen and Winnie will be on your floor. The bedroom and ensuite will be your only private space. If you were used to large accommodation as a bishop, think again. And you, Jenny, can become secular, and end the pretence."

"Yes."

Elizabeth said, "Fatima knew Jenny's secularity, the extent of it, but I didn't. And I know any ministry by me is unpaid, so I will have to see if I can find some work."

"I intend to be supported by the church. Adam owns the business, and the church is one business branch; I will have the right to run it, but I'm not yet a bishop. Although I will have that right, I intend to have decisions taken by a religious board, and Adam will have his holding business board. We are going to be open and liberal but will follow the basis of the Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia."

"Which means," said Christine, "that you will have to be incardinated, Liz. We also, as a standard, ordain sub-conditione, though we are pretty sure your orders are valid. As for the Confraternity: Linda is taking my liturgy used once at the Titansea Grand and is adapting this, with advice from elsewhere."

Elizabeth accepted all of this, and I shook her hand, as did Christine, and then we had handshakes with Jenny.

I said, "We don't have to be friends, you and me, Jenny, but we can reconcile."

I asked in general after Yojana. Christine said Keith and her had broken up, and it left Yojana feeling sad. Elizabeth agreed.

Elizabeth had one further question. "If I was Terry Barman, would you have accepted me?"

"No. Nor Jonathan Eyre. I had passionate feelings for him very quickly at Margate, where I met Alfia here..."

"Call me Allie."

"...but I realise these feelings were foolish, because nothing was reciprocated but exploited. And your feelings for John Barman?"

"My feelings were dissipated in how we later organised matters. I took him in, at the scandal, but things were already different. The Confraternity Vanguard created lies, and that wasn't what was intended - beyond necessary secrecy. Its collapse exposed how we related."

"I don't want him visiting. None of that bunch are welcome. Look, I will reconcile with anyone," I said, "but it has to be on the basis of trust. I take it, with Jenny, that we can trust you, and on that basis you may, Elizabeth, join the team. I have my differences with Christine, but we are in a team for necessary purposes. So we are becoming like a group helping each other out, and so when the accommodation is available, just move in."

The meeting over, Christine took Allie off to one side. I could overhear that she was talking about accommodation, and it would mean Allie having her own house. I even saw Christine give her a key.

"She's paying me rent," Christine said to me directly, "as part of the expenses of her project. We may as well make sure Allie is settled and can do her tasks."

"Where will she be living?"

Allie shook her head and Christine said, "She has asked me not to tell you, or anyone else. I think we have to respect her anonymity."

"But you know."

"Someone has to know." Then Christine said very quietly, "I could see how you were looking at her."

"Don't be ridiculous," I said, not quietly, with Allie looking at the back of Christine's head and a portion of my face.

I went to the front door to head for a liturgy ideas meeting with Carrie Chopin. Allie ran after me, and asked me in future to tell her where I was going.

I said to her: "Follow me then. It is really lovely to see you again, but I don't want to compromise you. You have been keeping well, I think."

"Yes, and you are right," she said in her Norfolk accent but choosing national words. "This has to be about me doing research, and I'd like some distance even as I follow you around. I just would like to blend in and do my work. Try to imagine that I am not here, but also that I kind of join in so that I am like everyone else - if you can do that."

Carrie Chopin Briefly (Tuesday 29th October)

With the builders still doing significant work on both floors upstairs, but much completed downstairs beyond final painting and some adding of decorative fixtures, Carrie Chopin and I had a fairly productive meeting in the new vestry at an installed computer on liturgical ideas. Allie looked uncomfortable, somehow.

Carrie said about what they draw upon: real, actual lives 'written on the body' and she pointed me to online examples. However, they are secretive about their specific rituals. Liturgical intercessions could be enhanced, I thought.

After this brief encounter, and with Carrie gone, I asked Allie why she seemed somewhat distant. She'd not looked at Carrie and was sat well back.

"I'm not any more out of it than I should be."

"Uncomfortable?"

"No."

"Okay. Yes, you are a researcher...."

"I'd prefer it if I could blend in and be unnoticed."

"Blending in means you come within the pastoral concern of this church."

"I will mainly join in with activities and observe."

"There might not be a lot to see."

"That would be of interest in itself."

Diana's Breasts (Wednesday 30th October)

I received an anonymous text message. I don't know from whom it came, although I had my suspicions. It showed that certain characters had only gone away, perhaps to come back again.

Today is the Feast of Chestnuts or the Chestnuts Ballet. It was celebrated in Rome, an orgy reputedly in 1501 at the Vatican Apostolic Palace. We would have celebrated this in Serninsea but for you. Pope Alexander VI. Important men were entertained by fifty courteous women, becoming naked. Chandeliers were placed on the ground as phallic symbols with chestnuts scattered for the naked cortes to catch with their mouths. The clergy and other guests became naked and had sex with them, with, according to Burchard, "prizes offered - silk tunics, pairs of shoes, hats and other clothing - for those who were able to perform more acts with the prostitutes." The Pope rewarded the three men who ejaculated the most often.

My researcher called at the curate's house. I showed her the anonymous message, about which she said nothing at all. Diana via the same phone told me to come to Patricia's as per usual. On the basis that we might discuss church things, Alfia came with me.

Diana and we two arrived at the same time, let ourselves in (she had the key) and undressed, to lie on the seats at either side of the conservatory.

Without a word Alfia undressed and bought in a seat to sit naked. Oh she was attractive.

"How's it going then?" Diana asked me.

"How is what going?"

"The latest on your transfer to another church."

"It looks interesting. New sleeping space into the loft, and extension out the back, the garage incorporated, and a layout of useful compact rooms."

"You can't make people turn up," Diana said, "and certainly not pay money. Anyway, Catering at Foss Upper Coast College are interested in putting students in the community kitchen. "

"Thank you. But what you say is a challenge - where the money will come from?"

"And you're happy to put yourself in the hands of Adam Magellan."

"I'll obviously want to see the legal documents, but if they match with what I'm told then I'm happy with that. I have control rights regarding the religious company."

"I wouldn't trust myself to Adam Magellan one bit. He can change the documents."

"You don't know that."

"Bet he can. He runs away. He doesn't support people."

"There's Ann as well."

"Because he's a weakling."

"Diana. We are all faulty; no one is perfect or close. So we overcome that with attempts at solidarity. It's not easy. I'm discovering that you are quite an intense person."

"Don't you start being a shit as well; I couldn't stand it."

"Diana, what is all this?"

"Aardse and I are having difficulties - and he thinks you're behind it. I don't want to talk in front of your friend."

"She's not my friend, she's a researcher."

Alfia said, "Everything is confidential."

"Diana. What is the matter?"

"You just float through life, don't you; nothing matters to you. You're one of the most amoral, couldn't care less, people I've known. You are right to stop being a minister of religion."

"I haven't stopped being a minister of religion."

"You're leaving a Church that pays you a wage and joining a play Church."

"It is definitely not that. You're being hostile."

"You should not be a minister of religion. You don't have a moral compass."

"Diana. I don't have to hear this. You're supposed to be my friend. I'm thinking of going."

"Yes you would, given what you are. Take her with you."

"That is it. I'm going to go." I got up and swung my legs around. "You're impossible. I'll talk to you when you are less intense - if you are any time soon."

"No, I can't bear it." Diana stood up first. "No, don't, please."

"I'm at a loss," I said.

"Then hold me."

"Yes, of course." So I stood, and held her, and her grip pulled me in. "I'd like to help," I said.

"Aardse doesn't want you to support me."

"You supported me, and I am very grateful."

"Don't pull out on me. No, don't."

So I kissed her to reassure her.

"I'd breastfeed you."

"Hey? Can you? Why?"

"Not now, no."

"Why say that?"

"Just in my head. Forget it. Look, we'll get dressed and go to our homes."

In the car with Alfia I said, "Look. You say nothing about this to anyone. Why was it so easy for you to undress?"

"It was the situation; I blended in."

"So what did you think of what you saw and heard?"

"I don't have an opinion."

"Hmm. It almost looked like a mental breakdown. Do you agree?"

"Please do not ask me."

"I can see we're going to get on - not."

In the evening I received a call from Patricia. Alfia had gone to her secret house.

"Aardse doesn't want to talk to you because you keep having sex with his wife."

"I didn't then. She was acting strangely."

"Whatever, he says next time you meet it is strictly social. He says you've dragged up some difficult issues in her life."

"Like what, exactly?"

"She is anxious and needs to calm down and reorientate, according to him."

"And what about the difficulties they are having?"

"He said things have been difficult but the cause is at your end."

"Ridiculous."

"I'm just the messenger here."

"Well thanks for the message, Patricia. You obviously know more than I do, about her hostility to Adam and uneasiness with me."

"I'm sure things will get back to normal with all the relevant people eventually pressing the reset button."

"I'm pressing it now, but it's failing to work."

"It's too early. Take it that Wednesdays are off for the time being. And Diana thinks you might fall for this new woman who follows you around."

"Highly unlikely, I'd have thought. I recall her at Margate but so far here she seems rather strange."

Gathering the Group (Thursday 31st October)

We had our first ever 'staff' gathering together in the dining and seating area of the new church. People were encouraged to look around the ground floor of the building. There was still a lot being finished up the flights of stairs.

Present were Adam and his business partner Ann Dromeghda, and the Revd. Margaret McEnhill, whom Adam wanted as a non-executive external pair of eyes and ears.

Bishop Christine Vine, or Mar Werburga, was joined by Bishop Bill Masters, or Mar Simili Anseres, but not Bishop Pauline Junor as she was visiting her elderly parents in North Yorkshire.

Our lot present were the Revd. Doorkeeper Peter Marshall, the Revd. Doorkeeper Kathleen Wickenby, the Revd. Doorkeeper Winnie Lott, Kathryn Wickenby, Bishop Elizabeth Huett, and Jenny World.

Specifically invited was Carrie Chopin to represent the Serninsea Vestal Virgins (if with her two Doorkeeper 'sisters'). Similarly Rabbi Maurice Neptune joined us, who would take services for Reformist Jews.

Up on the high big screen online were Bishop Geoff Virgo, Mar Arcturus-Virginis, and Bishop Luis Mariano Callas, Mar Sexwulfus-Sexburg, both founding bishops of the Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia. For the time being they could hear but not see us.

Further present were Professor Roland Mitton, a long white-haired round-spectacled chap in a donkey jacket and jeans denying his age, and Alfia Shrimpton, his Ph.D student, with her long natural red hair and rather pleasant smile, in a stretchy black top, tight moulded pink trousers and bare feet in sandals. I thought she was gorgeous, and realised I was doing it again.

I overheard Allie tell her professor, "Fortunately, my period has finished." Fancy telling him!

Before our formal meeting, the assembled looked at the chapel, and the extension into a mikveh at the end was almost ready to fill with water. Maurice approved; it had been done properly. The chapel could be screened off with long folding doors, or it could effectively extend into our seating area.

To the south was the untouched property in the original three house terrace.

We had now two front doors facing approximately west. One at the north end, the public end, consisted of double doors. At the southern end, of what had been Adam's workplace, was the residents' private single door. In an open plan arrangement, that door faced the one remaining staircase, up to our private premises, where on two floors we had three ensuite double bedrooms. On floor one with its up and down staircases we had two ensuite very large bedrooms (one and two) with a kitchen diner facility. The staircase into the adapted loft of both original houses arrived at a lounge before a study and the large ensuite double bedroom for Adam and me.

There was parking for two cars easily in front of the lost garage and at the back for two as long as no lorries or vans wanted to pass - but it was a right of way for service vehicles. Such access meant moving our vehicles.

People looked around the ground floor. Going south to north we created a wet room and showers with a plunge pool that contained only one set of steps in and out (it would easily take four people), with enough room for a massage table and double airbed. Access was through a northern and western cloaks area. The cloaks' doorway went into a space that led to the private staircase, or across to unisex WCs space that also had shower facilities at its north far end wall.

East and on the other side of the wet room was a consulting room with library, with a back door east beyond the south side of the extension to the tenfoot, and a second east door directly into the extension vestry and robing room. This vestry extended further north than the consulting room, and so had its own door into the seating and dining area at the back end of the staircase. It also had its own door within the extension to the disabled WC and nappy changing room.

Beyond the disabled WC with nappy changing space northwards was the east side kitchen, with open access west into the dining area. The kitchen had its own eastern back door outside and a door northwards to a storage room that was extended from the garage. The storage room was next to the mikveh, completing the extension.

The mikveh had optional privacy provided by more folding doors to the chapel, and going down the southern parallel steps would have participants' backs westwards to the chapel as when coming up the parallel northern steps. Coming up they walk around, and so holding up towels could shield people. Three could go easily into the pool in procession, submerge and walk through the water, to rise up the other steps and walk around its eastern and then southern perimeter. The altar table was at the west end of the chapel as the mikveh was to the east end.

Anyone coming through the northern west-side double doors into the seating/dining area could go ahead for the kitchen, turn left into the chapel, go right to the cloaks and then unitary toilets, or go the furthest south to the cloaks for the wet room or indeed the consulting room with library.

We had just received foldaway tables for the dining area and seats, bought from a closed Jehovah's Witness Kingdom Hall. (They had moved to bigger premises.)

For our formal meeting we used three long tables in a line and some seats.

Adam began by telling us that he wanted Margaret McEnhill to act as a non-executive external set of eyes and ears for his holding company and she had agreed. She was a priest from the National Church but her main job was as an administrator. She had been an informant during the scandal.

"For the purposes of voting," Adam said, "on business management matters it is me, Ann, Peter, Margaret and Linda. However, on some critical matters, I can outvote you all as the executive, but Ann might stop me. On Ecclesiastical matters it is straight voting for Christine, Bill, Elizabeth, Geoff and Luis, and of course Linda, but I have to tell you Linda can exercise a veto on matters inside this church because that's the business side insertion into the religious. Jenny has declined any decision making or title and we welcome as guests Carrie Chopin, Professor Roland Mitton and our new researcher Alfia Shrimpton."

"Allie, please. Namaste." She put her hands together and gave a short head bow.

Adam continued: "Can I welcome them both here all the way from the.. What is it?"

"Hello," Roland said. "The Glastonbury School of Folk and Ethnographic Studies at The University of Somerset. In studying the early development of this independent church my postgraduate student will be completely confidential and you will all be anonymised. Namaste." He also put his hands together and gave a short head bow.

Geoff on the big screen said, "We seek to include Kathleen, Winnie and Peter in our deliberations. They will proceed to major orders very soon. We also have negotiations with Reverend Margaret Lindbeck in the North East. She has agreed to join our body. We will ordain her as bishop, soon. Meanwhile, we know the University's School at Glastonbury well," said Geoff, on screen. "And we have met Professor Mitton and indeed I think we prodded him towards considering our new development in Serninsea in the LAE."

The professor nodded. "Such a low horizon, towering skies."

The postgraduate student now had a beaming smile. She said, "We've come to see you bring your church into new life."

I responded, "We're not 'New Life', of course, who are Pentecostals; we are just grateful that we are not dead." (That was a sort of music joke.)

Adam resumed: "Alfia is going to make her own notes afterwards, apparently, and her intention is to be as invisible as possible.

"Allie, please."

I thought, she was hardly that. Her breasts had her nipples headlights on, and they were shining at me.

"So, let us begin," said Adam. "Margaret McEnhill is acting as Secretary for this meeting. I am the Chair, but I'll hand over to Linda for much of it. The Company is Magellan Investigations Holdings Ltd. and it owns both sites, here and nearer Titansea. It is owned by me and partly by Ann Dromeghda here. The other site is for Magellan Investigations Ltd., run by me. This site is for Magellan Ecclesiastical Ltd., owned by me but run by Linda Jupitas, and I invite her to sign the document now, with me and with Ann Dromeghda to formalise all this. It does not have to affect ecclesiastical authority: Linda's crown is regarding this property and what happens in it but she demurs to ecclesiastical authority in running things, I'm told."

I signed it when it was my turn. I handed the document back.

Geoff said, booming into the dining room, "This is why we want Linda as a bishop. Or one reason why."

Adam then said, "What Magellan Investigations does stays in Magellan Investigations. And similarly, what Magellan Ecclesiastical does stays here and with Linda. This document gives Christine, Bill and Pauline access to the downstairs ground floor of this building, unrestricted and uninterrupted, but I am afraid I won't do this for you folks in Bristol or Elizabeth here now. We can amend the document later. Your access depends on Magellan Ecclesiastical and its decisions. Linda cannot change this access basis; only Magellan Investigations Holdings can. Got that Maggie? Linda, please."

"I'm giving access to Geoff and Luis. I'm also extending it to Elizabeth. It is usual for bishops to have unimpeded access to their churches."

Ann said, "Can Magellan Ecclesiastical voters please vote to agree with this, excepting the three it concerns to invite in?"

I responded: "I propose. Peter seconds. That's everyone who can saying yes."

Margaret said she had noted his in a separate column.

I continued. "I thought about using some location names. Geoff and Luis have approved, but I'd like their agreement here shortly. We in the Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia will introduce the Province of the Anglians. No 'c' in that. I looked up some maps of ancient names, but I thought, 'No, let's keep it simple,' and thus our dioceses are: Scotland and the North, North East, Midlands, South West, South, and East. Here is the list: the Bishop of Scotland and North England will be Reverend Margaret Lindbeck..."

"To become Mar Akelda," said Luis on the big screen. "She's new to us. The ordinations we'd like at seven p.m. on Sunday 17th November."

I said, "Yes, fine. But to continue: from that day the Bishop of the North East will be Bishop Elizabeth Huett; the Bishop of the East will be me, eventually, Linda Jupitas; the Bishop of the Midlands is Bishop Christine Vine, Mar Werburga; the Bishop of the South is Bishop Luis Mariano Callas, Mar Sexwulfus-Sexburg; and the Bishop of the South West is Bishop Geoffrey Virgo, Mar Arcturus-Virginis. Bishop Bill Masters, Mar Simili Anseres, and Pauline Junor, Mar Populari, have asked to be without diocese. We respect that. We new bishops will receive our ecclesiastical names on the day of ordination, the 17th of next month. Peter Marshall, Kathleen Wickenby and Winnie Lott will all become deacons. Is this correct, bishops?"

All four said 'yes' together.

Christine said, to hammer a point home, "Listen! All those ordained bishop participate in the Principatus Theocratic Confraternitati admissis in Ecclesia Apostolica Liberali, a Society to determine overall direction and policy, and gatherer of the Synod of Bishops. Ecclesiastically, this local church here has to be tied into the whole Church, the Society and its Synod. The Society is for direction, study, reflection and action. It expresses core ideas and purposes. Everyone under its actions will receive a badge with a W and a goose on it. This will mean Werburgh and not Werburga as before because we are adjusting the Society after discussions."

I continued. "Yes, it is all apostolic. This church is for the Parish of the Upper Coast in Eastern Foss. We leave it rather geographically undefined. The ministry here is local, and we will facilitate Christine's ministry that specialises among the sex workers."

"For which I am one myself," said Bishop Christine.

"Carrie, Kathleen, Winnie!" I called out, "Your group are welcome to use our church. No charge."

Carrie said, "Thank you. We shall donate. We will carry out our rituals here. We will pray for the towns and your church. We will study. Thank you Linda. We have our own discs too."

I said, "Elizabeth joins us after resigning from the National Church. Christine and I held discussions with her. She states that she wants to contribute with us; we have gone over the past. She comes as a bishop, and an equal partner, one to be incardinated into the LAE."

I proposed and Christine seconded her place; every one of our team voted in favour.

Adam decided to hand out keys. Rabbi Maurice said his group would meet earlier Saturday, and suggested later that day we all use the mikveh as a kind of launch into the future ritual.

"Brilliant suggestion," I said. "Naked and all orifices open: these are the rules of the ritual. What we do here will be rooted in the locality and won't be incompatible with naturism. I want something of the naturist ethos in this church. Also I want it inclusive. To overcome the transgender issue, the toilets are unitary. There are male pissoirs in there at one end. Men have penises; get over it."

"Exactly," said Kathryn.

Christine then said, "The mikveh needs apostolic blessing: the rabbi and Judaism will have their own."

I asked, "How?"

"When they come along."

"No, us."

"Via bishops, naked, submerged."

I proposed, Peter seconded, and everyone agreed!

"Hymn books," I said. "I rather like the ones the Unitarians were using in Wytham. A bit less dogmatic, a bit more focussed on realities. Any objection, bishops?" None came. "Peter. You are in touch. You do it and send us the bill. Is fifty all right, Adam?" He raised no objection.

Winnie asked, "What about clothes?"

Christine said, "I will arrange ecclesiastical gear. In fact, I have been. But what we also need is some modesty gear, simple covering, for the approach to the mikveh and what will be a new Body Eucharist and connected Initiation Ceremony. They should come off easily, before people process into and out of the holy water. Either them or nudity."

Kathleen said, "We Vestal Virgins have similar. You see we have nothing on below, but obscured. I'll take basic measurements so we can make some quickly. "

I said, "They would work very well for us as well. Adam?" I moved the 'baton' back to him.

"I have been looking out for apprentices, as revised by the authorities, these being for me. It's the Personalised Individual Development Scheme of Specialised Tasks with the Unemployed. I had a look at the list of applicants. There were one hundred and seventy males and four females interested. With Peter's help I found four for interviewing. But, differently, you did get labour for the kitchen, Linda?"

"I have decided I am not going to apply for government dole workers. I don't like the schemes. I hope and expect Kathleen, Winnie and Peter to provide assistance to me. However, Foss Upper Coast College, in Serninsea, mentioned to Diana de Groot about having some students in the community kitchen. We will also have them provide lunches to Magellan Investigations on delivery, unless you come here."

Kathryn said, "We can ask them to develop menus as part of their training."

"Yep," I said. "Magellan Holdings has, I am told, rejected offers of investment from Sir Sanjay Bunker, and this includes for this church. I am very happy about that, but it does not affect Bishop Christine's work."

Christine said, "I receive regular payments from Sir Sanjay Bunker, and have bought and received properties from him. But there'll be no direct connection here."

"What else?" I asked. "I'm still working on the liturgies. At the forthcoming ordinations service, that will inaugurate this local church, Rabbi Maurice Neptune will do the sermon."

He said, "I have appropriate material for Christine and you."

"Now, in this Church, my intersex will not be hidden. It won't always be relevant, but it won't be private. We are not Anglicans now, full of double talk. I want to eradicate that. The inclusive rainbow is a given. So we need all that has been said turning into motions, don't we?"

Margaret said, "Everyone except me take a break. Use the kitchen now for refreshments and bring me one."

"There is one thing," Adam said, "Why is Margaret Enhill here not included in your ordinations list?"

"Because she hasn't asked," I replied. "Do you want ordaining?"

"I don't want to leave the Anglicans. I am in administration in Wytham."

"That's the answer, then," I said. "Coffees?"

Then Geoff, booming, said, "We wouldn't incardinate you but we could do you sub-conditione like we did with Linda."

"I'll think about it," said Margaret.

Peter said, "You've also forgotten equal marriage."

I proposed, Peter seconded, and everyone agreed!

All those physically present except Margaret went to the kitchen. I returned with her coffee. Margaret then said, "Not to be minuted as it will just have gone out to the media: Rhiannon Margaret Fleetwood is to become Priest-in-Charge of Serninsea and Serninsea Marshes as well."

"What?" I asked firmly. "She was going to Wheaton, and then the latest was she was being redirected to Wales as a reconsideration. Now she is coming here?"

Margaret said, "Well, she was never actually involved. They are so short of priests, and few are willing to come here. And the moral standing of a priest does not affect the efficacy of the Eucharist."

I called Elizabeth over. "Rhiannon Fleetwood is becoming Priest-in-Charge over two parishes, not one."

"Oh dear. It's not someone we want around," said Elizabeth. "Don't let her in here; I don't want to meet her."

"Well, there goes down ecumenical relations," I said. "What Churchship does she have?"

Margaret said, "Similar to Jim Wilson but without the sadism, and is it for real?"

"Not quite," said Elizabeth. "She's a Puritan who thinks our behaviour tells us nothing about salvation."

Margaret added, "She has a history of annoying people. Whoever gets to meet her finds her irritating, undermining, nasty in the sense that they'd rather do without her. If she changes the parish church, then you might get some people here."

Kathleen did a search and showed me her phone. Rhiannon Fleetwood was appointed as a diktat stop-gap, with the parishes expected to endorse her. And Serninsea would now stretch to Caffemere with Inglemire.

Then I noticed Hattie Schepsutte come in. Carrie Chopin and her then took Alfia off to one side. Kathleen and Winnie added to those numbers. Alfia looked uneasy again. I could hear them.

"I didn't want to ask you before. Are you joining our Vestal Virgins?" Carrie asked.

"No."

"You ought to join, Allie," said Hattie.

"No, I'm here to study this church getting started and establishing itself."

Carrie said, "Well, it's your decision against sacred trust."

"Yes it is."

I was slightly puzzled at this. They weren't requesting but expecting. There was a history here.

I decided to break up their meeting, and call people around the tables.

"You don't have to sit," I said.

Margaret read out our decisions in the fashion of proposals voted upon and accepted.

Then I spoke. "I just want to say this, briefly. This is a new venture, and I never expected it. As a curate I was constantly undermined, deliberately so, as you have all read. This time I hope to show I'm good enough - please don't respond. We have an opportunity here, within independence, for stability and growth, and we have theological choices. Among colleagues as a collective endeavour, we are not trying to be good, but aim for solidarity - support one another, support those outside. We might attract in the curious and the interested. Thanks everyone."

Roland and Alfia then made a fairly rapid exit; they gave a thanks to Adam before disappearing. Carrie gave a limp wave to me. Our meeting had ended.

I decided afterwards to get started on a sermon on reconciliation. This was more about Elizabeth than anyone, but it would be impersonal and abstracted to principles. I was not sure when I might give it.

Adam said bye to Margaret McEnhill.

I approached him, "It's up to you, of course, but why is a priest from the National Church taking your minutes?"

"Because she might be interested in yours, and she was and is my informant."

"But our business informs her side."

"Her partner is called Penny Schofield. That should give you a clue. Barman is dead meat, and the information traffic is definitely our way."

First Use of the Mikveh (Saturday 2nd November)

In the new building, the downstairs was complete and both floors upstairs had their finishing touches made. It was not long to go before moving in.

Maurice Neptune was in town; the Reformist Jews had already met in our space. I stood viewing the plaque below ours. It stated, Wytham Temple of Reformist Judaism in Serninsea. Temple?

The reply was that the meeting places, like Wytham, were considered by Reformists as the equivalent of The Temple. This Serninsea building was an extension of the Wytham 'kehilla' (temple, schul) because it did not have its own Ark, an Aron Kodesh or holy cabinet containing a parokhet (curtain) for the Torah scroll on a wall facing Jerusalem with a ner tamid or eternal lamp above it.

I responded that we could still get one put up by the builders. Unfortunately the east facing wall was the mikveh itself. Still, the principle of a cabinet and a light that stayed on was a broad one - the Vestal Virgins kept a mobile flame all the time - so I ordered a cupboard with curtains inside and a light above it to go on the north wall beyond the altar table (all of this, arguably, in the wrong position - church altars themselves usually face east).

Nevertheless, the Reformists had already used and approved of the mikveh.. So in fact they were its first regular users.

Gathered around in the seating area were Bishop Christine or Mar Werburga, Bishop Bill Masters or Mar Simili Anseres, Pauline Junor or Mar Populari, Bishop Elizabeth Claire Huett, and me. Also with us were Alfia Shrimpton and Roland Mitton, and then the minor reverends Peter Marshall, Kathleen Wickenby and Winnie Lott. We put the screens on and went online again to include Bishop Geoff Virgo, Mar Arcturus-Virginis, Bishop Luis Mariano Callas, Mar Sexwulfus-Sexburg. Elsewhere Jenny and Kathryn were operating and recording from fixed-site cameras for Bristol's own reception.

Roland Mitton quickly told me that he'd spent time visiting the area and meeting various religious groups and ethnography academics in Wytham and beyond.

Given the relaxed and happy condition of his student in his company, I was beginning to think there was something close between them.

I said to everyone, "Before we start, I'd like builders to put in a shallow cabinet with a higher light that stays on. Do we have agreement? Do we need a formal meeting for this?"

They muttered not, but to bring the decision to the next meeting when it happened.

We had a technological development to report as Jenny had a newly functioning small operating panel in the vestry with robing room, and it governed the cameras that went online.

I made a point of asking Allie and Roland together. "Are you all right doing this? We are doing nudity. And professor, with your student!"

"It is fine by me," the professor said. "Allie can do her work."

"May I ask, Allie: why did Carrie Chopin expect you to join the Serninsea Vestal Virgins?"

"May I ask back that I am allowed just to melt into the group and not answer such questions?"

"There you go," said Professor Mitton.

"Carrie must have had a reason," I persisted.

Allie replied, "She may have had several, for all I know, but I am here to study this church and it is enough to know that they are relocating here. I had a look in the defunct UPCC chapel for a while. I doubt that the place is even safe."

"Quite. Downstairs there looks rough. They met upstairs."

"I'll take note of your comment there. I will return to my work, please."

Bishop Christine, as the senior Bishop present, would guide us liturgically, but the work was largely mine, after seeing Carrie Chopin.

Christine began: "Today we bring into full functioning the Principatus Theocratic Confraternitati admissis in Ecclesia Apostolica Liberali or the Confraternity of the Theocratic Principality of the Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia. We will do it by intimate means of some rituals, and Kathleen has a number of translucent gowns available and we go naked into the mikveh itself.

We all went to the cloaks area by the wet room (the one for massages) where we undressed and put on these open front thigh-length gowns. In the tradition of using the mikveh, we removed all jewellery and checked those orifices so they were clear. That was a bit of fun: Allie checked mine and her professor's! She sniggered as she pulled his bottom cheeks apart, as then she pulled mine apart. I thought it better I did Allie's instead of her professor, and she was beautiful. Such a neat vulva with lightly trimmed red hair and less of a rosebud anus than mine. She was so confident and took all this in her stride, while others muttered about this practice. The Jewish mikveh has a specific person to do the checking, apparently.

There was a camera in the cloaks area, and it was on. Under Christine's instruction, we each of us stood before full-length mirrors for thirty seconds understanding the intention of relaunching the Confraternity.

We moved with spiritual focus over to the chapel itself, including Allie and her professor, where bread and wine were waiting and candles were lit on our altar table. On cushions Bishop Christine sat with Allie's professor and me, Bishop Pauline with Peter, Bishop Bill with Allie, and Bishop Elizabeth with Kathleen and Winnie. Over in Bristol, Luis sat with Geoff, both undressed.

Christine used the 14 point Liberation Sans sheets of printed liturgy, each put into laminated protection.

Christine stated, "In the name of God the Father, God the Son and God the Holy Spirit. In Christ's Body, the Church, this Mass incorporates a Sacrificial Service of Initiation into the Vanguard of the Church under the guidance of the Principatus Theocratic Confraternitati admissis in Ecclesia Apostolica Liberali or the Confraternity of the Theocratic Principality of the Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia.

"Listen everyone. This is a readjustment and relaunch of the aforementioned Confraternity. It is a Vanguard Society of guidance, education and action. We affirm the body and the sexual body. When we are finished, we will each receive a badge with a W and goose on it, now for us the Weburgh Geese and Ganders, not Werbuga as it was. It's about the Abbess, not me. Listen.

"We are all theosexual, Christosexual and Spiritsexual beings, aware of our lifespan, bodies and sexuality. God be praised: in his depth God is the source of our corporeal selves and the Holy Spirt moves all through us. In our Communion: gain awareness of our bodies.

"Rabbi Jesus Messiah, having himself published his religion to the Jewish people for the salvation of the world, had his Apostles complete the work he had begun, by them preaching his Gospel to everyone and making disciples to truth.

"If you have acted with others without your neighbour's consent, you should seek forgiveness and make amends. Reflect upon this now.

"Our body is our flesh; our blood is the life flowing around the individual body, and for this we must embrace life with mutual consent and positivity. We are never disembodied.

"O God, unto whom all bodies be opened, all desires expressed, and where no secrets are hidden; Cleanse us and prepare us by your Holy Spirit, that we may perfectly love you and our people, and magnify holiness, through the Christ Body in his Church. Amen.

"Our Corporeal Guide with his feet that walked this soil: have mercy."

We said, "Christ have mercy."

Christine continued: "Our Corporeal Guide: have mercy. Glory be to God on high."

We said, "And peace with service to all."

Christine continued: "We praise, we bless, we worship, we glorify, we give thanks through our bodies to God."

"Christ, assist in removing our wrongful intents; the one who sacrificed for love, show us how we sacrifice for others. Holiness come to us through the grace of God."

"Our Corporeal Guide be with you."

We said, "And with your Spirit."

Christine said, "Let us pray. O God on this day, bless our gathering. We repent for past wrongs and theological certainties for which we were not qualified. We humbly beseech you so that in all our thoughts, words, and works, we may tread a holy path to preserve we the people in wealth, peace, and godliness."

She paused and continued: "We believe in Baptism, Initiation, the Holy Eucharist, Absolution, Holy Unction, Holy Matrimony, and Holy Orders. Our Corporeal Guide Christ and his immediate followers gave to His Church a body of principles we call theo-ethics. Perhaps some of the original teaching has been lost; and we have picked up additions through time. What remains we, as the Church, took on the purpose of interpretation to that end. We believe that God is Love, Service, Truth and Light. We hold to the Majesty of God, the Church-guiding Community of all, and we know that we do serve God best when best we serve our neighbours. So shall God's blessing rest upon us, with peace for evermore. Amen."

Christine looked at all of us.

"Listen, everyone. Put your own palms together, and then turn your wrists so that your joined hands point to the floor. Look at your given bishop partner directly in the eyes. Lean in to your bishop until your foreheads touch together. This is the 'kiss'.

The professor and I touched Christine's forehead with ours.

"The bishops please either hold out your hand or hands or touch with invitation."

"Touch me Christine," I said. Roland nodded. Everyone wanted to be touched and were - on our foreheads.

Christine continued: "Bishops say, 'Blessed be your mind' to each of your people." All of the bishops said this together as appropriate.

"Touch or hover your hand or hands at your charges' breasts or chests: Bishops say, 'Blessed be your breasts or chest' to each of your people." All of them said this together, as appropriate.

Everyone was being touched. Christine lay her right hand on my right breast nipple and then on my left breast nipple behind the material. Her touch give me a tingle. Her left hand was placed on Roland's chest.

"Bishops say, 'Blessed be your stomach' to each of your people." They all touched their charges and said these words.

"Bishops say, 'Blessed be your lingam or your yoni' to each of your people."

I nodded. Christine said to me, "Blessed be your yoni, Linda, and she turned her hand downwards and touched my sex. Crumbs. My prostate gland was secreting. "Blessed be your lingam, Roland." With his nod she placed her hand on his limp penis.

"Bishops say, 'Blessed be your feet' to each of your people."

The bishops said this and the soles of my feet were dabbed by Christine's right hand and the soles of Roland's feet dabbed with her left hand.

I noticed online that Geoff and Luis were saying these statements to each other, touching each other.

Christine said, "Those who have been blessed, say without touching, 'Blessed be your mind, breasts or chest, your stomach, your lingam or yoni, and feet,' back to your bishops."

We said these words, and I wanted to touch Christine. She shook her head at me.

"The bishops: please place your arms around your partner or partners, as a hug. People: feel the bishop's warmth, making the connection deeper. Maintain the hug through the next part."

My and Roland's arms were down, Christine hugged us both into her.

"You may all now close your eyes . As you breathe in, hear the white clear breeze bringing in life-force. Breathe out and follow the breath into the chapel." I could hear my, his and her breath.

"Whilst you continue to hug: Imagine a soil banking that surrounds you two or three like a cradle in which we are surrounded and nurtured like a womb.

"Imagine a red fire and feel the heat against the skin.

"Imagine fountains of blue water shooting from the ground and cooling your heat.

"Bishops: release your charges." Christine let go of us and sat back, as did we.

Christine said, "Excuse me, Linda and Roland." She rose, and took a chalice, and in its wine she dipped a larger communion disc from the short pile and placed it in the mouth of Bishop Bill. "Don't swallow." The bishops with two charges had two wine soaked larger discs in their mouths. "Bishops, and people help them: you are to bite the disc or discs in half, and people take half a disc. Get close and help each other."

Christine sat with two, for me and Roland. We came close, and, me before Roland, she bit into the discs, and touching her lips with mine, I acquired half a disc, and so did Roland, touching my face with his. I smiled as I swallowed and Christine smiled to us both. She consumed her disc halves.

"The Body and Blood of Christ," she said, at that point.

"Bishops. Finish this procedure with a wet lipped kiss. So it was that Christine kissed me on my lips and then kissed Roland. My prostate gland was secreting more and I was worried about leakage.

"Bishops. Hold hands with your charges and let us proceed to the mikveh. In there we shall go in one by one."

Then Christine released my hand, and we stood to listen. She said, "Blessed are You, Source of all Life, Who has kept us alive and sustained us, and enabled us to reach this day, and lead us into the future.

Our coverings were discarded. Christine went in first, and then Roland, and then me. I went down the right steps and was hip height in the pool. I squatted and my short blonde hair became fully submerged. I rose up, and made my way to the left steps to go up.

Haviung walked around, Christine gave Roland her acquired towel to dab his body and then he passed it to me. Other towels went from the other bishops to share.

I was interested in Allie emerging, after Bill. She was gorgeous, like a Venus coming out of the sea.

When we were all out, Christine instructed us to form a circle, holding hands, as we all did naked, damp, and everyone with soaked hair.

She said, "Holy Spirit, we thank you for our food and our love. Ever guide us; and so lead us in obedience. In response to the commands of our Rabbi Jesus Christ, we have all participated, by a solemn act of worship and ritual before God and this assembly, our dedication to work with our minds and bodies to live the Gospel and go out and make disciples of faith; and may God bless us all. In the name of the God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Spirit."

That was it. Christine received a round of applause for her liturgical direction, and her presidency indeed. And the two in Bristol joined in.

She said, "Excellent. Well written, Linda."

The gowns went back on to proceed over to the cloaks area. When I dressed I looked at Allie and Christine with longing for each. Jenny and Kathryn said what had happened was recorded to DVD for our later viewing.

At home in bed I showed Adam the ceremony on my laptop. I asked why Margaret McEnhill had not joined us.

"Because she is not allowed."

"Ah, yeah."

The fuck he gave me just was not enough to satisfy my longings. I wanted Christine, or this Allie. Actually, her professor was an attractive older man.

Pay for Itself (Tuesday 5th to Friday 15th November)

I found Adam in our new second floor bedroom. The screen opposite the bed was on, and there was Annie Fenwick as 'Headgirl' with Jördis appearing as 'George' and some clothed male.

"She'd left 'women' and was on 'couples'. That's Jördis's boyfriend, apparently, but 'George' goes between both of them."

I decided to strip off and do a star shape in our large bedroom. "Adam. I am real and available and they are on screen."

This was such a disappointing first encounter with the bedroom, the bed and some other furniture having come across from the curate's house earlier in the day.

Elizabeth and Jenny viewed their first floor large bedroom, as did Kathleen and Winnie. Like the kitchen diner there, both ensembles were positioned in the top floor of the east side extension.

Adam switched off so we took a trip to what was once Wickenby's, and Peter and Kathryn had moved in days earlier into their new rooms together. The second bedroom (with ensuite) there was unoccupied.

Allie was spending her day with her professor.

I went to lock up the bungalow. In there I read a message sent electronically from the Beth Din, the key part of which was this:

It seems that a number of people were duped by the apparent progressive reputation of the former Anglican Christian Suffragan Bishop of Bolingbroke, the Right Reverend John Terence Barman. Instead he was cultic and managed sexual exploitation within what was called The Worshipful Company of Serninsea Theatrical Players.

One of those duped was the Rabbi at Wytham Shul, Maurice Neptune, who had made friendly relations with this exposed and dismissed bishop and that group. Presented with several women of different ages within this group, the rabbi looked for a female partner from within its number, and was especially attracted to the theologically-informed woman who became the victim of this group, then the Anglican priest the Reverend Linda Jupitas.

It is clear that Rabbi Neptune had no part in the violent treatment of the clergywoman, and indeed early on showed intent of treating her as his partner against the sordid demands of the group. We interviewed her and she was herself interested in his overtures.

We rule that the rabbi showed conduct unbecoming in associating with this group; it was definitely not appropriate interfaith contact.

We therefore advise that Rabbi Maurice Neptune should take more responsibility for his teshuvah: his actions and inaction. He should state repentance and focus on bringing himself towards a higher holiness and purity and therefore God. This is the model for community and nation, starting from the individual. A rabbi is principally a teacher in the broadest sense. Any need for another, similar, Beth Din will result in harsh consequences.

Thus I locked the house for the final time and posted the keys into the Anglican vicarage.

Back at the worship centre and my accommodation (Adam elsewhere) I had my first bath there and heard Jenny having fun with Elizabeth somewhat below me. I recalled sixth former Jenny's noises from all those years ago.

Next day, Wednesday, Christine and I met, with Allie listening, to initiate several consultancies, as we called them, where people would come in for our Interfaith Meditation Classes, Pastoral and Healing Advice Surgeries, and The Relationship Facility, and we worked out the fees and when we should waive them.

Workers came to put up a holy cabinet in the chapel, and it had a lamp placed above it with LED lighting.

The professor left for Somerset. "Good business for... Yojana Asthana's family?" I speculated to Alfia in the afternoon, who was in incredible all shiny leather gear with an orange stripe up each outer leg. Her boots were all orange.

"No, he came to my house and stayed with me after I moved in."

"And you were comfortable with that?"

"Entirely."

"I'm concerned now that you are on your own, because you're not mixing with anyone here."

"I mix with your people when I do my work."

"That's not the same thing. Do you go out, Alfia?"

"Allie, please. Sometimes, for a drink."

"Pubs?"

"Theddle Pale Ale is nice. I really don't want to discuss my own life."

"You could have joined the Serninsea Vestal Virgins."

"It would have interfered with my work, and I don't want to join them. I'd like to merge in please and otherwise leave me alone."

"Allie, you can hardly 'merge in' with that gear on."

"Would you like me to change what I wear?"

"Absolutely not. Not if it expresses you."

"I have tried to merge in."

"Well, you've been naked twice."

"So were you. I've seen you naked three times."

"One more time? When?"

"In Margate. I drew you."

"So you did. Yes you did. You're an artist, Allie. Can you pursue your art here?"

"Please do not ask me questions about me."

"Allie! In this church I have some concern for your welfare. That's my point."

"Thank you, but 'no thank you' is my point, Linda, please."

"Suit yourself. Or leather suit yourself."

"I'll change it next time."

"Allie - no! No, you must not. Wear what you want to wear. If you change what you wear because of my comments, then I will get angry."

"I won't then."

I started seeing people for free pastoral visits - because I met them in the street. Allie wasn't allowed in those. This was also helped by some people not liking the instant evangelical turn of Rhiannon Fleetwood in the Anglican parish.

The Reverend Rhiannon Fleetwood had hit the ground running. But here was a woman with a reputation for religious aggression in Rochester and I heard she'd come from Taunton Theological College. Alfia might have known her. But most of all, according to reports, she oozed insincerity. I let it be known that we should keep away from her.

The first meeting of the 'Gymnology' naturist club in the church on the Wednesday evening had four new people turn up - we'd restricted this to mixed couples and women only to begin, and so received one man and three women: Louise Saraga with James Saraga, fifty-three and fifty-five, Sally Torrance, sixty-two and Paula Campbell, thirty-three. James and Louise were naturists and unknown to me, Saxiclite and Bever Wood. They went to Studland about twice a year. Sally Torrance tried some brief naturism at Fraisthorpe, north of the estuary. Paula Campbell was new to it, and I think she was being motivated by a television programme called Naked Dating.

Diana did come, thankfully, so we met again, having lost the afternoon get-together, but she seemed wary of me. Allie and me made seven. We just talked. Thus I viewed red hair both ends Allie yet again. I imagined seeing Jeremy Symes and Lindy Peacock but of course they lived at Bever Wood.

I told Louise and James about Saxiclite and Bever Wood clubs. Paula turned out to be sensitive; Diana said she should have no concern about her pubic area in naturism: everything was equal, and we all have them. I said about my intersex basis, and that I am always hairless, always supposedly exposed, and it did not matter one jot. I asked them to consider some of the religious implications of naturism: what was religious or spiritual about accepting and treasuring our bodies in a social setting.

I sent a message to Jeremy after the first meeting with what we had said, as relevant and in general. I thus asked Bever Wood, through him, if they were interested in my naturist ministry. I asked if Lindy had any religious stance.

We'd also quickly established a quite busy funeral ministry, the easiest way to gather fees from rites of passage. I was already known to the undertakers, who'd ignored before Anglican protests about the propriety of other funerals. Thursday I was asked to get to the crematorium at short notice.

We made a push for same sex ceremonies for marriage, including applying for registration. Other ceremonies, such as our willingness to do polyamorous weddings, would obviously be unofficial. Our fees included writing up bespoke services.

We even set up Worthwhile Communication Training sessions, to add professionalism and respect to business communications. This was given to Bishop Elizabeth to develop, which she did and rapidly. We achieved some clients there too. She indicated that she would have come into the naturist meeting, but I'd seemed to indicate it was my fiefdom. I told her this was not so.

Christine told me we could frame massages within a more pastoral package. We wanted to provide services to the body that were of the soul as well, non-dualistically. I agreed with that, and could see the twins doing this task for payment and to give the church some of their income for using the facilities.

Then we had a visit from two women. They were Hannah and Tilly McClelland.

"You remember us? Sisters?"

"Oh yeah."

"We've moved on since we were family farm workers. So have you."

"Yes. What can I do for you?"

"We craft-brew, at our own farm, Thedde Pale Ale. It can be purchased around here."

"I have drunk it," said Allie, "but I have to lay off alcohol." (Oh?)

"We'd like to know if you'd be interested in selling it from your kitchen. You could get a licence and make your place more attractive."

"Em, no, I don't think so."

"Monks do drink," said Allie.

"Yeah, they get everyone *e/*se pissed. I want to deal with people eating, not drinking beyond the necessary."

Allie then said, "Can I interview you two?"

I asked her, "What has this got to do with your research?"

"It isn't. It's about relatives on a close farm who might start brewing."

"Your relatives?"

"Yes, as it happens."

They nodded, so Allie went off with them.

After about half an hour, she came back.

"Well?" I asked her. "What happened? It wasn't research, so you can tell me."

"But it is private."

"Look, love," I said, "if you and I are going to get on then you need to learn to be civil. I am not the Spanish Inquisition. You said there is a close farm with relatives. Having told me that, what did you agree?"

"They'll sell some expertise to my, hmm, aunt and uncle in Norfolk."

"Well, I'll remind you that Jenny has become drunk consuming their Thedde brew. That's all."

Friday 8th and I heard Elizabeth and Jenny rowing inside their room.

"What's the matter?" I asked Elizabeth, when she emerged from the room.

"Basically, she's a lazy cunt and I'm bored with her. You know she's a hypochondriac, on top of everything else. Half the time she gets pissed and vomits. She's obsessed with a syndrome she does not have: she always has to use water-based lubricants, use unperfumed soaps and washes, and in sex demands endless foreplay so she doesn't dry up..."

"It will be difficult here," I said. "A diocesan bishop is very busy and now you are here with a lot less to do."

"Yes, what a disaster that is. No longer 'Tees of the Diocesans', am I, stuck in this place with her. She thinks if she doesn't have sex constantly she'll end up like a prune. I'm going out."

"It's dark and late."

"Perfect!"

Elizabeth solved this with a job at the Blue Diamond Club, in managing events and staff rotas, gained the following Tuesday 12th no less. It was a convenient moment. The previous manager had been 'found out' regarding attendance at the parties above the casino, and had left this post. I didn't quite understand the problem - surely he would have attended.

I commented on that Tuesday: "It's half-owned by John Barman."

"No it's not," Elizabeth replied. "He sold his half to partner Sanjay Bunker, given his loss of income, and Bunker is looking for a new partner. Christine is most likely to get half share. So Bunker gave me the job."

"Connections?"

"Sort of."

As a result of this secular appointment, Bishop Elizabeth asked me next day to accompany her into Titansea. Diana (perhaps Aardse?) had called off our Wednesday get together again (13th). So on this Wednesday afternoon we walked and it was to the Blue Diamond Club, with Alfia along again, complaining that her period had just started.

"Em, why are we approaching here?" I asked.

"It will help you get rid of your bad memories of this place. Terry Barman part owned it, and he had another company called ATC Club Services," she said. "Above the Casino, it meant. Christine bought it at a recent auction and gives her access to above the casino, but she doesn't know what to do with it."

"The Church has nothing to do with this 'above the casino'. Christine's ministry is separate."

"But it comes under the LAE Confraternity."

"Well, as you say, she doesn't know what to do with it."

"She wants to retain a range of connections to businesses, their people and the hotel too. They brought in managers' and others' spending money. A lot of demand has gone out of the town, she says. I know that the impact on Hartlepool is less than here."

I said, "I don't want it, and not in the LAE. We changed the Confraternity for this very purpose."

"She can still operate parties."

"Make them secular - from in there. I don't want to go in."

"Run them from here?"

"Why not?" I said. "Just not connected with the congregation I want to build, once we start doing services."

"Come in and..."

"No, Elizabeth, no. Sorry. My stomach is churning." At this point I left Elizabeth and I walked back with Allie back to the new set-up.

"You see my problem," I said to Allie.

"You're making policy decisions, informally, possibly emotionally."

"I suppose I am, Allie."

As for secular activities, Jenny signed up with Computer Office Training on the Thursday - elsewhere.

Of course I was in limbo at this point. I was not yet a priest of the LAE, never mind bishop. Next day on Friday 15th, two days before the ordinations to change this, a woman approached me alone and said, "I am from the Wytham Courier. can I have an interview?"

"Only pastoral," I replied. "We are still under contract for exclusive press coverage. You are free to report on our adverts, and we have been advertising our ordinations."

Allie also wasn't about when a message came from the committee of managers at Bever Wood (now including Jeremy and Lindy). They seemed interested in my ministry, and in my reply I suggested a Lecture if they wanted. I considered a talk on the theology of naturism based on naturist history. I would provide pastoral services at that time.

I wondered where Allie was and went upstairs to find her at the top floor, into the study space, laying back.

"First of all, this place is private, and secondly you look worse for wear."

"Arrgh."

"You've missed someone from the local rag wanting an interview, and a message back from Bever Wood interested in our ministry. What the hell are you doing up here?"

"I might 'a' been reading... something about Liberal Cacolics but Oi blundered over the chair."

"You're pissed."

"I ent too ferce today. Am all of a muckwash."

"Why are you pissed?"

"I had a jat. Janny. The floier... belah. We jammed aboit. We were drinkin' bare."

"You both took your clothes off?"

"Noi, bo'ehls o' bare. She's 'aving problems. Liz a bet, Liz."

"You have no right to be up here. This is private. How dare you? You have your own house so go to it." She got up and looked very unsteady. "No, you'd better stay there. I don't suppose you could even go safely down the stairs."

"Can't 'elp bein' fumble fisted. Oi wanta be gittin on hum soon. Don't wanna chorr yar space."

"Come and lie on our bed. Are you going to be sick?"

"Narr. Don't need a gazunder. H'yer got any warter?"

I held her to take her across the lounge and around into the bedroom, where she could lay on the bed, and then got her a glass of water from the ensuite.

"Thass a bootiful big bed. I wannit."

"Buck your ideas up, young lady, or I am in touch with your professor, and he can come and take you back to Somerset."

"Arrgh. Don't spluttergut in 'is direction."

"Do you want to undress?"

"Narr."

"When you're ready, and you are able, go downstairs and go back to the house Christine gave you."

"I'm a bit of a rummon. Sorry, Linda. Keep yew a troshin'."

Two hours later I went up and she'd gone - she'd slipped away.

Chapter 22 Ordinations

Narrator: Linda Day Before the Ordinations (Saturday 16th November)

I wanted to try and get things right with Diana via an electronic exchange. She'd come to the Gymnology session so she agreed to come for the Sunday evening ordinations. Patricia and Arthur would be out.

Talk about finery. The robes, delivered on Saturday morning (pew!), were the full set. Bishop I would be. I popped out to do a funeral; I had already seen the closest bereaved and Allie accompanied me to the crematorium.

With one day to go, Bishops Geoff and Luis were on the train, with a live call from the bishops in the afternoon put on to the big screen in the dining area to just me (and Allie). The call was a bit blocky and interrupted, but we communicated. They were staying in Wytham overnight and would travel across on the day.

Geoff said that we would use the mikveh and transform ourselves from nudity in the water to clerical regalia in front of the congregation as part of our acts of submission to the new Ecclesia. Directed by Geoff and Luis, Peter had written some liturgy, so this would be different material again. The liturgical changes would have dramatic impact and further suggest 'presence' and be truly transformative. Well, one didn't have to be Umberto Eco to realise that a trick would be performed.

I raised an objection. "The symbolic exchange," I said, "ought to be as worthless and uncluttered as possible."

"I don't understand that," said Bishop Geoff, vanishing and then reappearing.

I had an explanation. "If you do the theory of ritual, symbolic exchange, from an anthropological viewpoint, the material effort is not actually in the symbols themselves. Marcel Mauss tells us... Oh what was it?"

Allie said, "The kula ring."

"The exchange is pretty worthless, but the boat trip that goes around the..."

"Trobriand Islands."

"...is quite an effort. The exchange is necessary, but materially the object is insignificant even if invested with high significance. In the Eucharist we have wine, but it's never that good, and those unleavened discs aren't much. My liturgy, from Christine's, involved effort and emotional risk. We shouldn't turn ritual, which is human, into a stage-show spectacle."

"That's a lot to take in on a train," said Geoff, with Luis nodding. "But the notes to be issued mean this is more Derren Brown than some charlatan faith healer. The spectacle is understood as naturalistic."

Luis responded: "This is a creative period. I'm sure what you use will settle down. If we have an outside congregation tomorrow, we ought to cover up a bit and be less intimate."

"What do you think, Allie?"

"You know I don't have an opinion!"

"But if you merge in, and act as one of us, properly, I might ask your opinion."

"That's not troshin'," she said, showing a bit more Norfolk.

Geoff then said, "We don't have 'one of us' among the laity. We have an open table, not confirmation: there will never be lay members in the LAE."

Luis then hoped that we were not disagreeing at an early stage.

"I'm asking questions only," was my response.

We closed our remote meeting. They went off the screen and then I said to Allie: "I've missed a number of meetings with my friend Diana on Wednesdays. I've asked to see her, socially. So I'll see you later."

"May I come?"

"This is not a church event. You can do your notes or however you do it. Downstairs too - not in the study space where you were slumped. That's private."

"Do you discuss church things? Is she coming to the ordinations?"

"I hope so."

"Then can I come?"

"We lie down naked and chat and have private matters."

"May I come please?"

"Come on. Walkies, Allie."

"We're walking?"

"No, Allie, I was being rude."

"Am I a dog on a lead?"

"Do you want a drink of water before we go? Or I can take a bowl. I'm sure Diana can put some water in a bowl."

"Do you think I need to piss in the street, Linda?"

"Actually, I need to piss now. And more."

"Unlike a dog, I'll go inside now as well."

So we went to the unisex toilets and went in the neighbouring cubicles. She waited for me outside.

"You got the squits?" she asked me.

"Mind your own business."

"My period is nearly over, fortunately."

From there we went to my SUV, squeezed off the tenfoot, and we went to Patricia's.

I introduced Allie to Diana, again, the result being that I still lay down like Diana and Allie sat naked (yet again!) in a seat brought in to Patricia's conservatory.

Diana justified Allie's trip by asking me, "Tell me, why have you taken in Elizabeth Huett to your church?"

"Because of Jenny and no other reason, and we'll see how Jenny adjusts and if Elizabeth is satisfied working at the Blue Diamond Club."

"The what?"

"The BDC."

"That says it all. You must be mad."

"It might also be because Jenny claims she has dry vagina syndrome."

"She told you that?"

"It's since she's stopped having sex with so many other people and Fatima."

"That's not a cause."

"Jenny is believing things about her body under stress."

"And do you know what Adam thinks about Elizabeth Huett being there?"

"He doesn't seem to be objecting."

"He'll be using her one way or another."

We dressed to a strict time because Patricia, Arthur and the kids all came in at once.

Diana said, "Have you heard this, Patricia? Elizabeth Huett has moved in over there. Apparently it's because she is Jenny World's girlfriend."

Patricia asked, "What was that rescue for, then? To take them in afterwards?"

I said, "Elizabeth didn't know what the others were doing or the extent of it."

"You're too forgiving at best," Patricia said to me.

"Good," I said. "That is the idea."

Patricia asked, "Has she apologised?"

"Yes. I believe her." I then asked, "So the big question is, will you both, plus families, come to the ordination service tomorrow?"

"No," said Patricia.

"I'm afraid not," said Diana. "You're being naive."

I was disappointed.

We were leaving, and Patricia said, "Nice to meet you, researcher Alfia."

"Keep yew a troshin'."

"She's a true Norfolk lass," Patricia said.

"Sorry. I try to hold in my dialect. Jonnie and I used to practise reducing it."

"Jonnie?" I asked, outside, with Diana departing.

"Are you all right, now, Diana? You were a bit stressed before."

"Yes, thank you. Bye."

"Well?"

"A kid I knew, when a kid. We were country yokels then. I'm telling you too much."

"No you are not."

"I'd rather keep my life in the background."

"Get in the car then, unless you need to piss in the street first."

"No, I have bladder control."

"Unlike me I suppose. I'll tie you to a drainpipe."

After an hour on at the church I received a copy of the liturgy. I was reading it when Diana rang.

She said, "We've been talking. Patricia and me. We still say you're a fool regarding Elizabeth Huett. However, it's important to you, this, so we will come along."

"Excellent!"

I learnt that Christine, Bill and Pauline had joined Luis and Geoff in Wytham. They were making last minute decisions. Presumably after becoming a bishop, I would not be so out of the loop, nor Elizabeth - once she was incardinated. We were not to know our ecclesiastical names until the ordination itself.

As Adam came in, I said to Allie, "I fancy something like Mar Saturnin. What do you think?"

"Out of this world," said Allie, and started giggling.

"Why are you giggling?"

"A joke."

"You laugh at your own jokes? Hang on: you already know my ecclesiastical name."

"If I did I wouldn't tell you, but whether I don't or do shouldn't concern you."

"It does concern me. It concerns me that Christine has told you, but not me."

"You assume a lot, Linda. I'm a researcher and that's all."

"That's your non-answer to everything, Allie."

"I'd better go outside and mark my territory. I might have some out there."

"Oh shut up Allie," I told her.

Then we paused and I said something remarkable. "If you are a participant as well as an observer, then you ought to be a participant in the Liberal Catholic sense. I want you to be ordained as a deacon."

"What?"

"You're not deaf, suddenly. Be ordained as a deacon. Come on the inside. It doesn't compromise you and I won't demand anything - me as a bishop."

"I'll ask Christine if she agrees."

"Oh, of course, you must ask Christine."

Allie's mouth was open but she didn't say anything.

The three of us having eaten, I suggested to Allie that she might like to go back to her house as I wanted time alone with Adam. But she asked if she could use the settee in the vestry for sleep, and use other facilities. "If there were overnight developments, would you let me know?"

"Are you all right?" I asked her, in front of Adam.

"I'll get by."

"I suppose if you're here you'll stay away from the boozier - and stay away from Jenny."

"Will Jenny stay away from Allie?" asked Adam.

Allie said, "Thank you, Adam. I'll avoid Jenny. I like this place. I ought a' be ordained. Oi'd loike tha'."

Towards the Ordination (Sunday 17th November)

It is good to make love ahead of important religious rituals. Thus in our bedroom, I actually wore my robes, open, and sat upon Adam. It was also important, I felt, that he should come inside me, which required care about the robes.

Before he did I asked Adam if he had "the word on the street" about local religious groups in competition.

"I hear Rhiannon Fleetwood is overstretching from the marshes to the southern villages. Then there is that Vineyard type group starting up."

"That's more a threat to her than us. In any case, providing evangelical-charismatic entertainment doesn't always pull in the crowds."

"Keep fucking while I get the Internet on screen," said Adam. "Swivel around to have a look."

I rotated on him as the screen came on and he used the handset and on screen keyboard to get to a website.

PENNOW UK's National Director designate, Pastor Benny Chapman, describes the terrific work of God in the UK that traces its origins back to a prayer meeting at St John's, Rainham, in 1965.

Peter Vine was a former missionary at Rainham in the 1950s and declared his own influence as from Ezra Brierley, leader of the Kent Charismatic Band (1877-1939). Peter wanted what Ezra displayed in his life and outlook. Ezra declared, from his Bible, "Ye shall be holy: for I the Lord your God am holy." He, realised his own sinful nature, needed holiness, and understand that salvation is costly.

Peter took this up himself and spread it to clergy colleagues. He and they were selected by God to spread the Holy Spirit. But the focus had to be on God.

Yet the breakthrough happened in the early 1970s. Daughter Daisy Vine displayed holiness, singing of grace, love and beauty. Her father Peter then achieved lift-off with Days of Prayer lasting a whole year in 1973 to 1974, and late in September 1974 buses and walkers gathered to deliver great numbers. On the eighth of that month, late, and into the early morning of the ninth, all sorts of miracles happened in scenes reminiscent of the Book of Acts. A woman's depression ended there and then for good, a man gave up his walking sticks - they became crosses for the church - and several already committed to further ministry became ordained.

One clergyman from that night's Spirit blessing, Martin Burton, went on to form the Vine Network, and another, Patrick English, became curate to Holy Trinity Mayfair and its expanding Anglican presence with planted churches and marketed courses for the conversion of England and beyond. His curate, Slavoj Capra went to York and created a northern charismatic revival based on teachings about social targeting from America. He became a bishop, the bishop who coined the phrase 'Christ's Lymphatic System'.

And now we have spread far and wide, including to the much troubled town of Serninsea, where sin is rife and we must turn the settlement to holiness, channelling the love of God. We will thus move forward with God.

Putting in the effort I said, "I noticed 'Vine' on there."

"Daisy Vine is her grandmother, mother's side. Her brother is a Roman Catholic priest."

At this point, Adam ejaculated into me, and I was careful that the run off stayed away from my robe.

Christine herself on arrival agreed with me about Allie, that we added Allie to the deacons ordination count (I didn't care for the minor orders). I kept quiet about my new knowledge.

I joined Christine for the kitchen supplied breakfast trialled by students. We were then joined by a stocky, elderly, balding character.

Christine introduced him, saying, "This is Mark Oldfield. Mr. Oldfield, a client of mine, was a barber until he retired, in Ebbsfleet; a long time back my father went to him and did his proper apprenticeship with him."

I said, "Well it is very nice to meet you Mr. Oldfield but other than a quick meeting with you this is a very important day..."

Christine said, "This is an arrangement for hair. Mr. Oldfield can cut hair and do all the necessary down below, with just his cut throat blade and simple soap and water."

"Not necessary," I said. "Hairless already."

Elizabeth appeared, and said, "Ah, Mr. Oldfield! We meet again. You could remove my unwanted hair around my pubes, sir."

Then Jenny came along and asked me what was going on. So she wanted the same service, and could, she said, because her vagina was dry. I couldn't see the connection. And from the North East came in a tall, short black haired woman, the Reverend Margaret Lindbeck.

I said, "Do you want your pubes doing?" as a way of introduction.

"And you are?"

"Linda. Oh, sorry. There is a rush on in the wet room with a man and a cut throat razor."

"No thank you." (Oops.) "I hear you have a kitchen. I can see it."

"Lots of lovely grub over there, yes. We may have students doing a full service."

Allie came out from the cloaks area naked. I was trying to count up how many times I'd seen her like this. "Look!" she said, partly parting her pubic lips. "Just a few swift cuts with his big blade," she said

"Allie," I said, "we are open to the public. Go back in and put something on."

"It was exciting! Don't square me up. I'll go back."

Soon Margaret came towards me with some fish and chips. I said, "Good choice of breakfast."

"They were practising frying. Durham is a long way; I had breakfast. By the way, is pubic exposure normal here?"

"Not when our doors are open to the public or until we warn people. She comes from Norfolk."

"Is that what Norfolk types do? I'm from near Durham."

"Sounded wrong. Sorry. So you discovered the LAE."

"Online. I was ordained by the Catholic Liberal Apostolic Church."

"I don't know it."

"It wasn't quite what I wanted. Too up the candle."

Allie came out clothed, back in her black leathers. She sat down next to Margaret and said, "When I went back he did into my bottom as well."

"Allie Shrimpton, meet a respectable clergywoman recruit to the LAE who has come all this way from Durham for the ordinations. Margaret Lindbeck, this wayward child in her leathers is Allie, who is researching how this church is getting started and she will be ordained deacon."

Margaret said, "Who did 'into your bottom' then?"

I thought, this is getting embarrassing.

Allie said, "Mr. Oldfield, who is a retired hairdresser. I pulled my bottom cheeks apart, he foamed me up again, used his cut throat and I don't have a hairy bum any more. Nice to meet you."

I said to Margaret, "Allie's idea is that when she does her participant observation she disappears into the church activity so that we don't notice her."

"Why I'm becoming a deacon."

"The only thing is, Margaret, we notice her very much."

"Why don't you have it done?" she asked me.

"Do some research on CAIS intersex, Allie."

"Oh. So, you imply nothing will have grown then since Margate when I saw you down there."

Margaret asked, "Down there or down there?"

"This youngster is an artist - I posed and both of those."

Christine came out, having also been treated by Mr. Oldfield. "Hello Margaret. Good to meet you."

"Mutual, Bishop Christine."

All his customers came out, and then Mark Oldfield himself.

Christine said, "Three hundred quid, Linda."

"Adam and I will authorise a cheque for three hundred pounds."

"I won't take it," said Mark.

"Mark!" said Christine. "All right. I'll see you for a free session tomorrow evening."

I put my head in my hands.

Then it dawned on me that the ordinations might cause Margaret to reveal more than she might realise.

I asked her, "You know about the submerging and the clothing element?"

"Yes, I am fine about it. No one knows me here, anyway. Did you think I was embarrassed? I can lie on a beach with nothing on like the best of them."

"Excellent."

"I've read all about you," she said.

There was some hanging around, and Allie disappeared.

Narrator: Linda Further Towards the Ordinations (Sunday 17th November)

After an hour, Allie came in through the double doors with Klärchen Sisse and her dog Dieter from next door, and both women had gleaming, shining hair. For that matter, the German shepherd's coat was shiny too.

I said, "I'm sorry we don't allow dogs in other than guide dogs, Klärchen, because we serve food here."

"Come on Dieter, we know when we are not wanted."

"No, that is not my point," I said, as Dieter and his mistress left the way they came in, pursued by Allie, her now fluffy hair rising up as she moved off.

Allie returned. "I think she understands. She is a very interesting person."

"Well, tell me about her," I said. "Like how she gets on with her dog."

"If you don't know already, I can't tell you."

"You are starting to irritate me," I said to her.

"You know I can't..."

"Oh sit down. I suppose I'd better get my hair done as well. Where did you go? Oh, come on, you can tell me that!"

"I went with Klärchen and this time she wants privacy."

"From me, you mean? So you have superb hair and mine looks shit?"

Allie responded by saying nothing.

Then Geoff and Luis came in to distract me from my temporarily silent researcher, and so we did some basic movement rehearsing of parts of the liturgy to come.

Only now did Margaret tell me she was upset that she wasn't given the position of Bishop of the North East, seeing as she lived in Durham.

I said, "I suppose it is because Elizabeth Huett was stationed up there."

"I live there - and I've done nothing wrong."

Diana and Patricia drifted in. Patricia said, "Are you all going to get your kits off?"

"Translucent gowns. But yes, off for the mikveh - the pool. It's a serious ordination," I said to her.

Rabbi Maurice Neptune entered, and kissed me on my mouth. "Become my wife," he said again, immediately. Allie's eyes widened.

"It is a lovely offer. You have your sermon?"

"Indeed I do," he said.

As the hour drew close, everyone expected was present. Some other people were gathering. I counted ten people I did not know, plus three so far recognised from the parish church: Tracey Graham, Tom Bowler and Ralph Thickett. I was pleased to see naturist tryers Louise and James Saraga, Sally Torrance and Paula Campbell. Peter, Kathleen, Winnie and Allie were ready. Those to process went to the cloaks area as more people came in.

Geoff (with Luis) spoke to Margaret, Elizabeth and me with Allie listening. "Elizabeth, your Church name will be Elizabeth Claire Mar Triangulum Australe."

"What's that?" she asked.

"It is Latin for 'Southern Triangle' and is a constellation in the night sky."

I was resisting a grin. Next...

"You will be Margaret Mar Akelda. It means 'Healing Spring' and comes from an Anglo-Saxon princess."

That sounded lovely. So what was my name to be? Mar Saturnin?"

"Linda, your Church name will be Linda Mar Reticulum."

"What?"

"It means the second chamber in the alimentary canal of a ruminant animal. It is also known as the bonnet and as the kings-hood."

"Come on!" I said. "It sounds like arsehole!"

"We've made our decision."

"Someone could ask, 'How's Mar Rectum,' and I'd have to say, 'Take your trousers down and I'll tell you.' Allie, stop laughing. You are supposed to be invisible."

"Invisible my arse - or your arse," said Elizabeth, that caused Allie to hoot with laughter - with hair bouncing.

Luis said, "Christine likes the name because it's about sorting out particles, and reflects your rationality. No, we are not changing it. It is not a negotiation: the bishops name you as a parent names a child."

I'd never known a child named something close to 'Arsehole'.

Luis and Geoff left us with no further comment for the robing room and returned with Christine, Bill Masters and Pauline Junor - all in full robes.

Among ordinands, close together in the cloaks area, Margaret turned out to be the only person with retained pubic hair, and it was very thick, extensive and black. The Rabbi had the function of checking our orifices. Margaret was the first of us to pull her arse open, and she bent over rather obviously. Winnie and Kathleen were not allowed to keep their hanging discs on. Allie opened for inspection as if it was an everyday occurrence.

Those to be ordained (including me) put on these translucent wrappings - bare arms beyond. Kathryn had been chosen by Christine to lead us from the cloaks area, and her role was to carry over her arms the white albs and purple albs (gowns) and amices (for the neck and shoulders), plus cinctures (girdle ropes) with, on top, the rest of the heavy ecclesiastical gear that we all would wear subsequently. Kathryn herself wore a cream simple robe.

Adam opted for sitting in the seating area. Diana and Patricia were in the chapel itself. Jenny was in the vestry, operating cameras again for a recording mix.

Kathryn called out for people to be quiet. "The bishops and ordinands are coming!" she then exclaimed. The place went silent.

Allie whispered to me. "Rhiannon Fleetwood is in the seating area. She is like a cat in the dark." Hmm. Allie's cat - alley cat?

I did not know what Rhiannon Fleetwood looked like, but obviously Allie did.

The Unusual Ordinations Service

The altar table was white sheet covered, with two three candle candelabras either side of a large metal cross. In the open holy cabinet to the west was a 3-0 Om symbol to the left and a Star of David to the right.

For the procession, high quality compact disc ecclesiastical music was played and the people were singing All Are Welcome Here and then Canticle of the Sun. The hymns were chosen by Peter, Kathleen, Winnie and Christine. Christine asked for the second processional hymn: not in the Unitarian hymn book.

During the singing, Kathryn led us slowly and purposely towards and into the chapel. Being translucent in covering, we ordinands were received with some gasps from the congregation as we entered and turned to the mikveh. Kathryn diverted to a small table at a short distance from the altar table at the eastern mikveh end to place most of the robes, but she kept the albs, amices and cinctures and picked up white towels. Rabbi Neptune behind her went up to the mikveh; robed Mar Simili Anseres, Mar Populari, Mar Werburga, Mar Flacillus and Mar Arcturus-Virginis went to sit behind the altar table. A number of cameras fired their flashes and mobile phones were busy. Adam had agreed to take many photographs of proceedings.

With the existing bishops sat, we, the candidates, were stood with our backs to the people and in front of the mikveh to the right, and were with Rabbi Neptune.

He said, "Dear God, you created the universe from a womb of water. You made us in your image, pure and holy, according to your divine will. We thank you for our bodies of beauty that have rhythms like the sun and moon, the seasons, the Shabbos and the Holy Days." I remembered that he had used these words for me.

There were more gasps as our translucent gowns dropped to our feet. Kathryn bent down to pick these 'covers' up, and lay them to the side, although we could not see this. A few 'wows' were heard as we each (with about thirty seconds in between) walked down the steps into the water to submerge fully into the vertical hypercube pool and then walked up the other steps to emerge, our backs to them again. The rabbi and Kathryn held up towels that partly blocked our full frontal views once we'd walked around the mikveh perimeter and approached the congregation.

When we were all done the rabbi said, "Blessed are You, O Lord, our God, King of the universe, who is pleased regarding the immersion."

With Kathryn's help we put on the albs, amices and cinctures as our basic initial religious clothing. Three of us to be LAE bishops wore dyed into purple amices and albs - most unusual. The other three had white ones on. The rabbi sat down near the side altar table.

Now we came near the altar table, all bare-footed and hair soaked, and it was at this time I was able to see briefly some faces of attenders. Aardse had joined Diana and Arthur had joined Patricia. Then I noticed and nearly waved at Charley Darley, the Unitarian minister. I wondered what Charley Darley thought about us having ordered Unitarian hymn books. There was also Jeremy Symes and Lindy Peacock, and George Wickenby was sat next to Adam. Carrie Chopin was present with Gloria Mabaso from the Vestal Virgins.

My stomach lurched when I recognised Bishop Jonathan Eyre. What the hell was he doing - visiting Elizabeth? I wanted him gone and could do nothing about it. The collared redhead I did not know was sat with him: I took it that she was Rhiannon Fleetwood, Allie's 'cat in the dark'.

Elizabeth in the purple gown, alongside me, said to me quietly, "I don't know why he is here. And I don't want her near me either."

But the biggest surprise was to see Colin Cromer alongside Mrs. Carter in a corner of the dining and seating area alongside Andrew Walter and Laura Kingswood. Would Colin want to speak with Rhiannon Fleetwood, who had replaced him?

Christine spoke to the congregation. "Welcome everyone. This is a service of incardination and ordination of the Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia. We have just seen these ordinands go through a ritual cleansing in preparation for new ministry. To submerge into the mikveh and come out again is like a rebirth into the future. Our service today reflects the local ministry in this Parish of the Upper Coast in Eastern Foss in the Diocese of the East in the Province of the Anglians."

Peter, Kathleen, Winnie and Allie were first to lay prostrate on the ground. When prayers were completed for Allie, she stated, "I give my allegiance and obedience to the bishops of the unbroken Apostolic Order of the Universal Church as represented in the Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia." Allie rose smoothly on to her knees and was ordained deacon and received a Werbugh white and black goose badge. She sat on a reserved seat.

When prayers were completed for Winnie, she also stated Allie's words. She got on to her knees and was ordained deacon and received the same badge design. She sat on a reserved seat next to Allie.

After prayers for Kathleen, she said the same, rose to her knees and was ordained deacon and received the badge. She sat next to Winnie.

After prayers for Peter, he said the same, rose up on to his knees and was ordained deacon and received the same badge. He sat next to Kathleen.

The ordainers were Bishops Geoff, Luis, Christine, Pauline and Bill.

The Right Reverend Elizabeth Huett came next, lying prostrate alone for prayers. I could see that some could see up her cloak. She was exposed to the world. She stated: "I give prayerful service under God the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, and loyalty to his Sacred Universal Church." Rising on to her knees, she was consecrated sub-conditione as bishop. Now, back down prostrate again, she stated from the floor, "I, Bishop, give my allegiance and obedience to the unbroken Apostolic Order of the Universal Church as represented in the Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia." She was incardinated into the LAE.

Bishop Geoff announced, "Welcome into the Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia and rejoice for: Mar Triangulum Australe, Bishop of the North East!"

Bishop Elizabeth got up and stood facing her colleagues at the altar table. At this point, Kathleen acquired and presented her clothing. Around her neck Elizabeth added a pectoral cross with a special braided cord plus the white plastic badge containing a black goose image and a W. Her stole was simple; she could change it later. On the right arm she put on a maniple, a narrow strip of the same material as the stole and looked like a napkin. Then came the chasuble. Bishop Christine now presented her with a mitre (divided tall hat) and a crozier (shepherd's crook). She went and sat alongside the bishops.

The Reverend Margaret Lindbeck came next, who lay prostrate as Elizabeth had done. First, she was incardinated as a priest. "I, priest, give my allegiance and obedience to the unbroken Apostolic Order of the Universal Church as represented in the Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia." She was thus incardinated into the LAE. There then followed a straightforward consecration, yet (thus in reverse order of Liz) by the bishops including now Elizabeth, adding the same consecration submission: "I give prayerful service under God the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, and loyalty to his Sacred Universal Church."

Once she was standing Kathleen assisted Margaret with clothing. She received her pectoral cross with a special braided cord and the same badge as Bishop Elizabeth. Again, her stole was simple. On the right arm she put on a maniple. Then came the chasuble to be the top layer. Christine now presented her with a mitre and a crozier.

Bishop Luis announced, "Rejoice for: Mar Akelda, Bishop of the North and Scotland!" She went and sat alongside the bishops.

It was my turn. My processing was similar to Margaret and Liz. I lay uncomfortably on my front in the purple alb, and my arms out, just as they had done. "I, priest, give my allegiance and obedience to the unbroken Apostolic Order of the Universal Church as represented in the Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia." I was thus incardinated into the LAE. Then I said, "I give prayerful service under God the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, and loyalty to his Sacred Universal Church." I got on to my knees and was ordained bishop by the original bishops plus Bishops Elizabeth and Margaret.

Kathleen now presented me with my robes, just as the others had received and of course the pectoral cross and the white and black goose badge. Christine gave me a mitre and crozier.

Bishop Geoff proclaimed: "Welcome into the Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia: Mar Reticulum, Bishop of the East!" Now I sat at the end. There were eight bishops now.

Then Bishop Christine rose and stated, "All our new bishops have joined as full and guiding members of the Society that is the Principatus Theocratic Confraternitati admissis in Ecclesia Apostolica Liberali, which is our ethical and practical body guiding the work of the Church. All members of the Society come under its protection and guidance; the W is for Werburgh, a Saxon nun, and the goose is the animal for whom she cared and brought back to life - also a symbol of the Holy Spirit."

Some into strict Catholic dress might have noted a certain simplicity and minimalism. We lacked a tunic and the dalmatic (representing the sub-deacon and deacon). Apparently it was a case of practicality and the variation within this group from others.

There was a hymn, All Heroic Lives Remind Us, and then a long Bible reading from Peter, the Deacon, being Hosea chapters one to three, followed by another hymn, Past. Present, Future.

Now it was the time for our guest preacher, Rabbi Maurice Neptune of the Reformist Jewish tradition. I had not seen this sermon.

"Some of you may have been shocked with the Bible reading we have had for the inaugural service in this place. As your preacher, and a rabbi of Reformist Judaism, I asked that the whole of the Hosea chapters 1 to 3 were read. I noticed how people did listen and were showing surprise on their faces.

"A strange juxtaposition exists there between the minor prophet Hosea and the prostitute and wife Gomer-bat-Diblayim - and God seemingly demanding some very strange things. What do we have is but an instructed marital crisis and an analogy with the marriage relationship of God and Israel. It's the Word of Yhwh that comes to Hosea, including to marry a prostitute and to have children that God rejects, and there is some doubt that they are even his. So the Hosea-Gomer forced marriage is also a metaphor for the God-Israel marriage.

"When a text is embarrassing, when you think it should say x but instead says y, then there is a heavy temptation to push it towards x by interpretation. You can do this by saying what is really happening, or perhaps through what is called 'escape by metaphor' where it all stands for something else. When you have all that about the children of Israel descending into idolatry, the assumption can then be made that all that is harlotry is in fact idolatry, and some start to make excuses about what an ethical God would do. This has occurred in various commentaries. Sometimes the wife Gomer is cleaned up, as in some midrash, or she disappears entirely, such as in the Targum Jonathan, and in the Babylonian Talmud she's promiscuous but he is a bit of an idiot, or not quite fully-formed, and so it goes on in many re-interpretations through to the present day. For Luther, Gomer allowed herself to be called these nasty things and Hosea do them for the sake of reforming the people, whereas Calvin the purist does what the Targum did: erases her. Perhaps it is all a romantic and tragic love story: more modern scholars tried to agree and fix it accordingly.

"Don't do these changes and of course the problems start. The text begins with the word of the Lord coming to Hosea in the reign of Uzziah and the reign of Hezekiah, and thus in the Judean time of c. 783 to 687 BCE and in the Israelite time of c. 786 to 746 BCE. So this is two places and two times and a little disturbing. When then?

"Let's avoid the no marriage claim and that it was pure allegory regarding God and Israel and Israel's idolatry. No, it's not a dream. Let's not take it either that Gomer is simply guilty of idolatry or stands in the place of those who are. Idolatry may be the context of being a prostitute, but being a prostitute is given. Oh they say she 'played' the harlot, but she was not playing. Allowably she might be a prostitute for the cult of Baal, or a straightforward street prostitute. Let's chop away these literary devices.

"We take the text as it is. We are not assuming history or any such thing: it is text and we take the text as given. How can it be so distasteful? Is God understood as distasteful? What sort of love is it among the sinners? Very tough love, if it is love at all.

"Each suspect child is given a rejectionist name and by God as follows:"

(I thought of Mar Reticulum!)

"Jezreel is translated as: "God scatters," and refers to the fact that the northern kingdom will be scattered by the judgment of God. It suggests eschatology, an end-time. The name indicates treachery, as well.

"Then comes Lo-Ruhamah, meaning 'not loved', 'not pitied', 'no mercy'. The analogy is that God no longer loves Israel, but the child is not loved too. Some think it's Gomer that is not loved by Hosea, or Gomer does not love the child. Let's keep it simple: it is the child that is so named, named by God.

"Third is Lo-Ammi, meaning 'not my people', so rejected as of kin.

"The analogy with Israel is less of a covenant, then, and more of a divorce.

"So she is a whore and by children we have an imminent judgment (Jezreel); a people not loved (Lo-Ruhamah) and a people rejected from God (Lo-Ammi).

"In Chapter 2, as Gomer will pursue her lovers for her income, God says in response he'll put thorns in her way, and build a wall to block her, by which she'll realise her first husband was best among her lovers, and, because God had bankrolled her with food, drink and clothes - she didn't know this - he'll take the items back. She'll become naked again and knowingly lewd. This is after an existing threat to strip her naked and make her as the day she was born, after the necessity to take the harlotry from her face and the adultery from between her breasts.

"Yet into the wilderness God will speak tenderly and offer hope. He'll purify her from Baal names and offer a covenant. So Chapter 2 switches to a vision of God's love and reconciliation and for sure Chapter 3 includes God's love and his offer: loving an adulteress, Israel will come back and seek God and also David their King.

"That's all right then. Except it isn't. If someone threatens you, and then tells you he loves you, aren't you going to be suspicious? Threats and then love do not equal love.

"But there is more contradiction. Beyond the apparent deep symbolism and the broad symbolism, there is the way that the contradiction forms a kind of both and neither state of chaos.

"Taking her adultery from between her breasts and stripping her naked is violent titillation, and yet it is also returning Gomer to a condition of naked purity. She goes on to seek her lovers who'll pay her way, but God will put resistances in her way. He'll punish her for the feast days of the Baals. She still pursues her lovers, and it seems God changes strategy. Now he is good to her and offers her hope by a covenant and then enacts it. Now she does not sin, and the people are restored.

"Yes, but... so much of the text jars and must be read as it comes. Jezreel is a history, there's Achan and the Exodus. The therefores lead on to contradictions. She is effectively sexualised into purity. Sex and titillation is not exactly the stuff of a cool, logical argument, but this is all about the 'how's your father?' - or rather, 'how's your wife?' Oh, and do note how the male child Jezreel becomes female in chapter 2 - not quite a case of intersex, although there's a note for 'her' after using 'him' in some translations. To sow him, of course, has the meaning of seed - male seed, whereas the reference is to fertile ground.

"What we see, disturbingly then, is that Yhwh is not so different from Baal: that innocence is sexuality, that the pure wilderness is barren, that indeed love intermingles with hate. Babies are innocents, but here are polluted and rejected from the start. How dialectical this is! It even lacks a settled place and time, like I suggested. Lacking a beginning, the ending is also obscured.

"But most of all, the reader is being seduced by all the sexual imagery whilst the story is moralistic: like those American television programmes that preach solid American values whilst titillating or shooting guns at each other. Gomer is never virginal; she does not start virginal: the morality tale has the prostitute in your face and its allure. Nakedness is not purity but sexy: just as people once used to buy

Health and Efficiency, to be turned on by attractive women with - eventually - pubic hair.

"That's it, really. The opposites that reassure us are not opposites. They are all intermingled. Does Yhwh even fight and take on Baal? Not really. There is no trial of strength. Indeed, there is recognition of the feast days of Baal. Polytheism is used, even learnt from; it is almost a synthesising into the monotheism that God is wanting to re-establish as superior. They are not opposites: each contains something of the other. Suddenly Gomer is faithful, if faithful to the wrong thing. In fact it turns out that Yhwh's strategy has parallels in the make-up of Baal religion. Religion is, after all, one category defined by shared features. And given Yhwh's changes of strategy and contradictory approaches, and all the double meanings, is Yhwh even One at all?"

"Plus, let's be honest: Gomer pursued her lovers for necessity. She wasn't indulging herself into endless pleasure. It was her way of getting by. Just like a prostitute, of course. And it was her ethic, the ethic of lovers and the polytheism.

"So what do we make of this? Well, here we are with the opening of a church, and here am I a rabbi giving, I understand, its first sermon. This church has a mikveh, drawn from my tradition, where naked people submerge themselves with all orifices clear for ritual purity. It sounds sexy to me. It looks sexy. But people do find it transformative. There is a wet room with showers and a massage facility here. Massages refresh and renew, but in a place like Serninsea they are associated with sex. Churches, synagogues, mosques, gurdwaras and other temples represent the pure and good, but we know they have a history not just of abuse but have always been gathering places for - let's be kind - future marriages. Authorities attempt to regularise and restrict, but people are clever and use religious places for their own purposes.

"This downstairs church building is to be managed by a new bishop who describes herself like she never did before: particularly that she is intersex, of male genes that created a female body with characteristics against reproduction. She no longer hides from the religious that she is a naturist. New rituals or of other faiths can feature. Incarnation, she says, is all about the messy as well as the good, and that is what Hosea 1 to 3 is all about: the messy in the good, the immoral in with the moral - and see if you can spot which is which. While the metaphors stretch, the reality is sharp and immediate. So this sermon as such is a moment to declare this church open with your personnel now in place.

"Thank you for listening to my deresha, or drash if you like.

"Yevarechecha Adonai veyishmerecha (May God bless you and keep you).

"Ya'er Adonai panav eilecha viy'chunecha (May God show you favour and be gracious to you)

"Yisa Adonai panav eilecha veyasem lecha shalom (May God show you kindness and grant you peace).

"Ken Yehi Ratzon (Let it be so)."

I was impressed with his sermon's appropriateness and theology, and thus our transient mikveh nudity was now in context for everyone - if they understood it.

After a hymn Where is Our Holy Church? came the Eucharist presided by Bishop Geoff but concelebrated by eight bishops.

When the deacons Peter and Kathleen raised the white cloth covering the elements, there was a glass jug of water and a box of seeds. The cloth was laid down again, and the Eucharist liturgy was pretty much like the one we had in the parish Anglican church that led to all that trouble. But there were these variant words said by Bishop Geoff:

*"All You we adore, O hidden Splendour, You,
Who in Your Sacrament does deign to be;
We worship You beneath the earthly veil,
And here Your Presence we devoutly hail."*

Then trainee magician Peter and Kathleen removed the cloth to reveal wine in the glass jug and bread where the box of seeds had been. There were one or two gasps, although some people looking seemed to notice nothing.

The Presiding Bishop proclaimed the Open Table. Incense was swung by Winnie (the chapel itself deliberately had no fire alarm for this reason) and Peter and Kathleen rang bells. Allie did nothing. Anyone of any faith or none was welcome to partake. The deacons took their liturgical food and drink, and we bishops followed. Notably only Mrs. Carter from the old congregation came for communion. Adam and Diana came forward; Patricia did not. The Unitarian hymns called Mother Earth and O Brother Son, lasting for longer than the duration of the eating and drinking the elements, contained clear Pagan references to western water, northern earth, eastern air and southern fire - as heard in the liturgy.

That was it! The CD sourced music gave us a procession out.

After the Ordinations

Time, then, to mingle with the people.

Christine and I met Charley Darley, with Allie trailing behind. Charley Darley knew all the hymns and approved of their use. I said that Peter chose them, and I agreed with him. Christine wasn't so sure! Charley, recovering from a gender-appearance operation, had people to see, locally, but before he left, he chatted to Peter.

Colin Cromer with Gertrude Carter stayed for the buffet food. Said he, "I'm retired now and I'm in town visiting. I thought I'd come along to apologise for my responses to you."

"Thank you very much."

"I was very angry, before. I gave up before I intended to go. They replaced me quickly: so we are all expendable. You've likely found what you wanted here."

"I hope so. Hello again Mrs. Carter. May I introduce Allie, a researcher?"

"You were both a bit revealing; I suppose, if you've got it... Should I call you bishop, now?"

"If you wish."

"And that water flattened some lovely hair, young lady."

"Colin said, "I can tell you that I did not attend the Reverend Rhiannon Fleetwood's service this morning. This time I listened to the substantial rumours. You exposed my ignorance. I haven't spoken to her here; I don't think she even recognised me."

Getrude said, "I have to be honest and say I don't like her."

"This place incorporates your obvious naturism. My criticism, though, and why I wouldn't mix here is that this is all 'cultural revolution' and not revelation with informed tradition."

"And you are in the Lake District, Colin. All the best for your future."

"Thank you."

"I remember the Reverend Alfred Dove."

"Ah yes; and he remains very old school. Alfred's sister is waiting for me, to travel back all the way over there."

"You were good to me Colin. I'm only sorry I was so crass. I've learnt a lot from you."

He nodded and left, saying bye to Mrs. Carter, and she exited too.

Jenny came to me. "I saw Jonathan Eyre, but he must have gone immediately. Allie says Rhiannon Fleetwood scarpered as well. Fancy ignoring her predecessor!"

"Yes, and I'm not happy about their presence."

"Elizabeth has just said to me that she didn't know they'd be here: it's not clear they were together or not. For Liz, the mikveh is a new start without them."

"I'm pleased to hear it."

"But I think, you know, if I had regular times with Jonathan, I wouldn't have this dryness down there."

Jenny immediately went away to talk to Adam, stopping me from replying.

The rabbi approached me. I told him, "That was such a good sermon. Can we put it on our website?"

"Yes. I will send you an electronic copy. Come back to Wytham, some time very soon, and see me there. Stay with me."

"I will, Maurice."

"A couple of my folks are here. I'll return to them."

Diana with Aardse and Patricia with Arthur looked me over in my finery. Patricia said, "Everyone could see your fanny."

"Good," I said. "It's part of me."

"Stupid name you've been given," said Aardse. "Sounds like 'arsehole'. Did you choose that?"

"No I did not."

Allie was leaving for her house. She said, "I shouldn't but I congratulate you, Bishop Linda."

"Thank you, Allie. Linda will always do, the Reverend Deacon Allie."

Eventually Adam and I came together, and we went up and up into our room.

"I didn't see Margaret McEnhill."

"She does evening services, Mother Arsehole."

"Adam! Mar is a word meaning 'Bishop' and, as for the rest, it is something to do with a 'bonnet' or 'kings-hood' or similar."

"So it is not your arsehole but your clitoris!"

I thought he might just be right. This was likely Christine's doing.

"Well, Adam, my kings-hood or bonnet seeks your attention."

Chapter 23 A Researcher's Greater Involvement

Narrator: Linda Interviewing of Sorts (Monday 18th November)

Adam and I had a morning to ourselves, as he again made fun about my ecclesiastical name. Perhaps I should have been called 'Mar Devil's Doorbell', he suggested. He asked if I'd come to his new work premises and assist interviewing.

Allie Shrimpton appeared, in all red leather gear and red boots this time. Wow. She said that she would like to interview us. She would not accompany me to join Adam interviewing today as his interviewing was for his business. She might call on Klärchen Sisse and maybe walk in the town.

One employment subsidy scheme to reduce unemployment figures that Adam could use was titled Tasks with the Unemployed for Labour force Investment Purposes - TULIP.

"Is that Calvinist?" I asked. "Starts with Total depravity. Welcome to Serninsea."

"Speculative, perhaps," said Adam. "Tulips from Amsterdam!"

Speculative it was, via six near-randomly selected four male and two female candidates. Four were in their twenties, one male was thirty-two and another male was forty five. Peter gave them all computer tasks to do, and then we three interviewed them. The forty-five year old, Roger Humphrey, was rather well qualified and had an MA dissertation on The Hopeful Theological Ethics of Sperm Donation from Leeds. He was also economically wasted. His typing speed and spreadsheet results weren't as good as the others.

Adam said to me, before calling Roger in, "I picked him because you might like to talk to him."

This candidate told us he would have done a Ph.D if he had the money. For work, he'd done bits of administration here and there.

Something else he did: "I donate in good hope."

"You do charity work?" I asked.

"I donate sperm. My sperm."

"Oh. Fair enough. Goes to a good cause."

"I am the cause. Children are the hope."

"And any critical theory?" I asked.

"The Frankfurt School gets a mention. Theology uses essence and action from within the divine universe: a spiritual knowledge gathered as stillness and then activity. Honest!"

"And the Frankfurt School?"

"Informing meaning and value with the individual doing work. But I go on that the foundation has been undermined, so that a space opens up again for the divine universe and a normative Christian production of sperm. I also play with words: Spem in Alium: Hope in any other. We plough the field and scatter."

"Oh."

Bella (Belinda) Jack had something interesting about her. She had been a hairdresser in training and had been in a job, she'd told us, but there were too many hairdressing salons in town and she was victim of a recent closure.

"Your mum: is she Marjorie?" I asked.

"Yes. She might come here."

Only when returning to the waiting area did she tell Peter only that she tries to write spy stories. Peter told Adam when he rejoined us.

So we had to select two. Adam asked me, "Do you want us to select Roger? He was of interest to you."

"He's a professional wanker and Radical orthodox," I said. "He is surely too rarified intellectually. I can suggest him to Christine's pastoral list. Poverty has led him to Serninsea, obviously."

Peter said, "Poverty means he wanks for pocket money. I'd select him because he can analyse in a way the others cannot."

I asked, "Do you feel an affinity with him?"

"Me?" asked Peter. "Why?"

"No. Adam. Wanking."

"What are we talking about?" asked Adam. "His analytical skills or his spunk?"

"Both? I wonder if the clinic uses Goosechat." I said, "You could chat about Annie Fenwick."

Peter said, "An investigations agency needs a thinker and he can think."

Bella Jack!" Adam then pronounced. "She can join us on the scheme. Her spy stories might be useful to my investigations."

"And her mum," I said.

These were ridiculous bases for choosing workfare people, but at least these had something about them.

Adam asked me, "By the way: you're not Belinda as well, are you, Linda?"

"No, you plank: all my siblings and me have L names in my family. You met them - more than 'met' them. I was named as Linda."

Adam added, "Bella looks rather like a model. No, no. Purely on ability."

Peter said, "Her headlights were on."

I said, "Yes, thank you."

So, after such focussed methodology, we three went out to them, and Adam announced that we had selected Roger and Bella. They stayed back and I invited them to come up and see the church, although this would not be their usual work space. So we three walked over, and Allie came out of Klärchen Sisse's house as we passed, waving her goodbye. She didn't say what they had done.

Bella left us after some fifteen minutes looking around the ground floor but Roger decided to stay in the seating area.

"So is every sperm sacred?" I asked him.

"Definitely. But only one has impact in human flourishing."

Bishop Elizabeth and Jenny then announced that they would spend tomorrow in Wytham. Derek Imperial had heard about her new appointment and asked to see Elizabeth, even though she had been a diocesan elsewhere.

"It's respectful to go and see him," Liz said, "and we both can have a day out tomorrow."

Now it was my turn, to interview, but of students already selected for me and their tutor who'd come with them. So my interviewing was just to give a welcome, really and to set some parameters.

I said to the tutor, "We'd eventually like to do a langar type offering, a free meal after a Sunday service, but we're not sure of resources yet. Langar food is blessed with prayers and is something of a communion, and we have a communion already. Nevertheless, on this basis please supply: the sweet karah parshad, samosas, pooris and rotis, chana masala, rice, dahl - this sort of thing. Also, we must have Jewish food from either geographical-group tradition or both because we have an extension of a shul here. Plus, provide some British staples. Your students might even be called 'sewadars', although I don't want to violate the tradition."

Allie then said, "Try Cromer crab, Brancaster mussels, Stiffkey cockles, samphire, and have mint. Yummy."

"A bit exotic, Allie," I said.

"Norfolk exotic," she said.

"Could do. I was thinking bubble and squeak, cauliflower cheese, fish and chips, and, if you want local, a more herb-based Foss sausage, the Haslet meatloaf, chine of pork and parsley, plum bread..."

The Catering tutor, Nigella Johnsen, whose voice and face reminded me of Mrs. Bridges in Upstairs Downstairs, said she would include the Sikh and Jewish based foods and they would prove educative to the college students. They'd try and run it like a mini-business. Yes, she'd add Norfolk and Foss cuisine at times. From this point they'd run our kitchens on a continuous basis - if the church was open, it would be staffed. So I gave this tutor a couple of keys to the building.

Adam came to see me. "Tomorrow. Jenny will be with Elizabeth, yes? Will you go and see Bill Masters? He will be at Yojana Asthana's parents' guest house. One p.m. tomorrow. Jenny must not know. If Bill came here she'd see him on CCTV later."

Deacon and researcher Allie Shrimpton alongside then asked if she could interview Adam. They went off to the Consulting Room.

Narrator: Adam Allie Interviews Adam (Monday 18th November)

Allie Shrimpton sat opposite me in the consulting room, alongside the vestry. We had a table in between us.

Her first question was direct. "Why did you build Linda a church? I mean, you've been hulling kewter at 'er."

"What?"

"Sorry. Throwing money at her."

"Because she was the source of making a lot of money. We couldn't protect her anonymity; we realised she'd have to leave. Ann says it means we have a moral responsibility towards Linda. A train of events started with having those independent bishops in her parish church."

"But wasn't that her doing?"

"I think you might trace the order of things. Conversations led to proposals; proposals led to outcomes. So with my purchase of the north end property from Ann and Labhaoise, there was enough room to set up the church - with extensions. It wouldn't cost a great deal to put it all to another use. The mikveh is something but then there is a plunge pool near copy of it in the wet room."

"Louise isn't spelt Louise, someone said."

"Gaelic - Irish version."

"Folkways at university included both Celtic type languages, and I went for the P Scottish. Anyway, you've got Elizabeth Huett here; I bet you weren't expecting her to be here."

"Wrong again. We've got Jenny here. Elizabeth Huett is along for the ride and worth seeing if she makes contact with those we knocked out. I noticed Jonathan Eyre at the ordinations, and, redhead like you, Rhiannon Fleetwood, is reputedly one of that lot. Jenny is showing hypochondriasis tendencies, if not quite Munchausen tendencies. Understand?"

"Yes. One is symptoms she hasn't got, and the other is to produce those symptoms. So you're all a kind of friendship structure and a relationship with Linda?"

"It could have been different. It could have been Jenny. It could have been Diana - ha ha."

"Diana de Groot?"

"The very same."

"How come?"

"How reliable are you?" I asked her.

"Fort Knox."

"I am going to trade you information. I'll tell you mine if you tell me yours."

"My what?" she asked.

"Home, family, partner, friends," I said. "I'm already offering things your way, let's see some in reverse."

"You are an investigator," Allie said.

"I am."

"Okay then. I come from near Walsingham. I was born in a farmhouse and my family have lived there for many generations. Down the lane there is another farmhouse, and they are distant relatives but in an interlocking family tree. My aunt and uncle there aren't really my aunt and uncle. What's that worth to pursue?"

"Something good. I had a time with Diana de Groot, after Jenny. Before I went to join the police. Linda was then at her university. Tell me more and I'll give you more."

"I'm a lesbian, and I have had some sexual relationships with women at the university, but home was complicated."

"Okay. I had sex with Diana de Groot. I think we both enjoyed it. Tell me more and I'll tell you more still. Tell me about 'complicated'? This is confidential you realise."

"Yes, absolutely. So at home, living in the other farmhouse, is a man now who was born the same year as me: he is my fourth cousin once removed. My uncle there is actually my third cousin three times removed and my aunt is my third cousin twice removed. Our families hoped and probably still hope that he and I would marry."

"That's not being a lesbian."

"But he is more like a brother to me. Released and free, and seeking a partner, I'm a lesbian."

"More and you get more. Sounds incestuous. Rumours of incest?"

"Hardly, given our common ancestors. I love him dearly and we can be very intimate, but it's not going to happen. I think I have told you rather a lot."

"Confidentiality is the nature of my business as well," I told her. "You have it as a researcher, Linda as a pastor, me as an investigator. So, Diana became pregnant, and went away to have it out of sight."

"Yours?"

"I have told you."

"What happened to the child?"

"It didn't live."

"Oh. I'm sorry about that. And, oh, er, hmm... And you didn't... You must have wanted to care for her - for Diana."

"Her parents sent her away. I went to the police - for a career. Nottingham. I'd gone when she came back. She might blame me but she should blame her parents. They wanted shot of me."

"When was this?" Allie asked.

"It is now... twenty-one years ago."

"Right. Right, well... Er..."

"I think you're a bit gobsmacked."

"I wasn't expecting this."

"Diana could have joined me. I sent word back by letter. She rejected me, but not in any communication."

"Perhaps her parents blocked your mail?"

Then Allie asked me to excuse her, as she opened the door, went out, looked around and returned, closing the door again.

"Possibly," I said, for my delayed answer. "Diana was traumatised. I don't think she actually fancied me. The sex was casual and enjoyed, but with consequences. It creates a bit of an edge to this day."

"Afore you had your dalliance with Linda?"

She went out again, and seemed to look around again. I couldn't quite understand it.

"My 'dalliance' with Linda? Linda was near the end of school. So Linda thinks she introduced things to me but she didn't. Ann did them all - very educative. Ann was a teacher, and, well, she tried out things on me. I'd looked down her blouse when she was sat behind the desk. I had to stay back. I couldn't avoid looking at her legs. She criticised my behaviour but used it. I went to her house. I lost my virginity. But the surprise was seeing Labhaoise, from the other school when it closed, in that they'd got together. Life partners, in the end. This was my first secret to really keep. Linda was somewhat suspicious about Miss Dromeghda's attitude to me but I kept quiet and, anyway, Jenny and her made the mistake of trying to rope in Geoff. He wasn't interested."

"Geoff the bishop in Bristol - just checking."

"Indeed. It seems that as a heterosexual I am in a minority around here. So I have a lingering obligation for Jenny."

"A network of obligations."

"Reciprocal. Jenny seems confused, again, and now imagines things including her symptoms; Linda isn't confused; Diana is in denial. She's in denial about me and in denial about Linda. I've said a lot to you. Play fair: did you fuck your one cousin fourth removed?"

"Fourth cousin once removed. Often - very often. We sleep together, or did."

"Sounds like you might have got pregnant."

"No, I was on birth control from my first period. Both sets of parents saw to it."

"You had parental approval? Every night? That's unusual."

"We were bathed together as babies, we knew each other through school and into farming. It was our normal, the family trees wrap around a lot and this was one more likely twist."

"So it did stop or it didn't?"

"I left for the University of Somerset; that ended the pressure. Er... Diana doesn't share Linda's religion?"

"Does Linda?" I asked. "What does Linda actually believe?"

"She makes a go of it. She's a bishop!"

"That's the best that can be said," I commented.

"Any other females, Adam? Just that we've come down this road."

"Trade?" he proposed.

"I had a relationship with my female tutor when an undergraduate."

"What's this about you recognising Rhiannon Fleetwood?"

"Trade?" she asked back.

"I am married. I'm married to Mary Ann, and yes Linda does know. She and her adult daughter - not mine - are far away now, in the Thames Valley."

"Oh. Gosh. Rhiannon Fleetwood went to Taunton Theological College. Folk and Ethnic Studies is a bit Pagan, or can be. She was looking to be a nuisance with us and the types I associated with - except she went soft on one called Andrea. She wasn't long in Rochester, it seems, her first posting."

"Don't let Linda hear you say that."

"Say what?"

Saying, 'Types I associated with.' Say, 'Types with whom I associated,' instead."

"Crumbs. I'll tell her it in broad Norfolk. Any living children, Adam?"

"Trade?"

"Okay. I also had a relationship with a Scottish Gaelic speaking female secretary of the department. She improved my rudimentary listening and speaking skills - that's why they employed her, because she was fluent in Gaelic."

"That's a rarity, a Norfolk lass speaking some Gaelic."

"Tha e neo-àbhaisteach. Children?"

"Ann and Labhaoise both have children by me. I play no part in their upbringing. They are both nine years old."

"Wow. I have a lot to keep secret."

"Linda knows some of these, but she does not know that you know."

"Final question," Allie announced. "If you stopped sharing the upper room you have here, does that mean Linda loses the church?"

"Not at all. Don't get me wrong here. We get on very well, and Ann and I will defend Linda against all-comers. We are making a go of this. How's your Serninsea house, Allie?"

"Good. I can do my paintings there."

"And do you ever see this man you grew up with - don't correct me, Linda style - now you are a county away?"

"Can we trade on this, Adam? Anything else to tell me?"

"Okay. Cheryl Mould. I've been with her as well, after she stopped being Cheryl Little."

"Ah. Right. So my answer is no. I don't see him. I'm still a postgraduate at Somerset, of course, but no. He longs for me. I can't see him - it would upset him. He thinks I am in Somerset now. They all do."

"And, Allie, what did you make of Linda at Margate?"

"Anything to trade?"

"Ask me a question."

"Did you use a turkey baster? For children!"

"It is not funny, Allie. No. We did it the natural way, if you must know. I'd had sexual intercourse with Ann before, obviously. Three goes with Labhaoise, one with Ann was enough. Satisfied? Don't tell Linda."

"Adam, I'm not telling Linda anything."

"Margate?"

"A lot happened there. I thought Linda was purposeful and intelligent. He's around at the moment - Jonathan Eyre - isn't he?"

"Yes, and I want to know why. Is he seeing Elizabeth? Is he wanting to try it on with Linda again? Is John Barman in the area, but he won't show his face? I learnt that Eyre is a sexual predator, with well over twenty children from nearly as many women."

"Do you think Linda can resist him? If I see Rhiannon Fleetwood close, I'll have to restrain myself. She's had two kids, both by Eyre - fostered out. Being a single mother clergywoman wouldn't help her get sky pilot jobs, so she hides it."

"Did you have sex with her, Allie?"

"Come on! What do you take me for?"

"I don't know."

"What about Linda and Jonathan Eyre?" she asked me.

"She should resist him, but whether she will is another matter."

"Ah. There is just one more thing, Adam."

"Shoot, Columbo."

"What do you think of Maurice Neptune and Linda?"

"It is simple. If she really wants to go off with him, I won't stop her. I'll stand aside. She falls for people very easily, but he might just offer something she needs. Perhaps this place will become a synagogue with her as a rabbi. There you go. As for falling for people: she might for you, Allie. I'd be careful if I was you. She could compromise you: have you thought of that?"

"She won't compromise me."

"Are we done?"

"We're done. Thank's for our mardle, Adam. I'll make sure my notes I make stay in the house and I do encrypt them all as well. I'll interview the sky pilot herself now."

"Nothing, absolutely nothing, about Diana going away in the past. Right?"

"Sure."

"This conversation was confidential, and I'll monitor for you leaking anything."

"Of course."

"Your name: 'Shrimpton' - not like the model."

"There aren't many. Shrimptons tend to be connected."

"No middle names? Linda doesn't have a middle name."

"I wasn't given a middle name. Neither was Jonnie - my cousin."

Narrator: Linda Allie Interviews Linda (Monday 18th November 2019)

In the vestry, with one eye on the consulting room, I was conversing with Roger. He asked me what I thought of Derrida's effect on theology.

"It's the linguistic turn," I said. "It reduces claims, doesn't it?"

"Flattens everything out, and then expands everything."

"I don't think does theology justice, as an art and a mystery."

"Doctrine revives," he suggested

"Nah. Like Baudrillard, symbols become simulcra and collapse in. Religious symbolism can't be separated from advertising."

I asked, "Where do you uphold this? Are you from around here?"

"No, from the Leeds area. I don't go anywhere. Wytham Cathedral, sometimes."

"Someone special in your life, Roger?"

"We share interests, empathy, sympathy, bonding, loving. We tell people we are from large villages outside Leeds, Garforth and Sherburn in Elmet. We decided to come to the coast, and this place had cheap property and we could start afresh."

"There was a problem?"

"Not now."

Allie and Adam came out of the Consulting Room. Adam went for the staircase and Allie came to me.

"Here you be," said Allie.

"Tell you another time - possibly," said Roger.

"Only if you want to tell me," I said.

Roger decided he'd go.

"Interview?" asked Allie.

"Go on. But before you do, are you making friends or a relationship with Klärchen Sisse?"

"Been in her house."

"What I mean is, if you did it would put my mind at rest."

"About what?"

"About whom."

"Me?"

"Her. Are you getting together with her?"

"I apply your statement given to Roger. And I don't want to tell you."

"I'd like to know."

"Ask her. I'm a researcher here. I can't pass things on."

"As a 'participant' you can answer me: how is she with her dog, compared with how she is with you?"

"She doesn't take me for walks - unlike you."

"Yes, I'm sorry about that before."

"I'm not sorry about this now."

"You're obviously not going to tell me."

"Confidentiality: something you know about. Can I interview you?"

"Get on with it."

"Right. You here were the second daughter of a known local naturist family?"

"As a deacon, a priest, I was sort of known by some and a lot went unsaid."

"You're bred and born here, hintut. Would you say that Serninsea is a bit weird?"

"Because Klärchen is weird? Because I am weird?"

"I'm not implying you're a warmint."

"A what?"

"Very troublesome, odd."

"I see."

"When you had the scandal unfolding, did you know you would become independent?"

"No. I think Ann and Adam saw it, probably via what Christine had done. I was a bit stupid having Geoff and his partner in the parish church, but I was so frustrated. By the way, you strike me as a bit weird yourself, Allie. I wanted you ordained so to use any of your undoubted charisma of weirdness. Ha ha."

"Reverend Cromer at the ordinations told me he'd given up on you, afore."

"Oh did he now? You're happy to blurt about me when it suits you then."

"Your time with him deteriorated. It's background for me."

"I've moved on."

"He said he'd moved on. Roland Mitton and I are interested in small sects, and these independent movements are as small as they get. The fact you've had an actual church built for you and you intended a parish is unusual. You're operating in a friendship structure."

"I am, am I?"

"Hintut?"

"Is it a structure? Adam and I rediscovered each other locally - I hope we are more than friends; Geoff I also found but so did Christine. I didn't know Christine before. Jenny, of course. You hope to rely on people."

"Your love life, your emotional life, is involved."

"I suppose you are alluding to the reality that Adam and I don't love each other in the full sense you'd expect."

"I never allude to anything. Adam and you go back a long way."

"Yes, and Ann's. I suppose he's told you about him oggling at the teacher, and me coming on the scene. She used him in a struggle with her own sexuality and it affected him: as it happens she has stayed with Labhaoise a long time."

"Geoff is gay; you're bisexual."

"As you already know: I'm genetically male, female phenotype, female gender, bisexual. Adam is heterosexual; Jenny is probably lesbian but has tried to convince herself otherwise. She might have thought being lesbian was a syndrome. Geoff is very gay. And you?"

"No."

"'No' what? I'd like to know. You dress like that for a pupose. You've probably got the boys - and girls - after you... The Reverend Deacon Allie, your bishop wants to know."

"What abaht Diana?"

"Diana? She isn't involved in church things."

"She shows interest, don't she?"

"As a friend. She is a friend."

"Do you think she has relevant secrets or, er, unknown stances per'aps?"

"That Diana has a secret? Has Adam said something?"

"Or a stance. Perhaps not then. Like, er, she dun't show her religion to you?"

"She doesn't have any religion: are you implying she has a secret religious outlook?"

"I'm not implying. I'm asking; she seems complex."

"Do you know something I don't?"

"This report by, yes, Adam. It's all secrets that were slowly uncovered."

"You're starting to irritate me, Allie. And I hope you've been keeping your distance from Jenny."

"Get closer to Klärchen, keep your distance from Jenny. Are you my mawther?"

"I have a pastoral role. And I have not actually suggested that you get closer to Klärchen."

"Jenny can't be a friend?"

"Her drinking is one reason for concern."

"These secrets, Linda, they were slowly..."

"The group under the Confraternity was secretive, and I want to avoid that now. Answer my question, Allie. You weren't meaning Diana's secret religious outlook. Don't bullshit me."

"So what your plans be for this place?"

"Allie! Do you know something I... don't? Does Diana have a secret?"

"These plans..."

"Have you just let off?"

"I'll open the door."

"Don't. It's private. I'm going to think about Diana and what it could be."

"What this church and your plans be?"

"What these plans be, Allie?"

"Don't mock me."

"Oh, what the fuck. I will run the church. So my plan is to be as liberal as my theology without the double-speak I had in the National Church. I want it open and fluid on all counts. I want to develop a parish. If the National Church parish goes evangelical, this one here will not. So, come on..."

"Right. And Elizabeth Huett? I'll look at the dynamics. You're happy she is here?"

"Am I happy you are here?"

"Why are you so hostile towards me?"

"Perhaps if you controlled your backside."

"I'm nervous! What do you think about people? Liz?"

"Elizabeth, yeah. She seems to fit in, I think. I can be tolerant, see. Her. You. Christine has different views from me, but her unique roles in life mean she has a place here. She is ecclesiastically authoritarian, but if she can live with me then I can live with her. Elizabeth - hmm - is doing quite well. What about you, Allie?"

"They probably want to revive the conferences and the more intimate services."

"Really? They can be managed on a secular basis."

"But you know that Christine doesn't think on a secular basis. How do you view the prospect of facing up to her on this issue?"

"Do you think I will have to do that?"

"It is hypothetical. I'm not saying."

"Like with Diana? Except that would be a secret in the past."

"I'm just asking. How would you do it? If Christine wants to revive what took place under the previous Confraternity?"

"You seem to know more than me about people's intentions and secrets. Well, Allie, I'd veto it. Intimacy is one thing, orgies are another. Have you dropped one again?"

"Your clothes come off a lot. You like this don't you?"

"I encourage it," I said. "But I can see the boundaries. But let me ask you: how will we in your research ever stay anonymous?"

"I can say that I will call this place 'Mapleton' after some trees the professor and I noticed. You will all have different names. I'm afraid an investigator like Adam elsewhere would probably find the location. I have to keep everything academic and theory-related."

"Theories?"

"I'm afraid I cannot discuss my work. But I need to stay close to you as the decision taker, and also because decisions are made in informal places. I'm not exactly asking to be abed with you and Adam, but it strikes me you take some decisions informally."

"Yes, we probably do. Even in bed. Sorry about that. But upstairs is private. When I open the door, it'll drift upstairs - holding my nose too."

"I may ask permission to stay with you on nights when decisions might be taken. I'm not embarrassed, as you have seen already."

"I have, yes. You're quite a tart, Allie Shrimpton. Your backside might even warm the bed."

"There's no need to be rude; I'm only doing my research. Why you be so rude?"

"You were rude first. Have you finished this interview now?"

"Yes, I think so."

"I need to open the door. You'd better revert to following me around. Keep downwind. I might go and masturbate. Come upstairs for that. Do you want to come and see if it leads to me making any decisions?"

"Would it?"

"Just do what you have to do."

"I hope that we can at least work together."

"Come on. Heel now. Walkies."

"I'll come lolloping along, Mistress. Bishop Mistress. To think I used to... Where we going?"

"I'm going to read a book. Derrida and theology."

"Linda, please, answer me one more question. What have I done to get wrong?"

The problem was I could not answer her beyond the immediate smell. "I'll think about it as I read my book - on my own. Get some fucking fresh air."

"I'll go elsewhere to make some notes. I'll go and mark some territory outside in the gutter. Ask Dieter for some advice on technique."

"Yeah, that might suit," I said as I went away from her.

Visiting Yojana's Guest House (Thursday 21st November)

Nothing had happened on Wednesday; Diana had cancelled our get together and without a reason.

Allie Shrimpton asked if she could come along to Yojana's parents' guest house. Thursday she wore hefty orange boots and a black full-length flowing dress with orange stripes.

As I drove from the tenfoot I said, "Yojana was my husband's lover, in that group."

"I already know that."

"What you know and don't know. Like Rhiannon Fleetwood. What do you know and don't know about her?"

"I told you that she was a pest. That was a lot to declare."

"By the way, I asked Adam last night if he knew what Diana might have as a secret. I told him that I thought you might be holding something back, but I wasn't sure."

"Oh."

"Do you want to know what he said?"

"Do you want to tell me?" she asked in her infuriating manner.

"That if you were holding a secret, he wondered where you would have got it from. But he said I shouldn't assume a secret, because Diana is my friend and you were bound to ask about her."

"Plausible."

"No, it is not. It's waffle."

"I had secrets on my mind so it probably got a bit confused."

"Whose secrets?" I asked her.

"The group under the Confraternity - in general. I was thinking what to ask while you were answering me."

"An ethnographer looking to deceive meaning."

She said to me, "The difference between an ethnographer and symbolic interactionist is that the ethnographer looks more at the act and the symbolic interactionist looks more at the actor. But there is a lot of overlap and ethnography has the edge in extent of research methods."

"Allie, you are waffling now."

"But I think I am interested in the actors, and especially you as the main actor. So I want to see and hear as much as I can. Plus, I want to study how you use what Goffman knew was expressive talk in ritual - but is still instrumental in how you define the direction of this church."

(I thought of how the word 'actor' had been used.)

"Very interesting, Allie."

She went on: "I am between Erving Goffman and Harold Garfinkel and that is all I am prepared to say on my methods now."

"Clear as mud."

"Symbolic interactionism and ethnography. I secure the thick text material and when digitised I send encrypted samples to Roland."

"I'm not interested."

Silence followed, maintained all the way.

A new sign was outside the guest house, Maa Skelter Guest House, and the car park had fresh tarmac laid. I could see building work of a large conservatory being added.

Inside there was the smell of paint, as we went to the reception. Yojana Asthana herself appeared.

"I'm Bishop Linda, Mar Reticulum, here to see Bishop Bill Masters. This is Allie Shrimpton, a Ph.D student, who is doing confidential research on my church and its direction."

"Hello Linda. You don't have to be so formal. If it is any reassurance, I am no longer seeing your husband. This is to help Cheryl Mould."

"I'm separated, thankfully, with an uncontested divorce on its way."

"I'll just ring through." She did. "This Bishop Linda is here. Thanks. You'll be collected. I saw your ordination. Uncle San Bandyopadhyay sends his greetings."

"Does he now. So you left SMS?"

"Yes. I wasn't going to Felixstowe."

"You could have carried on with my husband."

"He's moved on. His partner is very pregnant now. It will be a boy."

"Once again I am the last to know. No one tells me anything. He's still in touch then."

"In a basic sense."

"Hello Linda." Oh hell. It was Jonathan Eyre who had come to collect me. "You catch me a day before I'm going back."

"I've come to see Bill Masters, not you. Is this some sort of set-up, Yojana?"

"I don't know about this!"

"You must have known he was here."

"Yes, I know he's been staying here, but not to see you."

Jonathan Eyre said, "Bill Masters is with me, and he will see you as well. But I want to talk to you, after you've seen him."

"I've nothing to say to you."

"Nevertheless, follow me upstairs. Who is this? I think..."

I said, "This is Allie Shrimpton, an interpretive sociology postgraduate researcher, using the strictest of confidential research strategies."

"I remember you," she said. "I work under Professor Roland Mitton and we are from the University of Somerset."

"I have a good memory for women," said Jonathan. "You wanted to do research in a seaside town."

"This is about church development, and it so happens it is in a seaside town. If the seaside town aspect is relevant, it will emerge."

We arrived at two attached rooms and an ensuite, the most expensive suite in the former bed and breakfast. Inside the 'lounge' with its kitchen facilities was Bishop Bill Masters, who got up and shook my hand.

Bill said, "Jonathan is staying here; I've come here to see you."

I asked Jonathan, "Are you staying or going?"

"I'll go."

Bill said, "Go and get the ladies a soft drink each, first. Linda - hello. Adam wants me to explain something to you. Hello Allie."

He waited while Jonathan gave us our drinks and left.

"What's he doing here?" I asked. "Don't you dare negotiate him into the LAE. I'll not have it."

"He wanted to ask my opinion, on whether he could apologise to you and you'd hear him out. I want to talk first and we can deal with him later. As for him into the LAE, it won't happen. He has visited clergy in other jurisdictions and been a tourist at Wytham."

"Are some of his women around here?"

"Two have visited. I want to say something different. I'm Jenny's mother's husband's brother. Jenny's mother slept with me. Jenny is mine, but she was raised as his."

I said, "There must be something in the water around here."

"I've been single most of my life - a few ships in the night until recently. Pauline and I are finally getting it together. We long ago invented the idea that I am gay so I would be an uncle only, to Jenny. It kind of went with my ecclesiastical interest, in an odd sort of way. Jenny doted on me as an uncle, and it is why when she became religious she also thought about ministry."

"You also influenced Geoff Virgo."

"Well, yes, because he really is gay, and she tried to 'correct' him. She recommended that at least he could be like her single uncle. She had an intense correspondence with him. She was scared she was gay, after your dallings, which was sinful according to her new religious crowd. But she kept her love for me. She fell in with the wrong people, and as a cleric I tried to warn her. I've always been in Independent Sacramental Ministry. So this is how Geoff knows me, and I have got to know others. Like Jonathan now, who is forced to go independent and sought my advice on this as well."

"Were you ever in this Serninsea Theatrical Ring?"

"No no. Jenny doesn't know about the extent of me and Pauline. We were in different independent Churches. She was in the Orthodox Catholic Ministries. I will have to continue to appear gay. Allie, are you listening?"

"Of course."

"Nothing to Jenny; I understand you have been friendly with her."

"I won't say a word."

"Good. Elizabeth won't talk to Jonathan, he says to me, which saddens him given the number of times they've slept together, including as three with Barman. He thought he might at least try and mend fences with her. Jonathan has stayed here trying to speak to her for several days."

"Good on Elizabeth," I said. "So you wanted me to know that you are Jenny's father."

"Elizabeth loves sex, as does Jenny, but the fact is that Elizabeth is not her girlfriend."

"I wondered. What about Fatima?"

"She was her oppressive boss. Elizabeth was more caring and Jenny attached herself."

"Elizabeth sounds frustrated," I said.

"They are stuck together, but it won't last. Jenny's hypochondria will irritate as will her lapses into mental illness. Jenny is utterly muddled with her sexuality, and she blames you. She is dangerously close to becoming alcoholic as well. Jonathan thinks that if Elizabeth breaks with Jenny, he might make an effort to realign her back. Just saying. Elizabeth continues to sleep with Jenny and above the church; she could take a room at the Blue Diamond Club instead."

"Allie," I said, "this is super-confidential."

"I know."

Bill said, "Neither of you even tell Jenny that you met me. Elizabeth knows you two are here. Derek Imperial is seeing her today, and taking Jenny means I can see you. Elizabeth has always referred to me as Jenny's uncle."

"What can she say to Derek Imperial?"

"I suppose 'sorry' might be a start. I think she will plead her case. It won't make any difference: her time as an Anglican is over. The other thing: Jonathan wants to talk to you. Are you going to hear him out?"

"Is it relevant?"

"Yes."

"Briefly," I said.

Bill went out for some minutes, and Jonathan Eyre came back alone.

I said, as he came in, "You betrayed me. I thought the world of you, and yet you were reporting me back to your bizarre mates."

"I was part of a group under the Confraternity."

"My husband knew what I'd done with you, when I thought he did not."

"He said you demonstrated your suitability for recruitment. You did."

"You're a cunt."

Jonathan said, "Keith treated the religion thing very seriously, as we pursued it. Terry knew he'd made a mistake with him before, rejecting him for ordination."

"So?"

"Terry realised he hadn't done his research, because Keith had both done theology and was all around the girls. And since rejection, he was never been loyal to you. Cheryl became his partner over two years. Yojana had two years with him in SMS. Cheryl is so naive. She is hoping that having this baby will turn him into a loyal family man. Not a chance."

"I give up," I said.

"Let me talk about Jenny, from what I know. She wants your love, Linda, but the trouble is she also hates you. You understand that, don't you? She blames you for everything. She blames you for her lesbian side. She blames you for her fake illnesses. It is irrational, I know, and she is now playing being rational and secular when, frankly, she isn't. It doesn't matter that society is so tolerant today. Do you know the person she really wants? It is not Liz."

I said, "Adam?"

"Yes. She imagines Adam is right for her. And, Linda, you are in the way. So she hates you again. Allie, you do well to keep your distance because you can be a proxy for Linda. Getting you pissed is a success for her."

"I worked that out," Allie said.

"Oh you did," I responded. "Anyway, Adam is asexual beyond us together. He wanks alone."

"Not really. No. Like Keith, he has been around the block, including your friends. You don't light his fire."

I turned to Allie. "Diana?"

"Don't ask me," said Allie.

"Well, let me ask you, Jonathan? Has he been with my friend Diana de Groot - she was Diana King - to the extent that there's an ongoing secret?"

"All I know is what I said: that Adam's been around the block, like Keith. Apparently you turned Adam off ordinary relationships with women, but the right woman might change that."

"Fucking hell. Am I to blame for everyone who can't cope?"

Jonathan said, "You are quite a woman. Adam is forced into a strange relationship with Ann Dromeghda. She guides him even sexually, but no one else does, including you."

"He doesn't have a sexual relationship with her."

"His sex with you is with her approval. If she says stop, he's gone. Close friend, no sex, except when she had his child, as did Labhaoise. Jenny is still more his woman than you."

"You seem to know all about this. What else do you know - about Diana for example?"

"The group knew all of this. George Wickenby did the heavy lifting. We didn't know about Diana de Groot." Margaret McEnhill is the final person we learnt about. We know she has acted like a double agent. We know she contacted Adam Magellan. She won't last in Anglican ministry. You can take her in as well, probably."

"And your lot knew all about me."

"We held you in the highest regard."

"To punish me."

"You were the person we wanted, really wanted. But, more than that, I did admire you. I do: why should I change my mind? I even admire your resistance. If only you would have been on board, the group would have flown. Linda: truly. You were the lynchpin. Barman would have wanted you as a bishop, and me too. Anyway, all that is done now."

"Yes it is."

"I think you are marvellous. I tell you who does want you, and exclusively: Rabbi Maurice. He is obsessed with you."

"What about Christine?"

"She is clever, and has done what she needs to do with you, just as she has with San Bandyopadhyay. She has him in her grip, but she leaves you alone. I'd love to see you and her clash."

"Hmm. It might be coming along. That's your opinion, isn't it Allie?"

"I ask questions."

"You and Christine are the most powerful women I know," said Jonathan. "Terry put you and her together at the retreat. That was a clever move, but the fireworks didn't happen. She is too clever for that. She's been weighing you up for a long time. When she split with us, she made sure you were on her side."

"By the way, how is that pregnant reverend I saw you with in Margate? Did you see her, Allie?"

Allie gave no reply.

He did. "You mean Julie. Julie Manns. She's had the baby, a lovely girl, and she is bringing her up. It's not easy for her. I stayed with her immediately after the scandal broke, but realised I needed to come up here - to see you."

"The baby is yours?"

"Of course."

"You've enough to fill a Sunday School, they say."

"Yeah. Twenty-seven."

"Adam counted twenty-five."

"I only see a few of them. Julie has indicated she wants to go it alone, so that was another reason to come up here now. Do you and me have no future?"

"What? Absolutely not!"

"I'm trying to see what is possible, from a point of view of reconciling, from a position of admiration. Linda, that Confraternity collective loyalty is dead and gone, but it allows my personal response to be clearer. I know why Maurice Neptune admires you, because I do as well."

"Hmm."

Now he looked with his stare into my eyes. "You are a beautiful woman. You are tall, slimmer than many, big breasted, incredibly intelligent, strategic, beautiful skin, and you have wonderful hair, even when short, and of course you have declared you are CAIS intersex. I could not work out your vagina when I looked into it. Now I think, what power comes from it."

"My skin was beautiful until Connie Wilson got to work."

"I want to apologise about that. She went far too far."

"Too far? Is this the Elizabeth defence?"

"No. Because she thought we wouldn't do it and was against it. I thought you should be punished, as part of collective authority, even if you submitted. But Connie Wilson confused sadism and punishment."

"So you recommended, say, only a few needles through my skin? Just a trickle of blood rather than a bloody mess for Barman's fucking?"

"No. Some strikes of perhaps a bullwhip, some vibrators. At the mikveh: you were gorgeous. As far as we could see it, you emerged from the mikveh like a goddess, but you should have had long wet hair, Linda. Connie should never have cut your hair. That was an act of degradation. She's a psychopath and he's a sociopath. A woman you are and beautiful in every sense. Whatever you think about what I did, you made that conference for me. I have never responded to any woman like I did to you."

"Hmm."

"Truly."

"You think that - really?"

"Yes."

"Hmm."

"You are a beauty, and your whole movement as a woman is fabulous. Really. To have you is glorious."

"Hmm."

"You are."

"What the fuck. I'm stirring down there. My guts too. It's the experience. I still want you, Jonathan. Allie, yeah, go and wait in the car."

Then Allie stood up, and said, "This goes no further."

"What?" He asked.

"Hey?" I asked. (What happened to her non-intervention?) "Mind your own business, girl!"

Allie then said at Jonathan, "I know your game. You tried it on with me, and I told you then: come any closer and I'll make you unconscious. I am telling you this now. Go near her, now, and I will lay you out."

"How old are you?" he asked.

"Thirty."

"Telling me, over twice your age, what to do?"

"I've told you. In fact, this interview with Linda is over."

I said, "I think we might have moved beyond that. Please go and wait in my car, Allie. No, I'll be longer than that. There's the bus along the coast road into Sutton, actually."

"No. This is over."

"Allie!" I shouted. "Get out! He stays."

Jonathan stood up.

She said, "I'm warning you. You now leave this room, go down that corridor outside to the right, and Linda and I will leave to the left. Got it?"

"I think Linda might have an opinion about this."

"Final warning."

"Allie. What are you doing?" I asked, getting worried, as her physical stance seemed to be altering.

Jonathan said to Allie, "You need a good seeing to, madam."

"Three seconds to leave this room."

"Yes. Yes, I'm going. I'm sorry Linda that you have her as your researcher. Clearly she is altering outcomes here. I am going to do as she says." He was moving into the doorspace, but paused. "And, when she turns on you, you'll do as she says as well. Goodbye, Linda. I did love being with you, more than any other. I wanted to love you. You're free to go."

He left the room and went into the corridor as Allie had instructed.

"Come on," said Allie, "we're going back to the church."

She grabbed my arm and pulled me. I said at her, "How dare you!"

As we went on, I turned and looked at Jonathan. I wondered if I should deny Allie's intervention, but Jonathan shook his head. So we went to the car, still pulled along by Allie, and I did not see Bill.

I said to Allie, released at the car, "You say nothing about this to anyone. You are a fucking cunt, you are. How dare you tell me what I will and will not do. I fuck whom I choose. You don't know the half of it, cunt."

"Get in and drive," she said.

So I did. As we proceeded, she then said, "I'm not heartless you know. I was impressed with your talk at Margate."

"I'll get you for this, Allie Shrimpton. I will, you'll see. I wanted him and I'm blaming you. In fact, I'm turning around and going back."

"No you're not."

"And what are you going to do about it?"

"Well, you won't be seeing him. It's as simple as that."

"You fucking cunt Alfia Shrimpton."

"Drive on."

"I am. I am."

Allie Gets into Bed (Friday 22nd November and overnight)

I was annoyed that my interfering researcher had taken away my chance of re-experiencing what Jonathan Eyre had the skill to do to me. I'd just fancied a wrecking session of sex.

I wanted to get my own back on Allie, to embarrass her.

I had a dream that my father was about to be welcomed into my body, when a naked Allie delivered a blow to behind his head, and then lectured me about right and wrong.

I was laid alongside Adam in bed as morning broke. "Consider our researcher," I said to him. "She claims that it is merely co-incidental that her church study is in a seaside town. She says that we make informal decisions in private places like together in bed."

"You're kidding," said Adam.

"It's a new one for participant observation, I admit, but she is right that we do decide things in bed. Do you know anything about her? She must have raised your curiosity."

"The professor is fairly well known," he said, "but she isn't. He's on TV a lot talking about historical communities and old religion. Kathryn and Kathleen talked about him doing a series on the economy organised by monasteries before Henry VIII."

I said, "I bet in ten years or so she is all over television. She's a charismatic woman, in the other sense."

"I don't know a lot about her," said Adam. "She says so very little."

"Find out and let me know!"

Once we were up, Jenny went inside the vestry silently and started using the computer, in her rather unpunctual and undisciplined manner. Her left hand seemed to be on her crotch all the time, so she was typing one-handed. She said nothing about her trip to Wytham with Elizabeth, who came down the stairs and simply went out. I hung about in the seating area.

In the afternoon a policeman came into the church, and, coming across the seating area, stood and looked at me. "Are you Bishop Linda Jupitas?"

"I am."

I noticed Allie coming in, hair looking voluminous, with a much younger woman under a peaked cap and dark spectacles on. They stayed by the double doors looking.

"I am Police Constable Mateo Ramírez. The local constabulary have received reports about casual nudity in this place, open to the public and children."

"Not true. We have had closed meetings on that basis, as we are entitled to do."

"There was nudity at an ordination service open to the public."

"It was a religious ritual, and we were shielded."

"Unless you want to be arrested and charged for causing harassment, alarm, and distress, I suggest you place very clear notices at the entrances that these are indeed private premises and adult nudity takes place. You must ban unaccompanied children at the very least, and perhaps it is wise for legal reasons to have a members and guests only policy."

"No, sir. We are open. I will have closed sessions for nudity - the doors will be locked. As for the mikveh, this facilitates religious rituals and the police will not interfere. Come and look at it."

He saw the opportunities for concealing by its walking design - backs to us, one frontal walk that can be shielded by holding up towels.

I said, "People can be shielded, and we can pull across folding doors."

"That will be all," he said. "We shall see what you do, and if complaints continue we will return."

"What are you looking at?" Allie asked the constable, as he returned towards the double doors.

The policeman said, approaching more the disguised woman, "Chica adorable. Dejame soñar contigo."

She didn't respond, but Allie then said, "I'm a Ph.D researcher."

Turning to her, he said, "I suppose you're the cynical anti-authority intellectual."

Allie said at him, "No saques conclusiones sobre mi sin saber."

"Tus palabras son claras y directas," he said, and off he went quickly.

I thought, that wasn't Gaelic.

"Es tu reputación," Allie said to her friend.

She replied, "Así están las cosas, una pena."

I realised then I'd met her before and now recognised her.

"I know it's you, Annie," I said, still at a distance. "Would you like to see Adam Magellan? He lives here."

"Here? No no. You didn't tell me that," the young woman said to Allie. "So are you going to come back with me or not?"

"¡Déjame soñar contigo en su lugar! No, I have to research. I don't mind going for a drink, Annie. Look, I'm ten years older than you. Anyway, I am seeking ones my age or older."

"Tu corazón es cruel, amigo; tu palabras son claras y directas. I could have taught you things."

"I might be able to teach you things, Annie."

"Like what?"

"Self-defence for one. I was taught by an older woman. And she taught a lot more besides."

"I'll go. You're obviously not interested beyond drinking."

"Thanks for the drink. Thanks for chatting."

I said to Allie, "Fascinating. How do you know her?"

"Found her in the pub. She knows about you in the church. She worked out Adam."

"Spanish?"

"She spent her younger years in Spain. She later did AS and A level Spanish at school, and made out she was learning it for the first time. And they made her Head Girl. She was hiding behind the language."

"And you?"

"We didn't have head girls or boys at Fakenham, and I didn't spend my early years in Spain. So something is happening here soon?"

"Kathleen!" (I was thus distracted.) I asked Kathleen to monitor the doors twenty minutes before the Vestal Virgins' meeting and only let her own group members in.

Allie found something to eat. I retreated into my vestry and accompanied Jenny, who stopped typing with two hands and went back to one hand only.

Having informed the other place, Peter came in and suggested that the police might be over-reaching their legal powers. Harassment, alarm and distress had to be proven.

"Hello Carrie," I said to Carrie Chopin near Allie. Carrie was back in charge of the eternal flame in its burner, which she was holding. "Someone has complained to the rozzers," I said. "We carry on with your meeting as planned. Ladies and gentlemen! In about twenty minutes there may be displays of translucent nudity. Anyone offended should leave; please take out any children." There were no children present. No one moved.

Carrie said to me, "We would be interested if you could join in with our very first meeting here. Presumably you are free to make your own decisions now."

"Thank you for considering me."

Allie said, "This means I should come in."

"I don't think you'd be well-received," said Carrie.

"Then I must decline," I said. "She is my researcher, and where I go she goes."

Allie looked at me and smiled.

"Carrie said, "All right. But we don't want to hold back this time, like when you attended us before."

I asked, "Can't I come in and just observe? I would observe your confidences."

"Linda, you should participate."

"Look, maybe not. I wish your group all the best. We've locked the doors to casual incomers so feel free to do whatever you do. But, would you like to use the mikveh?" I asked. "We use it to mark significant moments for the future. The only thing is, you'd have to remove these discs."

Carrie said, "Thank you for asking. However, for our sessions we must wear these discs. Whilst our bodies and names are different, we are all SVV and the discs are the same size and shape."

So Allie and I watched as they processed over to the chapel area in a line, led by Carrie and her lamp, with Paige carrying an empty lamp, a taper, a flannel and a towel, and Winnie also in line holding two quite large goblets and one of those plastic potties I seem to have seen once or twice in car boot sales. I could only imagine. They closed the folding doors to the chapel, so I asked that the doors be unlocked. Stuff the police.

"What do you do for leisure, Allie? Anything I can join in with you?"

"I can't socialise with you, Linda. I'm afraid you should see me only when I am researching."

"Well, then I have a dilemma for you. Because when I go to bed with Adam tonight, I'm going to ask him his view of Christine and the conferences. Adam now owns the rights to above the casino."

"You can't ask him earlier?"

"No. Because it is not a meeting but a conversation."

"Then I would like to join you, if possible. I can sleep in a chair when you sleep - if you let me go upstairs."

"But we might go off to sleep and then talk in the morning. You might be dozing away."

"You could wake me up."

"We might talk quietly, and not notice anything beyond ourselves."

"Then, with your permissions of course, I could sleep on the edge of the bed."

"The bed takes three, Allie. Big room, big bed."

"Then there is space. But you can't discuss it over a meal, say?"

"No. Sometimes I like a meal for eating, Allie. I'm sorry if it embarrasses you, Allie, or puts you in a tight spot. Not literally. You don't seem to be as comfortable about it as you make out. Do you have exhaust issues?"

I had a smile on my face, because I had caught my prey. And bed time could not come quickly enough.

When bedtime came, I gave Allie a time to knock on our door from the outside lounge. First, Adam and I used the shower, the toilet each and brushed our teeth together before we got into bed and soon Allie knocked on the door.

"Come in, Allie."

She entered with a bag. "Thank you for facilitating my research. I will need to use your bathroom. Do I wear a nightie or pyjamas or something?"

"Don't be silly, Allie, we don't wear anything in bed. Come on: what am I?"

So we heard the shower going, and her on the bog and water running.

"Hmm. This could be rather pleasant," said Adam.

"This is according to research protocols," I said back.

And out she came, naked and gorgeous as ever with her long red hair, full breasts, shaven.

"I was thinking, Allie, that if you were not in between us, you might not hear us too well."

Adam looked at me, so I stared at him back and squeezed his testicles.

"In between you two?"

"Yes. Adam won't be intimate with me tonight. If we want sex, you can come over the top of me and go to the side."

"I might then go back to my accommodation."

Adam said, "No, Allie. Don't go out in the dead of night. If it reassures you, I have no interest in you and I won't be excited by you. Are you wearing perfume?"

I said, "Rather heavily, it seems. She tends to fart a lot and heat the place up."

Adam laughed. "There speaks someone who's on the loo like she's on a diet of vindaloos."

Allie said, "That's very revealing and poetic, Adam."

I said, "I'm not two faced - Adam isn't exactly 'fart-free' himself. Come on in, Allie. Climb over me and get warm the traditional way."

She climbed over me - I enjoyed that - and slid in between us. "Hmm," she said. "I don't know where to look."

I said, "Face up, look at the ceiling, and then you'll hear us - in stereo!"

Then she said, "Sorry, Adam, I'll mind where I put my hand next time. Can I squeeze my hand in between us?"

He said, "You are an extra centre of gravity. Nice that you're here. Sorry. lasses, I'm indeed about to fart myself."

Adam made a long reverberating sound.

I said, "Hey, your Annie came in earlier with madam here and they were speaking in Spanish."

Adam then put the screen on and soon we saw Annie, Jördis and Jördis's boyfriend again. (He was clothed.)

"Adam! Put it off. Hmm," I said, enjoying every minute. "Well, my concern is about your business and our religious operation and regarding Christine's activities. You've inherited above the casino - the right to use it."

"Basically correct."

"And I discovered from the Titansea Grand that Christine paid through the nose to compete with John Barman; she won't want to do that again when you have above the casino."

"Her proposed use there is connected with my ownership of access."

"The problem is I want all that stopping. I don't want us going back to square one. She'll have people staying at the hotel, and then coming over to the casino building for the partying and her approach to religion. She will do it from all the ideology in which she believes."

"You agree with her sex ideology."

"But I say you can believe it and be intimate even, but not go back to what was so wrong before."

"What was wrong before was the secrecy," he said. "Presumably, this would not be secretive. And also, she wouldn't be using this place, here, would she, and you wouldn't want anything like that going on downstairs?"

"Definitely not. No. Adam, let me lie here and think about the whole issue. Why I wanted to mention it here, Allie."

"Interesting," she said.

"You're lovely and warm, Allie. Let's hope the perfume wears off."

"What are you thinking?" she asked me. "I mean about what Adam is saying."

"How to separate what Christine does and the association with this place. Trouble is, we are in the same denomination. And this is as much her base as mine. Maybe when I wake up something will come to me."

So Adam said, "Do I have permission to go to sleep then, Linda? I've had a busy day. You won't let me watch Annie."

Allie said, "Don't let my presence put you off."

"You haven't. We get more work and cannot shirk now that George has retired. And I am tired."

"Poetic again," said Allie.

I said, "Yes, we shall sleep. But if I think of something, I might wake you."

"Then wake me please," said Allie. Then she said, "Oops, sorry." She'd farted after all.

"Pork sausages?" I asked.

Adam said, "With herbs." He then let off a long loud one again.

"I'll get you two converted for gas supply."

So we did drift off to sleep, and Adam turned in Allie's and my direction, but when I did wake in the middle of the night, Allie was facing me and her right arm and hand was over my left hip. I needed a pee, so uncoupled myself from her. The result was she opened her eyes.

"I'm going to the loo," Allie said. "Oh. I'll wait."

I went.

Allie went.

"It needs five minutes," Allie said, on returning, getting into the middle again, as delicately as she could. "You may resume your position," I said quietly.

"I have!" She was also very quiet.

"Before, your hand was on my hip."

"Sorry."

"Nothing to be sorry about, Allie. If you're comfortable, put it on my hip again."

She thus faced me and put her hand on my hip. "Thanks," she whispered.

"Let us sleep now."

And then when my eyes opened again, it wasn't long before we would get up.

But first I asked, "What do you think Adam?"

"Morning," said Allie. "I promise not to fart again."

"What about?" he asked me, half awake.

"About Christine and above the casino?"

"What does it matter?"

"It matters."

"The media will have lost interest, because you're independent now, and let her do what she wants. She's worried that her prostitutes' prices have fallen, so let her bring back some external business."

"Meet the new boss, same as the old boss," I said. "Gosh you're warm, Allie. Adam, are you pulling at something?"

"Sorry."

Allie said, "It is very nice here. Let me know next time when you will make a decision in bed, but hopefully not too often. May I use the bathroom first?"

"Sure."

Allie disappeared into the ensuite and I heard her brushing her teeth.

Adam said, "What a beautiful arse she has got."

"I know, I know. Pork sausages with herbs. Something you should know: she's a hell of a poker player. Jonathan Eyre tried to make an advance on me, and she told him she'd make him unconscious and lay him out."

"Really?"

"She took command."

Allie opened the ensuite door and one face, falling hair and one breast appeared. "I think I heard that right. I wasn't playing poker. I meant it." She shut the door.

"Nothing wrong with her ears," said Adam. "I am inclined to believe her as well. As for that arse..."

"Stick to Annie's."

The shower started running, and I so wanted to join her.

"Find out about her," I said to Adam. "I mean, Spanish and Gaelic?"

He said, "She farts in English."

"I bet it's north Norfolk. Coastal food, you know."

"You must be an expert," Adam said, "the frequency you shit."

"Yes, frequency rather than volume," I replied. "But less than it was. You can spunk on to my leg when you're done."

A Service (Sunday 24th November)

We'd taken our time but the first ordinary service at the church was quite mundane, really. My own liturgy was an adapted Anglican one - just through familiarity, actually. I took the creed out and lessened very much the Calvinist stuff on sin. As for the numbers, we had Christine, Elizabeth, Bill, Pauline and me, all co-presiding, and then Kathleen, Winnie and Peter, and seven congregants were Roger Humphrey,

Laura Kingswood, Andrew Walter, Paula Campbell, Marjorie Jack, Bella Jack, and someone called Lisa Callow, grey haired and maybe approaching sixty, who gave me an email address for any contact and signed that we could keep this data. I realised we needed an attendance book for basic contact details but one that met data registration regulations. So Marjorie had come over.

As for my sermon, I decided to speak on reconciliation.

"When people express regret and wish to make amends, on all sides, there is a duty of reconciliation.

"When a wrong is taking place, Jesus tells us to turn the other cheek. It sounds incredibly passive. But what it does do is cause the offender to ask, 'What is happening?' The cheek turned is like a mirror. It is the first act, and quickly, to attempt reconciliation with the punch thrower.

"On reconciliation, the Beatitudes work best in the more material approach in Luke than in spiritualised Matthew - as a physical form of hope with justice that is integral to the Kingdom of God. This is the model laid out, if only we could achieve it.

"One must be aware, and actively resist evil, and, whenever it happens, repent and return to justice and to God. You love your neighbour as yourself. That's reciprocal. Before reciprocity, you simply respect the dignity of every human being.

"In the Hebrew Bible at Genesis 32, instead of Esau (the oldest son) receiving Isaac's blessing, a plot of trickery takes place so that younger son Jacob receives his father's blessing instead. The story in Genesis is about Esau being annoyed and then a process of reconciliation happening, beginning with God and indeed Jacob making amends with Esau after his encounter with angels.

"People often seek God before they make amends, but what is broken with one another is broken with God. So they should make amends first, first with people and then restoration with God.

"Making reconciliation has to be deliberate. See Genesis 32:3-5 for when Jacob had to take the initiative. It isn't enough to say 'time heals wounds' or similar. But if the offender doesn't take the initiative, then the offended can meet the offender one-to-one in private, as in Matthew 18:15, and make the meaning of the wrongdoing unambiguous.

"In Genesis 33 it says Jacob, '...bowed to the ground seven times until he approached his brother.' In other words, he was humble and sincere. You have to admit your own fault in the relevant setting. And Esau? He ran to meet Jacob, hugged him and kissed him and they cried. They indeed embraced, and to embrace is to risk the emotion in the relationship coming back together again. The alternative, however, is isolation, and this will not do. But it calls upon the offended to forgive for the reconciliation to work and to last. After forgiveness comes restitution through some kind of compensation - it is not a free pass. What was damaged is materially restored. Into this exchange God sees the light that is in every one.

"Matthew. 5:23-24 has the same teaching. First reconcile with your brother and then offer the gift at the altar in that communing with God.

"In the Christian New Testament in Luke Chapter 19, Zacchaeus is despised as a tax collector and, being not tall, climbs a tree to see Jesus and his group pass along. Jesus looks up to the despised outcast and calls him by name, to Zacchaeus's surprise. Jesus even goes to the home of this man - of all men - in an act costly to Jesus among the annoyed crowd. Yet the effort bears fruit: sinner Zacchaeus turns around and pledges to give half of his possessions to the poor as well as give four times compensation to those he defrauded. Reconciliation is demonstrated, brought about by the ministry of someone not offended but saw what was good in this person. Zacchaeus was one of the lost who was sought out and saved, and it is not an easy process. And this man's actions was rather more impressive than those who obey religious rules regularly but do nothing practical to move matters on.

"Here we see that guilt and shame are less effective motivators than the grace of reaching out, a grace that changes hearts and turns people around. When justice follows forgiveness, there is a lasting peace.

"The ministry of reconciliation is at the heart of the Gospel. Indeed it is the overall framing of meaning in the crucifixion and resurrection. And we say, God reconciled us to himself through Christ.

"Don't, whatever happens, as the wronged, seek revenge, even if there is punishment. It is hardly the prayerful attitude required. This isn't easy to avoid, but sincerity must come with prayer - or it is not prayer.

"Reconciliation cannot be forced; it needs courage: and the ability to be flexible and graceful lets a new page be turned. Vulnerability opens the possibility of being bathed in love. Amen."

Afterwards, Elizabeth alongside Bill and Pauline thanked me for these words. She said Bill had told her that Allie and I had been dismissive of Jonathan Eyre. She said that Jonathan had not expressed regret, sufficiently, and therefore we were right to walk out on him. Bill said he had tried.

Lisa Callow, it turned out, had no previous religious experience beyond trying a few places out. Andrew and Laura, said that Reverend Rhiannon Fleetwood's new broom was crass and they'd rather connect with Bishop Christine and me. Thinking of the Anglicans made me think of the new New Life fellowship developing, and we ought at least to meet them. The folks around me had no objection to a conversation, so I asked Jenny to send out a request to meet.

Publicity (Sunday 24th November)

Later on Sunday Kathryn and Kathleen talked to Allie and me about publicity and the specialist services they would offer.

Kathryn said, "We will go back into the national press, as when modelling."

I responded, "This time it has to be done through the Daily Morse. Contractual, faithful."

"We were thinking we could offer a full range of massages, including nuru."

"What is that?"

"Body on body," said Kathleen. "Christine said businessmen - mainly men - would pay handsomely for us together to do body to body massages using lots of gel."

"Oh great. This is what's happening again."

"The only equipment needed is a greased airbed, but, given the size and dimension of some businessmen these days, the airbed ought to be at least Queen sized."

"Her Majesty? First or Second?"

"Double."

"You didn't mention an airbed before," I said. "There is a padded bench."

"Goody body to body: don't want to slide off the bench."

"Would Winnie do this role?" I asked.

"Like me," said Kathleen (it could only be Kathleen), "she can't have sex with clients either. Vestal Virgins and all that."

I demanded, "Can we can get away from this idea of having sex with clients? Here, massages are intended for body and spirit renewal."

Kathleen said, "Christine would do more."

"I don't doubt it," I responded. "But not here. There is Elizabeth at the Blue Diamond Club. Oh, buy an airbed and try something uplifting."

I went upstairs, trailed by Allie, with permission, and found Jenny, who let us enter her first floor bedroom. She was on her bed. She seemed a little distant. "I'm sweating. It's so hot in here." (It wasn't.) Anyway, she came down with us saying that lazy journalists need precise words. The less work journalists do the more chance publicists have in gaining editorial material.

So Jenny set about making up a press release, shown to Allie and me.

Archaeology twins Kathryn and Kathleen may not be raising dead bodies these days, but they will be reviving tired bodies up in the small, isolated coastal resort of Serninsea in Wytham.

"This will be very much a premium service," says Kathleen.

"We offer it for the most busy, stressed-out, decision-makers who come here for a well-earned rest."

Kathryn says, "It must be all holy and above sin, because the massage service is part of a flexible set-up of pastoral relaxation oversight offered by the Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia.

"Our particular pastoral service is unique, as far as we know, but it's such a holistic model it's bound to be taken up elsewhere, a real fresh expression."

Choices are standard massages or the body to body nuru massage carried out on an airbed.

I said, "Jenny, you're rather good at this but I think we'd better ask them if they would say these things before it goes off."

"The paper doesn't do topless, but hints of breasts and bare backs."

So we three waited. Peter came in and headed for the wet room with a contraption on a hose. Then the twins returned with a large flat package and headed for the wet room. We went over and the three were using a rechargeable pump to inflate a queen-size airbed acquired at a store open for six hours.

They approved of Jenny's text.

I had a thought to put to them. "You can't both be a single person in the magic act but twins doing massages with national publicity."

Kathleen said to me, "We look a bit different since I've been pierced. We are not trying to look alike any more. She has her boyfriend and I have my girlfriend."

"It's a crap way of doing magic," said Peter. "Half the locals knew of the twins, and most of them told the other half."

"Jesus was no good around Capernaum," I said. "Too well known."

Jenny proposed more photos with oil dripping from the twins' fingers. Yet no sooner had she made the suggestion that she ran off, and went upstairs. I thought at first she had gone for a camera, but she did not come back.

Where was Bishop Elizabeth? I wondered, leaving Peter to find a camera and for him to take photographs. Now Elizabeth appeared down the stairs and seemed rather flustered. Allie had vanished as well. Perhaps taking photographs did not matter.

So I asked Liz, "Is Jenny all right?"

"Oh, she gets like this from time to time. Gets very creative, excited, full of ideas and blows out. All the stress of recent times may be releasing itself now that the controversy is over. There's no longer any pretence of being a minister. And she's added being hot to her non-symptoms, claims its origin is in vaginal illness."

Half an hour later I found Allie in the consulting room writing into a notebook. It was the first time I'd seen her writing with a pen. She had a bag too, rather large, out of which she took some hand-held tube thing, and ran it down her hand-written pages. I kept my distance.

A Meeting (Tuesday 26th November)

Christine Vine had something to tell me. Margaret Lindbeck, Mar Akelda, had left the Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia already! She had joined the Free Liberal Church, to be their Bishop of Durham.

"Well, she didn't last a minute," I said, as I sat with my mid-morning breakfast in the dining area.

Locally, I was supposed to be in charge, but I was losing control. Everything was sliding in one direction: towards sexual services in one sense or another. Perhaps it was the lure of money, or maybe the locality. To me, the body and intimacy, that included sex, was one thing, but sexual services was another. Adam didn't care, and Christine wanted to serve her known customers.

Indeed, Christine had already created an initial client list for Kathleen and Kathryn, to get them started with the massages. These clients seemed to want both twins, they reported, and an option of them wearing white tunics was not popular. Allie, in black leathers, took a look at their preparations, and I decided to stay away.

"How was it?" I asked Allie afterwards.

"Fine. Very attractive women getting used to their moves."

Meanwhile, on the big screen came Bishops Geoff and Luis. Goodness knows what other dining area snackers thought of our religious meeting. Jenny sat to take the minutes. Peter came in and so did Winnie. Kathryn and Kathleen were busy! I was last to the table, as it happened, alongside Bishops Elizabeth, Bill and Pauline. I was in trousers, blouse, sweater and trainers - the days of cassock wearing were long over. Allie sat alongside me.

Jenny took apologies for absence, being Kathleen. Jenny said, "They're sliding their bodies over blokes' bodies."

"Not yet," said Allie.

"Huh," Jenny said at Allie. "Poking your nose, or your tits, into everything."

"I kept my clothes on," Allie replied.

Jenny guided us quickly towards declaring the minutes of the last meeting a true record, adding, "I might have to leave because I have a vaginal itch."

Christine started. "Bishop Margaret Lindbeck has left us, but not because of any such itch. What do we do?"

Geoff said, booming over the dining area, "These things happen in Independent Sacramental Ministry. She was obviously unhappy with her designated diocese. But the solution is to extend Bishop Liz Huett's, to include all the north and Scotland."

"A long way to travel," she said.

I said, "It's just a name."

"Oh, I don't know," she replied, "Mar Reticulum."

So I added, "No one expects you to hold a service in Wick in the morning and Middlesbrough in the afternoon."

"Do I minute this conversation?" asked Jenny, presumably over her itch.

No, we said, except to note the fantasy geography action of extending Liz's coverage.

Luis said, "We do hope to get interest in Scotland. Wales looks promising: Bishop Niall Ifan, he's just resigned. So has Bishop Afanwen Ffrwyth. Could we attract Bishop Arianwen Bron?"

I said, "We don't want the ex-Suffragan Bishop of Casnewydd nor the ex-diocesan Bishop of Mynyw."

"Niall didn't do anything," said Elizabeth, "beyond his affairs with women. Afanwen might have more of a problem over seeing her niece."

"Anyway," I said, "I propose we send Margaret Lindbeck our good wishes. Reconciliation, as I preached."

Geoff said, "But the Free Liberal Church is not apostolic by confession or consistent practice; she is throwing away her heritage and wasting her ontological status. She's used us to get a correct ordination."

"We don't know that," I responded.

Geoff added, "I fancy with her gone that we strengthen our ecclesiology and change the name of the Church. I would prefer something like Old Apostolic Ecclesia."

"I'm against that," I said. "The use of 'Liberal' is important. This is a fully inclusive and broad-minded Church indicated by that definition."

Christine said, "This parish, might be, but the Church as a whole is about proper order, and the 'Old' says something about focus. The Free Liberal Church has other bishops that are elected superintendents. It's high, supposedly sacramental, but it is Protestant."

Peter interrupted: "It is a reinvention of Free Catholicism. It does a lot with symbolism, but loose on everything else."

Christine asked me, "By the way, did you ever consider 'bethel' as a local name?"

I responded: "No. But let me address the main suggestion. Calling the denomination 'Old' gives entirely the wrong impression. 'Old' is obscure, doctrinally remote, strange, unconnected. Liz, do you have a view?"

"There are arguments both ways."

"So?"

"Well, 'Liberal' in this context is Liberal Catholic, as in Theosophy and all that breakaway, which is peculiar, whereas 'Old' can even go back to the Netherlands Old - 1770s and all that. On the other hand, by using only the word 'Liberal' it gives a more open sense."

"This fence you're sat on isn't too painful for you?" I asked Liz.

"More a kerb than a fence," she replied.

"Are we going to vote on this?" I asked.

Christine said, "No, I don't think so. We clearly don't have a consensus."

Luis said, "It was just a suggestion. We'd thought about it over here."

Peter said, "For what it's worth, I agree with Linda."

"So do I," said Winnie.

"Allie?" I asked.

"I'm on the kerb."

"Nudge up to Liz."

Christine then said, "Though some of you vote, like a Synod, this is an apostolic Church where the bishops decide. Clearly it is a higher level matter and a Confraternity matter of decision and guidance."

I said, "So among the bishops it is one and a half votes to 'Liberal' against three and a half for 'Old'." Christine added, "Abstentions are zero not half split. We're not voting on this. We will talk further."

I gave a face gesture, saying, "I'll order some more kerbstones."

"Any other business?" asked Jenny.

"Yes," I said, "This business of serving business conferences. Can't they be secular?"

Christine said, "Listen. The purpose of the Confraternity, of the whole commitment, of how I do my specific ministry, is to put these under ecclesiastical understanding."

Geoff said, "We approve of this approach."

"I approve of intimacy," I said, "and the body, and sex, and the orgasm of course, but not orgies for business people and clerics under the umbrella of religion."

Geoff then said, "I'm not sure orgies are proposed."

I said to Christine, "You'd better clear up the misunderstanding."

"We're working out what we can call a 'gathering'," said Christine. "Adam has already said we can hold our gatherings above the casino. If I hire the hotel, and even Maa Skelter, it costs a fortune. Let them stay at the Titansea Grand, when they come to Serninsea, but we can hold the Body Eucharist above the casino. It won't include an A frames contraption, Linda."

"That comment is unnecessary," I said. "Oh, do what you like - but don't involve me and don't involve this building."

Christine said, "Minute that Jenny; this seems to be the solution we want. Elizabeth: SMS are coming to town for a meeting. Will you use your contacts as well?"

"Yes. Sure. I'll use my job at the BDC."

"Of course," said Christine.

I was grumpy but moved on. "The only other thing to report is we get a reasonable number using the dining area, like now. I began our ordinary services with a tiny congregation: our four deacons make up a core. And we have the Serninsea Vestal Virgins making good use of our space."

Christine said, "I've no objection, but they are not us."

Winnie said, "I hope we stay close."

"So do I," I said, "which is why I said they can come for free. Pity Kathleen is busy. The massages are under way and should generate some income, as do a number of consultancies. A naturist club might pay soon, beyond gymnology. On that point, Jenny, make a note that we had the police here warning us against nudity in public."

"That would be right - care is needed," said Luis, so I thought Christine must have given Bristol a sanitised version of what she was considering.

With this, the meeting was brought to a close; the screens went off and people seemed to vanish. After an hour I got bored in the vestry, along with Allie, unable to concentrate on anything, and she was drawing me.

"Suppose it's good," I said, when she showed me her effort.

She pulled a face at me. She might have stuck her tongue out but didn't.

"Heel!" I said at Allie. "You can come to our private area." I wanted to read some Lossky, who unified liturgy and its worship with East to West theology. l'Essai sur la théologie mystique de l'Église d'Orient I'd read in English. However, on the stairs up we paused to hear a lovemaking racket between Liz and Jenny in their first floor bedroom. So I said, "Heel!" again to continue upstairs.

Sat down in the study I said to her, "You can draw me some more if you want. I can go naked if you want."

"Moy hart alive! Are ya all reet, mawther?" she asked.

"I'm not your mother; I am your bishop."

"Yer talking such slarver. You, you talk spuffle and squit."

"Do you want to draw me or not?"

"No. I'll go down peerking for a cuckoo instead. And ah'll 'ave it and be owff."

"Fucking country bumpkin," I said, with a smile, and I could see her grin even as she went to the stairs.

"You duzzy waarmin, you." she said back. "Read your Lossky."

"Fuck off then," I said under my breath.

Nuru Massage (Wednesday 27th November)

I didn't know but suspected Aardse was behind Diana cancelling our get together again.

I caught Kathryn and Kathleen on a break in a dining area, wearing white tunics. They said how they were making good use of the plunge pool with clients, although some found the water level high. The danger was of the pool water getting mucky easily from grease and gunge on people's bodies. It needed changing and the water was on a meter. So I instructed to change the water and from now on clients went into the plunge pool after showering.

Meanwhile, They showed us the client list for today and tomorrow.

"What's this?" I asked. "Not your Wickenby, surely?"

"Yes. Uncle George. He's a client; we're professionals."

"You would be in tunics?"

"No. It's nuru."

"I'm pulling rank here and I insist I'll do it. When he comes, you two take a break. If he wants his money back, fine."

"He's paid for two."

"Then Winnie, or..."

"Me," said Allie."

"You're a researcher."

"I'm a participant observer. If you do it, I'll do it. I know what to do."

I didn't. So as the twins carried on for the time being, I looked it up with Allie.

"Allie, this asks too much."

She indicated it was fine by her.

"Allie, you will be rubbing your bare breasts, your exposed thighs, on men. A man."

"So will you."

"I feel responsible for you. This is not right."

"I make my own decisions. If you do it, I do it."

I recognised George Wickenby when he came in. I was in the office or vestry, but a camera picked him up in the dining/ seating area. So I went out and intercepted him, and told him to come to the kitchen with me to get a drink. Allie followed me.

"Your nieces are just finishing with a client, and then you have me and Allie here."

"I thought..."

"I decided."

"Hello Allie," he said. "And where do you come from?"

"Walsingham."

"A Catholic girl are you?" he asked her.

"I think I started Anglican, but no longer."

George Wickenby then asked about her profession, probably expecting a model or masseur.

"I'm a researcher."

Leaving George Wickenby in the kitchen, we went over to the wet room to see what was going on. There was Kathleen sliding over this fat bloke on the air bed, with Kathryn standing over him. It was Kathryn who said, "Two minutes and then we'll mop up."

"Do we use the same airbed?" I asked.

"We'll clean it and put a layer of gel on it before we go. Is Uncle George here yet?"

"Yes. Get showered and covered up before you come out."

"Our man here wants to drop into the plunge pool and we go in with him."

Then Kathryn said, "Do you like it?"

"Do I like what?" I asked her.

"No. I'm asking Mr. Grant."

I decided to leave Mr. Grant in their capable hands, as Kathleen slid from long ways to side ways over Mr. Grant.

Allie said to me, "You're strong on anti-incest. Is there a reason?"

"Not particularly."

"So what do you think about Marie Enfield, then?"

"I don't know her."

"Oh. I assumed you did. Forget it."

"No, I won't forget it. Is this unknown person into incest?"

"You'll find out so I may as well tell you. She's the partner of Roger Humphrey, the new chap, and she is his half-sister."

"Ah, I see. And I thought he was into theological ethics regarding sperm donation."

"Same father."

"You know everything before I do."

"It's my job. And your view on incest - do you condemn it?"

"Obviously the taboos were not there between Roger and this Marie. George!"

George Wickenby was sat reading one of the paperbacks I left lying around - a small one called The English Patient (which he was about to become). He started talking about his retirement - walks and car trips, doing some unpaid work with the tramlines.

After just over ten minutes Mr. Grant came out from the cloaks and left the building. Five minutes after that, Kathryn and Kathleen came across, fully dressed.

"Hi uncle," said Kathryn. "We are not doing you. Sorry about that. You've got the boss instead."

"And me," said Allie. "Getting into the meaning of the situation."

George said. "Never mind. Another time perhaps, you two. Proper professionals they are," he added, for my benefit.

"What we do, now, Mr. Wickenby," I said, "is go over into the cloaks area. We'll three undress and shower to start with. It's nice and warm and moist in there, so you won't get cold. After the shower, you can get on the bench to begin."

The three of us undressed and then proceeded to the wall showers in the wet room.

"You've had these massages before," I said.

"Elsewhere, and you get long-haired lasses letting their hair drop over your face, use their hair like curtains."

"I can do that," said Allie.

I said, "Get on the bench to start, on your front, and I'll work your muscles."

He did this, with his hairy back and arse adding to the friction. Allie seemed to know exactly what to do with his legs, one by one. I said to her, "Spanish from nowhere and now massaging. You're a dark horse."

"No soy un caballo y tampoco un perro."

"She's very good," he said, "being not a horse or a dog," so I applied extra pressure below his shoulders.

Eventually he turned over on to his back. We swapped around, so that the long-haired red-head did as she promised, letting her wet hair fall over his face. He developed a short but solid erection. I worked around this, but did touch it from moment to moment. Allie was going at his chest, waving her hair from side to side.

When she gave him a breast to his mouth, I said, "What are you doing?"

"It is a nuru massage," she said. "So it is consistent."

"And very pleasant," stated George in a muffled sort of way.

As a result of her action, and my annoyance, I gave his penis some tugs. So I said, "Mr. Wickenby, get off the bench carefully and go and lie down on the airbed. Watch the bed: it is greasy. Allie, get me that bottle of goo."

"The gel?"

"Yes." She gave it to me. I opened it and tipped a lot over her shoulders, and then as it ran down her breasts I rubbed it on both of us not by my hands but torso to torso.

She said, "Turn around, Linda," so I did and she goosed up my back, and therefore I did hers. I think I had different goo coming from my prostate gland as well.

Thus it was that Mr. Wickenby, having observed our greasing each other, had two bodies gliding over him at both ends. She was over his head and chest, and didn't keep falling off him like I did.

Once getting back on to his legs, I said, "You utter tart, Allie Shrimpton."

"You're not exactly Mother Theresa yourself," was her reply.

He said, "Hope you two are friends."

Allie said, "We often have a barney, Mr. Wickenby."

Mr Wickenby said, "You have a funny religious name according to your website. Mar Rectum or something."

"Her not me," said Allie.

"I meant her," he said.

I told Allie to change ends. This allowed me to plonk my rectum on his head.

"It is 'Reticulum', Mr. Wickenby, meaning kings-hood or bonnet."

He sort of said, "I can't quite hear you."

Then Allie went into giggles. "What's so funny?"

"He's licking your fanny."

Allie then turned around, showed me her arse and everything, and it was gorgeous. So as she turned again I disengaged from George and showed her my arse in similar fashion.

"Oh Mar Reticulum," she said, "how delightful! Such jollificearshuns."

"I will pay for extras," said George.

"Oh really? I bet you wouldn't have with your nieces."

"Well, I'd better say no."

"Allie!" I shouted, as she slipped him in.

"He said he is paying for extras."

"Condom, Allie! What the hell am I saying? Get off him!"

"I'm okay, I think. Or maybe not."

I went over and shoved her off, she then sliding off in a heap, and slipped him into me instead. "If you want to be useful, go and sit on his face."

She was instead stood above him, legs apart as I worked him.

Then I said, "What on earth...?"

"I need to go anyway," she said.

"You filthy... Allie! Allie!"

"I can't stop now."

"Mr Wickenby, I said, watching her spray over and off his head, "I expect a considerable extra payment for church funds."

Then I paused. Jenny was stood looking.

"You always were a whore, Linda Bode," said Jenny.

"That's not me: that's her!"

"You must have told her to do it."

"I did not!"

"Keeping your cunt lubricated, Allie Shrimpton?" Jenny pushed down her trousers, stuck her arse out at us, raised her trousers back, and left. Allie now dropped down to George's busy tongue.

Jenny hadn't noticed he was erect and inside me.

After he ejaculated and it ran out, we resumed gliding all over him, until we declared him done and time was nearly up. I got up and we helped him up, and we three went to the shower first, and then took him over to the plunge pool. Allie went in first, then George, and then me, and like whores we ended up rubbing our bodies on him in the water. After this, we all went to the cloaks area, dried each other and got dressed.

He went and sat with the twins, I said to him, "Those extras were worth a ton." Thus he handed me a hundred, there and then, in notes, to add to the basic low fee of fifty pounds.

"Did you like that, Allie?" I asked her, while handing the cash to Kathryn to decide what extra to give to the church.

"I enjoyed it as much as you did."

Soon, Jenny was snorting at me in the vestry.

"Can I do some of them?" Jenny asked. "Get me more balanced down there, if I did."

"What?"

"Massages."

"If either of the Kath's aren't available. Why not give Elizabeth a massage?"

"Ah yeah, she'd like that. But you're not letting me do things?"

"I'm not stopping you. Just saying it's the twins' operation."

"You've got me where you want me, haven't you," said Jenny, her face looking strained. "Well, you can do these computer accounts yourself. 'Do this document, do that money.' Do it all yourself and leave me alone. I have things wrong with me, down there, and you just don't believe it. If you did, Elizabeth would."

And she went out in a huff. So she was working erratically and getting a wage we could hardly afford.

I asked Allie. "Did you really need to piss?"

"I needed to go, so I made something of it."

"You are disgusting. You're an embarrassment to females, Miss Shrimpton."

"You did plenty."

"Well, I mind you to keep your opinions to yourself."

"With pleasure," said Allie.

Later, in the evening, I saw Jenny go ahead of Liz to the cloaks and wet room, only to see her later storm out completely wet and naked, and race up the stairs. Fortunately just two strangers were in the building looking the other way. When a clothed Liz emerged from there, holding Jenny's clothes, she looked over to Allie and me with a sigh.

Much later (and Allie had gone), I went up to bed with Adam. Their room was quiet, but there was plenty of noise coming from Kathleen with Winnie in their bedroom. I said to Adam, "They're not being very vestal virginal."

He said, "No." As for us, on arrival in our bed, he simply turned over to go to sleep. Great, I thought. No sex tonight, then. He mumbled, "Wickenby was happy earlier on."

I was awake and dreaming of Allie's areshole view and her actions over George. She seemed to take everything in her stride with such confidence.

Jenny on the Slide (Friday 29th November)

I was talking with two married (heterosexual) clients seeking a way forward in their difficult relationship, (without Allie present - she said she was getting her hair done) when Elizabeth put her head into the door space and said Jenny was being particularly difficult today and I should avoid contact with her. Then she apologised for assuming I was available.

An hour later Bishops Liz and Christine approached me (now alone), followed by Allie with full-bodied red hair. Liz spoke. "This is about above the casino. Systematic Measuring Services may have left town, but they have just confirmed that they still want to come here for some conferences. We ought to facilitate this."

Christine said, "Listen. It means a lot. They spend loads. And now this is real. The economics of the town cannot ignore it. We have all the contact names."

"I've already said. You do it if you want: don't involve here or me," I stated.

"Adam has cleared it," said Christine.

"So what?"

Christine continued, "He says he cannot do it because his company is a holding company and then he has his investigating company. It has to come through the church. The local one."

"The church can provide a legend," said Bishop Liz.

"A what?"

"A story to justify what it does. Or redescribe what it does."

So I asked her, "Is that what you used to do? All those lies about being theatrical?"

"All that about the theatre wasn't a justification but a disguise. It can be more open now, made more pastoral."

I said, "An orgy is an orgy is an orgy."

Christine said, "Relaxation, friends, knowing one another, making acquaintances again, bonding."

"I'll say," I said.

Christine said, "We can make it more purposeful. And it will mean income."

"Oh, get on with it," I said.

Christine said, "It will make a difference: income into here, and into the towns. We'll confirm it at the next meeting."

"Do that then."

"Can I have a word?" asked Liz. "Just you and me. It is pastoral, Allie, not even for a deacon. Sorry."

I said, "Allie, go off and do Sunday's sermon. Any topic. Shut the door behind you."

"Jenny. She is getting strange. Jenny wants to sleep in between you two and not with me. She knows Allie spent a night with you two."

"She was researching."

"Come on, Linda!"

"No, she was; there was no emotional involvement. Adam and I were discussing the very thing you have just raised. It's how I know his attitude."

"If you say so. Anyway, Jenny got drunk on Theddles again, and I thought she'd forgotten what she said, but she hasn't. She might knock on your door. Something has slipped in her head; she is starting to imagine things beyond health worries. I mean serious imagining."

So much later in bed I said to Adam, "Jenny wants to get in between us."

"I've no objection," he said. "Have you? You obviously didn't have with Allie."

"Jenny is supposed to be Liz's partner."

"Ah," said Adam. "And, I might ask, are you mine?"

"Adam! I have moved in with you. When I was a curate I wanted you in my bed night after night. Believe me, I want you here."

"It's your behaviour. You fucked Wickenby. What really happened with Jonathan Eyre at Yojana's?"

"Nothing. He made an advance and Allie threatened to make him unconscious. I told you."

"But would you have stopped him yourself?"

"He was repulsive, Adam. You're not being fair."

"I am being fair. Reports persist that Maurice Neptune wants to marry you. You stayed a night with him."

"I haven't been back."

"What if he goes above the casino? Will you go?"

"Definitely not. Listen, Adam, as Christine would say. Can you hear them now?"

Elizabeth and Jenny were rowing. They'd argued before, but not as loud. Now it turned to screaming - Jenny - so I'd had enough.

Naked, I went to their door and knocked on it. Liz in a nightie opened the door and said, "Look at her!"

Jenny looked wild in her eyes with unbrushed hair, naked and actually sweating, a nightie on the floor.

I went to her and grabbed her hand. "Come with me."

I swung her into our room and Adam held up the duvet. She got in behind him and I got in behind her.

I said, "Calm down." She shook herself side to side, and then grabbed Adam from behind him. Soon she was rubbing her crotch on his backside. "Jenny, stop it."

Adam said, "Leave her. It doesn't matter." He turned to face her. Adam was soon stroking her bottom. I felt lousy but she was becoming less agitated.

As she became more coherent, she asked him, "Why have you been ignoring me?"

"We haven't been ignoring you," I said.

"I didn't ask you; I asked Adam."

Adam said, "You came with your lover. You sleep with your lover. I've missed you."

Jenny asked, "What's she doing here?"

"Who?" Adam asked. "Liz or Linda?"

"Linda."

I said, "Adam is my partner, in every sense. We've had all this building done."

"I wasn't asking you. Liz, I meant," Jenny said.

"What about Liz?" Adam asked.

"What is she doing here?"

"Jenny? What are you on about?" I asked.

"She'll do you in."

"Jenny," I said, "she hasn't put a foot wrong. She does everything right."

Adam added, "I've been surprised. Jenny; she hasn't done anything to offend."

"Fuck me then," Jenny told Adam.

"Oh Jenny," I said.

Jenny said, "You shouldn't be in this bed. This is for Adam and me."

Adam then said, "It is for Linda and me."

"I'll scream."

I made a decision. "Look, Adam, I'll go downstairs. I'll ask if I can sleep alongside Liz and we can discuss the situation tomorrow."

So I knocked on Liz's door.

"Come in."

"Liz, I need a bed. She is very strange and the best thing is if we tackle this tomorrow."

Her bed was not as large as ours, so I found myself rather snug to Liz, as she wore a nightie but I didn't.

"I'm sorry, Linda. I can't cope with her. She's been declining a while, and now something has gone awry."

Still, we slept and I woke. I said to Liz, "I actually know so little about you. You can't be just a lesbian, because you had an affair with John Barman."

"Bicurious enough. I loved him, but he gets into things for himself - including me. I told myself I have an obligation to Jenny, but it is coming to an end."

"Christine says he seeks pleasure, or he did."

"He has a very inflated sense of self-importance. He might have gone into politics. I didn't know at the time; his mate Jonathan charms the women, as prizes - not for his self-importance. Terry, perhaps John, hmm, wanted to be at the top - the diocesan and then off to Kent. He saw the inefficiency report as his opportunity; he began to realise that it would all blow up in his face. So you needed to be contained, to be shown who was boss. Jonathan agreed and wanted you broken and accessible. I told Allie to watch for him, and to get you away from him if he started making a move for you at Mama's Shelter."

"It's Maa Skelter, not Mama's Shelter. But thank you. I felt protected by her, I must say. I was weak at the time."

Noises were coming from the upper bedroom. I heard Adam shout out. Someone came down the stairs rather loudly. It turned out Jenny had gone down and gone out. So I went up the stairs.

Adam was in the ensuite bathroom, "She actually bit me."

I took a look and there were bite marks on his upper thigh. "She didn't...?"

"No, fortunately. She just turned from nuzzling almost like a pet dog to biting me. Twice. I got out fast. I was getting erect from what she had been doing."

We decided to get up, a little earlier than usual.

Kathleen downstairs, with Winnie following, said to us, "I think Jenny is getting stranger. By the way, Uncle George wants another massage. I take it we can't do it."

"He's banned," I said with little thought. "Tell him to find another establishment."

"Bella said she'd do it."

I said, "Bella works with Adam. We're not having this!"

"Winnie could do hand relief," she said, "if he wants it. With Bella."

"No means no."

"Bella's an adult," said Adam. "It's up to her."

"And this is my church and it is not happening here. Massaging's for you and your sister, Kathleen, for body and spirit uplift, and a client base that excludes your uncle. That's it," I said. "I regret that Allie and I did what we did. It sent out the wrong signals."

Later Allie with incredible hair drifted inside in leathers and was updated by Kathleen.

Allie said nothing beyond a nod.

Allie Preaches (Sunday 1st December)

It was Allie's first sermon, as a deacon, and I hoped to learn something about her. She had a collar on, and grey blouse top, and light blue skirt, and thick red as could be hair.

Elizabeth was missing because Elizabeth had taken Jenny to a Wytham cinema show to try and fill her head with something different. Otherwise the attendance was similar as before, less Andrew and Laura, but with both Bella and Madge Jack present, plus Paula Campbell, Roger Humphrey, Lisa Callow and someone called Rob Dyke attending. James Thorne and Mo McArden came over speculatively from the Anglicans and sat alongside Madge.

With minimal notes, Allie said, "I've been asked to preach on anything. So I'll tell you about my home area and a story to mainly interest Christine."

Oh good, I thought to myself. Insight.

"One for Kathleen and her sister, first. The earliest known British settlement is at Happisburgh, Norfolk, if then called something else. A man with his dog - the man was alive 1740 to 1807 - said that a particular stone isn't natural, it's a hand axe and only a few believed him. He got it to Norwich Castle Museum. It was made 700,000 years ago.

"Now, most of my larger family come from around Walsingham. My favourite relative - I didn't know her because she was born in 1865 and lived until she was a hundred and one - is Alice Shrimpton, because although she was married she had a very long lesbian relationship until two years before she died. She, like Elizabeth Ford, were both born in Stiffkey, and both died in the same nursing home in Wells-next-the-Sea.

"I'm going to tell you all something else I learnt. You see, Alice died 17th May, 1966, and so did her brother Morris's own son, James Patrick Shrimpton. His son Patrick died - just check - 19th May 1967. So I followed the family tree there and received information that down that line is the father of Fatima Tamuuz's daughter, Philip Shrimpton. Five year old Akemi Tamuuz - she has her mother's surname, deliberately - is my sixth cousin. So all you who are connected with Hartlepool and goings on there: so am I. This has been made public now that the scandal has taken place. It means that my fourth cousin once removed - the boy I grew up with, who's from the next farmhouse down the road, is Akemi's first cousin twice removed, and yet they don't know each other at all."

She's the cousin of that horrible woman's daughter?

"Now Stiffkey was the base for the parish priest who proudly called himself the 'Prostitutes' Padre'. Interested Christine? Like you, Harold Davidson did a lot of his work in London, once he'd been a naval chaplain in the First World War. His parishioners didn't much care for his absences, plus the fact he brought many prostitutes to work at the Rectory and kept ending up in embarrassing situations. When he was in court to be deposed, the prosecution produced a photograph with him next to a woman with her backside naked, like the rest of her, but covered at the front where he was. It is funny.

"He had a strict upbringing and went to a school set up originally for naval family kids. He did acting at school, and charity work outside, and neglected his studies. Because he didn't get a scholarship to go to Oxford he decided alone to become a comedian.

"Family friend the Reverend Basil Wilberforce got him the scholarship to Oxford, where he messed about and failed exams, acted on stage and put up autographed pics of actresses in his room. He had to leave Exeter College, did some cramming and two years on in 1903 went into Holy Orders. He loved a woman called Molly he'd met at a theatre. Via Windsor, St. Martin-in-the-Fields, and Stiffkey, he married her, but ended up as a naval chaplain starting with HMS Gibraltar, a depot ship up in the Shetland Islands. Erratic, he was, and he moved to HMS Fox, and was arrested by the naval police during a raid on a Cairo brothel, where he was apparently looking for a diseased prostitute who had been infecting the men.

"When he got home from HMS Leviathan, Molly was pregnant, and it wasn't from him but an old school friend staying at the rectory, a Canadian colonel. Unable to escape to India, the Reverend Harold Davidson ran back to his activities in London. Rose Ellis was a prostitute that became a friend, and he took her to Paris and to the Stiffkey Rectory.

He might have engaged with up to a thousand of prostitutes also working as waitresses over a twelve year period. He met them night and day, and teashops banned him while landladies were wary of him. Good job you own so many houses, Christine.

"Davidson said, 'I believe with all my soul that if [Christ] were born again in London in the present day he would be found constantly walking in Piccadilly.' There you go, Bishop Christine."

Christine said in response, "I don't work from Piccadilly. I work in my own Urania House in Hammersmith and at times from Ebbsfleet."

I thought, there is a difference between Christine and Harold. This chap obviously denied his amoral activities, whereas Christine was openly charging men and women of wealth a fortune - especially from Urania House.

Allie continued: "A minister of religion complained about Davidson's neglect of his home area, and the Bishop of Norwich, the Right Reverend Bertram Pollock, under advice, did hire a private investigator to follow Davidson in London. Rose Ellis was found and the most intimate thing she claimed was lancing a boil on Davidson's bottom. Linda?"

"Ha ha," I said.

"So the legal man was after him, the press were after him, and some seventeen year old Barbara Harris had her own gossip to give. And then we had the photo with Estelle Douglas, taken on 28th March, 1932. Here is another parallel with here: Davidson paid for experienced lawyers to defend him partly through the sale of newspaper stories. Adam's not here."

I just thought: this woman, my researcher, is taking the piss. I remembered that a woman called Barbara Harris was the first female consecrated a bishop in the Anglican Communion.

"In court in Westminster, Barbara Harris said she met him when she was sixteen, and he made many advances on her for sexual intercourse, which she resisted, and he relieved himself sexually when she resisted him. Some do. She went to Stiffkey: she was an unpaid kitchenmaid with a chair instead of a bed; he often promised he'd divorce his wife and marry her, and she and a lass in a nightie danced in front of him. And the photographed naked woman Estelle Douglas was the fifteen year-old daughter of one of Davidson's oldest friends. Davidson said it was a set-up, that he thought it was a publicity photo to get her work as an actress. He didn't know her back view was naked. In evidence he was unsure where to find a buttock, where his boil had been.

"All right. So, also following on from a fight in his church with a replacement priest, both grabbing the Bible, he was found guilty and defrocked. He ended up performing, like in Blackpool, and once stood on a lion's tail and was mauled, and died from his injuries. The master of ceremonies further made money by asking the public to pay to see the lion that had killed the defrocked priest. But even before his tragic end, in November 1936 he was arrested and fined for pestering two sixteen year-old girls at Victoria station when apparently offering them auditions for a leading part in a West End production.

"The moral of this story is if you're going to engage with dodgy and sexually charged folk, go independent. That's what he should have done. He could have joined the Liberal Catholics."

This seemed to me to be bordering on the offensive. I learnt so little about her and she was simply taking the piss at us. But she grinned at me, and so disarmed me.

When I looked it up about Davidson I had to smile.

James Thorne and Mo McArden decided that the sermon had been entertaining but irrelevant. I replied that it was a lost opportunity.

I said to Allie, later: "That priest: Stiffkey by place and Stiffkey by nature."

"Probably not," she said. "He just liked the girls. Like you being a photographic model and all those men."

"You know, Allie, I'm not going to rise to your bait. But you know all about me, and I know next to nothing about you. Except you told us that you are related to Fatima."

"Not to her. Philip Shrimpton wanted no relationship with Fatima beyond that Hereteu group. Elizabeth Huett told me the connection, with Fatima's permission, after I'd mentioned the Shrimpton family up at Hartlepool."

"It still tells me nothing about you. It is not fair, and you mock me. You mocked us. You should be ashamed. You could end up being defrocked yourself."

"I'd love to be defrocked by you, Linda."

"Watch it. I'll set up a court. Defrock you in public."

"It's the parallels. I knew about Davidson and I just couldn't resist. I'm going home now. I've made my participation today."

"You're not related to him, then?"

"No, sadly. Bye!"

It was on this day of learning about a family tree or two that news came through that my maternal grandfather had died. John Lavender was born in 1930 in the village of Darlton in Nottinghamshire. He was the son of Kelvin Lavender, born 20th April 1905 and died 21st April 1997, and Amy Bode - and yes she was related, who was born 2nd May 1911 and died 8th June 1998. So he didn't last much longer once she'd gone. She was the half sister of Robert Bode, my direct paternal grandfather, and he was born in 1902 in Saxfosdyke and died in 1981. So Amy Bode was my great grandmother and half great aunt and Kelvin Lavender was my great grandfather.

Allie Shrimpton wasn't the only one with a complex family tree, so there.

Christian Pastors Visiting (Tuesday 3rd December)

Into the church for an informal visit came a clerical visitor, the New Life Pentecostals' Pastor Benny Chapman along with Claudette Guy, their Secretary. With me was Winnie and Allie, of course. We shook hands and introduced one another and sat in a pentagram or circle.

I said that I just wanted to make contact, one new church to another.

Benny Chapman supposed that we were very different churches, and they had noticed the plaque showing this place as an extension to the Jewish temple in Wytham.

"I hope to learn from the Sikh community too," I said.

He stated that they created a programme that emphasised vivid worship, righteous living, true teaching using the Bible, active prayer, developed fellowship and active evangelism. A man called Martin Burton had led to the expansion of their particular movement once inspired in September 1974: the Vine Network of churches. "What is your equivalent?"

"That's a good question. Thoughtful and engaged worship, social provision - currently food provision and a concern for sex workers, investigating religious ideas using several resources, personal religious engagement, and friendship."

He thought these were passive. I said they were subtle but effective.

Winnie referred to the Serninsea Vestal Virgins, less secretive than they were, and the Secretary Claudette Guy said she'd heard of them and thought they were Pagan.

Winnie said, "Neo-Pagan, like you are said to be Neo-Pentecostalist."

Both guests mumbled in reflective reaction. Benny referred to prayer about asking God in to our lives - did we? - and truly supportive fellowship.

I said that spiritual practice was up to the individual, and I wanted to see a high standard of friendliness beginning with behavioural expectations.

Claudette asked, "Are you still Anglican by ethos?"

"As an echo only. I have cut the rope. Cutting the rope does liberate one."

She said, "For Pentecostals, God is the Eternal, whole 'I am', One being in three Persons: Father, Son and Holy Spirit. Are you trinitarian?"

I said, "I am, just about, but it is not a strict requirement here."

Benny asked, "Just about?"

"In that I sort of fit them together. I suppose it's very qualified. Maybe I am a Reformation-style Arian."

He said, "I reject the tendency among some evangelicals to be Arian - that's what some unequals in the Godhead imply. So I don't suppose you believe the Virgin Birth, Jesus's sinless life, his miraculous ministry, substitutionary atonement, bodily resurrection, and his coming return."

"No. The biblical witness to his life offers guidance."

"Much else would not make sense to you then," he said, "like original sin, salvation through faith, believers breaking bread, new life in the Spirit initiated in Christ, the Spirit guiding the baptised, miraculous healing, the resurrection of all the faithful but hell for the unchosen."

"Not as simple as that. We break bread on a religious anthropological basis; salvation may be through holiness practice; we do consider the Spirit as in our reference to geese."

"Geese?"

"A local metaphor, and being surprised and inspired about the way forward. I suppose I'd tend towards universalism."

"The basis of life abundant is only through a personal relationship with Jesus. No one gets to the Father..."

"He is two natures, on that, so it is the divine Father via the Word. The word I'd object to is 'only'."

Pastor Benny Chapman then said, "There really is no basis of any sharing of ministry between us. We heard of Christine Vine being around here, and elsewhere, but we regret we cannot work with her either."

I replied, "I didn't think there was a basis to co-operate. I simply wanted us to meet, to put faces to names. The Church we are in is strong on Catholic order, important to Christine indeed, as one of our bishops. It has formal corporate positions but also individual variation and personal space."

Claudette Guy said, "We expect to grow. It is not easy, in this locality, but we are making progress and we did start without a minister. Are you growing?"

"Yes, from nothing of course. We have people coming over from the parish church."

"We think we can have arrangements with the Reverend Rhiannon Fleetwood," she said.

Allie then said, "Well, she does have a reputation for disturbance - against anyone competitive, anyone critical, anyone different really. You see, we here are not going to compete with you at all, whereas Rhiannon Fleetwood will. She'll make agreements that she will use to favour her church and herself."

I said, "We don't seek them. We provide space for them to come and adjust."

"Adjust to what?"

"They are free to how they view their faith."

"Well, thanks for the warning but we will make contact nevertheless."

Allie said, "Yeah. Warning by those who know her."

Benny stood with Claudette to go, and said, finally, "We cannot wish you the best, but we thank you for the invitation. We hope you develop into a spirit-filled orthodox direction. Now we'll contact Miss Rhiannon."

"It's not a given in Pentecostalism is it - keeping it doctrinally pure?" Allie asked.

He sat down again! "There is a lot about 'pneumatological surprise' - linked to grace. We know the danger of drift, away from our beginnings, and of culture-using."

We reject what has happened with Robert Beckford - 'Progressive Pentecostalism' - just as many evangelicals reject Steve Chalke's moves."

"I'm aware of this," I said.

"Wolfgang Vondey has argued that doctrine itself can be improvised, 'riffing-off' scripture and the Creed. It's not for us."

Claudette had not sat again, so he stood up, and they nodded and left us.

"It's all right, that," I said to the two beside me.

Kathleen came from the activity of massages to speak with Winnie. I told Allie I was going for a lie down. Allie asked if she could come too, but I said she should do her notes or whatever she needed to do. I might see her later. She said she'd go to her house and do some artwork.

"Fine by me," I responded.

About an hour and a half later I received a call on my mobile phone from Kathleen. Rhiannon Fleetwood had arrived in our church so she could talk to someone. So I went down the two flights of steps to appear to her, one to one. She was having one of our cups of coffee.

"Where's your little helper?" she asked me.

"Allie? She's gone off to do some artwork."

"Talk to you then. I can deal with her another time."

"I suppose I ought to contact her as she is my researcher, unless it is pastorally sensitive."

"She can catch up. It's not pastorally sensitive. They say you're a bit theological, these new Pentecostals. They and me can relate to each other, whereas you cannot co-operate with any of us."

"I realise that. But I get on with other faith groups."

"I've come to tell you that we are developing our own Spirit-filled evangelical based church here. Not unlike Holy Trinity Mayfair."

"Ambitious, then."

"A bit less of the fuddy-duddy town parish role. Also, I'm setting up a local branch of Global Anglican Reform Fellowship of Orthodox Belief - GARFOB."

"We can welcome your rejected fuddy-duddy folks."

"No you won't. You shouldn't be doing any of it."

"As I understand it, GARFOB is not gaining any further support in this country and can hardly pay for an administrator. It's a consequence of insisting on a hard-line statement of evangelical belief. And the marketing by Holy Trinity Mayfair may just be over reaching itself - becoming too 'religious capitalist'. No?"

"GARFOB's growing. It will have a new presence here. A majority of bishops are evangelical. You know that Wytham is exceptional now and crippled by the scandal. Liberalism is being snuffed out. And HTM can provide many resources."

"A majority of bishops are evangelical in that they have an evangelical background. That doesn't mean they are all of a kind."

"They come under the umbrella. Do you know about the span of evangelical theology, seeing as I know you like to do theology?"

"Go on - you seem to be conceding my point."

"You won't understand evangelical theology as I do, so I'll instruct you about it. The most recent background is the 1940s onwards with connecting or not with old fashioned fundamentalists, and then twenty years on a charismatic movement emerged - beyond Pentecostals - and then various forms of postconservatives and postliberals."

"I've always said that if you are postliberal you ought to have been liberal in the first place. Yale postliberals, anti-experience, are not. So I do know something about it. They're alternatively post-conservative, only 'post' in being non-foundationalist."

"But we have those evangelicals who meet up with Catholics and recognise the catholicism within themselves."

"Traditionalism is a mindset."

"It's more up to date than that. More a relaxation of strict Evangelicalism. So you don't know. Evangelical Catholics may find that they interact far more with Roman Catholics or Postliberals than they do with old style conservatives."

I said, "Postliberals being non-realist are themselves still conservative by fixing definitions and identities, performing according to pre-set definitions."

"If they become revisionists they soon lose their sense of home and flip identity. I think you're doing that, from what I've heard, even from an apparent mainline liberal Christianity to something else. Don't make an enemy of me; there are apostates and then there are apostates. Some go Roman Catholic. Reinhard Hütter went from Pentecostal Evangelicalism to Presbyterian Postliberalism and then Roman Catholicism. Heard of him? No you haven't."

"He's gone back to Aquinas," I said. (This was a guess: she was right - I'd not heard of him - but she was playing a game of oneupship.)

"He had faith and reason, nature and grace, divine and human freedom, theology and metaphysics. The evangelical starting point is looking back further than the Reformation; some evangelicals that look back don't even look back to the Reformation but to Packer and Billy Graham and sorts. You'll have heard of Karl Barth. He's counted as a revisionist by many of us. Have you heard of Jean-Jacques Suurmond? Tell me about him."

"I don't know him."

"He's also a psychotherapist. He did about Florence Nightingale. I knew Maurice Neptune before the break up of the Confraternity - the real Confraternity. He's not the only theologian around full of detail. So our encounter - this one with me - is an education for you. "

Peter Marshall had come in - stayed afar and was unseen by me until he spoke. "Florence Nightingale had Unitarian parents, was Anglican, thought seriously about Roman Catholicism. She wasn't Evangelical but shared aspects of the mindset in those days."

Rhiannon Fleetwood said, "We're not talking about her but Jean-Jacques Suurmond. He's a revisionist too but Pentecostal-like. But I'm not a revisionist. I like the Scottish stuff - realism, knowledge, systematic evangelical theology. I'm the parish priest of this parish and you treat me seriously."

"Foundationalism," I said.

Peter said, "Apologetics. The trouble is it's detached. It shares common sense realism with the rest of us but it doesn't follow the dominant scientific and social scientific conclusions. It's sectarian. These people when they change don't just revise, they lose it. They flip from one form of realism to the bigger common version."

Rhiannon asked, "Who's 'these people', eh?"

I said, to follow Peter, "They - you, Rhiannon - don't acknowledge the basic problem, the reason for being beyond even the Age of Doubt, and so when it hits they lose it."

"Some can go towards idealism," she said. "I won't."

"Or," Peter said, "into the past: a Puritan world of its own, like some Chassidic Jews regard the Middle Ages as a holy time to reinhabit."

"Well, Rhiannon," I said, "tell me more about the postconservatives."

"They are not liberals. Some start with Barth. They're not foundationalist. Do you understand that? Scripture provides its own model for interpretation. Biblical hermeneutics, it's about. Why don't you consider this for yourself?"

"Because the supposed Bible supplying the Bible's method is actually just another form of external culture, using another form of philosophy. It's continental philosophy and that's the basis of a lot of it. Some of it is phenomenology - the basics of being human and doing their liturgies as actions. I have a lot of sympathy with that, but I'm still a general realist," I said. And so I'm not anti-culture. In fact, I'm thinking that we need to develop religion that is fully compatible with scientific and social scientific narratives.

"You've given up," she said.

Peter then said, "Does Christianity then depend on past modes of thought only, or some retreat into a postmodern space for its premodernity?"

I said, John Spong has called Rowan Williams a Mediaevalist."

"You really are a bunch of heretics here. There's a word for you lot, uttered already: Unitarian."

"We're too high for them," I said. "Our practices are more liturgical, more focussed."

Peter then said, "Linda: go back to Martineau and a development from him - the Free Catholics."

"I'll look them up," I said. "Are there any now?"

"Not among the Unitarians, no."

Rhiannon said, "They're all agnostics and atheists. You've more in common with them. Barth, and why we have trouble with him: it's all Christology which means a lack of wider support - and then scripture is a witness to revelation rather than revelation itself - and that won't do. The danger also is universal salvation, and being a Barthian dialectical is a bouncing ball trap. Anyway, I've given you a lot to think about and I have to go. I've given you a survey of evangelical thinking and life. So treat me seriously because I'm here to make a difference around here, and I will. That Connectivity business conference on the 9th: the parish is still doing it, and I will be the key person there making the connections, especially now we don't have a suffragan bishop any more."

"I do treat you seriously. But that end of the year conference connects business and all local people looking to the start of next year - our connections."

"Well, there is a lot of misplaced sneering towards me. That Confraternity might have broken up and we've lost the suffragan but it's all the more important that I'm here!"

"You have your own important existence here," I said, to massage her ego.

"Quite. Pity your little helper isn't here. Contrast her and me. I knew her in Taunton. She was wayward then, mixing with a bunch of Pagans and thinking she was the bees knees. We cut her down to size, and now I find she's up here. I'd watch her because she's a schemer. She will, yeah, 'go along with people' and have this happy-go-lucky attitude, and keep her own counsel, but all the time she is working out her strategy. Ask her about her Gaelic speaking secretary, or that Folkways tutor. Yeah, Andrea: she was a bit dodgy, and your supposed researcher more than sniffed around her, except we could all sniff your farting into those leathers because she knows lesbians want to take them off..."

"Rhiannon," I said, "you've said enough."

"Now I'm here she's met her nadir. She might fool you but she doesn't fool me. Plenty more to point out."

"You've said enough. Allie is intelligent, my researcher and welcomed here."

"I'm going. You don't want to hear the truth. Get rid of her. She is a sexual predator, and you're best off starting to keeping a healthy distance."

"Our discussion was enlightening until now."

"And remember, while this redone building fails we'll be going from strength to strength."

Once she went Peter said, "It's not what I've been hearing. I think she is a narcissist. She didn't even use Allie's name"

"Hmm. Do you wonder about Allie? She keeps herself to herself but she is incredibly confident. She does let off sometimes. Is she a threat?"

"She's not confident, though," Peter said. "She binge drinks a lot, quietly, and tries to hide it, and that's when she farts a lot."

"If I could bring her out somehow."

Once Peter had gone his own way I messaged Diana and at last we were going to meet again. In the night I repeated my request to Adam to find out about Allie.

He said he was already on to it. He would do some work on her very soon.

Adam's Pleasure and Proposed (Wednesday 4th December)

By Wednesday, it was as if everything was fine again regarding Jenny. She made a good job of rearranging and cropping the ordination photos to the local website, so to remove Margaret Lindbeck, in that it was clear she had left the LAE. In Independent Sacramental Ministry, there is often nothing more important than uploading and displaying ordination photos on the websites. Indeed, the demand to rearrange had come from Bristol via email. The main LAE website reused Jenny's work.

I asked Elizabeth how she herself was feeling; she said she'd give Jenny one more chance, in that she couldn't take much more.

Allie was making her notes. What people wear is uninteresting to me, yet she wasn't uninteresting in her choices. Our comic preacher's stretch top in black showed every curve and penetration; her jeans looked as if they had been pressed to every curve of her legs and the rest. She was in sandals. I said at her, "Your wardrobe must be enormous."

"Hard to know what to put on, sometimes. Don't want to make an impression."

I stood and stared at her, like, 'Who's she trying to kid?' This puzzled me afterwards. Perhaps she was compensating for her almost anonymity in her operation. After all, that sermon of hers had said nothing about her theology, nothing about her own experiences. All I knew was she liked some ancestor of the same surname, presumably up her father's line, because she was in a lesbian partnership while married to a man.

Bella came in to do some administration by order from Adam. She looked at the website Jenny had done so far; Jenny joined her and didn't resent the overview.

I left Bella and Jenny to do more. I'd (at last) have an afternoon with Diana. Allie wanted to come along. I agreed. She heard me tell Diana about recent events and Jenny becoming weird.

Then there was the revived issue of taking a ministry to naturists at Bever Wood.

"We have only a few interested in Serminsea," I said. "One of my objectives is to give a pastoral ministry to naturists and we can shape a spirituality in Bever Wood."

"Preaching to them," Diana said.

"Probably, but not how you mean. This is a different approach now. Would you like to come to the club with us?"

"No."

"You came to the Gymnology meeting - thank you. You'd go if it was just a holiday."

"Who's going?"

"I don't know."

Allie said, "If Bishop Linda goes, I go."

"You follow her around always?" asked Diana.

"I do other things. I'm hoping to contribute a paper on the research ethics of involvement."

I said, "She'll tell you that but she won't tell me."

I also said about clashes coming over above the casino. I could see Liz leaving soon, affecting Jenny. I told Allie not to repeat this speculation.

With time up and dressed, Allie and I went to Adam's workplace in my SUV, just to see what he might say, but Peter inside said he was upstairs in the spare bedroom. So we trooped upstairs.

He was lying on the bed, trousers down, masturbating, watching sexual happenings on a screen opposite.

"Adam! What are you watching that porn for? Allie is here."

"Nothing she hasn't seen before."

"What is this called? They're in a concert now."

"Nine Songs, and it is not pornography."

Allie said, "It's about a relationship, including concert going, before she goes home. They do some unstimulated sex."

"You seem to know all about it," I said to her. "Adam, at least try to cover yourself and stop wanking."

Allie said, "It did the rounds at University in the film club. They gave it a general 18 licence. If you ask me, it's boring."

"I'm resting," said Adam.

"At least cover yourself..."

"You're becoming like a nanny," said Adam. "Months ago, you couldn't have cared less. Anyway, I'm half way there, so I'm waiting until she grabs his knob."

I asked Allie to leave, and she went to see Peter as I took hold of Adam's said appendage and finished him off, looking at the female lead finishing off the male lead

- then, anyway.

I lay alongside Adam as the film went to its fucking highlight. I agreed with Allie about the film's entertainment value, or lack of it.

After we'd dozed off, we were woken by Diana and Patricia standing in the room along with Allie.

"What are you doing here?" I asked, laying my hand and arm over his continued exposure.

Patricia said, "Getting my car from the garage just near here. Diana joined me. Thought we'd just look at these premises and Peter Marshall said you two were up here."

"We were watching a film," I said.

"Did you like Nine Songs?" Allie asked.

"I wasn't engaged," I replied.

"Talking of films," said Patricia, "I'm driving with Diana to Wytham on Monday. We might well see a film in a cinema for a change! We should go shopping, and we will have a meal. It'll be about five hours there. It'll give Diana some fun for a change. Wanna come?"

"Yes. Do you want to come, Allie?"

"Will it involve church matters?"

Patricia said, "Definitely not."

"Then I won't."

Adam said, "Go and call on Maurice Neptune, Linda, and say hello. I know you want to see him."

"Why would you say that of me, Adam?"

Allie then asked, "Adam, do you think Elizabeth is going to leave soon, and then what about Jenny?"

"What did I say about my speculation?" I asked Allie.

Adam said, "Allie, for a non-interventionist researcher, you do tend to intervene."

"Sorry, both of you, I was out of place."

So I asked, "Well, is she going to leave soon, Allie?"

"You want me to answer?"

"It's the reason for asking."

Adam smirked.

"I'm not saying any more than you already know."

"Allie, do you know if Elizabeth is leaving?"

"Genuinely I don't. I am sorry for interfering. I'll go home before I cause any more trouble."

I said, "Allie. Are you upset?"

"A bit. It's all right. I'll go..."

"Stay there, Allie. Just stay! Adam, I do not wish to call upon Rabbi Maurice Neptune. I will go shopping and see a film and have a meal with my friends. Allie can have a needed break."

He replied, "Fine. Fine by me. Anyway, much as I'd love to chat, I have an online date of sorts with a lass on Goosechat whose birthday is today. She's twenty today."

I said, "He's being vague. You know Annie."

"Pub."

Patricia and Diana went off to the repairs garage, and so we two returned to my SUV, and went the short journey back to the church.

Jenny and Elizabeth were both calm. Nothing seemed untoward.

"I'm sorry," said Allie, before she went. "I'll reset my position back to what it was."

"No," I said to her. "Please don't. I might value your input."

"But my research prevents me from having a diective input. I'm going home. Actually, I'll go home via the pub."

"Oh, can I come?"

"To the pub?"

"Yes."

"Definitely not. No, you can't do that. Sorry. No. Bye. I shouldn't have said."

Narrator: Adam Investigating Allie (Thursday 5th December)

I arrived at my work place to find Peter already at the reception room with Kathryn about to leave for the bethel (as some called it) to join her sister in massaging clients.

"Morning All. Peter," I said, ignoring Kathryn for the moment, "I think we'll do a little training exercise regarding our church researcher. I'll be in the next room, and you can send Roger and Bella through to give me reports. See what can they find out about her. Let them do as much of it as possible. Here they are! Good morning, you two, and Kathryn."

Kathryn said, "Linda and Allie are off to Maurice Neptune's today so Winnie will be dealing with enquiries. Christine is elsewhere."

"Linda told me she was going shopping, and Allie was doing her artwork."

"Oh dear. Allie Shrimpton said she was 'likely' to go to Wytham if Linda sees the rabbi."

"Let the dog see the rabbi, then."

Kathryn left. Peter then said, "I landed on my feet with her."

"She puts her own feet in her mouth. Roger and Bella: your task this morning is to answer the obviously relevant question, 'Is Alfia Shrimpton the woman she says she is?' So you will come and report to me throughout the morning. How would you go about this?"

Roger said, "Just to say I have an appointment at the weekly clinic this afternoon."

"Oh, are you ill?"

"Donating sperm."

"Ugh," said Bella. "Are you and your sister going on this Christmas mission? I'm going. Linda welcomes us along."

"I think it might be a bit of a shock to some if she went with me."

I said, "You two have my blessing to go - not literally a blessing like Linda would do. Go there and notice stuff and then report back anything interesting. Now, if we can concentrate on Alfia, what do we need to know? Let me tell you one thing. Allie is a friend of an online sex worker, 'Headgirl' Annie Fenwick. Allie met her in a pub and they often now meet up. Anything from that?"

Bella said, "Imaginatively, she could work for the newspapers."

"Bella, there is no harm in applying imagination so long as it comes back to facts. So we've had Roland Mitton visit, and that gives us cause to say that she is a student. But we can check her out by checking him out. Info, please. But what about her home life? What's in Walsingham, her stated home village?"

"And," said Peter, "at the service she mentioned her ancestor, Alice Shrimpton, born 1865, so we could do some genealogy via the usual methods. Find her home address, parents and relatives and examine the name itself for anything."

"But remember that I want Roger and Bella to run this effort."

I went to my office and did some different client-based online investigating.

After an hour, Roger and Bella came through.

Roger said, "There is no mileage via Annie Fenwick. Using her performance name, 'Headgirl' usually works with Jördis on Goosechat. We don't know and cannot find out if Allie and Annie sleep together, for example."

"Perform together might be more relevant," I suggested. "Many female students go into the sex industry for ready money. Goosechat isn't a big earner because it has free viewing, and I've heard that Christine is thinking of introducing 'Supporters All' as a paywall."

"Bella said, "On her name, 'Shrimpton', it has origins in Buckinghamshire and Gloucestershire, possibly, and mediaeval, or Saxon, relating to the name Shervinton."

"How relevant is that to us?" I asked.

"Meanwhile, her name checks out personally at Glastonbury, University of Somerset. She is definitely a Ph.D student."

Roger added, "But we discovered that both Roland Mitton and her one-time tutor Abigail Randall are in a coven together. It's supposed to be secret. Took some finding, that."

"You mean Peter discovered it. This is an exercise primarily for you and Bella."

Roger said, "No evidence of Allie's involvement. And Abigail Randall has a personal website, some of which is written in Spanish."

"That is no more than background!" I reacted. "Allie got on very well with her professor, here, and there is something not quite right between her and the Serninsea Vestal Virgins."

Bella went on, "Yes, because we also discovered that there is a group called Taunton Tantria, a group like the Serninsea Vestal Virgins. But these groups don't advertise themselves and don't have their own websites. Others refer to them. Like about some covens."

"Good, but is Allie a member of this Taunton outfit or not?" I asked.

"We can't say any more for sure," Bella added. "We have a local priest here, Rhiannon Fleetwood, attacking Taunton Tantria in some old online material. She also refers to unknown covens in Somerset. Peter said to us that speculating creates questions that demand other answers. It's good stuff for stories."

I said, "Peter's right. We need, therefore, firm connections. If you can't establish firm connections to this Rhiannon Fleetwood, then move towards checking out Allie's home life."

Off they went, and I went for a coffee. An hour later I could hear a lot of chat going on, but decided to wait for them to come through.

Half an hour after that, the two came through. This time Bella spoke first. "There are no Shrimptons in Walsingham, and there never were."

"Really?"

Roger said, "Peter asked us about Stiffkey mentioned in her sermon. Nothing checks out now that equates to Allie. She is definitely who she says she is in Somerset."

"Is she from Norfolk at all?" I asked. "Just asking, like you should. Think of Somerset and Norfolk accents."

Bella said, "Well, not in the name origins..."

"Name origins tell us nothing. What about her grappling with British Isles languages? I mean, Scottish Gaelic?"

Roger said, "They do local dialects and languages in Glastonbury, part of Randall's course Folkways, although her tutor resigned recently."

I had a suggestion. "You see, she could have learnt the Norfolk accent and the odd words she throws around. Where does Alice Shrimpton's family tree go?"

"Alice Shrimpton was married to Brian Rogers," said Roger, "and they had one surviving child, Alfred, and then we get James, Yvette and Brian. They're all Rogers after all that. The Shrimptons in Stiffkey are not direct ancestors of Allie, as far as we know so far. They might possibly be related around the houses."

"You'd better look around the houses. More names, more family routes."

Off they went again, and lunchtime came along. I told them I would extend the project into the afternoon.

Roger was joined by his sister Marie before going out to lunch and the clinic. Rarely do brothers and sisters put their arms around each other with the sister raising her leg. Yes, I could see why she might not go on the naturist mission. Peter seemed to be continuing regardless.

I said to him, "This is meant to be their project. Go and eat and see Kathryn. Come back after he's spread his seed at the clinic. The dole will have a sliding scale for any money he gets."

"Right," Peter said. "I was looking for directions for them to take. Alice Shrimpton married into the family line. Elizabeth Ford was not in the family line. They both died in Wells-next-to-Sea - just as Allie said."

So the mystery went into the afternoon. After lunch, the clinic and a further hour, I pulled in the trainees.

"This is not going very well, is it? So I expect full confidentiality. I will tell you now that Allie definitely comes from Walsingham, so go with that. She has lived in a farmhouse and there is a farmhouse nearby with distant relatives including a man of the same age. It's an interlocking family tree. She escaped this close atmosphere and ran off to the University of Somerset. She was very familiar with this nearby chap to the point of sexual intimacy. She is an artist and sells paintings in Walsingham to pilgrims and tourists. What does this information exclude?"

Bella said, "She's not born in the village itself?"

Roger then said, "There are two villages - Great and Little."

Bella next, "That the farmhouse isn't isolated? Her name might be on the paintings she sells?"

"Good one. Ring a tourist shop. You won't get records from the University of Somerset on their students. Data Protection and all that," I said. "Go to it."

After an hour, Peter joined the two with their findings.

Roger went first. "There are two shops who sell her paintings. She puts 'A R' on them only. One shop owner thought she is or was called Alice."

"Looking just for Alices was impossible," said Bella, "But we tried to narrow it down to surnames beginning with 'R'. Rogers had the most potential. Peter thinks we may have it."

Peter said, "There is an Alice Rogers, who is thirty years old, born in a farmhouse, and we found it is near another farmhouse. We got the address of that one, or they did, and then found out there was a thirty year old there as well. Jenner is the surname there. Therefore we think she is called Alice Rogers, and at some point in transition to Somerset or at Somerset she changed her name. And everyone calls her 'Allie', which can stand for Alice as well as her odd name, 'Alfia'.

Roger said, "On the family tree, the key thing is that Alice Shrimpton married a Rogers. But the family tree we just cannot work out, because it seems to criss-cross. There's a Fitzgerald, and a Berry, and once we found a Jenner we found a number of them. This thirty year-old chap nearby is called Jonathan Jenner. The two farmhouses are therefore connected."

"I happen to know," I said, "that this person is her fourth cousin once removed."

Peter said, "His father is in his seventies. He could well be one generation higher, but the family tree must be very complicated."

"And she knows her family tree. This concludes our investigation. I think we have it. Now, everyone, this is top secret. You tell no one you know what you know, or that you even looked. This includes your sister, Roger.

"Er..." he said.

"Well, don't tell her anything more and tell her to keep her trap shut. A large part of investigating is to say nothing, and we say nothing so that we can find out more."

"Did you know all this to begin with?" Peter asked me.

"I knew what I told you, but I didn't know her real or previous name. By the way, if you'd bothered to read her sermon of the 1st of December put online you'd have had a shortcut to information! Peter?"

"Er... They both read it. She made it sound like Shrimpton was the family name."

"Read afterwards and read carefully. She didn't. I also had the benefit of being interviewed by her last month, and no one interviews me without me interviewing them. I didn't know the family name was Rogers. So you have done the two things necessary. You have given me a result, and given me an explanation for the result. This is as much as any investigator can expect. What you said met my parameters and they were good parameters: and therefore this same aged man in a nearby farmhouse is a Jenner. Anyway, you two can go home early, and, as far as the dole are concerned, Roger and Bella, you work for me over at the Bever Wood Naturist Centre. As for today, I've finished with you. So go home, or wherever you want to go."

Chapter 24 Wants and Wishes

Narrator: Linda Talking Research (Thursday 5th December)

"Morning twins!" I said as Kathryn came through the double doors and Kathleen passed me the other way, having emerged from the kitchen eating. They both went into the cloaks and wet room area ready to receive their first client. It was a woman, too.

After a vestry telephone call to a certain rabbi, I had changed my plan for the day.

"I'm surprised you're here this morning," I said to Allie, drifting in and looking unfocussed in her leathers, "given that I'm going early to Wytham and nearby."

"I said I would see how things were, and then go home. You're going to see a film?"

"No I'm not. You do look a bit washed out: you'd best go home, Allie."

"What are you doing?"

"Do you have to know? Go home."

"Only if it is relevant."

"They are dropping me off, just outside Wytham. They'll go shopping, I won't. If you fancy some shopping..."

"You're seeing someone else?"

"Personal."

"May I ask whom?"

"You're not descending into your Norfolk dialect now, I notice."

"Who yar goin' be mardling with?"

"He is a rabbi friend."

"Ah, can yoi hitch up some room fur moi in 'eer car?"

"No. Go home."

"Will you be discussing the future of the church? He did the ordinations sermon - I assume it is him. Perhaps it's for Nonicking."

"What?"

"Whatever."

"Right. Come then. I'm sure you would rather go clothes shopping. So we have a stretchy black top and pink trousers today, do we, madam?"

"I am staying with you."

"Patricia's here in five minutes. Get your writing stuff, then. We'll hitch up some room for you in her car."

With Patricia driving, Diana in the front, and Allie and me in the back, we went towards Wytham, where those two would go shopping and we would be dropped off east of the city.

Meanwhile, efforts to ask Allie about her life were met with her not really wanting to talk about herself. She said, "I told you I needed to reset things back to as they were."

Patricia and Diana gave up. Allie looked to me as if she wasn't very well. More worrying still were hints of Diana having difficulty with Aardse. He was suspicious now of her Internet activity, but she did not say what this involved, only that he was not giving her personal space.

Patricia dropped Allie and me off down a rural road that reached Wytham.

"Who are you meeting?" asked Diana.

"It's a person with whom I want to talk theology, possibly ecclesiology, and the future."

"Is it a he or a she?" asked Diana.

"It happens to be a he, but this is irrelevant," I said.

Diana replied. "I believe you, but many wouldn't."

"I don't," said Patricia. "And why in the middle of nowhere? And we pick you up here in five hours?"

"Unless you hear otherwise, yes. Come on Allie. Heel!"

As they drove off Allie said she was sick of me telling her to heel. "Just think. I could have spent some time with Salome Lichtblau and her labrador Hendrik along with Klärchen Sisse and her alsatian Dieter. It's not something they offer to anybody."

"Ugh," I said back. "Well, go on then, what do they do?"

"Thought you might be curious."

It would take us just under half an hour to walk to Rabbi Maurice's house.

Walking along this narrow road, with a fair amount of traffic to dodge, I said, "I'm sick of your silence. For fuck's sake tell me something about you."

"The fresh air is doing me some good."

"No, about you."

"I'll tell you about Harold Garfinkel versus Erving Goffmann."

"Oh what's the point? You've already wittered on about symbolic interactionism versus ethnomethodology. So, okay, tell me: how does doing this ethnomethodology become sociology at all?"

"Ah yes, well. I am not a Garfinkel and since fan anyway. Nevertheless, trends are trends, and useful, and so what I do is diary based - write it up afterwards - thick research. What my options are I'd rather not discuss."

"I know about thick research. Bronislaw Malinowski was called incompetent by some as a social theorist. With all the data, where is the sociology?"

"I see. Yes, you did mix some of this with your theology study."

"Yeah, my past. Cunt."

"Well, it's about patterns, formulations and constraints. So the emphasis, as you know, is on the act and action, including - especially - talk. However, what Harold Garfinkel then looks at is patterns and also at constraints. So the issue is how people express themselves. The patterning they give is the understanding. This, and the constraints, are where description plugs into sociology as a whole. Constraints allow shape allow analysis."

"I think he is skating on thin ice," I said. "Where do the constraints come from?"

"The patterns come from the people. But people are not 'cultural dopes' as implied in top-down sociology. All we know is social reality must be based on interpretation, and that comes from the expression we see in itself - it becomes its own interpretation, as much as possible."

"You are better back with the actors having instrumental strategies."

"I quite agree. That's why it is always wrong to constrain - ha ha - the analysis," said Allie. "Known as the documentary method."

"Documentary method' is jargon," I claimed.

"It is really the reproduction of social order via understanding and expression, but the expression sets out the social order. However, patterns are perceived where they may not actually exist, where people indeed contradict themselves. But people insist on the patterns. Here is some jargon: 'indexicality'."

"And what does that mean?"

"It means that, in the context of reproducing patterns, people put expressions as if into indexes of meaning. So a research method could be to upset the indexes and demonstrate their fragility. Ask in your bank for a personal higher rate of interest; ask in a supermarket with its barcodes for discount. But this is not what happens. Hang on - when people don't index an expression as expected, they don't change the understanding but they say, 'You are not a member,' and reinforce the index."

"I think my church challenges common indexicality regarding church life."

"That is for you to say."

"Rhiannon Fleetwood and those Pentecostals certainly think so."

"You spoke to Rhiannon?"

"Yeah. You missed that."

"Why didn't you call me?"

"You were busy. Probably in the pub. Anyway, she was quite offensive. I defended you. And I don't need her to tell me that we challenge the common indexicality of church life. Naked submersion, massages, you know, are not what you'd expect. I have upset the apple cart a bit."

"If you think so. Then they say 'You are not a church,' and reinforce what is a church. Garfinkel says that we should ask not what makes a group a church, but what makes a church a church."

"Something for me to consider."

"There is a parallel in art. John Dewey and later Nelson Goodman asks, 'When is art?' rather than 'What is art?' you see."

"So when is art?"

"It's about the self perceiving of rhythm in all its variations and well as regularity, rhythm in the impulsions that come from the relationship between the art object itself and the subject's experience. That produces the aesthetic."

"Clear as mud."

"So a nude is the object but any sexuality expressed is the subject's experience, and that has a rhythm in the mind in the self that can be quite complex."

"I think I see."

"I should not feed you these intellectual tools," Allie said. "So Rhiannon had a lot off did she?"

I ignored that because I was pleased that I was upsetting Allie's 'indexicality'. "And what of the constraint with your participant observation?"

"As I've said before, I want to write a paper to say that the researcher must get involved far deeper than we think is normally and supposedly ethical. You don't just study jury meetings, but jurists down the pub, in the home, talking to friends, with their lovers. Informal decisions - reproducing patterns - get made long before they get into the jury room. It is the same with religious groups. So studying your new church and how it grows, I want to observe as many informal decisions as I can. I observe and then record afterwards, the main person or people, others as appropriate, and I engage with key informants - I choose them, but they don't need to know they're key informants. But sometimes you tell them in an exchange - they say more because they think they are important."

"Adam, Christine?"

"Even that time in your bed with Adam."

"Why would sperm donation involve reference in Roger's dissertation to the Frankfurt School?"

"There is something initially about the remoteness of sperm donation involving alienation - drawing on the younger Marx - but as an activity involving hope. Therefore, on the contrary, it is a form of production that involves a positive individual aesthetic, contributing to enhancing the self and communal quality of life. Something the later Marx neglected and subjugated..."

"Oh shut up, Allie. See that house there? That is the pile the rabbi lives in. And I warn you. He has the hots for me, and I want to keep him that way."

"Then perhaps explain to him that I want to be within earshot of whatever it is you end up doing."

"Perv."

"I am not a 'perv'; I am asking to be there whenever you mention the future of your church, your ministry and your relevant contact with him."

"You're still a perv."

Maurice with Linda & Allie

Expecting me, Maurice opened his front door even before I'd knocked. He offered and I took his kiss of greeting on my mouth and I introduced Allie Shrimpton with kisses from him to her cheeks.

"Let me say: your support for me made all the difference. The local President, the Vice President, the Board, accepted the findings and recommended no action."

"Good," I said.

"And we've moved on, with some renewal via what they call a Values and Services Document based on the values of kehillah (community), tefillah (prayer), limmud (learning) and tikkun olam (repair of the world)."

"I like that. Perhaps, Allie, with your Reverend Deacon hat on, you might think that's a good idea for us."

"I'm researching." Turning away from him I showed her a furious face. "But... yes."

"Excuse me Maurice if Allie and I go over there. Now listen, lady, start pulling your weight. Don't embarrass me with all this 'don't ask me' talk. We are here at this kind gentleman's home and you will behave accordingly as a representative of our local church and as my support. Right? Right?"

"Yes, all right."

"Sorry, Maurice."

He had some wine for us, and to his question I said my friends would be as long as four hours unless he gave us a lift up the road.

"Allie," he said, "tell me about yourself."

Allie then said, "I'm here as a researcher and a representative - observer and participant. My research interest is in the depth of conversation and activity by which Linda makes decisions with others about the building up of her church, her ministry, her future. Please do not change any of your behaviour because of my presence. If it helps, I'll join in, otherwise I will sit out and observe."

"She is going to do a paper on the extent of her peeking into nooks and crannies," I told him.

"What is the research problem?" he asked. "What is the core argument?"

"Hmm. I'm cheating, as many do. We collect data first and see what problem arises, as also identified by gaps in the literature. That becomes the research issue and the final part is the introduction and abstract."

"But on participant observation itself must be a side issue."

"In a separate paper on the ethics of extent of involvement I will argue that for successful qualitative research on the informal nature of decision making the researcher ought to be present as deeply as possible including private moments. This will feature in the methodology section."

"If Linda is fine about it, so am I," Maurice said.

Allie said, "And now: please ignore me regarding any decisions."

"No, Allie, some decisions are relevant to you as a deacon."

We all went into his garden conservatory, passing Mrs. Roberta Garfield as we went. The garden was expansive with its decking, grass, trees, pond, many borders, and a curving path touching raised beds, and, near the end, large trees and a gazebo to sit in. I was almost tempted to undress in the conservatory, but I didn't.

Soon, Joseph Meiman took us in the car to see Maurice's Reformist synagogue, shul, 'school', or beit k'neset, 'house of assembly', or temple, and he said on arrival that terminology indicates that the synagogue in general probably did not start as a place to pray or study but to carry out more civic business for the benefit of the Jewish community; it became much more religious after the destruction of the second Temple.

I indicated that 'my' Jesus did religious things in the synagogue; he'd also have used the Temple and participated in ritual animal sacrifice.

"But it certainly became the beit t'filah, a 'house of worship', and additionally a beit midrash, a 'house of study', as well."

Maurice's synagogue was set out like any other, except the women mixed with the men.

I told him, "Criticism of our sermon could be that you ignored feminism."

"I suppose I must plead guilty," he said. "Judaism has various attitudes. The Orthodox say that the Law sets out the purposes and roles of male and female, and that's it. Not that they all do it. The Reformist side in general say we have to scrap some laws and rules, while understanding where they come from and what they were trying to do. Conservatives think the midrash have minority views we can draw on for reforming purposes. These groups are not mutually exclusive: the boundaries do blur."

"Modernity is increasingly important to me," I said to him. "Our operation is small, but we need to be responsive to the way things are. Only bit by bit can we influence back. Allie here calls it indexicality."

"Ignore me," she said, so I did this time.

He said, "Remember that, before the disaster, German Judaism was often progressive and liberal. Leo Baeck died in 1956. He said Judaism is ethically optimistic and committed to freedom: he contrasted this with Pauline Christian emphasis on faith whereas a Jewish response to divine mystery should be directed ethical action."

We soon left the synagogue. Joseph Meiman said he would secure the building. Leaving the car, we three walked up one street, and then another, and a few more, and I recognised the street, for we came upon the Unitarian chapel there. It was locked and unoccupied, however.

"Kantian religion," said Maurice.

"Yes, I suppose you can say that."

"Reminds me of Hermann Cohen, who died in 1918. God stands ahead of causality in an eternal and renewing universe. Here we are, in that. Why aren't you wearing a clerical collar, if you are a bishop?"

"You know what? One time, when a curate, I was often in a cassock and collar - often nothing underneath. Now the clerical collar is on during worship only. Yet, I am in a high Church, full of emphasis on apostolic succession."

"You don't believe it, do you?"

"Not really."

"Is it, what, too magical?"

"Laying on of hands and all that. What is it exactly? Don't get me wrong. Symbolism is important. But it is about meaning and communication, not magical or supernatural transmissions."

"Be my wife," he said, "and become a Reformist Jew."

"Adam has given me a church," I said.

"Make it a full temple. You have a mikveh!"

"Even if I did, what about the others?" I asked.

"Life changes, things move on."

"I'm also quite theological, but that doesn't prevent new learning. I do refer to the Jesus chap, I suppose. You don't."

"Supplements to the mishnah mention him: the Baraita and the Tosefta. They say: Yeshu was hanged because he practised sorcery and led Israel astray; Yeshu had five disciples; a man bitten by a serpent was not allowed by a rabbi to approach Yeshu, and died before bringing proof that Yeshu could heal; a follower of Yeshu the Nazarene, Jacob, told a chap in Sephorris a saying of Yeshu's: that for the price of a harlot the high priests were gathered, and for that price they'll return, and so they came from filth and will return to filth."

"Sephorris isn't mentioned in the New Testament. Jesus and his dad may have been builders there."

"The chronology given supports the Gospel of John; and also he gets called 'Yeshu son of Pantera' - or Panthera - and this suggests a Roman soldier as a father. The tale comes from 150 Common Era and is a possibly a corruption of 'parthenos', Greek for virgin, although Panthera was a real archer buried in Germany and living at the right time."

"Evidence of Jesus's existence, then. Jesus's female ancestors in Matthew were all dodgy: a temple prostitute, a brothel madam, one who was sexually exploitative and an adulterer of King David. You could do another sermon on this."

"Or you could, Allie," he said, as we walked on, "and you do look lovely, by the way. Tell me about Malinowski, Bronislaw."

"What about him?" she asked, while I wondered why Maurice had said Allie looked lovely. His Board might have something to say about such an observation.

He said, "I take it he's your man, Allie. Was he any good?"

"He proposed that training should involve at least one intensive study."

"And this is yours?"

"Could be. As to whether he was any good, he was in the Trobriand Islands while others fought the First World War. He used their language. When the professor suggested I come here, I brushed up on key theologies with some advice about church life with and without theology. But I did not add Jewish Reformist theology. As for him, there is little sociology in his incomplete description of the kula ring. There is commentary, but that is not the same thing. But, it's a challenge to turn commentary into sociology. He was a functionalist - everything fitted in to a smooth purpose - but, well, was that so with the magic described? There was no comparison with no magic and therefore on the dependency of functions. On the other hand, he did bash away at sociological assumptions, e.g. the dominance of the group when it wasn't dominant. He admits that there is tautology and platitude. So: he sees something, thinks it has a function, but does it really have one?"

I said, "She does go on."

Maurice asked, "Does your professor help you?"

"Lots. Brilliant man. Paganism is his thing."

"Will he steal your work for his publishing?"

"No, I don't think so. If it comes from me, he says so. He is ethical."

"How old are you?"

"Thirty. Old for a Ph.D but I've had a run-up to this research with my own interests."

"Which are?" I asked.

"Good try," she said to me. "I knew I would do a Ph.D."

Maurice asked, "What are your weaknesses, Allie?"

"Philosophy. I can't make head or tail of some of it. Kant, I do get - somewhat."

"Philosophy," the rabbi said. "Hermann Cohen said Judaism's handle on Kantian theist ethics was better than philosophy. Humanity correlates its ethics to the ethics of God."

"Yup," I said, but unsure. "Our deacon is quite an intellectual."

Our walking on came to shops and the like, and it was an opportunity to stare in some windows.

Then I was staring at two grinning women, Diana and Patricia. I said, "Maurice, these are my friends Diana and Patricia. Diana is also a naturist, like me. Friends, this is my co-religionist Rabbi Maurice Neptune."

They shook hands. Diana said, "I suppose she is not asking you to go on this Christmas mission to her naturist club."

I said, "I haven't mentioned it."

Diana asked, "May I just have a quick word with Linda?"

Off to one side, she said very quietly, "Your secret is safe with us."

I replied, "There is no secret. We are discussing Liberal and Reformist Jewish theology and even Allie's research methods and I am applying his theology to my own ideas. I'll see you later as planned."

Parted from my friends, Maurice, Allie and I continued on. I said, after a silence, "We are getting further and further from your car."

"I will contact Joseph Meiman to pick us up, before we get to the pedestrian area. Franz Rosenzweig, who died in 1929 I think, said that both Christianity and Judaism were authentic communities of love and this is how God manifests his love into the world. Judaism is the eternal life, and Christianity the eternal way. How's that for interfaith? And he thought that theology supports philosophy. So we don't do your seasonal mission to naturists or anyone else: we just have to be."

Then we sat on a bench at the end of this pedestrianised street, which became steps ahead on a slope upwards. "Come back to my house?"

"Yes."

Maurice took out a phone. "Joseph, we are at High Street Hill, just about where it starts. Come and get us please. By the way, Linda, Joseph is not a follower of Yeshu."

Maurice's car soon arrived, and Allie got into the front and he and I actually got into the back. Joseph drove us to a fish and chip shop - where, inside, we had haddock and chips each. When we had finished, the car was back, and the chauffeur took us into the near countryside with well spaced large houses along this fairly narrow road and therefore on to Maurice's house, swerving into his drive.

We were back into the heated conservatory, despite the enveloping gloom of the hour outside. He kissed me, and I kissed him back.

He said, "Sorry Allie. You did say. I could love you," he added, to me.

This was followed by silence. "I can see it," I said.

"Into the future?"

"Yeah."

"There is Adam," he pointed out.

"I don't think he loves me. I don't love him. He is special now; but I am more attached than in love. I had an interesting encounter with a bishop saying I should leave Adam. Adam could love another woman better, but she has issues. There is history there."

"Is this relevant to you, Allie?" he asked.

"I'm not here," she replied.

"But you are here."

"Maurice, please carry on as if I was not. Do not restrain yourself either, on my part."

"What about Elizabeth Huett?" he asked me.

"Well, I don't know. She's not right with Jenny either. Elizabeth feels obliged but it is wearing thin. Jenny should switch to Adam. I do realise this. I'm assuming she'll move aside and that he will take her space. I'd even suggest it."

Considering Maurice (Thursday to Friday 6th December)

"Stay with me tonight," said Maurice.

"We're due to be picked up."

Moving to one of his lounges, the rabbi said to me, "I want to experience you overnight. You are my most intelligent hope: a rabbi needs a wife. They can pick up Allie. She can show Joseph the pick-up point."

"If Linda stays, I would like to stay," Allie said. "I would get out of your way."

I responded to him. "I'll stay with you, but the wife thing... I mean, I've only just become used to my separation, thanks to Adam. But I am, well, thinking..."

"Stay with me and I'll convince you."

"All right," I said. "I'll text Adam. We'll drink more wine? So, here we go."

Adam. I am slowly getting drunk and staying overnight in Wytham. I know I don't drink much at all, but this friend does - not Allie this time so much - and I would rather not travel. I fancy an extra day here anyway. Might see if I can meet the Unitarian minister tomorrow. Allie is staying as well, so we are discussing and behaving. See you later tomorrow.

"What a gentle liar you are," said Maurice. "So now I have to offer you more wine, indoors."

"Yes. 'Fraid so. Allie, I am sensitive to your presence. Yes, you can look at the message."

"I've a few issues with that," said Allie. "But nothing major."

"He does know you can have a skinful," I suggested, to no reply.

Maurice said to me, "I'd love to share time with you in my jacuzzi bath in the bathroom."

"I'd love it," I said. "What about Allie?"

"Well, there is room for three but it's with you I want to bathe."

Allie said, "I will undress, put on a dressing gown, if you have one, and sit to one side of the bathroom. You two can then carry on."

We two decided to drink red wine in his jacuzzi bath situated in the centre of his large bathroom. Lights shining on to us, Allie was sat in comparative gloom. So he was at one end of the agitated water, and I was at the other, being gently stimulated by the technology and each other.

I was seriously considering what sort of future I would have. It was as if Adam had provided a bridgehead for me, and yet he was slipping away. I could be a rabbi's wife, a rebbetzin Maurice had called it, even a rabbi myself. I made my legs wide, arms out of the water.

"What is your view of tradition?" he asked.

"What?" I mean, I was exposed to him and he was asking theology?

"Tradition." (He didn't sing it.)

"Oh, I don't know. It's useful. Keeps us balanced! Do you understand that quip, Allie?"

"Fiddler on the Roof."

"Nothing gets past you."

"Let me tell you about Jacob Petuchowski."

"You are a mine of facts about this individual and that. I can hardly think of any."

"The pharisees, you see, were appliers and adapters of tradition to the situation, according to Petuchowski."

"Oh yeah."

"Are you interested?"

"Please, go on."

"Reformist Jews like us should focus on tradition: that's what he was saying. You see, many think we Reformists minimise what we should follow. Learn the tradition, and then reject it or apply it as relevant to the circumstances of life."

"Like when in a bath."

"It involves your own conscience, but also what the community under the covenant needs. Oh, the millennial teachings as well. These are contexts for your personal code."

We could hear ringing. "Yeah. Let me just lean out here to my bag. I can't reach."

Allie in an open dressing gown, naked within it, appeared into the light, went into my bag and handed me my phone. She retreated back into the gloom.

"Diana. Hello. You and Patricia drive home without us. Allie is staying, so don't get silly ideas. You've had a meal? Good. We had fish and chips. Yes I am. So is Allie. He is 'sweet talking me', as you put it, all about someone called Jacob Petuchowski. He was into reform. I'll see you soon, when we take our clothes off again. What? Mind your own business. Allie is with me. Diana's laughing, Maurice. I am drinking wine but I am also talking shop. I am getting light headed and I'd rather not travel. I know I am not driving. I might look for Charley Darley the Unitarian minister tomorrow. Adam knows; I sent a text. Bye-ee."

"I haven't got any pork pies," he said, as I switched it off and put my hand out holding the phone.

"Thank you, Allie. In my bag, please. What are you on about, Maurice?"

"Lies," he said.

"They're not lies. Okay, they are. I am relaxed not because of the food, or the wine, but being in this fuzzy water thing with my legs open, my arms wide and my head - once again - going back."

"Good," he said, "and this bath stays warm for as long as you want."

"I do want. But I will get out before my skin starts to wrinkle. Tradition? I'm light on tradition myself; Liberal Catholicism seems to have it both ways."

Half an hour later Maurice offered me a large towel and, more than this, we got out and he started to dry me with it, assisted by jets of warm air coming from the ceiling and the wall.

"Fancy a bath, Allie?" he asked. "The water refreshes itself."

"Maybe, before sleep," she said.

"I think Linda and I might just be going early to the same bed."

"Can I sleep on a chair perhaps, in the same room as you two?"

So I said to her, "I might find you a basket, a rug and a bowl of water."

"Now then Linda," said Maurice, "She is a very dedicated researcher. Allie. Ah, Allie! There is a sofa in the bedroom that goes from one wall to the other. It is big enough even for two. You can use that. The heating will stay on. Just cover yourself with a duvet from the cupboard. Do you want a bath?"

"I'd rather hear what you have to say."

So Maurice pressed a button by which the jacuzzi bath emptied and then cleaned itself.

Bedtime was thus very early, and Mrs. Roberta Garfield had already provided fresh bedsheets and a duvet. Allie went out and came in (from meeting Mrs. Garfield) carrying a duvet over her gorgeous naked body. She got on to this huge curved leather sofa, and lay her head on its end arm-rest. In our bed Maurice said to me, "You were saying about symbolism before. I'm thinking of Solomon Formstecher, who, if my memory serves me, died in 1889."

I said, "Your memory serves you very well. I bet you go down well in Jewish theology pub quizzes."

"Influenced by Von Schelling. Cosmic unity, a Divine World Soul, seen in spirit and nature. How we know it, you see: but always our knowing is at the point of symbols, and we should not confuse the two. The spirit from the Divine Soul is important so that we do not confuse religion with nature, which is Paganism. That's the suggestion."

I could hear Allie groan. I called out, "What?"

"Hey?"

"You."

"Nothing. Ignore me. Sorry."

"It's all right," I said.

"No, I've just farted." Allie had a little giggle.

Now I turned close to Maurice. He said, "I have a rather adapted part of the Hymn of Glory from the Ashkenazi liturgy:

*"Sweet hymns and songs I will recite
To sing to you by day and night
Of you who art my soul's delight.*

*"My intercourse this day and night
May it be present in your sight
For you are my soul's delight."*

"Allie! This is a large room and she's stinking the place out."

"No problem," said the rabbi. It proves she is alive. At which point he came above me and his penis penetrated me directly, and his hand ran across my breasts, and I arched and pulled back my legs to help him in as far as I could take him.

He said, "My Jacob's ladder ascends into your mystical delight. I arise up the ladder of emanations to unite with your divine self."

"Steady on," I muttered. "Just do it well."

Then I remembered how the National Church Confraternity people theologised the sexual act. After all, he was in the group.

Yet his action was sweet, and sure I responded to its simplicity, and, without doubt, love; he lay there playing with my small nipples.

Allie came over, and I feared she would stop us as she did with the bishop at Maa Skelter.

"This bath, does it operate easily?" she asked Maurice. "If you are just lovemaking, I could have a bath after all."

"I will show you. It is virtually automatic from the taps. I will show you how to change the presets."

I lay there alone! She had stopped us! And he, naked, was now with another naked woman! After ten minutes I wanted to go and find out what they were doing.

After twenty minutes he returned. "She'll enjoy that. She started blowing bubbles."

"What, with bubble bath?"

He got in.

"From her arse. She said that if we fall asleep she will be very quiet. I suggested her own bedroom but she wants to wake when we wake. She is going to write her notes in the bath and perhaps get all her gas out. I spelt out a few theologians' names for her. She has a lot to remember, she told me, after she got in the bath with a new notebook and a pen. Yes, she will relax I am sure."

"You're so kind," I responded. "Get close to me, let me feel your whole body."

He penetrated me again and made a solid effort. This bed really was super-comfortable. Ours at the church was large and good, but this was in another league. I often rolled into Adam, but here the space you made was where you stayed.

In the morning, when it finally arrived, I got on top of his face, so he could lick me and I could suck his circumcised penis down my throat. I looked at Allie looking at me with his balls hanging out of my mouth. So I soon turned away to face him for more body language events.

"You are my Kabbalah," he said, as I rose and sank. "You come to me in supra-intellectual ecstasy."

I quickened my pace.

With his sperm running down my left leg, we went to his large bathroom again, and we stood in that jacuzzi bath, where a spray of water came down from the ceiling, and he rubbed a soapy sponge around my body: front, then back, then front again.

"Come on in, Allie," said Maurice. "Have a morning wash."

So she got a sponging from him on her front, and I took it off him and I did her curvy back and bottom, down her legs too. Then I did his front. I said, "You do his back, Allie."

"Thanks," she said, and she took the sponge. "I had a good shit earlier so I won't be letting off."

"Lovely girl," I said.

"Maurice said, "No, she is a lovely girl."

The spray took over from above and sides lower down. With the towel and air combination again, he dried me, and me him, and then I did her. This was the first time Allie looked at me with wide eyes since Margate, and seemed to draw me in with them.

Allie and I went naked ahead of him into the kitchen, and he caught us up holding three of his shirts. we all slipped them on to fasten buttons in two places each.

This was because, while eating our ready cereals, milk and breadrolls, Mrs. Garfield came in with her bucket and cleaning equipment to do lots of housework.

"Make me a husband," he said. "I want you as my wife."

"Oh Maurice," I said, "I would - but there is so much to arrange, so much to sort out."

"Come with me," he said. "Have you this morning free?"

"Yes."

He took us to an art room in this house. An easel was already up, and paints available, and a chair.

"Oh wow!" said Allie.

I remembered San Bandyopadhyay at the hotel, where I was literally painted over. Here, spotlights came on, and he adjusted the relative brightness. Then a lightbox added more directional but minimal shadow light. Finally a light came on behind me, to make a kind of halo around my growing hair.

I went nude, but it wasn't just Maurice who started to draw me for a painting. Allie asked if she could join him, and so he pointed to a large cupboard containing canvases. Allie put one on her knee, and sat to draw, sharing his very many coloured pens.

I did agree to have my photograph taken so he had reference for his painting, despite being reminded of Ken Osis. So Allie took one photo with her own rarely seen mobile phone. Her number was not on my phone! My pose was a slightly arched back, a direct look with a three-quarters face, and my legs and feet were pushed down and open somewhat.

We paused for a break, and I slipped the blouse back on. We found Mrs. Garfield making us all a coffee.

She said she had been working for Rabbi Neptune for five years now, and she kept all his secrets. So on that basis, I asked if I could borrow her kneeling pad, and thus back at the art room I first knelt to bring his circumcised organ to another climax, swallowing. Allie did not draw this! I resumed my pose for another two hours. Allie was on to her second canvas.

The rest of the painting he would do alone. Allie would complete hers later. He would email me the result, if I wanted. And then it would be a physical gift at our next meeting together.

When we had finished, we found our clothes made into neat piles in the kitchen by Mrs. Garfield. Mrs. Garfield herself came in with a wet flannel and wiped my, his, and Allie's feet clean.

She said to me, "I hope I'll be seeing you much more often. Good to meet you as well, Ms..."

"Shrimpton."

"Quite possibly," I said. "Marriage you mean?"

"Well."

Then I looked at Allie, who was looking at me directly.

After this Maurice's chauffeur drove the three of us into Wytham, where we had a seafood and salad lunch in a small restaurant, not the Jewish one.

And then he stood with us at this bus bay. He kissed me on the mouth, and Allie on both cheeks, rather as when we had arrived. Me with my bag, and Allie with her bag and two canvases, got on the bus to take us over to Serninsea.

The journey started with mutual silence, but when I looked at her she gave me that open-eyed stare again.

"What?" I asked.

"You."

"Me what?"

"Just. Oh forget it. No, I mean, can I come in your bed tonight?"

"Well, I'd have to explain to Adam."

"Yes, about decisions, tensions and difficulties."

"What decisions? What tensions and difficulties?"

"In the church."

"There aren't any decisions to take..."

"There are implications. I want to be there."

"What implications?"

"Just want to be... Forget it. Just forget it, right? We were better not speaking."

"Right. You're so strange. What do you want from me, Allie?"

"I don't want anything. I've come here from Somerset, from my home in Walsingham, and from you I want nothing. Absolutely nothing."

"Yes. I gather this. Other than research: nothing."

"Yes. This is what I am here for."

Arguing with Adam (Friday 6th December)

I could tell something was wrong when we got back into the church. So I went upstairs, leaving Allie to take her revealing canvases to her home.

Adam's left shoulder had a bandage on it. Kathleen and Winnie had attended to an injury last night. Adam explained to me, "She stabbed me and said it was really for you."

"I didn't look at my phone. I've been really tired, even on the bus."

"She caught my arm, and Liz grabbed her, pulled her away and screamed at her to stop, just missing being injured herself. All on the first floor as I came up. I've been waiting for you."

"Yes. Good. I mean, not good - but better than it might have been."

"Where have you been?"

"I've been in Wytham Temple and learning about Jewish theology."

"Really?"

"Yes. Hermann Cohen, er: Leo Baeck, Franz Rosenzweig..."

"Can't you do that on the Internet?"

"I like old fashioned study. Rabbi Maurice Neptune was giving a lecture on Reformist Jewish theology and its application to ethical behaviour."

"You didn't tell me you were even going," Adam responded. "I thought you were seeing a film and going shopping."

"I only discovered this at the very last minute. Patricia and Diana went shopping, and fortunately they were shopping for the same amount of time as his lecture and application through personal study."

"But you stayed over."

"Because I wanted to absorb more. It's one thing knowing Christian theology, but these are unusual names to me. Where is Liz?"

"Hold on. Where's Allie?"

"Probably taken her canvases to her house."

"What canvases?"

"I posed. Maurice paints. Allie painted too."

"Not quite all theology then. You went nude, of course. Elizabeth is downstairs somewhere. She's still shocked. It could have been her."

I went downstairs to discover Allie with her in the vestry, the canvases leaning against the wall. Allie had obviously turned back.

"What happened?" I asked Liz Huett.

"She's been carted off to some secure hospital."

"She attacked Adam," I said.

"She was attacking everyone. She said he was you."

"Liz, does this mean you are likely to leave now? I'd prefer it if you didn't."

"Your group incardinated me. It's appreciated."

"That is a weak reply, Liz. You've been really good here. I want you to know that."

"Lucky lucky, he was," said Liz. "Adam ran backwards from the stairs and I got her. It was an unprovoked attack. The ambulance came, Jenny was in distress, the police came as well and she has been sectioned."

"Mental issues come to a head," I said.

"As I've understood it, she had schizophrenia after you went to university. She stabilised with her religious belief: very charismatic, that sort of thing. Her uncle - so called - was a model for her, but she lost all her beliefs and recent times have been stressful. Perhaps her apparent rationality has left her defenceless mentally. I don't know."

"So what happens now?" I asked

"We'll be told when we can visit."

Allie this time followed me back upstairs to Adam and we three went into our bedroom. "Look," I said, "perhaps we haven't realised all the trauma, really, of the scandal and its controversy, and from changing accommodation, and even all of us leaving the National Church. I fear my own outbreak of PTSD."

Adam added, "She was bonkers when she went all evangelical."

"Liz seems to think differently. Liz thinks she lacks a kind of defence, now."

"Liz didn't know her back then. Yes, her beliefs were a kind of cover."

I said, "After theological college some ministry students who are strong evangelicals are at sea from the critical stuff. They hide it or bury it. This might be the origin of it."

"No it's not; it's her internal mindset. Yours I worry about too."

"I'm not going to go nuts. I've had a remarkably smooth transition."

"It's your attitude. I contacted you, I even got Christine to contact Allie."

"Allie. Did you check your phone. Did you know?"

"Yes."

"That's it, Allie. That is it with you. Your research here is over."

"Christine told me we should not return. Look at the message! Look!"

Adam cannot get Linda to respond. Jenny has attacked Adam's left shoulder with a knife. He says she is contained in her bedroom. If you get this, do not return back until Jenny has gone. This could be any time tonight or even into the morning. Christine.

Allie said, "I asked to go and have a bath. After Maurice left me I read the message. I didn't want to disturb you two."

Adam said, "Ah, so you were having sex with him. And don't blame Allie. Christine was right. My message was in reaction; Christine considered the situation, even from afar, and at least she'd replied. I'll tell you. We had to shut Jenny in the bedroom on her own, hoping that she wouldn't smash a window and try and get out. The ambulance people coming for me found her distressed; they called the police and she was removed."

"You could have told me, Allie. Like in the bus?"

"You wanted quiet. I didn't know what to say."

"Anyway," said Adam, "she'd have killed you, Linda. She hates you with venom."

"Please show me your arm and I'll put another plaster on."

"Don't come all sympathetic for me. The bandage is good. So you had a good dose of his circumcised penis? Did she Allie?" (Allie didn't answer.) "Which leg did his sperm choose to run down?"

I said, "Adam! I think we should go to hospital. For you."

"I already have an appointment later today, thanks to the guidance of the paramedics. The clinic will inspect the wound and probably change the bandaging. So are you converting to Judaism now? You can't circumcise a clitoris, can you?"

"I'm trying to find a different footing, new ways of proceeding."

Allie asked, "Do you want me to end my research?"

"No. But take it as a warning. Start to do what is expected, and be more positive."

I drove him (and Allie) to the surgery for his given appointment. The nurse-practitioner chose further drugs to assist the healing.

When back, Allie had a peculiar request, given all that had happened. "Should I stay with you, like before? I mean, in between you two, in bed? You might say something."

"Adam?" I asked him. "We're not going to talk church exactly are we?"

"No, I won't."

"Allie, you'd better go to your house."

So after she looked at him and looked at me she turned and went out of the building.

When it was bedtime, and both were undressed, and we had been in the bathroom, I said to Adam, "We need to bond better. Perhaps we need a less-loose relationship."

He got into bed first. "Too late for that, Gomer. You do know that Fatima was spotted in Serninsea," he added.

"No?" I responded. I got under the duvet too.

"Fatima's probably seeking out Rhiannon Fleetwood. This Rhiannon is a bit of a loose cannon. You're too full of yourself, too full of the rabbi. Literally. Gomer indeed. Well, I think Liz went to see her but she has said nothing."

"Jenny?"

"Not Jenny. Fatima! Something is going on. It could be that Jenny knew, and exploded."

"I want a fuck, Adam," I said.

"Ask around," he responded. "Someone in Serninsea or in Wytham will give you one. Hey, I know: why not go and have a roll in the hay with Allie?"

"From you, Adam. You could call me Tamar or Rahab, a prostitute and a madam, if you think that of me."

"Gomer seems sufficient, from his sermon."

"Goodnight Adam. Mind how you lie on that shoulder."

"Thank you. I do know. Seriously, why don't you go to Allie's house and sleep with her? Have you not ticked her off your list yet?"

"Adam! I don't know where she lives. Do you?"

"No."

Introducing Connectivity (Monday 9th December)

Matters over the weekend calmed but were not good. Allie was very quiet too, disappearing on Saturday to reappear with her hair looking fantastic, this at the same time as starting her period. Otherwise she just followed her duties and then kept her distance all weekend. I did recommend she read, as I was doing, Carol P. Christ and Judith Plaskow, one post-Christian and one radical Jewish, both feminist.

Now we had a short year-ending conference happening at the Titansea Grand.

The Bishop of Bolingbroke was due to be present at this conference, but there wasn't such a bishop. I was due to be there as a National Church local priest, but I went instead as an independent bishop with a local congregation. Councillors were there, and the recently re-elected Tory Member of Parliament (an increased majority: I'd voted Liberal Democrat). Colin Cromer would have been present, but was gone for good, and so the Reverend Rhiannon Fleetwood had taken his place already.

Allie alongside me in her leathers said, "Oh no, she's here."

"Tell me, how do you know her? Don't conceal things from me."

"She trained at Taunton Theological College, in the Somerset diocese. No one would touch her. Rochester took her as a hardline evangelical, if that's what she was."

I then said, "We saw she's full of herself, talks about herself."

"Who's we?"

"Peter and I had the benefit of her presence. You weren't present."

"I seem to be missing important encounters. I'm not even getting my research right. She's horrible. I'd better not say any more."

"You realise my relationship with Adam is effectively over. But, er, about you. Taunton is a big place, Somerset is bigger, and you were a student but not at that theological college. So why would you know her? Speak up!"

"Her reputation, including among tutors. She was insignificant but we all knew of her."

"You are still saying nothing about yourself."

A businessman stood up to speak first.

"Here we go," Allie said.

"I get more blood out of a stone."

"We are partnering up with the local town just as a start to our great ambitions. This could well be a leading smart town and will generate livability, workability and sustainability. Let's make this a programmable town to create a central platform to drive the Internet of Things, Artificial Intelligence and those all-important algorithms for decision strands. You know, SMS, of that measured old technology, has gone, and let's replace it with the new to drive a partnership with the local authority. Councillor George Hale, please."

"Thank you Furqan Ahmed, of ConnectSernin, a new, small firm in Titansea - and just what we want. Through this drive for change we can develop deep-penetrating services from health and social care to where to park your car. You will be able to make effective transport decisions. Enhanced data sharing means better decision taking. We are supporting this investment: we could become a very smart town and the new year could unlock great opportunities."

After some forgettable contributions, and then comments, someone in the audience, a lady called Janice Peel, made the obvious point: "How can we make good decisions about transport if there is so little choice. The old technologies in transport need to be present for the new to make sense."

Rhiannon Fleetwood stood up and maybe assumed too much about her role. "Thank you everyone for making these presentations to this our town for its future. The National Church Diocese of Wytham wants to encourage all it can as consistent with its new national document, Faith in the Seaside. ConnectSernin that opened out proceedings is exactly the kind of business we need here, and I am pleased to say that Furqan is a member of the local Charismatic Church. Obviously it is not ours, but it is a good Christian body and I have begun to make connections there. I want this expanded parish - spreading the length of the tramline south - and Serninsea Marshes parish to become 'smart' in themselves, so that we have our own intelligent dashboard just as the local council would like for its services. I'm sure Foss as a county will want to follow on where Serninsea gets ahead - and our parish leads the way under my guidance."

No longer in the National Church, I had no place in the running order to say anything. So we just listened to contributions, talking optimistically and all of them skirting round the fact that SMS had gone and the dock was effectively finished.

Some time after some milling about with pleasantries and drinks, Rhiannon Fleetwood approached Allie and me. This was another a long-haired redhead - probably fake - approaching a shortened haired blonde with another long-haired redhead, definitely natural and incredible.

Ah, you're Allie's and up here too," I thought I heard her say.

I replied, "I'm not Allie's, but it's an interesting switch-around."

"What?" asked Rhiannon.

"Allie Shrimpton," my accompaniment stated. "This is Bishop Linda Jupitas. I am her researcher."

"I know who you are," said Rhiannon, looking at Allie.

"Bishop Linda, meet Rhiannon Margaret Fleetwood."

Rhiannon looked at me directly. She asked, "So what's your weirdo religious lot called, Bishop of them?"

"Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia. As you know, we're building a local congregation."

"Huh. Allie, my friend, come up and see me some time alone. I'm in the vicarage, don't you know. And, Linda Jupitas: there were days when in the National Church you went even to Margate. I know all about that and now Faith in the Seaside."

"Indeed I gave a paper at Margate, and Allie was there as well, as it happens."

"But you've walked off, Mrs. Jupitas. No one will listen to you now."

"Unlike you, I was born here, and I know this place, and here is where I intend to stay. And don't hide the fact that the Confraternity Vanguard regarded you as one of theirs."

"Well, they might have, but that was a mistake of theirs. I'm my own woman, always my own woman."

"You might have gone to South Wales," I said.

"Be careful what you say, Linda Jupitas. You might have made some money one way, but you could have hefty legal bills the other. And now you're free to practice a bizarre form of heresy. Brought in by the diocesan, I am being recognised."

We're making changes. I'm setting up a local branch of GARFOB."

"What's that?" asked Allie.

I said, "Global Anglican Reform Fellowship of Orthodox Belief. Fundamentalism."

"That's your opinion," said the priest-in-charge.

"Interesting," said Allie.

The Reverend Rhiannon then said, "I'm inviting you, Allie. Do you keep your mouth shut, as a researcher?"

"As a researcher I do," she answered.

"She does," I said.

When we departed, and walked a while back to the church, I said to Allie, "Well, come on, this woman was one of that group's hired vaginas. No doubt about it. If you know her, I want to know why. Are you a hired vagina as well, Allie Shrimpton? And what's this about me being yours? Why would I be yours? Could I have been a client of yours? You two wouldn't be working together, would you? Come on. Say something."

"Linda. She is a trouble-causer. She was in Taunton, like I've said. She went to Rochester for long enough to become pregnant twice. I told her to get lost, and she regarded me as lost even studying Folkways. I can assure you, honestly, telling you as much as I can, that I have no connection with her other than knowing her as an irritant. Whatever she is, I am not a hired vagina - as you put it."

Linda said, "There was a man here who's gone. He was the Reverend Jim Wilson. He was a religious sadist."

"I read your piece."

"Is she a religious sadist?"

"I don't think it matters if I say she knew a priest called Doctor Andrea Lindsey in the area, perhaps Andrea Plimpton now because she married the Suffragan Bishop of Sumorsæte. See how that goes. Andrea is no fundamentalist. Rhiannon's fundamentalism must be suspect. Rhiannon was friendly with her to improve her reputation by association."

"Has she got children in the vicarage?"

"I heard they were adopted as soon as she gave birth, each time."

"I'm suspicious of you, Allie."

"Then you'd be wrong on this matter."

Elizabeth Huett was in the vestry. "Ah, Elizabeth. Rhiannon Margaret Fleetwood has invited Allie only to the vicarage. Not me, but Allie."

"That's why I wasn't at the introductory Connectivity Meeting. I don't want to meet her at all."

"Why not?"

"Because, of all of them, she was and is full of arrogance and self-importance."

"Does she share the same rejection of Augustinian theology as you do - and me, for that matter? I mean, GARFOB is all about original sin, and every form of sin."

"Exactly," said Elizabeth. "It's cover. She is all talk. Jim Wilson walked the talk like a sociopath will. That's the difference. She is a duplicitous narcissist."

"You thought he wouldn't do anything to me."

"I thought Terry Barman had enough control over him that he wouldn't. Terry lied to me."

"Allie here says Rhiannon formed a kind of picket line with Andrea Lindsey."

"I didn't say that. Andrea wasn't involved in picketing anything - that's typical of how Rhiannon sucks people in by association."

Elizabeth said, "Rhiannon knew Andrea down in Somerset. I know that they are very different."

Allie said, "Andrea Lindsey is a priest but, hmm, perhaps a neo-Pagan in flavour."

She married Lynton Plimpton and might regret it," said Liz.

Allie added, "Rhiannon stayed single to be available, I think, to whatever pleasures came her way but ended up pregnant - twice."

Liz said, "Jonathan Eyre was both her kids' father."

Allie said, "In Chester, before Somerset, Rhiannon had her birth name of Briana Margaret Stewart. Look, I'm starting to influence things here."

"Keep away, Allie," said Elizabeth. "She is of Scottish lineage, and she is thirty-five. How she ended up in Somerset I'm not sure."

Allie said, "Same as me. She went to the University. She did Computer Science: theories, methods, practices and strategy, programming languages, computing architecture, construction, engineering, software, packages and design, right, and all these towards a wide range of computer-based systems. I wouldn't be surprised if she doesn't moonlight at ConnectSern."

I corrected her. "It's ConnectSernin. ConSern is a pub, as you no doubt know only too well."

Elizabeth returned to the topic. "Being the new Vicar of Serninsea won't be enough for her needs for excitement."

"A priest-in-charge," I said. "Not quite the same thing." I looked at Allie, but kept quiet myself, noting that she seemed to be well-informed about the computer course. "Tell me your connection, Allie, with this woman."

"Please believe me," Allie said. "I have no interest in her. The Fenians are coming with her. Andrea was a good 'un but I despise Rhiannon. In any comparison: I love you, Linda."

Liz raised her eyebrows, smiled and went out of the vestry and in an arc towards the kitchen, probably to conceal her face.

Allie immediately turned, walked rapidly from the vestry and ran out of the building.

I thought, 'She loves me?' I was going over that in my mind, in the sense of when did this thought come about?

Aftermath (Tuesday 10th December)

I had something of a lie-in. Had Allie said she loved me? What was that all about? It wasn't as if we'd said loving words or indeed gestures. In fact our relationship was pretty poor.

I got up to have breakfast from the main kitchen. I found Allie sat in the seating and dining area eating only toast and butter.

"You're later up than usual," she said.

"What are you wearing?" I asked Allie Shrimpton

"A rubber suit."
"It's like you're going diving."
"I like the blue across the top, and the shapely fit. Your post has just arrived."
I opened and put to the side three letters and held one for reading again.
"Now then, our Reverend Deacon, we've received recognition to do all marriages."
"I need the toilet again."
I thought she must have gone home.
Some hours later she was back in the building, looking white faced.
I needed something to say. "Have you been into the Blue Diamond Club recently?"
"I shouldn't answer but the answer is no."
"Are you planning to go at all?"
"I plan to cover as much as I can."
"Have you been shadowing Christine much?"
"She took me visiting street prostitutes; I've seen some webcam people at work. I did interview her about ecclesiology. I'm telling you this when perhaps I shouldn't."
"Right. You see, back at Margate, we got on so well, and now we don't. Clearly, there is a relationship, but it's not working."
"It hasn't from the beginning."
"You love me?"
"I was comparing you with Andrea Lindsey and Rhiannon Fleetwood."
"I don't know what that means."
"Andrea I fancied a lot, and Rhiannon I despised."
"See, I didn't want to love you, I wanted to hit you. That's my raw emotion."
"Hit me then."
"You're kidding. I'm sort of saying..."
"Go on."
So I half-heartedly directed a punch to her face, which she stopped with her hand, causing a small deflection. Her face and eye movements suggested that I have another go, so I put a more direct effort into it.
Once again I was deflected.
She said, "You can't win. Just start treating me properly. That would be a start."
"You're quite right," I said.
"I'm going to paint," and Allie left the building.
Later on, coming out of the vestry, she was back again. I approached her and said, "Get your feet off the seat."
She did take her feet off the seat and sat up straight.
I said, "At least I thank you for that. I've nothing for you to observe."
"I'm going back home," she said. I assumed she meant to her house and perhaps to do some more painting. Of course she had been painting me, producing two nudes.
"Okay, as you wish."
In fact I wasn't quite sincere. Peter had messaged me that Bristol had used 'Old Catholic' on the national website in terms of our identity. My message sent to them was to get the Old Catholic reference off the national website or we'd have a statement of our own locally contradicting it. I pointed out that this was without consultation and either we were a collective Church or we were not.

Later in the evening I was surprised that it had gone.

In the night I was in bed on my own. I assumed Adam was staying in the spare room above his business.

Narrator: Allie Walsingham (Wednesday 11th December)

Linda had become suffocating in Serninsea, not helped by having my period in full flow. I hated watching Linda make love with Rabbi Maurice, though I doubted she would end up marrying him. He was as much interested in my body as hers - the bath he prepared.

The 'love' I declared was more in frustration than actuality, but it was more than Adam's for Linda. He'd had enough of her. Christine had messaged me that she'd given Adam a room in the next house to me. He shared it with sex workers - when I had a house to myself! Linda would assume he was above the detective agency in his spare room, but he didn't want Linda to find him.

I wasn't successful with women. Annie Fenwick was nothing more than a performer. Klärchen Sisse and Salome Lichtblau were too interested in their dogs: they did do fantastic hair washes and treatments for humans and dogs.

I decided to take a break (at least) by going home. I did intend to give explanations to my family. I didn't want them to know I was in Serninsea until I was established because I didn't want Jonathan coming to find me. I would now see him and explain.

There was an early morning bus to Wulfstan, and, my bag packed, I was on it. The bus went through the coastal resort of Trichead, known by locals and holidaymakers as 'Triccy', and it terminated at Wulfstan, a drain's journey from the coast. I connected with a bus that went to Norwich via the northern route, thus stopping principally at Kings Lynn and then Fakenham, where I got off. Then it was the case of getting a local bus north, and finally walking. The walk was from Great Walsingham along a rural road and then another and then on to a footpath (parallel to the road) that crossed fields and went behind my parents' farmhouse. On that road Columns Farm is on the left and Selions Farm is further down on the right. Both names were connected, meaning field strips as in the old system of farming.

This footpath cut across our property. Further beyond the footpath forked and the right fork went to the road outside Selions Farm.

They had no idea I was coming. Very often the Rogers in my house and the Jenners in theirs worked and sometimes lived together. After all, Jonnie and I had done so through childhood and our teenage years together. We were all related in a criss-crossing family tree down the ages.

I could see my mother in the kitchen at the rear, who was clearly very surprised to see me. She came out and we hugged, like I was the Prodigal Daughter, and she said, "Alice, I'll get you a drink and have something to eat; have you come all the way from Somerset?"

"No. I have a lot to tell you."

"Let me put the kettle back on. Everyone is working at the Jenners, Jonathan too. Have you told him you were coming?"

"No mum. I wanted to get away at Somerset. You know that. And then I started my actual research, so I've been living in Serninsea in Foss."

"Serninsea? Tha's a rummun."

"I'm researching a coastal independent church. It's ethnography, part of what Glastonbury does."

"Never mind 'ethnography'. How long have you been there?"

"Not long. Only one and a half months. I first met them on 29th October. Enough to get established and then to come here to sort things out."

"I must ring your dad, your Aunt Sally and Uncle Paul. Jonathan felt so abandoned."

(My aunt Sally wasn't. Originally Sally Fraser, she was my third cousin twice removed. My uncle Paul wasn't. He was my third cousin three times removed. Not only was my Uncle Paul the spouse of Aunt Sally, but he was also her third cousin once removed.)

"I did write to Jonnie, mum, afore."

"We saw the letter. We were all sad and we had to help him. It was a shock. Jonathan wondered what he had done wrong. You 'came out' by letter, though we knew the tensions before you went."

"He hadn't done anything wrong at all."

The kettle boiled and water was poured into the teapot.

Mum asked, "How did you get here?"

"Buses. If you're patient, they do connect."

Mum rang through, and the one person who could be spared straight away was Jonathan himself. When he arrived he paused before we hugged and kissed by mouths. My letter had said.

I will always love you dearly, Jonathan. I regret nothing. But I would lie to myself if we married and it is not good enough just to do this for our families. I love you, but only you among males because I've grown up with you and I am used to you so intimately. I seek women for my fulfilment and could only love a woman. This is why I've had to go, and go far away, and we have to break physical contact. Already I desire my new tutor, and if she ever made an advance to me I couldn't resist her. I'm sorry, but to be myself I have to be somewhere completely new. I will come back but from a new situation.

"You broke moi 'eart," he said to me only a few greeting sentences in, still hugging.

"It broke my heart too, Jonnie, but I was tearing apart inside. We'll need to talk."

"You ran away. How you kept your application a secret for so long I still don't know."

"It wasn't easy. Somerset accepted it and I had to go. You know that my parents and yours supported me going, after the fact. And I have had a new and exciting time over there."

"Things were good here."

"You like this life, but it narrowed me. I told you that much. I love studying and learning."

"You didn't come back after being a student."

"I'm still a student. I'm so different now - I even dress differently. I talk differently - our quest together to lose our dialect has gone much further."

The others came in. "Hello stranger," said dad. "So you've come back in the finish."

I gave him, Aunt Sally and Uncle Paul hugs.

Soon at the evening meal they asked why Serninsea of all places. "I met a woman curate in a conference on coastal communities in Margate. I did some art of her - she even posed naked. I wanted to research some sort of community folk gathering institution, and when my professor had heard she'd gone independent and was setting up her own place I needed to go there."

"So have you got together with this woman?" dad asked.

"Because of the research, I can't. There is a kind of relationship, but a personal one is frustrated. And I've been fumble fisted."

Uncle Paul said, "So it hasn't worked out then."

"The research is interesting. Did you hear about the scandal in Foss?"

Sally asked, "Is that the same woman?"

"Yes. That's why she went independent. As I understand it she didn't do anything wrong, but the storm was too great with people leaving left, right and centre."

Sally said, "She was involved in sex parties."

"No she wasn't. She exposed them. She investigated the group and only got involved that way. Her new partner made a lot of money from the media from his investigating and controlling the investigating. He gifted her a church, although he has ultimate control over the property."

"Sounds a canny bloke," dad said. "So she fancies men."

"And women. He don't miss a trick."

A little later on I was asked the inevitable connected question. "How long are you staying for and where are you sleeping?"

I looked at Jonnie next to me on my left. He nodded. "As was usual."

"But," said dad, "he'll square you up."

"Well, we must talk."

Jonnie said, "It allows us to talk one to one and know where we are. We could have done this a long time back."

"After only one and a half months in Serninsea? I was in relationships in Somerset and finding my feet."

Mum asked, "Have you had relationships, then, with women I suppose?"

"Two awkward ones. A tutor and a secretary."

"With your tutor?" mum asked further.

"Yes. She made a big difference to me. The other one was an older woman still."

"This priest, then," Aunt Sally picked up, "sounds like another authority figure."

"She thinks she is the authority figure, auntie, but it wasn't my intention."

Later on it was bedtime, of course. Jonnie could sleep in either house, so we decided to have what was now his room in my parents' house.

"Let me look at you," Jonnie said, as we stood naked together facing one another. "You look fighting fit."

"I became lethal, more like. Let's sit on the bed. Let me tell you about my lover."

"This is painful for me."

"I know, I know. She was called Abigail and she trained me over a number of years. Jonnie, I was infatuated with her and why I never contacted anyone here. She was everything to me: dangerous for a tutor to have sexual passions with a student."

"Alice, please."

"Won't take long to tell you. One day she just got a new job and told me to find my own way in life. I don't think she ever desired me like I desired her. She may have had other lovers. When she vacated the scene, a woman who gave me more Gaelic lessons..."

"Gaelic?"

"...became aggressive towards me and I was weak and accepted her approaches. She was slummocking great. I got religion from Abigail as well, a women's group it was too, a sort of post-Buddhist semi-Pagan thing."

"Means nothing."

"She's a proper Pagan in a coven, as well as now in the Bristol women's group. Some of our fighting was within that group: training in self-defence and controlling aggression. She was in the same coven as my professor - a man, by the way and a good 'un too. Roland Mitton - heard of him?"

"You could have married me and had lovers."

"Would you really have been unpossessive? I didn't think so. I broke from the secretary by going to Serninsea. I didn't love her and she didn't love me but I was in her bed most nights."

Jonnie and I went to the bathroom together, and both of us called out goodnight to my mum and dad.

We got into bed. I said to him, "I dreamt about you in me - often, but it's better we don't kiss." I felt him and he was hard. "I'm on my period but the answer is still yes."

"Why can't I kiss you?"

"Because, though I love you, we're not in love. I don't want you to get the wrong idea now that I have returned."

"We kissed when I came in."

"But not for lovemaking, Jonnie. 'Lovemaking' in that I love having you in me and I'm not going to deny you."

"I've no condoms but if you're shedding..."

"Have you been with anyone?" I asked.

"Absolutely not."

"Anyway, I want to feel you in me of course."

I put a towel down for the blood. I'd never seen such a sight before. He had running tears while he was fucking me. So I held him close while he penetrated me and he came inside me. I was actually on birth control because of the possibility of a sex cult quietly continuing in Serninsea and presenting itself to me at any time. There was always the possibility of Jonnie fucking me again.

Of course he had blood on his penis. It wasn't the first time; he'd rather liked it in the past. The familiarity of Jonnie was comforting.

Narrator: Linda Informing Diana (Wednesday 11th December)

"She said she loves me," I told naked Diana at our resumed get together, "but she hasn't appeared today at all."

"It seems rather sudden," Diana commented.

"I'm ten years older than her. She wouldn't conform. She is her own worst enemy."

"You wouldn't have that attitude with me."

"We are the same age. So what does that mean, Diana?"

"It means no more than it says. What else has happened?"

"I stayed over with Rabbi Maurice Neptune. Allie was there so nothing happened."

"Is that her motive, then?"

"I do quite like him. And Adam is sleeping alone, away from the church."

"I heard about Jenny. That must have disturbed him."

"Yes, unfortunately I was at Maurice's at the time it all kicked off."

"I don't know why anyone would want to consider you. You mess things up and still have all these choices and can't choose between them."

I asked her to change the subject, like on to what she had been doing.

"All right. What about Derek Imperial resigning as soon as the diocese has a replacement?"

"You weren't involved in that."

"You obviously haven't heard the news."

"I don't move in those circles now."

"I'll bring up this text. Here:"

A committee is being set up at double quick speed, said the Dean of Wytham Cathedral, the Most Reverend Alistair Jackman. He stated that there will be two archdeacons, all the representatives at the General Synod, the Chair and two of the House of Clergy, the Chair and two of the House of Laity. As there are no bishops available from the diocese, the external Bishop's Council has appointed neighbouring diocesan bishops.

'Its task of drawing up a Statement of Needs should be obvious and speedy,' said the Dean. This goes to a constructed Appointments Commission to produce two names, one favoured by the Commission, then passed to the Prime Minister. The chosen name is sent with a Congé d'élire to the Dean and Canons and the bishop will be appointed.'

"Yes, Diana, it is an arcane procedure. But what have you been doing?"

She said she'd been getting into all kinds of online activity with a community formed around her favourite novel series, The Jacobite Gap Years, by Gabrijela Daffron. They also talked online about the television series. Much of it was fandom giving endless uncritical praise, but Diana was pleased that the author did engage from time to time with intelligent comments, and was excited when she responded to Diana's own postings.

Diana went on a bit about the plot and locations in the television version, to an extent that became slightly boring.

"I - and others - have real admiration and love for what Gabrijela Daffron has achieved. That's real love, that is, into the past when men were men and women were women."

"What?" I asked, with some incredulity of expression.

"Lots of strong, passionate discussions, one to one, online. Love for the author, love for the books, love within the romance back in those times."

"More than Aardse?"

"You lack empathy for something different."

"I didn't think that was a criticism made of me."

When we parted there was with a little strain between us. She seemed a little strange, to me.

Asking about Allie & Visiting Jenny (Friday 13th December)

She'd been missing for days so I was asking if anyone had seen Allie. No one had. "She isn't drunk or anything is she?"

Kathryn and Kathleen were unable to answer. Then Kathryn said that Adam had not used his bedroom above his business premises.

"Are they together?"

"Adam and Allie? Really?" asked Kathleen.

"She does put it about it bit," I said of her, receiving shakes of heads.

I had a text exchange with Christine, who said she'd ask around. She came back to me with a message that Adam was in Serninsea at work having visited Jenny. Allie had not been seen by immediate neighbours.

I went to visit Jenny myself, with a nurse alongside me in case there was a hostile reaction still.

Jenny was sat in a chair in a nightie and dressing gown, and seemed dull if receptive.

"Jenny," I said, "we all hope you're all right. Has Allie been in to see you?"

"Are you two lovers?" Jenny asked.

"Er, well, er, no."

"She must be then," said Jenny, showing that there was some spark within the dullness.

So I said, "She tells me next to nothing about herself. So she's not been in?"

"No. I went to the pub with her a number of times but she doesn't like me." Jenny added. "I said sorry to Adam and to pass this on to Elizabeth. Linda, I attacked him while blaming you for everything. I'm sorry for the confusion."

(Did this mean she would have been happier if she had attacked me?)

"I have some news, Jenny," I said. "Elizabeth no longer occupies the room; she is still in Serninsea."

"I asked Adam about Yojana. He only said she is well."

"Yojana Asthana?" (First I'd heard of this.)

"Yes. That was the spark that blew me up; I suppose I connected much together. My Uncle Bill has been involved somehow. Don't know."

I was wondering why no one, absolutely no one, had mentioned anything about Yojana and him to me.

After much coincidental chat, Jenny ended with, "Give my love to Yojana and when you see Uncle Bill."

Therefore I went to Adam's and found him upstairs wanking again.

"The film is called Love and is from 2015."

"I can do that for you - just as a friend."

"No thanks."

I asked why Jenny would refer to Yojana: did he have anything to do with her?

"Would it matter to you if I did? After all, you spread it about a bit."

"Given her association with my husband, yes."

"It relates to her and SMS, in the sense of my ownership of the lease of the casino building upstairs. She is a client and it is confidential."

"So Yojana was why Jenny let rip."

"What she said made no sense. Her head was all over the place. It wasn't relevant. Jenny must think Yojana upset your marriage. Keith and Yojana were at those orgies - you know, the ones Elizabeth Huett and Christine plan to bring back?"

"Why would Yojana be an issue now for her?"

"Perhaps because Roger and Bella do admin at my place, she does admin, and while you were at it in Wytham with the rabbi, they came to yours and they spoke to Jenny about Yojana as a client. I've since stressed to them about the confidentiality of client."

"Oh. You're not coming on our Christmas mission to Bever Wood?"

"Definitely not. And if Christine, Elizabeth, and it seems this Yojana arrange one of these so-called 'orgies', are you going to that?"

"No: I rule it out. So what is it: Yojana has the contacts?"

"Exactly. Christine gathers the supply side, as in the extended Werburgh Geese, and Yojana has the demand side, getting the people up here."

"Is there something involving Bill Masters?" I asked. "He's been in and out - seeing Jenny I suppose."

"Oh dear. Your eye really isn't on the ball. Allie knew all about this. I saw him because another religious group like his somehow obtained documents by which to claim he is not properly apostolically ordained, and he wants to know how they found out. Apparently, his consecrators were themselves not properly ordained."

"Not the Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia?"

"No, before that; but these independents have a chain of gossip. Your LAE could lose its reputation. Pauline was ordained bishop separately. Bill Masters is considering how he will get ordained properly. He might do it through others, but then he would not be incardinated, he tells me, because he was incardinated into the LAE as a bishop when these documents claim his ordination was false. Does this answer your interference in my business?"

"Yes it does. I won't talk about it with you again," I said. "Do you know where Allie has gone? No one has seen her."

"No, I don't. And, by the way, now you have the bed to yourself you can invite Allie in every night if you want."

"I don't know where she is; that's not to say I'd invite her over if I did. Right. I'll see you when I do."

And so I spent another night in bed on my own. I did some calculating and wondered if Allie would return only when her period was over. I'd no direct experience to draw on about its effects.

In Search of Allie (Monday 16th December)

Having not seen Allie and no one knowing where she was, I went to Adam's business premises at 9 am Monday morning. I went past Peter, Roger and Bella to ask Adam a direct set of questions.

"You're bright and early," Adam said.

"We have a mission starting Thursday and Allie is still missing. No one knows where she is and surely someone would if she was local. I have my SUV outside and I'm likely going for a long drive. I'm either going to Somerset or to Norfolk to find out if she is at one place or the other."

"Better pick the right one," he said.

"Well, which one would you pick?"

"If she's given up the research, or asking advice over how she gets on with you, she'll be with her professor finding out what to do."

"Glastonbury then."

"I wouldn't."

"So where would you go? I suppose you'd say wait for her to come back."

"Perhaps she'll come back in time for your mission."

"I need to sort things out with her. What do you know about her?"

"What I know about her would take me to her home in Norfolk."

"Why?"

"Because at home she is called Alice Rogers. They are not called Shrimpton at all."

"What?"

"I can repeat it."

"Come on Adam, something is going on here. What do you know?"

"Oh, her aunt and uncle living nearby aren't really her aunt and uncle."

"Has she been feeding us a tissue of lies?"

"But her name at university has been Alfia Shrimpton." Adam smiled at me.

"Come on, this is serious. Where do I go? Where is her home?"

"Collumns Farm, Walsingham. It's beyond Great Walsingham to the east. There's a nearby farmhouse as well. I forget its name. Peter!"

He came in. He said, "Living at Selions Farm is a man Allie's age, her fourth cousin I think once removed. He's called Jonathan. On that basis her uncle is her third cousin three removed and her aunt is the same cousin but one less removed. The Rogers and Jenners intermingle as families. Sounds like Alice was due to marry Jonathan. They had sex with each other. "

"She's not even a lesbian?"

Adam replied, "Apparently she is. She ran away - probably what she is doing now. He is like a brother to her."

"In her sermon she said next to nothing - I can see why now. She mentioned some Alice Shrimpton. So who was she then?"

Peter said, "We eventually discovered - Bella and Roger and me - that Alice Rogers is in fact the four times great granddaughter of Alice Shrimpton. That's why, given an amazing family tree, Akemi Tamuuz is related to Allie. Her father was a Shrimpton. I forget him because there was a Philip, a Patrick and a Peter or maybe more than one."

"It seems that everyone knows about Allie except me! Collumns Farm then. Well, if she isn't there I can alert her parents. I'm going to pay them a visit."

"And it is nearer," Adam said.

"And has Ann commented on you leaving me on my own?"

Peter said he'd return away to the reception desk.

"She says I must do as I prefer but to leave you running the church as we'd arranged. So I enjoyed our time together, but you were only ever a good mate, a 'fuck buddy' they say, and you clearly never loved me in the way you might have - nor me you. Elizabeth has also left her accommodation, so there is a spare room next to Kathleen and Winnie."

"What about Jenny, if she comes back?"

"If she comes back, well she could come in with me - here or there, perhaps"

"She attacked you."

"But her mind had slipped. It was you she didn't like and was confused about Yojana and also her uncle - another one who isn't an uncle."

"He's her father. That's rather different."

"Calling distant cousins of a higher generation 'aunt' and 'uncle' isn't exactly a crime. She'll have called them that as a kid, just as she was put to bed with Jonathan as a kid."

"Are they a bit odd in that family?"

"That's your department. They started as babies."

"She's told you this? She told you but never told me? I'm going there."

"I think you might be making it worse if you go with that attitude."

"Hmm. You're probably right about that. But I'm going there."

So I left him and said bye to the others, to get in the SUV and go south. I took the main road through Caffenmere to get on to the Wulfstan road, and then headed further south to the Norwich road, but in bypassing Kings Lynn I headed for the Fakenham bypass and then took the road to Little Walsingham and Great Walsingham to go east.

I stopped with Collumns Farm ahead on the left and could see Selions Farm further down the road to the right. Each farmhouse faced the road and seemed to have many outbuildings behind them. My first strategy was to simply watch.

Narrator: Allie A Surprise (Monday 16th December)

On Sunday evening we all went to the pub. Jonnie and I stayed on. I got hammered and had Jonnie's arm around my shoulder while I threw up into the toilet. He stayed at our house with me and I had a massive headache in the morning.

He fucked me with my period ending but was he frustrated! We were working together on fence repairing in Selions Farm, when he said, "I'm feeling horny. There's no one around."

"We are busy."

When we walked back towards the Jenners' farmyard he asked, "Can we do something here?"

"Before we do," I said, "I need a piss." So I did a squat in the open and then he whipped out his tool for the same reason.

"Go in then?" he asked, with it still hanging out.

"Can't you hold you hard 'til tonight? Anyway, I've got to contact Professor Mitton and ask for advice on what to do. Either I'll have to find a comparative church or I'll have to go back."

"Suck me off then and make it quick."

"Jonnie. As Beathag used to tell me, 'You're insufferable!' It's fucking freezing."

"Who's Beathag?"

"Beathag NicAmhlaigh, the Gaelic speaking secretary. Look, let's go in and after washing hands we'll go in the front room."

In the front room we went, when I instructed him to drop his trousers.

"What are you like?" I asked as I did my mouth duty towards my cousin.

He said, "Still no kissing?"

Releasing him for a second I said, "No. You've got to get yourself a girlfriend." I put him back in.

"Where does a farmworker find a girlfriend?"

I had no answer and sucked deeper.

"What does it taste of?" he asked as he started filling up my mouth.

"Shalty a bid," I replied.

"Lunch is from your mum today, although you've just had yours."

"Thad wad the condimen'."

"Swallow it. We're late as it is."

So my mouth still tasting him, he was restored with his trousers up and we went arm in arm out of the house and up the road towards Collumns Farm.

He said, "That up there is a Škoda Kodiak SUV, Alice. It's a seven seater."

"Linda has got one of... Oh no. Oh heck. That's her number plate. You'd better come with me. No one is in it; have they let her in?"

Jonnie said, "I thought I saw a figure in there, but I might have been mistaken."

The option of dodging around the back of the farmyard using the public footpath made no sense if she had gone in, and if she was in the car it meant she'd seen us and was hiding. Nevertheless it was an opportunity to confront the subject of my research about the future even if before ringing the professor.

We unlinked our arms in approaching the vehicle beyond the farmhouse. I came alongside the front passenger window and there below she looked up at me. Linda thus sat up and the electronics lowered the window.

I spoke. "You obviously found the address."

"Who's your friend?"

"He's my cousin, Jonathan."

"Ah yeah. I've, em, come to claim you back. I want to apologise. Have you said to others what happened?"

"Nope."

"What happened?" asked Jonnie.

"Never you mind," I said to him.

"Have you left us?" Linda asked me.

"Not yet. I was going to ring the professor today. Look, come in. This is my house, though we tend to go between this one and that one."

"You've got some stuff on your face."

"Jonnie, give me a hanky. Thank you. Come and meet our mothers."

"She's not called Shrimpton, is she."

"But I am. I changed my name - first name as well - after nearly a year at Somerset University. But mum still calls me Alice."

Cousin Jonnie said, "So do I."

"They all do. Are you coming in then?"

"Yes. I'd like that."

"Tell you what - drive that into the farmyard because the road is a bit narrow."

"I thought vehicles could get by but will you go around the back then?"

"Yeah, we will."

So our mothers greeted Linda at the back door.

"Mum, auntie, this here is Linda Jupitas, who runs the church I am researching at Serninsea. She's come over here to find out where I'd gone."

"You make a habit of not telling people where you are, Alice. Welcome Linda, and in you come."

"Linda, my mum is called Alicia and Jonnie's mum is Sally. For your information, my mum was Alicia Fitzgerald and my auntie was Sally Fraser."

"Not Shrimpton, then," Linda said quietly.

Linda was offered a (simple) coffee and we three sat at the table in the kitchen.

Mum said, her back to us, "Tell us about yourself, Linda."

Linda said, "I was brought up in Serninsea. My family is from east Nottinghamshire. I went away to East Midlands University and also to Bishop Querceto Theological College but returned to the coast. I got married but it's ended. I'm a minister of religion, and I was an Anglican curate but you might have heard about a scandal in my area so I left and started my own place and this is what your daughter, your cousin, is researching."

"She is actually bishop," I said.

"Allie, I call her, is a participant as well as an observer..."

"They go together," I added.

"...and so I made her a deacon of the church."

"You didn't tell us that," Sally responded. "You have responsibilities?"

Linda said, "She does. You did on Sunday but you weren't there."

"Alice does tend to vanish at times," mum said.

"Allie did say your family tree goes back."

My mother answered, "Yes, Linda. We are in and out of each others' houses. We co-operate a lot, and we are a very intertwined family."

Sally said, "Today Alice and Jonathan were doing some fencing repair."

"We were always doing that," Linda said. "We were mainly arable. My parents and sisters have now gone to a completely different farm in the hills of mid-Wales."

"Very different," said Auntie Sally. "It's not fenland where you are?"

"No, but quite flat and marshy in many places."

"And your church: it's just yours then and not part of anything?"

"I think it's good to identify with a movement, and we do with something called Liberal Catholicism. It's a tiny tradition, Liberal Catholicism, beyond Old catholicism, once connected with Theosophy and had a dalliance a bit with Buddhism and Hinduism, possibly Unitarianism, and not a little magick."

Sally said, "You've lost me there."

"Never heard of them," mum said.

"I hadn't, Alicia, until I encountered them via a distant friend."

"So you identify with that, and does Allie then?" mum asked.

"Only as a vehicle," Linda replied. "I think Allie has had a different religious background."

"She and Jonnie were C of E."

"I mean at university. Come on Allie, tell me something at least."

"I was in a post-Buddhist women's neo-Pagan group. My tutor, who became my girlfriend, was also an ordained witch."

"Really?" Linda asked.

"That brings me to a question," my mother added, turning around. "When she runs away, she runs away from someone. I'm really pleased she is back with Jonnie. What is her relationship with you, precisely?"

Sally immediately said, "I'm pleased she is back with Jonnie too but we shouldn't be carried away, Al."

"Well, Allie doesn't tell me much because she thinks me knowing too much about her would affect the direction of events in the church. She wants to be neutral and invisible. But when I look up the role of a participant observer, I think she is misunderstanding this. She can tell us about herself."

"I do tell others, to get along," I said.

Linda asked, "Do you not realise how frustrating this is? Beyond any personal, er, friendship, feeling, I have pastoral responsibilities. As a minister of religion, I have concerns for you. It is supposed to be a community of support. We, and I, worry about you."

"I'm quite capable of looking after myself."

"Is there more?" my mother asked Linda. "Are you here only as a shepherd finding a lost sheep?"

Linda said, "I see her now with Jonnie; I don't want to invade the space."

"I'm a lesbian," I said to Linda. "Jonnie is my cousin."

Sally said, "I'd think it would be rather difficult being this minister and having a personal relationship."

Linda replied, "Yes it would be. Starting a relationship with a member of your congregation is unwise. It can be seen as privileging one person. It has to be avoided or done with rapid clarity. It's more true that we keep away from each other."

"I told you I love you," I said.

"Oh," said Sally.

"Oh," said mum.

Linda reacted: "But... Look, is this the place to speak about this?"

"Definitely," mum said. "Jonnie wants clarity, for one. Lunch is nearly ready - we grew most of this ourselves."

Sally suggested we go into the dining room, and so we did, with spaces for the men.

Linda said, "Allie and I first met at a conference in Margate and I thought your daughter, your cousin, was a fabulously resourceful and fascinating woman. She drew me in."

"You're lesbian then," Jonnie said.

"I'm bisexual. In any case, gender is complicated. I should know."

"You're not a trans?" Sally said. "You're tall and your hips are narrow, I noticed."

"With my breasts?"

"Some trans breasts hang very nicely," said Sally.

"No, I am a type of intersex. I was born and grew female but I have male genes. I am a woman, and feel like a woman too in my mind, but I can't have children. With a female partner, the other one must do all the having children."

"Oh my," my mother said. "You'd be the father?"

"No, I am female. My internal testes don't work that way and I don't have ovaries. My testes produce oestrogen."

"Gosh."

I then said, "I also connected with Linda at Margate, and when the opportunity arose to be with her again I jumped at it."

"There we are," Linda said.

"But we cannot get it together, it seems."

"Well, we should and could. My latest partner has left me."

"I mean, you being a minister of religion and me a researcher."

"Trouble is, your confidences seem to be about more than research. Odd saying this in front of everyone. You and me have much to work out."

"We can work it out," I said back.

Linda responded, lyrically, "Try to see it my way, Do I have to keep on talking till I can't go on?"

The men joined us, said hello, but, although they realised Linda had come back for me, they seemed full of what they were doing and continued to do after they had gone.

When the men came in later we all had one evening meal.

Uncle Paul was the families' expert on genealogy, and he asked Linda for her birth details.

"Second of April 1979, Serninsea Cottage Hospital, as it was known then, daughter of Leonard Bode, born 5th April 1955 in Dunham-on-Trent, Nottinghamshire, and Elizabeth Lavender, born 12th February 1957 at Fledborough, which is just to the west of the River Trent."

"Just writing these down. And what about your paternal grandparents?"

"Elderly Robert Leslie Bode, born 1st January 1902, Saxfosdyke, died - I forget the day - in 1981, and Felicity Don, much younger, born 14th July 1926, in Dunham and both died in Dunham, and she outlived him by just under a year, 1982. Robert Bode was supposedly the son of Jane Waters like his siblings, but his actual mother was Janet Anson who was born in West Stockwith up the River Trent and died in Gainasburgh (that itself lies east of the River Trent) in 1950 aged seventy-five. I'll just consult a document via my phone. Yes, Janet was brought up by her mother Rebecca Anson née Donner with her partner Mabel Wood née Walland born in 1846. However, they each married gay partners who were ex-miners from the north east and each woman had one child each from their respective men. There were three children, however, because Mabel first had a child from, er, close family relations. I'll write it down unless you have a printer that will take this document."

"We don't need that," Paul said.

"Mabel's brother scarpered, and the two honourable men became bargemen going up and down the Chesterfield Canal, the Trent and the Humber - the result of which was indeed meeting Rebecca at a West Stockwith pub."

I said, "Clearly the bargemen had made contact enough with Rebecca and subsequently Mabel to reveal themselves as gay."

Linda said, "The story might have been embellished. I think Becca's gaydar worked and thus introduced Mabel. By the way, there was 'the barren woman', the sister of Harold Anson, who stayed in the north east. She might have been like me."

"And the maternal ones?"

Linda didn't need a document to say, "John Lavender, born in 1930 in Darlton and has just died on the first of this month. Emily Waters is thus now his widow, born 1937 in Ragnall, eighty three. Amy with the maiden name Bode, born 1911, was John Lavender's mother. Amy Bode is the grandmother by marriage of Leonard Bode and his aunt. It's a feature of village life, as your families testify, that family trees criss-cross."

"Okay, kid, I'll do some research," said my 'uncle'.

"Uncle Paul," I said, "I have a relative that visits Serninsea from Hartlepool. She is my sixth cousin, a five year old girl called Akemi Tamuuz, taking her mother's surname. Her father was a Shrimpton. I can give you the details."

"Later, lass."

I could see what he was going to try to do: link Linda in with our family tree, if he could. Linda had spoken of people from the north east, but I was talking of the line that went to the north east. The north east is a large place and the branches didn't have to meet and match!

Narrator: Linda Meet the Rogers and Jenners (Monday 16th December)

Trying to hide inside the SUV was a bit silly, with Allie looking through the passenger window. I'd have taken a flannel to her, as my mother did to me, although my mother never wiped smelly semen off my face.

Allie's family proved receptive, first her mother, Alicia Rogers, then her aunt who was a cousin, Sally Jenner, and then the two men, Alfred and Paul. Paul looked elderly, as old as I'd expect Jonathan's grandfather.

I was a new project for 'Uncle' Paul the genealogist. My grandfather Robert Leslie Bode (1902-1981) was, we took it, the son of Jane Waters, but there was no resemblance. He was fifty-two when my father was born in 1955, and died after he'd held me but before I could know him. Robert was one of unmarried Janet Anson's children from different married fathers. I knew of our family tree but never really gave it too much attention, but 'black sheep' and 'dark horses' always interested me. She was both, Janet Anson (1875-1950), the daughter of coal miner Harold Anson (1850-1902). Harold's actual partner was gay coal miner Arthur Paul Wood (1850-1923). Both moved from Thornley to Shireoaks to escape their reputation, but it did not work and so both then worked along the Chesterfield Canal, the River Trent and River Humber for more personal freedom. They were then based at West Stockwith. Harold married Rebecca Donner (1840-1921) from Church Laneham in our location by the Trent and she was the mother of Janet Anson. Rebecca's actual partner, Mabel Eliza Walland (1846-1926), born in West Stockwith by the Trent too, first had Jack Wood (1871-1957) as the product of incestuous rape by brother Colin Walland (1844-1916) from nearby Misterton. Mabel soon gave birth to James Wood (1877-1946) in Misterton in 1846, marrying Arthur Wood (1850-1923) beforehand. Jack, Janet, and James were raised together by Rebecca and Mabel despite the variation in surnames. Harold Anson was the son of a single mother Margaret (1831-1886), who herself 'escaped' from Easington on the coast to Thornley to act as a widow.

I wrote this down for Paul Jenner. So I could match Allie's strange family tree.

They called her Alice all the time, including Jonathan. Despite thinking I'd take her back, I stayed over, and that raised the question of where to sleep.

Allie said to me, as I came out of the loo in the evening, "We'll stay here and you are in my bed. It'll be a bit of a squeeze."

"Oh Allie, find me another room if Jonnie is sharing your bed."

"No, he has to get used to me being with someone else."

"I don't have any nightwear."

"We don't. Look, I've got back with him here on the basis that he knows I need a fulfilling relationship. Just go along with it."

When we'd had supper, and clearly her parents knew what was going on, we went to her room.

"It's become my room now," said Jonathan to me with Allie away in the bathroom. "I sometimes stay here, with Alice away. I'll go and brush my teeth."

He entered the bathroom and she was naked sat on the toilet, and didn't bat an eyelid.

I went and sat on the bed and was puzzled. Oh well, I took everything off.

"I'd give it ten minutes," Allie joked, as she came in carrying her clothes.

"This is a bit unusual," I said. "And you've left Jonathan in there, poor boy."

"If he's not used to my shit by now there's something wrong," she said. "We started off by having our arses wiped together by my mum and Auntie Sally. Thirty years of shared shit, Linda."

"With a gap while you've been at university."

"Well, he's pleased now I've been able to come back."

"The stink you make," Jonnie said, as he came in. "Ah, Linda: Alice said you're a naturist."

Allie then said, "I'll sleep in the middle. Then if either of you touch me, you won't have to touch each other. I'll sleep on my side to take less space and I'll face Linda, Jonnie. I'm not being rude. Linda and I have some relating to do."

That was interesting in itself. In bed Allie said, "Well, kiss me then."

"Yes, of course." So I began something that became continuous.

A little into this Allie broke off and said to Jonathan behind her, "What are you doing?"

"Kissing you. I want to go in you."

"Oh, go on then. Don't stop, Linda, I'm connecting."

It seemed to me she had multiple points of connection. She pulled me to her breasts as the man behind her was developing his own connected in-out rhythm.

Releasing me, Allie said, "I am being rude. Would you like to deal with this beast behind me?"

"No!"

"Well, thing is, if he is going to be back in my life, travelling to Serninsea from time to time, you'd better get used to him yourself. I'll move out of the way," she said. "Start experiencing what I experience."

"Allie, you are insufferable, incorrigible."

She smiled, and climbed over me, forcing me to move in to the centre of the bed.

"You're not happy with this are you, Jonathan?"

"She has told me I have to understand things have changed."

"Right. I've done worse." I grabbed his penis and wanked her cousin. "Are you all right about this?" I asked Allie.

"Gives me some relief from not having to relieve him, if you get my meaning."

"How many women have you fucked, Jonathan?"

"Well, no, I lack..."

"Make it two. In you go."

He said, obeying my instruction, looking up, "You're tight."

"Tighter than her, obviously."

"He's too used to me," Allie said, observing. She put her hand on the right side of my waist.

"You're not going to get pregnant?" he asked me.

"Not possible. You can come inside me, but I'll have to hold it in and go to the bathroom."

"I'll have it," Allie said.

"Dirty cunt," I said to her. "You're both dirty cunts."

"You're really crude for, what is it, a bishop?" Jonathan said, as he breathed more heavily. "So are you on the pill?"

"I'm CAIS intersex. I said I'm not trans."

"What's the case of your intersex?"

"C - A - I - S. It means my male genes were not recognised and I ended up female."

"You look pretty female to me," Jonathan managed to say.

"If you're not careful my cunt will squeeze you so hard you'll no longer function."

Allie let out an instant laugh.

"Here we go," he said, and exploded up into me.

"Here Linda, thighs above my head!"

So I shifted off him and on to her head, where she opened her mouth and stuck out her tongue, and took his output as if I was now serving her extra supper.

"You're just like at the car," I said to her. I then cleaned him up using mouth suction.

With that, we flopped down, and Allie saw no reason to cross back into the middle.

When I woke and needed the bathroom, I had to carefully remove first Jonathan's arm from one direction, and then Allie's arm from the other direction. It was then I took the opportunity to splash some water between my legs.

Homeward Bound (Tuesday 17th December)

Waking up to the motions of a man humping Allie alongside me, I could not quite get my head around how she could be a dedicated lesbian.

When he finally concluded he said, "I'm going to lose you again."

"No you're not. You'll find the church in Upper Road and people live above it. I think I'm moving in."

"Yes you are," I said, staring at the ceiling. "But next week we have our mission at Bever Wood."

"Could Jonnie come to that?"

"I don't see why not."

"A mission?" he said. "I'm not religious. I do like her paintings. Also, my dad is seventy-four and fit as he is he can't keep going like he does forever. Who's going to inherit the farm? You and I were, together. Now what will happen?"

"I came to the conclusion in Glastonbury and Taunton that I'm not really a farm worker," Allie said. "This was a constraining life."

I said, "In the scandal I considered going back to the farm, but this time in Wales. It wouldn't work."

Allie said, "I'll have to make some transition from the university, unless I become an academic. I could paint but it hardly makes a living."

"Ah, 'A R', the local painter."

"There's a possibility, isn't there, in that church, of making a hub for a community."

"Exactly right," I said. "It might work."

"That's the point of the research: to see if something begins. And so I have to go back, Jonnie."

Thus it was that we got up, showered (the three of us in and out) and then had breakfast with everyone.

Thus I'd met the folks and now it was time to return back.

Allie loaded her bag into the SUV with all four parental adults and Jonnie by the vehicle in the farmyard. Allie kissed them all, the longest (as a goodbye) for Jonnie. My kisses on cheeks were the same for everyone, despite the fact that Jonathan and I also had sexual intercourse.

Everyone said bye to me by name, except Paul who called me 'kid' and Allie 'lass'.

Once we drove off on this dry, cold day, I said to her, "You're so strange."

"Carly Simon?"

"That's You're So Vain."

"A bit like the mistake I made changing my name to 'Alfia'."

"Oh?"

"I didn't want to repeat Alice Shrimpton. She was my ideal. So I thought of The Grateful Dead and 'Alfia'. Alfia Shrimpton."

"It's 'Althea', Allie."

"Abigail didn't know; Beathag laughed. I'd misheard it for years."

"They were your lovers, then. And all the girls dreamed that they'd be your partner. Am I to be your lover now?"

"I suppose so but we've only just begun."

"So many roads to choose - actually, not."

"You touch the B1105 and then A148."

"I know. I came this way."

"Next time skirt Holkham Hall. Further but interesting."

"Yes, we can go and visit places, next time. I do know the route to the church."

"There's a room to grow in that place. I've had to hold back feelings for you. I did in Margate."

"And mine have gone down the wrong - if you forgive the pun - alleyways."

"I still don't know what we can and cannot do with me as a researcher. I haven't rung the professor for advice."

"Well, surely you can tell me about yourself, but not about the information of your findings. I think you've made a mistake about this."

"You're being domineering again."

"Don't be so sensitive."

"I feared we would get together and I could not be neutral. But what if we do release the hounds? You know what I mean? The security of my research as research could be badly affected. But after all that Jonnie, I'm craving."

"The role of religion is to tackle your craving."

Somewhat later on, in fact as we entered the county of Foss, Allie was looking at her mobile phone.

I said, "You can look at mine to see if I have any messages. I didn't check mine. It's in my bag."

"Oh," she said, before she looked.

"What?"

"Christine sent it to me. Rhiannon Fleetwood is going to let Colin Titan preach again at the parish church."

"That's being incendiary. Colin Cromer banned him; all the authorities endorsed it."

"Rhiannon will explain why in her midweek communion service."

"Has Christine told me?"

"I'll find out."

Allie fished out the phone from my bag and was looking at my messages. That was me trusting her!

"No message from Christine, but first there is this chap Ralph Thickett and the title is 'Midweek Sermon'."

"What does he say?"

"Our priest-in-charge says she is preaching on intersex issues in the midweek morning service. I thought you should know."

"That's good of him."

"Secondly, Mohammad McArden has sent one titled 'Colin Titan' to you."

"Open that one then."

"It says what Christine has said including why she's allowing it on the 18th. Tomorrow. She is leaving Sunday to advent matters."

"I might ask Peter to attend and listen."

"Can I go?"

"If it goes in your research."

"She invited me over, do you remember?"

"Yes. You rather than me."

"Because I knew her when she was a troublemaker in Taunton and Glastonbury too - going after the Pagans."

"Let me know what happens - if it is not part of your research."

"It is part of my research."

"Even if she slags us off, turn the other cheek."

Comments that the roads in Foss are rubbish seem to be made on any journey that happens through much of our rural county. They put a new road dead straight on a railway bed whereas they should have restored the railway or built a guided busway. As a single carriageway it was restricted to sixty miles an hour. They made it a dangerous road, and one of many, even if it avoids some of the undulations of Roman roads that make them really dangerous.

Back we were at the church, and Allie said she'd go to her house to bring some clothing items across to keep in our accommodation.

"I can take you there, you know, and bring the stuff you want in this car."

"Thanks but I still would rather you didn't know the address. It has research and artistic materials there."

"Oh, all right; it's up to you."

So I put the SUV tight around the back, and then went in via the back door, to go to the kitchen and view what the students were making for food. Shepherds pie and surrounding vegetables seemed attractive.

I'd finished this and an apple crumble and a coffee (with honey and spray cream) before Allie came in, lugging a suitcase.

"Have you walked?"

"There was a tram part of the way."

She then had food more like the Sikhs would have had, available as part of the varied offering and in recognition of their inspiration.

When done we moved to one of two settees. I put the screens on to show television. Choices were Brexit Storm on BBC 2, ugh. Channel 4 was stuck in its creative rut rubbish as per usual. Charles I: Killing a King was on offer on BBC Four. Gideon's Way was on Talking Pictures TV for 9 pm. Too many adverts on PBS America for watching anything. No to Quantum Leap on Forces TV! I switched it off.

I put on instead a DVD obtained recently, the British 4:3 version of Stanley Kubrick's final film Eyes Wide Shut that was so slow I shut my eyes. I dozed off and apparently Allie put the DVD away. It was from a charity shop for a quid so it didn't matter.

Allie tapped me to rouse me and said, "Wouldn't you prefer to sleep in bed? I'm up early tomorrow."

"Why?"

"To listen to Rhiannon Fleetwood slag us off, or something like that."

"Slag me off, probably."

"Perhaps you should go and see if she is obnoxious to your face."

"I'm not going there. Peter could go and tell me things directly."

So we went to bed, where Allie unpacked this suitcase and stored her clothing along with mine (Adam had removed his). A combination of the travelling and sex the night before meant that, whilst it was wonderful to have Allie in bed with me only, we only kissed goodnight.

Narrator: Allie A Visit to the Parish Church (Wednesday 18th December)

"Adam released me," he told me as we went to the Reverend Rhiannon Fleetwood's midweek communion service.

We sat near the exit. We would not be presenting ourselves at the altar rail. She wore a simple white gown and waist rope rather than full vestments. I was in black leathers with an orange streak and orange boots, with my black shiny shoulder bag. Peter was as if at work, not quite a suit.

She arrived at the sermon standing at the reading desk. She was using two sheets of A4 paper.

"Through the written word, and the spoken word, may we know your Living Word, Jesus Christ our Saviour. In the name of the Father, Son, Holy Spirit. Amen.

"One of the most fundamental parts of being human is to be male or female. But some people are not. What should be the Christian attitude and approach?

"What does the intersex person do when coming to know Jesus as Lord? Can they stay as they are?"

"There are arguments both ways but the Bible in Genesis is clear: we are divided into male and female. So if you have a Y chromosome you are God-given as male.

"But let me be inclusive, as they say, for a moment. I am taking guidance from the Nashville Statement at the Southern Baptist Convention in America in late August 2017 and signed by over 150 Christian leaders from different denominations and folk from different countries, as we shall see.

"Although the concept of 'intersex' is not directly mentioned, Article six says that the intersex are acknowledged by our Lord Jesus in his words about 'eunuchs who were born that way from their mother's womb'. With all others they are welcome as faithful followers of Jesus Christ and should embrace their biological sex insofar as it may be known.

"They should live a fruitful life in joyful obedience to Christ, it explains.

"I like to be up to date so in June this year the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in America passed Overture 4. This endorsed the Nashville Statement, a document written by the Presbyterian Church in America Council on Biblical Manhood and Womanhood. This constitutes Christian guidance.

"Article five denies that physical anomalies or psychological conditions nullify the God-appointed link between biological sex and self-conception as male or female.

"Article six says that those born with a physical disorder of sex development - that means intersex - should embrace their biological sex insofar as it may be known.

"There are many ways to be intersex, about thirty or so, but theologian Denny Burk says that what is crucial is the presence or absence of a Y chromosome. Some people choose the sex they want, but this is Christian guidance because the Y chromosome is objective information about what is God-given sexual distribution.

"In June this year we had a Lay Reader Colin Titan give a biblical view of this topic in our parish church. He was banned from here because, apparently, he was rude to an intersex visitor. I tell you now, that ban has been reversed. Of course we should not be rude, but we have to be clear, and having spoken to him he was not rude but he was clear.

"Let's develop our understanding of the Christian revelation. For example, at the general and concluding resurrection the binary nature of saved humanity will be preserved.

"Jennifer Cox, who takes a soft view on this subject, and would not be rude, and might not be very clear either, because she tends to be egalitarian rather than complementarian. She says herself that resurrected bodies will be either entirely male or female. The intersex will be healed, restored, and become as according to God's intention. She thinks that, rather than follow the chromosome, God will decide and be clear at the resurrection. The intersex will be sexed as part of being healed. I agree with the thrust of this but surely the chromosome is the God-given sign, and God does not make mistakes.

"According to her, at the resurrection those with Complete Androgen Insensitivity Syndrome will either find themselves with reproductive systems or, as Colin Titan would maintain, they will be resurrected male.

"We have a minister of religion in this town, a self-styled bishop, who parades her femininity and being intersex, something she once kept quiet. She - if she is resurrected - will find she has got it wrong.

"Well, you may walk out! But Jesus came with a sword, remember. And Colin is right about transgender actions being in denial of the given biological sex."

"Excuse me," I said to the woman leaving. "I'm a researcher. Who are you and why are you leaving?"

"Madge Jack. This is the last straw."

"Have you finished there? As I say, Jennifer Cox is soft on being intersex. She affirms the bodies we have, before the parousia of course. Her book is called Intersex in Christ.

"You see, all this bodily variation and confusion is the result of sin, original sin. Thus all sorts of conditions exist that in the sinless world would vanish, including those that deny the binary character of sexual distribution. I'm surprised you are also leaving, Helen."

She said to me, "Dreadful. She'll ruin this church."

"Name?"

"Helen Eris."

"Miss, you are not researching in this church! Look, everyone, ask yourself if intersex or transgender people are really happy. Few of them are happy. They have troubled upbringings in and out of doctors' surgeries. Some of this might not be their fault, but the confusion is in contrast to Christian clarity. Doctors are only trying to help.

"Some say that we who assign a sex are biblical fundamentalists. But, in fact, we are not. If we went by the Bible alone, the men that appear to be women would be taken to be barren women. It is science that tells us that God made them male. We use science as well.

"But we shouldn't operate just so that people 'look right'. Oliver O'Donovan called this being 'Gnostic', in 1982, and N. T. Wright has repeated this as recently as 2017. A man who appears as a barren woman should not be made to appear as a male. Dr. Denny Burk, who in fact was one of the authors of the Nashville Statement, opposes such alterations of malformations. This way we are part of the Fall, and we do live and let live. Let the malformations be. But we can, he says, still raise the person to be of the male sex whatever the appearance.

"Let's not think this is just some form of American expression. This year two hundred Dutch evangelical leaders endorsed the Nashville Statement with the addition of a pastoral statement.

"A wonderful politician, Cornelis Gerrit "Kees" van der Staaij, signed the Nashville Statement. Mr van der Staaij is in the Dutch House of Representatives and Leader of the Reformed Political Party, and he stands against abortion and argues for theocratic government - which Christians should. I rejoiced when up and down the land people stood for political office in a definitive Christian Party.

"But take what has been said today as a marker. The new society in Upper Road preaches sin. We preach against sin. Do not go there. It promotes malformations and behaviours as if they are some original blessing, and that cannot be right. There is nothing original about it; the fall affected everyone and thus the need for salvation: salvation available only through Christ."

Rhiannon Fleetwood reminded us that only the confirmed in recognised churches could come forward for communion - as if Peter and I would!

At the door to leave she said to me, "I'll excuse your habit to research; I'm just pleased that you found out about today's sermon and that you came to hear God's truth stated by me."

"I was hoping to meet you, whatever my habits. Bye Peter."

"Who's he?"

"Part of that 'society'."

"Oh. I did invite you to my vicarage. Would you like to come along soon?"

"Could be now."

"I need to see everyone go, check that we're securely locked, cameras go on standby. I have an hour or so to see you. I'm very busy these days."

"I'll hang about then."

I did and as she left I followed her round the corner. At the vicarage door she said, "Wait outside please and I'll be back to let you in shortly."

It was quite cool outside and I looked into the street. So two women had walked out. Madge Jack was already though our door on Sundays. Then Rhiannon opened her vicarage front door.

"Alice, come in," said my fake redhead opponent when at Somerset. (She was a brunette.) She was now in simple black clerical gear with an all round collar

"Get my name right, Rhiannon," I said. "It is Allie, or Alfia. Or I'll call you Briana. You wouldn't like that."

"Horrible name. I hated it."

"You renamed yourself after a pop track."

"Better than misnaming after a rock track."

"Hmm," I mumbled.

"Sit down in here then. To think that Colin Cromer had this house for decades. And now, it is mine."

"Convenient."

"Curate at Rochester, I was, briefly. A year and a bit. Didn't need any longer."

"Do you know the parents?"

"What's that got to do with it?"

"You think about them?"

"No. You only knew me when I challenged the Taunton and Glastonbury Pagans. Your lover - your tutor - went to Bristol, so I lost interest in her then."

"Lynton Plimpton, the Suffragan of Sumorsaete: did he have any connection with Jonathan Eyre, the Suffragan of Margate?"

"You can stop your investigating."

"Sumorsaete passed you on to Margate via Rochester?"

"Two and two do not make five."

"Who sent you to Rochester?"

"Mind your own business. I was happy to lose the sight of your face only to then see it here."

"Did you have sex with Andrea?"

"Ah, that's for me to know and you to wonder. What I know is that Taunton Tantria, and your exploiting lover Abigail Randall, were a pretentious lot."

"Abigail was wonderful."

"She soon dispensed with you."

"And now you're here. This GARFOB thing here: that's bollocks. Your behaviour doesn't follow their principles."

"Also for you to wonder and me to know. Don't research me, you deflecting cunt."

"Deflecting?"

"You never tell the truth, Alfia. You run away, they say. I bet you are here to get into Linda Jupitas's knickers to do your intersex fanny investigation."

"That's for you to wonder - except, if I was, I've been going about it the wrong way."

"But you will get her knickers off, and then you will run away again. You're smiling. You've already had her knickers off. Yes you have! You're despicable."

"I love her."

"Don't make me laugh. Why would you, of all people, love her?"

"Because she's got purpose and ideals. I fancied her in Margate."

"Back to Norfolk you'll go."

"Where do people like you come from? Elizabeth Huett told me to stay away from you. I won't let any of you get at Linda. I stopped Jonathan Eyre and I'll stop you."

"But what about Maurice Neptune?"

"I don't know."

"You think Elizabeth really joined your lot?"

"Shown loyalty so far."

"Elizabeth on the theology of orgasms: she's right on that. But she makes a mistake: she bases her theology on experience. Ask Christine Vine, she'll put you right. The children from Jonathan Eyre are chosen by God. Having good orgasms, Alice, is evidence of being chosen by God. That's not experience, just confirmation. I have good orgasms."

"A shithead like you, chosen by God?"

"God chooses in advance. Anyway, God is love, including erotic love."

"Did you have a session with Abigail Randall?" I asked.

"What do you mean by a 'session', eh?"

"Did you fight?"

"She had no chance."

"You're such a liar. I couldn't beat her. I finally got her to a draw, and we exhausted each other. She could beat you easily."

"I'm not frightened of you. I have the Lord on my side. You dabbled in Witchcraft."

"So you say."

"Professor Mitton? Dr. Randall? Come on. You slavered in their company. I bet you went all the way with them, witch."

"You definitely had private times with Andrea Lindsey. I don't know how she can marry him."

"Ambition, dear. Lynton makes promises, and if you do what he wants - fair play to him - he delivers. So what about you and the Serninsea Vestal Virgins then? I might start picketing them now I'm here. Will you join me? I will definitely preach against them, and expose them for what they are. Pity Christmas is too close now. So busy."

"I'm not joining them, that's all. I couldn't as a researcher. Anyway, I'm seeking something different."

"You're missing a lot of cunt there, Alice, with their hanging discs - a good bit of the old piercing through all those clits. Yum yum, Alice! Is yours pierced?"

"Nope."

"Care to show me?"

"Nope. And my name is Allie or Alfia, as I have already reminded you. I'll show you nothing. I bet if your remaining congregation knew how this conversation was going..."

"But, as a researcher, not hoping to influence things, you're not going to tell them! I'm going to picket not only the Vestal Virgins but this new church."

"If you do I'll square you up and lay you out. You leave Linda alone. You're just as vile as you were. What you've done already is worth punishment."

"Try me. I told you, the Lord is my protector."

"You're mad. Christine is crackers, but at least she has a rationality about her. You don't."

"Come on then. Not sure there is enough room in here. I want to fight you. You'll be out of practice. Fight in the garden! It isn't overlooked. The graveyard is next door, behind the hedge, which is where I'll leave you when I'm done with you."

"Fuck off Rhiannon."

"You're a chicken."

"I can't be bothered. You're not worth it."

"Under instruction from your true love?"

"At least she thinks outwardly, unlike you - you narcissist."

"I'll take it as my win, then."

"All right. She might be magnanimous but I don't care. No half measures. I'll square you up definitely and I'm not being encumbered by clothes. If you say the garden isn't overlooked..."

"Oh what fun," said Rhiannon. She checked the CCTV through her television and then went and locked the front door.

We went out through the back door into the garden with its high surround hedges and we undressed out there and I lay my bag down. She was bushy below, brown in colour. I was growing a bit after being shaven at the ordinations.

Rhiannon said, looking at me, "No hanging disc. I'm just thinking of Linda going in that fanny. If I win this, I want my fingers in there."

We faced up. When we clasped hands I kicked her immediately and furiously in the groin with my left foot; it clearly hurt her badly, so that the clasp of our hands was released. As she lowered, I elbowed her hard on her back, and she went down flat on to the lawn. I kicked her hard in the side and it did hurt as intended. I took her left arm and dislocated her shoulder, and then put her arm back in its socket.

I said to her, in agony, "You always were a pile of shit. I am going to warn you, Rhiannon Margaret Fleetwood, Briana Margaret Stewart. Come near that church negatively, make a slight noise at the Vestal Virgins, or any of the people involved in that place, and any more of your preaching against Linda, and I will put your dead body in that graveyard. And don't think I won't."

Still on her front, on the grass, she said, in between her groaning, "Colin Titan..."

"I don't care about him."

"Let yourself out. Further down there is a gate. You can survey the graveyard. Leave out the back."

So I dressed as she lay motionless with her groaning, in the cool and damp of the darkening afternoon, and I left the way she'd said.

"God bless," she said quietly, still flat, as I walked.

Back at the church, I said to Linda, "Arternune."

Linda responded, "We had a couple of visitors - Madge Jack and Helen Eris. Helen is still here, Madge went to see Bella for lunch. Madge seemed a little curious about naturism. Talking of bodies, there is a hint of sweat about you. You didn't turn the other cheek, did you?"

"We had our own issues from her bothering me in Somerset. I tried to turn the other cheek but she was desperate to slap it. I'm going for a shit."

"Did she slap it?"

"No, I dislocated her arm and then put it back."

"I think I'll have to be more careful with you. Oh, Peter is sending me a sermon summary from memory."

"Tonight, Linda, we make love not war. It's time we did."

However, after evacuating, I went to 135 Toulouse Road at the time that Linda went alone to see her friend Diana. I filled another suitcase and brought it to the Bethel to unpack it before Linda had returned. Back again at my house I relaxed myself by painting.

After that I went to see Annie Fenwick at the boozier. I wore a latex bronze-coloured rose-patterned short dress, and I added a bronze coloured cape with hood. Linda was in bed when I returned, as Annie (in better shape) resumed webcamming, and could only hope that, asleep, Linda wouldn't smell the alcohol on my breath. I crashed out without undressing.

Chapter 25 Naturist Mission

Narrator: Linda Naturist Club Ministry (Thursday 19th December)

"We're making an early start," I said to Allie. "Is that what you are going to wear, before it all comes off?" She was dressed in a latex bronze-coloured rose-patterned short dress plus bronze coloured cape with hood; her legs were bare and her long boots were shiny black. Her face was white.

"You slept through last night. I wazzup 'arly with headache."

"I had a good piss and slept like a log. Did you bring more luggage over?"

"Yeah."

Downstairs Allie felt the need to spend ten minutes in the unisex toilets before emerging and twirling her spoon in her cereals. After breakfast the people going along to the mission gathered together.

Allie asked, "Can I take a dokey on our trip?"

"A what?"

"Food in a bag."

"Don't play with your breakfast then."

"I'm getting some'ing for later, mawther. Ars finnicky 'cause I don't fare too well."

Eventually after some distractions I went around the back to reverse my SUV. Allie followed me to assist. She said, "Remember, I am still researching on this mission. It's about the church developing - its identity, it's outreach."

For a busy time at the club, we'd booked a series of double rooms, thus forcing people to share. Knowing this, Allie said to me, "We might need different bedrooms, where I can be closer to a different voice."

"Leaving me already? Look, I can reverse around this corner myself."

"I'll separate and go back to the loo and the others."

"Separating already?" I asked. "Well, hurry up!"

On board was Diana next to me, Kathleen with Winnie, and Allie sat at the back with extra interested persons Sally Torrance, Paula Campbell and Bella Jack (her mother Madge wasn't confident enough to come).

Peter drove Kathryn and his props in his van. Christine was taking Bill and Pauline in her helicopter, piloted by Leon Agnew. This meant that Adam and Elizabeth stayed back, each holding the fort, and Jenny was in hospital of course.

Roger was reluctant to go but had agreed, organising his visit himself.

Given what Allie had said, and because I wanted to repair matters further with Diana, I suggested in the car that I would share with Diana.

Allie said, "I'd like to share with a lead person."

"Defined as?" I asked.

"Christine or Diana. Possibly you. There are others but Kathleen and Winnie will have a room, so will Peter and Kathryn, and Bill with Pauline.

"Leon will do his own thing," I suggested. "It leaves Sally and Paula. What about Bella?"

Diana said, "I'll go with Paula and show her the naturist ropes. Someone could assist Bella."

We hadn't even got to the Wytham bypass before Allie wanted to stop. She went behind a hedge and I heard her throw up, and she was having a shit too. Fortunately my efforts at timing my own bowels were paying off. We waited for her.

"Perhaps she is pregnant," said Kathleen.

"I think," said older Sally, "that she had that gear on last night, and, wherever she crashed out, she didn't get undressed."

"Credible explanation," I said.

"Very credible because she and her mate Annie Fenwick were downing the drink."

"You saw them?"

"By accident. I was with other friends but I recognised her."

I went to the boot and retrieved a kitchen roll I kept available and handed it to squatting shitty puking Allie. I said to her, "You and I need a talk, young lady."

"I am only ten years younger than you, so don't call me that."

Peter and Kathryn pulled in, recognising car and people. So we soon left in convoy and stayed close throughout. Allie was grumpy but stabilised somewhat.

At registration was Lindy Peacock, who allocated half the number of rooms as people.

Christine would share with Bella and Sally in a larger room. Bill was with Pauline in an outside hut. Diana would share with Paula. I was with with Allie after all. (Leon was staying outside the centre and its parkland.)

Kathryn was to stay with Peter and Kathleen was staying with Winnie..

So the cars' missionaries moved from registration to the cloaks area, to undress, and grab the towels before proceeding. Paula, displaying visible labia, some stomach bulk and small breasts, seemed uncertain about her nudity among so many other strangers. Bella assisted with positivity and then Diana took them to her room. Allie decided to have a shower soon having not had one. Kathleen and Winnie had their hanging discs on, although we did not use our Werburgh badges - how could we?

As a bishop, I decided to wear my donated pectoral cross between my breasts while walking about. Every corridor, every space, seemed to have Christmas decorations including several indoor dressed conifers.

My first task was to go along to Diana's room to speak to Paula.

Bella said, as I went in, "My mum would love this, Linda. I'm minded to tell her to come."

"I think it's full up. Paula: everyone is different," I said. "Did you notice the vast range of shapes and sizes of the folk here? Some are quite elderly. All these folks will accept you as much as we do."

I thought I'd go looking for Jeremy Symes, to find out how an ex-minister of religion might respond to a mission, but on arriving at reception for directions I bumped into a newly naked brother and sister, Roger Humphrey and Marie Enfield. The resemblance was obvious, including the pubic hair, except that he had something of a hosepipe bending down and large hanging testicles below. This was the first time I'd seen Marie at all and she had a descending string.

He said, "We prefer to be like outpatients. We are in a bed and breakfast down the road."

"Why?"

"Because of who we are."

I was searching for something to say. "Well, do join in with the mission, both of you."

Jeremy was finishing off a final Christmas tree in one of the corridors. "It's a job," he said, "and quite a varied one. And I get to be starkers all day, like Lindy."

"It has that advantage," I said. "Do you want to join in our mission?"

"We'll just be your hosts. You're doing a mission to us, not by us. Lindy is a receptionist as well, properly."

"Right, sure."

"I like your cross," he said.

"It was a gift from Gretta Cox-Jenkins."

"The queer theologian?"

"Yes."

Back with the crowd, and Allie too, Diana whispered to me: "Roger is a surprise. He's gone off somewhere with some woman."

"Sensitivities, perhaps."

"The size of him?"

"It must be all that donating."

"Well, Adam is always wanking and he isn't like that."

Paula!" I called out loudly. "Use the towel to sit on, not to cover yourself up. No one cares. You'll be fine."

Paula came over. "It's just that - how do you do it?"

"Do what?"

"It's all on display. Between your legs."

"Paula. It's the same as the rest of me. That's the point. You were brave at the Bethel, and you are brave to come more into the public. But this public does the same as you."

"It was a small group; we got to know each other."

Diana said, "Some have a lot of pubic hair that covers them, like Mrs. Saraga; some have big labia like you that shows beyond their hair; Linda has no hair and exposed labia and clitoris. So we are all different."

Paula went on.

Before Diana went outside, I asked, "How do you know about Adam's excessive wanking?"

"He's always been like it."

Hearing water in the room opposite our bedroom I asked, "Are you still in the shower?"

"I didn't know where to go to have one. Then it was obvious."

"I'm coming in. I'll soap you."

"I've already done it."

"I'm not doing it just to clean you. Let me come in there."

There was no need to undress, of course, other than my pectoral cross, and although I had a sponge to create a foam I used my hands to apply shower gel to her body. Having done this to her front, and turned her to do her back and bottom, I turned her around again and gave her a long kiss to her lips, with a mutual hug. Her hand went between my legs but she removed it to apply the gel to me as I had to her. After my twirl we kissed again and we basically enjoyed sex under the flowing water.

In our room, where we dried each other with towels and a hairdryer, I felt quite animalistic and wanted to be all over her. Laid out on the bed to receive me, she said, "Fist me."

"Fist you?"

"Start with fingers and go in up to your wrist."

"Do you like that?"

"I wouldn't ask if I didn't."

"Okay. Here goes."

I went from two to three to four fingers and folded in the thumb. She took my arm to push me in further.

"Get your middle finger straight and get to my cervix."

Allie started riving about, her eyes going up into her head many times, I said the only way she could do it back was in my anus. "But I'm trying not to open all that up again."

"Then I won't."

So the sex ended there, and in any case there was a knock on the door.

Hiding my hand behind my back, Christine told me, "Elizabeth and Yojana Asthana are arranging the New Year party with SMS to be held above the casino. We've decided to put in dividers, like screens. It will give more privacy."

"I don't want to know, Christine. Sorry. Elizabeth is doing it, and Yojana, but not me. That's the old group, and you are obviously involved."

"I'm here not there. Liz is on our team now and Yojana is a client of Adam's and free of Keith."

"Well, it is your ministry. This here is all our ministry."

Christine said, "Looking at her I seem to have disturbed you two. I'll see you later."

Allie said, "We'd finished, or she'd finished me."

Christine left us. We later joined the folks chatting, sitting and some playing table football. We had the evening meal in the dining area. Afterwards, a number of residents attended a screening of Bever Wood Comes Alive! - a very recent thirty-minute film of naturist life at the club signed off by Jeremy and Lindy.

I noticed that at the bar Allie kept to soft drinks and spoke to several people, making friends. She did have a confidence at the bar of chatting to many.

I was in bed when late on Allie came in. She didn't smell of alcohol, and said, "Sorry about this morning. I've done my notes for the day."

"What did you notice?"

"I can't say."

"Well, presumably you noticed that sister and brother are staying at their own cost at a bed and breakfast."

"I told you about them."

"Sally was with you last night and saw you get drunk."

"She was with friends. I said hello. What's your book, Linda?"

"It's about Christianity in the Arab world. We forget about the Nestorians, Allie." Allie lay on her side, pushing her leg into my bum. "Allie. That's nice."

I removed the duvet somewhat, to see the proportions of people and bed.

"Struth," I said.

"What."

"You're just so beautiful. Like that, Allie."

"You and I have seen each other naked many times. You're being botty."

"What?"

"I mean you're being fussy."

"But do you like my botty?" I asked her.

"Show me," she said. So I did, opening my buttocks.

I said, "Let's sleep bottom to bottom."

So that's what we did, although later I woke for the loo and she was almost on her front.

Pause Before the Mission Proper (Friday 20th December)

Next morning at communal breakfast Peter Marshall told Christine and me of a long message by phone from Adam. (It struck me that we weren't ringing each other.)

First, Elizabeth and Yojana had been working inside the church. Second, Adam had learnt - via gossip reaching Margaret McEnhill in Wytham - that Connie Wilson was no longer with Jim. Elizabeth did not know this. Mrs. Carter met Adam in the street and said that the Parochial Church Council had opposed Rhiannon Fleetwood's parish adoption of the Global Anglican Reform Fellowship of Orthodox Belief (GARFOB). Fleetwood, nevertheless, maintained her personal membership.

I said, "Elizabeth and Yojana should not be making their plans in the church but in the Blue Diamond Club."

Christine responded, "She's keeping an eye on the church, and receiving people there, as Adam is working in his office."

We did have an informal chat among ourselves when I said I wanted our church to be an open, progressive, liberal space, especially with the parish church going hard evangelical under Rhiannon Fleetwood and the neo-Pentecostals growing. Everyone agreed, including Christine for whom hard authority allowed soft messaging.

Peter approved particularly. He was giving his show, of course, and would have something on beliefs and naturalistic religion that we could debate among ourselves.

I replied. "Allie did a sermon, for what it was worth, and you can definitely do one. It's all right you grimacing, Allie, but your offering had more to do with comedy."

Allie's forced a smile at me.

Meanwhile, Paula seemed to become more comfortable with her self-presentation and she was noticed talking to some chap. Sally had found a sixty year old man to speak with too. Later on, both had vanished. Roger Humphrey and Marie Enfield were spotted and disappeared about as quickly.

When these blood relatives were spotted again I called them over. "I want to make sense of what you said before. You are here as brother and sister, but you are there, at the B and B as husband and wife?"

Roger said, "You're very perceptive."

I was perceptive about his long penis hanging in an arc, her rounded breasts and both having a neat triangle of pubic hair.

"It's how you are with each other."

He said, "I was doing an ethics topic MA; Marie was working in Leeds'

Student union. We fell in love, and realised that we had the same father. We moved in together until I completed my MA. So we haven't had and won't have any children. Marie here is in a good job administering at the Foss Upper Coast College and I am in no job, except forced into Adam's workfare."

"I wanted to ask you about that. Has the dole given you a holiday?"

"No, Adam has me as if working for him, right now. No doubt he sees advantage in it."

"You're not spying on us, or me, or Allie, for Adam?"

"No!"

"And how does the dole take your relationship? Like regarding your payments."

"The daft thing is, because we claim we are as brother and sister, we are not recognised as partners, even though any other couple would be. If we were a standard couple, I'd get no benefits and I wouldn't be on workfare."

She said, "We love each other, and we are not going to change that for anyone. But we moved to Serninsea to get away from the Leeds area villages. Serninsea has cheap property. We don't want to have to move away again, but, if it comes to it, we will."

"Marie - you are very welcome with Roger and as you are in the church. I won't address the matter again as an enquiry. As far as I am concerned your relationship is your business and clearly you know about genetics and diversity. You're on your period?"

"Yes. Is that okay?"

"Of course. If anyone in the church gossips then let me know and I will tackle that. You're as entitled to your relationship as I am to mine." (However, I didn't mention which relationship of mine.)

Interviewing Diana

I interviewed Diana de Groot in her room (Paula was elsewhere).

I said, "Don't be nervous. I don't bite. The point of these interviews, more often than not, is background: stuff I can't observe."

"Sure. You scare the shit out of me."

"I'm on your side. Linda introduced you to naturism."

"Aye, she did. You want to know about this?"

"It's the purpose of the unstated question."

"I'd better tell you everything you want to know. So just after Linda returned from university, she resumed our friendship and I was looking for something new. I joined Linda going to the Saxiclite Naturist Club and became a naturist there and then. I have been for eighteen years. None of Paula's reticence because previous to that, as a school friend, I'd watched her and did try it at her farm."

"I have to ask you this. You wanted a new outlook, with your friend, because you'd suffered a disaster."

"Did Linda tell you? I'm not sure she knows any of the details. She knows I went away; I suppose she can put things together."

"No, she didn't, but I shouldn't say who told me."

"You've interviewed Adam Magellan. I hate him. He was the father."

"The child was stillborn. I was so sorry to learn that."

"This child was still loved, Allie, and was named. My child was born dead, but I named her."

"That's nice. Sorry: saying 'nice' is inadequate."

"It's all right, Allie. I called her Linda, Allie. You understand that?"

"Oh I can't..." I stalled, lost for what to say.

"What's the matter? I had to bear this at the time. When I went back to Serninsea, Adam, the father, had gone. He went to the join the police. When he came back, he did so without telling me. I found out after he'd married a Romanian woman with a daughter not much younger than him. And of course he is even now still close to those teachers, property developers since, bankrolling his business, ones who had a go at him at school and should have been prosecuted; and they taught their secrecy to him and then agitated Linda and Jenny to have their go at him, the weakling. Adam and Linda both have roles involving secrecy, but it started with those teachers. These days, if Adam is around, I don't scratch his eyes out but I don't have much to do with him."

"I can't stand this. I cannot tell Linda. I cannot tell her."

"What about?"

"Calling your dead baby Linda. Yet another secret I'm keeping."

"How much does this matter, Allie? I'm not in her church."

"But you're here on this mission that shows its characteristics."

"So what? I thought you were unemotional."

"Yeah. Okay. Look, em, you are the bishop's closest pal. I understand that after she was rescued this year you stayed in bed with her, intimately, supporting her. I think you love her."

"And you love her, Allie. She says she tells you to 'heel' sometimes but I bet you don't dislike being like a puppy in her company. Plus the fact is that she has been damaged by events - events involving Magellan and those teachers. It's why she is dominant over you - demonstrably."

"It's not about me."

"But you are a real person. Why do you drink, for example? And it has an effect on how you are regarded. Linda is a bad influence sometimes, but she was a victim."

"I drank after I went from home to Somerset. But I got in with some good groups and people, and made a commitment to stop. I wasn't an alcoholic, but had become alcohol dependent until my focus changed. When Linda first saw me, at Margate, I was not drinking then."

"Our town is dysfunction, Allie. You're taking that in, and you're struggling. You know Linda has a low view of alcohol. She gets that from her family and its better values; she gets it rejecting Jenny's family's attitude to drink over the years. And if you want to get on with Linda, you must ditch the drink. So Linda is also a good influence sometimes."

"I am here to research Linda and her church. What you say about Adam and these teachers is good background information, really."

"Allie. Your research holds you back, that's true. You can't make any full-on relationship when following rules and procedures and required to keep secrets from her, secrets about everything that matters. But she is reacting to this as well, which is why she is so rude so often. It does her no credit."

"Adam has business dominance over her."

"Yeah, he does - he always looks after himself, but do remember that he's still under the thumb of 'teacher'. No wonder the Romanian woman and her daughter scarpered. She discovered the real domineering wife. His wife got respectability, the UK connection she wanted, and discovered the fact that he has only disinterested sex. Don't be under any illusion that Linda has been in a relationship with him. As soon as it began it hollowed out. That's because he is hollow, Allie. I discovered that: he pissed off when my parents shoved me off to Rasa Market to be invisibly pregnant."

"I just note your opinion of him in all these connections you have. Peter doesn't have that view, nor Kathryn, nor Kathleen."

"They don't know him like I do. He fucked Cheryl Mould. He's no better than Keith. Linda doesn't know the full truth about Keith either, to this day. She's not been very good at choosing blokes. Adam could easily have operated in the manner of George Wickenby, if he'd received the SMS contract instead. He'd have followed Linda and reported to her National Church suffragan bishop. The reason Linda has his church I think is because he can rely on her. He can also extract the place should it fail. And don't forget that Ann and Labhaoise are behind everything he does. Not only is Ann loyal to Adam but peculiarly wants to see to it that Linda is all right."

"There's quite some background. Also Adam accepts Elizabeth Huett's presence because he wants her under his nose. How do you think Linda is reacting to her presence?"

"Oh, Linda thinks she's fitting in ever so well - but she's bugged off to her own accommodation! Linda likes to see the best in people: why she was so disturbed by Jim and Connie Wilson. They are the real deal sadists. But she has managed to reach out to Yojana Asthana; she'd meet Fatima Tamuuz - your relative..."

"Her daughter Akemi is my relative, not her. Sixth cousin."

"And then there is this almost disturbed woman Rhiannon Fleetwood. Linda isn't sure who she is but I bet Linda finds some good side somewhere."

"I know who she is."

"She's not related to you?"

"Not at all. Anyway, she won't be picketing the Vestal Virgins group or Linda's church."

"Ah, I heard about your recent encounter - the rumours. Did you leave her for dead?"

"That's wrong but I declare an interest, Diana; I did know her in Taunton. Linda knows I recognise her."

"What did you do, Allie?"

"We needed a boundary, in Serninsea, with Rhiannon Fleetwood beyond it. I've clipped her wings."

"Surely, Allie, you're not directing events?"

"Diana, from what you know of Linda, do you think this church project will succeed?"

"The tension with Christine needs sorting out - and not by you. Linda obviously doesn't believe what Christine believes. If Christine fits in with Geoff Virgo and his husband, then Linda will probably have to sort things out with them. So it may all fail, but at least she is having a go. I may have to help pick up her pieces if it fails; that will be the end of her ministry path and she'll have to find something else to do. And what about you, Allie: are you going to be an academic?"

"Either that or go back to being a farm worker. Back to the simple life. And then it would be Jonnie and me. I don't want that."

"Do tell."

"I was supposed to marry him, and bring our families together. He's my fourth cousin once removed. We've been close since children. We tried to reduce our dialect and accent together, like our own project, and started to invent our own words beyond the Norfolk dialect. Didn't get far with that - we became too old for such a private world. Sometimes with Linda I do put the Norfolk dialect on a bit. She seems to understand some of the words."

"She never quite had the Foss accent - her family is from east Nottinghamshire - but by going off to Bishop Querceto Theological College she lost it entirely."

"Rhiannon Fleetwood lost her accent. And she speaks just like Linda. And that was in Taunton, though her accent was already Cheshire. Her parents were Scottish, and her family line is Scottish. I checked that. I was hoping something might reach around Crianlarich, but it didn't."

"Why would it? That's a tiny place. It features in The Jacobite Gap Years. It refers to Tyndrum as well, well before the railway arrived."

"You don't have much of an accent either, Diana?"

"No. Sixth formers tried to rise above being yocals. And now I am married to a Dutchman, and, with him as dad, my children don't have much of a Foss accent. Many accents are dying out anyway. So you give Linda a taste of ye olde Norfolk dialect?"

"Only sometimes."

"You don't do that with anyone else?"

"I did with a girlfriend called Abigail, but she told me to stop it; and with someone called Beathag, she said I should concentrate on learning my folk language I chose, her Gaelic. It was harder than Welsh, but there was no Welsh Beathag."

"And Linda doesn't know any of this?"

"Because I am her researcher. And you won't tell her, will you?"

"No, Allie. I'll do anything you say. I'd just like to see her treat you with a little more warmth. She will reciprocate your warmth: I'm sure of it. So Abigail and Beathag. Did you fight then?"

"Abigail took my left arm out of its socket, and put it back, and taught me how best to recover and to do it to others; in the end we fought each other to a standstill. Beathag was dominating in a more, older, verbal and physical way."

"So you can't really object to Linda being like a mother? She's afraid of your talents and self-confidence. At least you're in her bed now."

"So were you - I did ask."

"Is it good?"

"Slower than I expected. I'm hoping for something here. What about you?"

"What do you mean, 'hoping for something here'?"

"I want wasting. She doesn't understand it. She's too soft, too motherly as you say in the wrong sense. Was she like that with you, in bed?"

"She's worried about you. You're trying to be too independent, Allie, and I think you don't value yourself. She's not the person to 'waste' you at all."

"She gets angry; I could use that. But you..."

"No, Allie. Don't go down that road. Start getting used to letting her love you. What are you going to do now, Allie, as a result of our conversation?"

"What about her and you?"

"Oh we're just friends, close friends. I'm married: I get sex from a man, Allie. So answer my question."

"Hmm. I'll make some notes immediately. I'll keep them secure: scan and encrypt them. Then I think I'll find someone to chat with at a bar here. Something like that. Oh, you don't share her beliefs?"

"I probably do, but not the formal beliefs she used to state."

"You share her naturist ideology?"

"She is far more ideological on naturism. I did not know she was intersex - puzzled why she never seemed to have a period, no tell-tale string out of her fanny - but when she said she was intersex I could see why naturism was made into her affirming herself."

"I get that. I think this ends the interview. You think she should have told you?"

"I was her best mate. She told Jenny but not me. But then they were at it and I wasn't - ever."

"You weren't just looking after Linda, recently."

"Don't question my motives, Allie! Yes, of course you can question my motives. I have a husband and I now have a strong literary interest."

"Hey?"

"The Jacobite Gap Years novels and television series."

"I hear about its fandom."

"Linda is snooty about the writing and by implication the fans."

"I'm done; I'm going. You can come for a drink with me if you like."

"No. I want to think about things. Do you insist I come?"

"No."

"See you Allie. Lay off the drink. Look at the mess over Jenny. Adam should have stepped up there with his responsibility. He knew she was at risk. But that's my point about Adam."

"Sorry, I really am, about your loss: baby Linda. Poor you, poor baby Linda."

"Thanks, Allie. It is something you live with forever, even after you have living children that start to grow up. Baby Linda is a wound that will not heal. And it's partly why I'd like to be on my own now."

"It's terrible. I'm going. Thank you."

Narrator: Linda Consultations (Friday 20th December)

I brought together a couple of chaise longues with a narrow gap in between for some 'intimate consultations' with clergy and others according to appointment times. In our naturist condition, they were to lie down on their left side facing me while I lay on my right side facing them. I had a list of the order of consulting.

First up was Bishop Bill Masters.

"Quite nice, this," he said, as his eyes moved up and down my body, his cross around his neck falling down. Mine lay on my lower beast.

"Yes, to get comfortable. Thanks for being on the mission. How do you see what we are doing?"

"An unusual combination of a sort of Christianity and a sort of naturism."

"Sorts of?"

"We're a bit irregular."

"The naturist side has ethical principles; we can show it relates positively to religion. I suppose the question is also how you see yourself in relationship to the parish we're trying to set up."

"A little semi-detached. Pauline and I have gone in with Christine, recognising her talent and her own semi-detachedness. We were our own ecclesiastical set-ups. She suits a stronger combination."

I said, "I suppose there is a little bit of tension between Bristol and here, they gravitating to higher up the candle."

"Gravitating? That would be down."

"Well?"

"We don't resist that. The mind doesn't always reflect clear cut decisions. Our bodies have rituals and reactions."

I realised he was in part referring to his forming an erection in front of me.

I said, "I'd like to see religion reflect more our ordinary, naturalistic reasoning. But there is an art side, and we eat and drink, so definitely there's a place for ritual."

His eyes moved to his possible embarrassment. So I asked about his personal life.

I meant now, but he referred back to Jenny's supposed mother and father, who were both alcoholics and swingers. It was a party, and a one off, by which he became the actual father of Jenny and not her uncle.

I asked, "Sorry to intrude, but how was everyone certain it was yours, if you were - well, queuing up and going inside your sister."

"So nicely put," he quipped. "We were sober enough to wear condoms. Mine broke inside Wendy."

"She once told me you raised her and then her parents."

"Until she was ten. Alone, I raised her."

So Jenny took him as gay, once he told her and she understood gay, a hiding strategy regarding that event of excess, so that he could never have been her father, but it became an issue when she 'got religion' as he maintained the deception.

As for now, he commented, "There seems to be a lot of incest about, more deliberate than my past incident fuelled by excess." He was probably referring to Roger and Marie.

Pauline on her own confirmed that she and Bill were full partners, in every sense, but they could not marry because of the pretence Bill kept up after Jenny grew up. Even a heterosexual civil partnership was unlikely. For Pauline, being naturist was a challenge but it was a fresh experience alongside Bill.

The Reverend Peter Marshall had something of a grower as well. I found this baffling because I was visible like this all the time. He also took to the naked life well.

"Doesn't matter," I told him, as he also glanced down his body and then covered his penis with his lower left hand. So I had a conversation about simplifying the clergy structure, that we would have more in-parish bishops to assist me and deacons would become priests.

Did he approve? He did. I said, "We'll stick with the discipline of the Church and follow apostolic succession."

"For recognition purposes?"

"Among Liberal Catholics."

By my statement he knew I was lukewarm about apostolic succession.

He thought his entertainment and the coming lecture were essential to make the links between naturism and religion.

The Reverends Winnie Lott and Kathleen Wickenby sat together as I continued to lay on my side with my legs up. Again they approved of an across the board upgrade of our member clergy. They found no conflict in being in the Serninsea Vestal Virgins and being clergy, nor with Allie Shrimpton being clergy alongside them despite her exclusion from the SVV. Once someone had to be excluded, the next stage was harmony again as best as possible.

Another pair together were Roger Humphrey and Marie Enfield. They weren't directly involved in the mission, just helping along and experiencing the naturist club.

"Do you approve of our form of religion?"

"Neither here nor there," he said. "You all seem reasonable."

"Well, I'll be personal then. You fell in love," I said. "That's good. I have to say, close up, you have something I haven't got. Not looks, because my older sister and I look like each other, as you two do, but both of us never have have pubic hair."

Roger said, "Our neatness is part of the relationship."

"But I notice your plumbing, let's say. Sorry, but I do! You don't have large labia."

She responded, "You don't hold back your observations, Linda! I thought naturists kept a kind of silent decorum."

"Oh no! When you've got it you should show it, and show it to the best."

Roger said, "I thought this was body fascism."

"No! Far from it. Yes, you must be authentic with what you've got. But you can groom it, present to the best. Personally I don't care for make-up or jewellery, but I don't appear scruffy. I brush my hair and though I rarely sweat with any smell, I still shower, still be clean."

Looking at each other for reassurance, they smiled and nodded.

Roger said, "You're very observant. I'll be explicit, then. Our first time and you said, 'Deep Love,' didn't you Marie? I reach her cervix, easily, but the circumference fits her. But she cannot have a child from us, and perhaps I compensate by going to the clinic. There may be hundreds of children with my genes."

"You can come to order?" I asked.

"It's frustrating that I cannot fertilise my own love."

I said, "You're wearing a tampon today, Marie. It something my sister and I never have to do. Because they removed her gonads she's had to take drugs to avoid an instant menopause, and yet I will never have a menopause."

"Won't they operate on you?"

"My mother stopped them, and I will too. They say there's a cancer risk, but then there is across many conditions with women. This isn't as great as they claim. Thus the guilt."

"We're ambiguous about our parents. You seem to have good parents."

"My mother protects us, but my father inspires us. Daddy is an ideological naturist, and leads the family. I adore him. I love walking with him in the fields, both of us naked. I'm used to him. But, yeah, people who visit the Welsh farm can get surprised. Serninsea and our farm shop did constrain her."

"Just to say," said Roger, "our father won't be buying us any presents, and he'll get none from us."

"And your mothers?"

"Just a card, I'm afraid - to the Leeds area being one direction."

Four people not consulted were Kathryn, Diana, Christine and Allie. Well, I saw them often enough.

Narrator: Linda Allie is Drunk

In the later afternoon Kathryn and Kathleen surprised me producing guitars (transported by Peter). I'd no idea they could even play. So there was something of a sing-song using Unising, from the Musicians Roll of the Unitarians, a collection of religious and secular folk lyrics. Some did some 'thinking prayers' they might be called. One person missing was Allie.

Later into the evening I asked Diana where I could find Allie.

"I don't know, I've been with you singing."

"Just that you saw her last."

Both of us went looking for her. Far off the bass of a music beat became louder. We arrived at a door behind which it was thumping. Opening the door to the blast, older teenagers and most people in their twenties were having a party. Allie, holding a half empty bottle and a thumb above its neck, was giving it some with her naked dancing among people she did not know.

Diana and I went away, and elsewhere we found a group of people playing whist on square tables. We were persuaded to make up a pair. If you won, you moved forward a table.

To close the day I went to the bedroom shared with Allie, but she wasn't there. So I removed my cross, dropped the towel, went to the bathroom, and afterwards got into the double bed.

Eventually Allie staggered in and didn't shut the door behind her. "Fugging hell," she said, with her North Norfolk twang. I stopped reading. "Ah such jollifications with..."

"You haven't done any notes," I suggested, as she propped herself up by putting both hands on the mattress.

"Wha'? Yesh I did, dun't I? No. Yesh. A'll do 'em tomorrow. I be havin' the squits again. That mardle ya'ad; I mean, why're ya bothered? Other people are so much more... interesting. What they said. Sorry, I'm bi' of a lummox." Then she let off a long, wet, dangerous fart.

"Allie, pack it in, stop slapping it on and get into bed. Actually, I think you need a wash."

"Wash? bed? Make yar mind up. Why, you're to fish me? Fisht. Feet. Try feet. 'Ave you tried feet?"

"I'm not going to fight, Allie, not you after your performance on me. It's not nice."

"I meant fisst, umm, me, feet in my... Hee hee."
"Allie, you are completely slaughtered. How much have you drunk?"
"A fair scolder." She wet farted again.
"When did you start?" I asked, putting my hand to my nose.
"When? When? Something when I thought I'd say." She moved her hand forward and gripped my wrist. "No. I do have feelings, yeah, and sym... bathy, you know. Ah, bath. Wash. Could have a wash."
"You don't know the strength of your grip."
"Sorry. Don't want to hurt... anyone. I'm not heartless. Just 'cause I says little. I don't, no do, give a tosh. Wash."
"Allie, shut up and go to the bathroom opposite and get that wash. And go to the toilet!"
"I do care. Linda, I do... Shit. I'm a bit shanny tonight. The room is spinning. And it's about... I be sorry for ya losh. Think I want to say... I am. I am, Linda. Just sayin', in case, because I haven't. Don't. This room is spinning and my guts..."
"What loss?"
"Oh. Loss loss. No loss, not..."
"Allie!"
She spun around and bounced on to the bed with her naked arse. She wet farted a third time. "Shit. Where's the pish 'ouse?"
"You know where it is. Go straight in front of you. I hope there's no shit on this bedding."
She fell off the bed, attempting to rise to go to the toilets. There wasn't a deposit. "Spinning... I'm going to wet everything."
I got out of my side quickly, and said, "For God sake, squeeze your lemon! Allie! Try and get up and I'll hold you, take you."
"Dunt you jam on my foot, will ya? Pish. Wash. Shit."
I took her across the corridor to the bathroom and its cubicle, and she was already starting to pee before I helped twist her around in a cubicle and plonked her down. Still peeing, she leaned over so much to the front she might have fallen off. So I pushed her up. Then she shat into the bowl (fortunately).
"My God that came out of your arse so fast. You dirty, dirty, girl!"
She stood up, and leaned on me. "Wash."
I said, "I can't wash you. You're a dead weight. Hang on to me and I'll just wipe your arse best I can and get the spray off your bum cheeks. You fucking wreck!"
Out of the cubicle, she then tried to walk in front of me, but stalled and fell back to me, so that I was holding her under her arms from behind.
Inside our room, Allie fell on to the bed, so I took advantage of her being on her front and checked her backside. It was remarkably clean. I then rolled her under the duvet. I finally got in myself. She started to snore and I resolved to find earplugs.

Whose Loss? (Saturday 21st December)

When I woke, there was the instant smell of vomit. A naked Allie opened the door with a mop and bucket, and came in to clean up the carpet, complaining of a terrible headache.

"What loss? I asked, remembering the night.

"What?" asked Allie. "I'm cleaning up."

"You said, something like, you had conversations with other people and you are sorry about my loss. What loss?"

"Not your loss."

"Whose loss then?"

"Nobody's."

"You were very pissed last night and let something out."

"Farting? I was sick after sleeping."

"Not that. Words, dear."

"I'm busy. Can't you see?"

"I can hear as well, Allie, so: whose loss?"

"I'm not well."

"Answer my question."

"Research privilege."

"No it's not because you said you are sorry about my loss. What loss?"

"I was drunk and now I'm busy."

"I'm not giving up on this, Allie."

"I'm nearly done here."

"Allie!"

"What was I supposed to have said?"

"Perhaps what you actually said."

"Yeah. Did I say that?"

"Look. To my knowledge I haven't suffered any loss, and you've just said it was not my loss, but it must have concerned me one way or the other. So you tell me what this is all about."

"No."

I got out of bed, walked across to Allie, who let go off the mop so that it fell to the ground. I grabbed her arm and pulled her in front of me and looked at her directly. I shoved her with both hands towards the wall near the door. Her back hit the wall but she came forward.

"Don't do that."

"I'll do more than that."

"Not your loss so can't say."

I shoved her again so that her back hit the wall again. "What loss has someone - someone here, isn't it? - suffered that I don't know about - and then makes it my loss?"

"Don't know."

"You do know."

"It was a long time ago." She moved forward, as if to confront me but didn't.

I put my hands around her throat. "I've just about had enough of this."

Then I realised that Allie wasn't defending herself, so I loosened my grip. She started crying. She said, "I can't stand this; I just can't take this any more."

"Oh Allie! What is this? What do you know?"

"I can't tell you. Ask her yourself."

"Who?"

"Don't know."

Without thinking I threw my right fist at Allie to thump her, and she simply deflected it away with her arm. With that she stopped crying in an instant. So then I went to upper-cut her in her stomach but she moved sideways enough so that my arm threw forward and I thumped the wall - and it hurt a lot.

Allie said, calmly, "Don't do that."

So I realised her defences were working very well, and chose to say, "I only threw those punches to see how you'd react. Right. Of the people here, it can only be someone I've known for a long time. You were talking to her. Diana?"

"If you say so. Go and ask her. Be an idiot."

"You're not going to answer, are you? No. Let me think. I'm not an idiot, Allie, and I don't live in splendid isolation. Diana."

"If you say so."

I paused and looked into her eyes, and looked at her as if I was trying to see inside her head.

I asked, "Is this about when I went to university and I'd heard Diana had been away for several months?"

"Linda, I really have got a hangover."

"Thinking back, and I was away then, but she was pregnant, wasn't she? She's never told me but I was suspicious. Am I in the right area?"

"It's a naturist centre, this area."

"I've grown wise to your tricks. Of course, there was never any baby, but if there was one it might have been adopted, but why would that be my loss?"

"I made a mistake."

"Did she want to give it to me?"

"I don't know what you're talking about."

I threw another punch at Allie, and it was simply deflected again, so instead I lunged my body weight at her, the result of which was a knee in my guts that had such force that I fell to the floor and had to get my breath back.

Allie, still in same the position, said, "Leave me alone."

I responded from below: "You... You are not sleeping in that bed with me until you tell me about this loss."

"Then I'll go and share with Diana, and Paula can come here instead."

"She is my friend and I will share with Diana. So fuck off now and spend the rest of the morning with Paula. Tell Diana I want to see her here. Now!"

Allie collected the fallen mop and the bucket and left growling. She bent as if to fart but couldn't. I crawled along and upwards and sat up on the bed, facing the door, wondering why this past I knew only a little about concerned me. Surely any baby was fostered to someone else and was not intended for me. Why would it ever be intended for me?

Narrator: Allie Diana Deals with Linda (Saturday 21st December)

Linda was on to me about 'Whose Loss?' Dumping the mop and bucket in the bathroom opposite, I ran to Diana's room, and rather banged on her door.

"Who the hell is that?"

I opened it to see her turning her head from lying on her side talking with Paula.

I spoke at a fast pace. "Diana. Linda does not want me with her any more and she wants you to go to her now because last night I was worse for wear and said sorry for her loss and she's remembered it and wants to know what her loss is and then she started fighting me so I dodged her and then hit her back but I won't tell her..."

"She got violent with you?"

"Yes, and I tried not to but I had to hit her to stop her."

Paula said, "Oh heck. You've hit the bishop? Have you pulled her arms out?"

"Hit the bishop?" said Diana. "I'll pulverise Linda. She's a fool. Wait here, Paula. Sorry about this."

Diana got up and went in front of me, saying. "Follow me!"

"I don't want to be thrown out, lose my research, lose Linda."

"You won't. Let's be a bit dramatic for her benefit."

So Diana pushed down the handle and then shoved the door open with her foot.

Facing Linda facing her she said, "You fucking asshole, taking it out on her. I know you. You are an unsympathetic, ever-selfish, cunt. She'd spoken to me and got pissed afterwards. No wonder, with what she's having to carry. Oh, she should have kept it quiet but Adam in his lack of any wisdom spoke first and what a burden she's been carrying! You wouldn't know sympathy or love if it smothered you."

Linda said, "What? Hang on. Everyone knows things except me. She's come up here, and she's been around five fucking minutes, and she knows all that has been kept from me for years. What does she know about you that concerns me that I do not know? For God's sake, tell me!"

Diana said, turning to me still in the corridor, "See what I mean, Allie? Pure selfishness. Me, me, me."

Linda said, "I give up."

"I went away to Rasa Market and had a stillborn baby."

"Oh. When you went to... It was for a baby. It was... stillborn. Well, you would have to have given it away, and when I thought about it, when I..."

"Yes, that's what happened to me. You'd gone off to university."

"I never asked you about a possible pregnancy because it might have been a painful topic."

"A painful topic, like on University Challenge? We're talking about what happened to me, here, and my child. My body, my pregnancy, my child - you lump."

"But why does it concern me - other than you are my friend? Why is it my loss?"

"Allie reacted more than I thought she would. She is a lovely, sympathetic woman. If you knew how much she admires you, and yet you treat her like shit."

Allie said, "Thank you, Diana."

Linda asked, "Once more. Why... does... it... concern... me?"

"Because I told Allie yesterday, unlike that bastard Adam, that I named the born dead baby 'Linda'. Adam told Allie but he did not name my baby. She had a name."

"Oh, God. Why did you name it... my name? Because Adam was the father? Was Keith the father?"

Diana breathed and paused. "Keith? He was at university a year before you, you fool. Adam, of course. Adam told Allie: the asshole told her about him and me after you'd left for university."

"Because he and Jenny had been with me?"

"Oh, then I could have named it Jenny! Eeny, meeny, miny, moe. Linda, Jenny, Jenny, Linda..."

"No, no. Okay, I get it. I get it, Diana."

"Now then, Linda: you are going to apologise to Allie. Start treating her properly. Come in front of me, Allie, and let Linda speak."

Diana moved to the side a little so I could come through and stand in front of her.

"Sorry, Allie. Yes, I am sorry, Allie."

"Instead of being violent: hug her, Linda. Go in further, Allie."

Moving to Linda, she hugged me. "Sorry for my violence," she said.

I replied, "It's fine. I'm finding things difficult."

"Yes, you are."

Diana then said, "By my calculation it is one hour before getting up, so you should take Allie back into bed. I'm going back to encourage Paula and we'll all see each other at breakfast in the dining room."

Diana left and closed the door. Linda got into bed on the far side and so I got in. She slid her left arm under my head and so I looked at her and put my left arm around her torso. She kissed me on my forehead, which was more than welcome.

"You, our researcher, are carrying other people's burdens," Linda said. "Let's just lie like this quietly."

I moaned and tucked myself more closely into her and she gave me a kiss again as before.

Narrator: Linda Naturism Lecture & Magic Day (Saturday 21st December)

Allie still looked terrible at breakfast, as she picked at her food, but at least she could smile at me.

"Allie, eat something properly at least."

"Yes mawther."

Diana joined us, as did the rest on nearby tables, including Roger and Marie, and Paula, and Sally with a man called Jack Smith. Diana grinned at his name - Jack Smith being a character in The Jacobite Gap Years novel. I asked them all to be present for Bishop Christine's lecture, who gave me a nod. She, like me, had a pectoral cross in between her breasts.

Quite a good crowd of people gathered for my bishop colleague's lecture. Christine described who we were and where we were from, and our mission was not of conversion in that we were, as she would point out, a "post-secular Church".

Diana whispered to me, scratching her left breast, asking, "What's that?"

"Diana. You're making red marks on your tit. She not only rejects secularism, she rejects the secular affecting the Church."

I didn't recall her ever using that term before but in fact it was consistent with her form of postmodernism, although she might deny the terminology.

Allie alongside me said she would record how people were responding by drawing; she already had a copy of her lecture. She did and I did not! Part of what Christine said included:

"Listen. We are living in interesting times, when there is no religious revival but the post-secular person makes non-committed references to religion as a means of re-affirming what it is to be human. You see, The more we have technical implants from conception to living to before death, the more we are on a trajectory towards homo-technological or even our own assisting artificial intelligence, and we know that artificial intelligence raises issues of self-consciousness - what it is to be aware. But we are not convinced that technology can ever produce its own self-awareness of awareness, the ghost in the machine. At the same time, the very striving in that direction, towards homo technological, does raise the question for many of what it is to be human.

"We ought to be careful about where we are now. We project ahead about technological support in being human and asking about artificial intelligence. Anyone with vision-based, hearing-based, muscle-based, hand and leg-replacing or assisting technology is still only enjoying an extension of the mesolithic hunter who realised that he could strap his leg with a wooden branch in the hope of his leg getting better, or used rudimentary tools and - on that basis - planned the hunt. The ancients could rotate an arm around its shoulder joint until it goes back in its socket just as we do. We should realise that that the mesolithic human had the same brain as we do; that introduced to today's reasoning and technology the person would soon adopt the knowledge we use. Culturally at sea, yes, but not for long, and we are all the same homosapiens."

Allie said, She's thinking of my encounter with Rhiannon Fleetwood."

"The same mesolithic could adopt the Christian revelation or any faith too.

"Nevertheless, our culture, with its science fiction story-telling, is able to make imaginative leaps to consider androids and then in the stories ask what it is to be authentically human. Gene Roddenberry worked his rumoured Unitarian Universalism into the earliest 1960s optimistic stark no-frills humanism, with Mr. Spock combining a narrow view of 'logic' imposed by the writers on Vulcans as a whole with the earthly communicative compromises of his human mother. Funny genetics there, I think and hardly the later Wittgenstein. In the 1980s and 1990s religion at the edges appears as Star Trek encounters more cultures. Data is an android who wants to be human - emotion is the key, even with perfect violin playing. In Voyager, Seven of Nine is on the road from a collective Borg impersonal existence back to the personal and individual, but only with the support of the congregation and the pastorally minded minister, or captain. By the time we get to Deep Space Nine, cultures clash, terrorism has broken out and that naive Unitarian optimism is over and out - more a light in the darkness. Babylon 5, a competitor of Star Trek, tries to be more realistic with all these supposed sinful types out to get each other, with war and diplomacy. This is not an android question, but a cultures and politics question. Idealism is undermined. Religion becomes part of the mix; far into the future people follow revelations, although of course it is our times that these stories reflect.

"Naturism is nothing if not an attempt to be authentic on its terms, to symbolise by textile absence the perceived essence of humanity. Naturists, however, are just as likely to be technologically supported as anyone else. What naturism says is that the culture of perfection is wrong, and the ideal body is misleading. This is strange given its German idealist background and its later abuse in the madness of Nazi Greek or Roman referenced body-beautiful, condemning the unbeautiful to lives of destruction. Naturism properly says we are our bumps and lumps and shapes: we are as we grow up with some males looking like pregnant women. Okay, some shape up, but not uniquely - by eating more naturally, by absorbing the sun for vitamin D, the excess barred by sun blocker, and by moving more for fitness. No one is against being attractive, but it's not via the airbrush and it's not by clothes. If you sit on the beach with your legs open, well, so what, because we've all got these parts and frankly this is what we look like. We all have 'this and that' with 'more or less'. There is therefore something not quite right about the naturist woman with unmedical breast implants - it rather defeats the object of what it is to be essentially human. Of course, to be naturist is still to pursue a cultural question, and it is post-secular in the limited sense that the culture of being human draws on more than an accepted understanding of evolution.

"Naturists are not as quite as anti-Christian as they were. They are still, perhaps, of the Pagan, but it's a more positive view of being Pagan, and it doesn't have to involve New Age magick and superstition revived.

"Now I'm a bishop of the Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia, with small gatherings throughout our nation, including Serninsea where we are from, and our connection with naturism is through Bishop Linda over there - wave! - who grew up with the Saxiclite Club. Don't boo! We are on a mission, and Linda will take a service on Sunday. As you can see, she and I are in your state of undress, hers too, and we incorporated some of the naturist ethos in her own incardination and consecration and for other ordinations. We are both ex-Anglicans. We are both positive in attitude towards sexual expression, another means of being authentically human.

"We preserve the authentic revelation by coming within the mother Church, the Church that involves valid apostolic ministry. The Church waits for and organises spots of heaven on earth until earth bursts into heavenly fruitfulness.

"What we want to do is offer generous pastoral support and religious expression in the setting of authentic human-seeking as happens in naturism. We are in the line of the Liberal Catholic: a whole variety of expressions via small Churches, some of which aren't very liberal and some that are thinly Catholic, except for essentials. Some are super-Catholic, even Eastern Orthodox. We start with the same form, that is episcopal inheritance through the laying on of hands continuously from ancient Churches. Like many, we have Universalist open tables: no one gets confirmed into membership so that all can partake.

"What we don't like is Augustine's theology that shaped the Western Church: we prefer the Eastern Orthodox view and the now defunct Church of the East view of a more mystical reception of authenticity. We thus incorporate different faiths, as the Church of the East did when it arrived in China, and we practice the use of the Jewish mikveh, a pool with steps into it and out, for (I interpret) dying into the holy water and rising, before a life event, and such submersion in water is in all effect naturist in practice. No orifices can be blocked, and the mikveh is taken at any significant life-moment - as within Judaism. The difference is we mix the sexes as do humans.

"Just a note about the entertainment later. Peter here will be working with Kathryn and Kathleen there in the kind of magic than might be called inauthentic, all about deception of the eye. He has a new trick, one where you will see and believe what is seemingly impossible or at least incredible. Changing clothes, even if loose, very rapidly and then, when naked, changing position. Peter thinks this is symbolic of something, and it is post-secular once it has such a message.

"Peter himself is one of our deacons, although he maintains a secular job in an investigation agency. That's an interesting job, because he looks into people doing wrong things, and does it while trying to be unnoticed. But as nude people, we want to be noticed: it is to enhance individuality and our differences, not to suggest a common mass. The Church has never suggested a common mass - only a Mass that is its worship. We look after the biology and we enchant as revelatory the cultural meaning of it all - thus we embrace intersex and transgender, gay and straight, queer, undefined - and we use religion as the post-secular person does. Such is the first recognition of divine revelation that comes to us and which we recognise particularly at this time of year.

"Thank you very much."

There was good applause. Gosh. I could see her stretching to recognise the humanity of naturism, while holding up her own ecclesiology. Even Diana was impressed, if not with the revelation part.

I smiled at Christine, coming to us, to express my immediate approval, and she slowly put her right hand to my upper left arm

And then naked Diana stood up and carefully grasped both of her upper arms, saying, "That was the first time this religion thing has made sense to me."

"Well I'm pleased about that," said my co-bishop.

I wondered: that was as intellectual as I have done, so why was she understood when I was not?

Later on, Christine was stood at the restaurant bar with Bill and Pauline. Behind was Winnie. Some bloke was bending at the knees to look at her hanging disc. I was with Diana, Paula, Sally (plus Jack) and Allie. Diana needed the loo and went away. Peter, Kathryn and Kathleen were already eating.

We selected our curries and extras and found a table, Allie alongside me on my left. Diana came in to my right, and Christine arrived alone to sit opposite.

Leaning forward, I put my hand across the table just touching her chest with my fingertips in between her breasts and above her cross. "You are special and I am special, and we're good colleagues and friends despite our differences."

Peter, Kathryn and Kathleen, joined by Winnie, had eaten quickly, and the three then left to set up their show on a stage in a small hall nearby.

We arrived close to their starting time.

When the curtain drew back, the ever useful cabinet was there, a bit like a wardrobe, but it had extra panels sticking out each side. Peter was like a naked ringmaster. Clearly, one could now tell Kathleen and Kathryn apart, if only because this silver disc was still hanging over Kathleen's vaginal opening. Actually, Kathryn looked a little larger. Now this was different because, to encouraged boos, Kathleen put on a Father Christmas top and bottoms and a white beard. She went into the box and came out in a second bottomless and in a red blouse. I thought this was good because Peter was no longer relying on a twin for that effect. His magic, therefore, was developing. Kathleen then pulled a pullover on to the red blouse. The pullover had a snowman on it. Kathleen went back into the box, and in an instant came out naked.

Peter introduced some smaller tricks, including one everyone could do. He had a cork circular coaster and a diagonal square hole in card smaller than the coaster. By pinching the paper upwards, he brought the adjacent two sides of the square together, and the coaster slipped through. He said this was thanks to Pythagoras, but some magicians might slip this into a larger trick - when it was not a trick at all but "the naked deception" of a mathematical restriction in two dimensions in space solved by using three dimensions of space.

Returning to the larger spectacle, naked Kathleen was sawn in half, and yes, a naked Kathryn emerged with Kathleen running in from the back of the hall. That was it and the show was followed by songs sung and jokes told by a succession of other naked performers - with some more Unitunes.

"You know, being a researcher cramps my style," Allie said to me, joining me in bed at the end of a day of mission.

I asked, "Have you been drinking again? I can smell it."

"If you must know I've just had two glasses of wine. When you saw me at Margate, I wasn't drinking then. I'd managed to stop, with the help of others. Do you know when I started again? After coming to your establishment. It's such a screwed-up place, your church. Plus, there's sod all else to do in Serninsea: it's a god-forsaken place."

"You're lonely. Come here and I'll give you a cuddle."

She came to me, wrapped her arms around me and pressed, and she started crying.

"Please don't drink, Allie," I said. "You are thirty years old. If you still drink like this when forty - my age - you will do such consequential damage that a doctor will say you have to keep drinking to actually stop. If you are fifty like this, it will be too late. You are a very intelligent woman, and there is no need to drink at all. Now just hold on to me." I kissed her forehead.

"I want you."

"Yes, well yes: I understand this. Just cuddle."

"You don't understand my needs."

"So, what is it then? Fingers first?"

"Go in with it all as far as you can and twist and push my cervix."

Service & Swimming Pool (Sunday 22nd December)

Diana said, "I have provided 'support' for Paula. Give her some confidence. Have you provided support for Allie?"

"Yes of course."

"Allie improved herself with her female contacts, at university, but since being here she's lost self-discipline. Even right here she sees Sally making out and then we have the incest twins."

"They're not twins."

"She fought Rhiannon Fleetwood to protect you and everyone."

"I know."

"For God's sake make love to her or something, or she'll spin out of control. You've seduced just about everyone else, and now you have a decent lass. She needs someone to take her in hand."

"I've provided comfort. It's called 'love' when less is more. Where is she?"

"Swimming in the pool, I think."

"I'll go to her."

"Leave her for now. When you sleep with her tonight, be warm towards her."

"It's not as if I haven't been."

"Anyway, haven't you got a sermon to write for this afternoon?"

"I have prepared it in my head, and instead I am going to sit at this table taking people's contact details for emails about our activities. I'll be grateful for any support: we're all on this mission."

"Your mission is obviously highlighting personal issues and problems."

"They usually do, bringing people together, and we're all here with clothes off."

Diana chose to leave me, and soon after Allie came to me damp and with wet hair, and joined me at that table.

I said, "Allie, I love you very much."

"You do?"

"I also approve of your dedication. Talk to me more. Talk to me about irrelevant stuff. Hello Madam. This leaflet explains who we are, and you can read about our mikveh."

The woman said, reading rapidly, "Why don't you do such a ceremony at the swimming pool?"

"What a good idea," I said. "After our service in the afternoon."

Then Allie asked, "Have you got an Uncle William?"

"Yes, sixty-five years old, born in Dunham like my father."

"Obviously he knows you're here."

Christine arrived and was sent off to Lindy Peacock at the reception, for permission to use the pool, probably via management, thus keeping Allie with me.

Meanwhile, Allie said, "I've had the squits again."

I said in response, "I'm a bit farty myself."

The last thing anyone needs ahead of a service, especially in a naturist setting, is a churning stomach and the desire to fart. This churn was underway while responding to queries. It was from the curry, probably, not helped by my plumbing, despite my progress from all those pelvic floor exercises. Diana came back and noticed my discomfort.

I tried a few silent farts from my all exposed bum but this wasn't easy and then I gave up, going to the toilet. I asked Allie to stay and Diana to accompany me because there is a premium on wiping your arse successfully in a naturist camp; I needed someone to check it was all right when done.

Allie said, "I'll have done it," when I was back.

"You're a deacon. Diana can do my domestic needs."

Crisis over I was able to take the service, without vestments on - just the pectoral cross as before. Christine produced four bishops' mitres, so Bill, Pauline, Christine and I ended up wearing these, and I thought we looked daft.

Our service was less well attended than the entertainment or indeed the lecture. However, I spotted Uncle Bill. My homily, or sermon, repeated some of what Christine had said in her lecture, but I was more 'religious' and cultural. This time Allie had to write, because I was speaking without notes, even if I had thought over what I was going to say.

"In a service, we are directly concerned with salvation, and the issue is what is salvation in the post-secular world, and has religion been part of the civic/ public conversation?

"The clue, then, to the post-secular person seeking salvation, is that of personal authenticity. Unlike Bishop Christine, I am less worried about the Church side. I've no objection to proper Church order, but for me Church should be encouraging and educative, to build individuals and communities, including its own.

"The danger is that 'personal authenticity' could be anything. Arguments that fast-forward to Adolf Hitler are usually bad arguments, but we might be told that Hitler had personal authenticity. He was authentic to himself, surely - until it all unravelled and he killed his dog, his wife and himself, to add to the millions. So it doesn't quite qualify. He was unbending, unyielding, brittle, and his supposed personal authenticity took Germany down with him, having turned Germany into that cruel, brutal, meglamaniac, dystopia of evil.

"Personal authenticity, then, needs collective authenticity too, via accountability. It needs fruits. Authenticity is such that takes us as we are, and then enhances, builds up, affirms, includes as many as can, stops the quest for victims, increases the quest for discovery. Like the Artificial Intelligence that wants to be human, it wants to expand consciousness and not enslave it.

In the Second World War large numbers of men fought, and allied women went to the factories and offices and farms, women as well men worked as spies, and select weirdos with brilliant minds went to Bletchley Park to break codes; meantime in Germany they maintained the fantasy of the homely woman breeding away the next generation of Aryans, whilst the despised were worked to death as slave labour, and bureaucrats made documents in triplicate. There was no personal authenticity for the women, no place for the odd-bod with incredible minds, and definitely not for the slave labourers worked to rapid death. Humanity was denied."

I was pleased that Jeremy Symes and Lindy Peacock were listening.

"This is how I've always understood naturism - it is affirming. It is about bumps and fleshy bits in the usual places among ordinary people. It is not glamour. It's not airbrushing and not perfection, as in the Nazi propaganda films parodying Ancient Greece and Rome. You can add a bit of gloss, of course - no one denies that - but the beauty is the skin as we actually have it and then what is inside, what is the full personality, the personality that is built up and enhanced, so that by our fruits we become known. I have had to adjust to my own skin being damaged by evil individuals pursuing idealism. Of course, we all fail and are wide of the mark, but authenticity is to be enhanced within.

"This is what I understand by incarnation, that this enhancement is in the body as we are. God is as much about loss and how things are as about perfection. Transcendence is always a beyond, and perfection is a beyond. Our fulfilment is to have humanity enhanced as it is, and that way we have salvation with imperfection. Amen."

Lindy and Jeremy joined in the open table communion as if laity, done with my adapted Liberal Catholic liturgy.

I invited anyone in the congregation who had a new aspect of life coming up (or an old one finishing) to join me at the swimming pool in one hour. They would not have to say what it was. We occupied the shallow end and where I stood. Each person or couple waited in a queue above me, where Deacon Peter, Deacon Kathleen and Deacon Winnie checked orifices as clear, rings off too except where impossible or receiving serious objection.

I recognised this chap close up that I had looked at a few times in the service. It was Mr. Grosvenor, only my sixth form tutor. He took part in everything, except the submerging. I still said to him, briefly, "Let's meet."

Allie joined the queue. For everyone together I read out the Jewish derived text we use. Each person or pair then came to me, in the water, and said quietly what the new aspect was unless they wanted secrecy. I put my hand on their foreheads (a new feature!) and said some words. So it was a bit like healing. They then went further into the pool, went as far as needed to bob down and become submerged, and then returned to get out out.

So I had in fact created a new liturgy here, and wondered if in future I'd be in the mikveh pool to bless people as they went through. Of course it was uniformly deeper.

Two who went in, without giving me a reason, were Jeremy and Lindy. Then Allie stood in front of me to go in. She said to me, "I am going to stop drinking."

I felt very emotional, and as well as putting my hand on her forehead I pulled her towards me for a hug. After my words of prayer, "Bless this daughter that she may renew her life," I said, "Submerge fully, Allie, come up and begin again. No more alcohol."

That night, she came in to the bedroom clear-headed. She got into bed and came close to me, and I held her tightly. It was here that I learnt that Allie had no further plans to go either to Somerset or Walsingham over Christmas. I said, "No, Allie, you should see your family, including Jonathan, soon."

She went to sleep with her head on my left breast.

Our mission had ended. Sally had found a boyfriend, and much unseen Roger had gained some acceptability with Marie.

I was quite pleased with the overall outcome at the Bever Wood Naturist Club, and particularly pleased with Christine's contribution. Peter had been good with his act. Perhaps we could have done more, but our folk socialised too.

Meanwhile, Peter suggested that Adam might like the film Shortbus as a Christmas present. He'd get it for me. I was unsure but agreed. He said that his, Kathryn's, Kathleen's and Winnie's Christmas had to be on a shoestring. Roger said much the same. I think we all agreed.

Allie joked that she could have been financially secure, but I'd ensured her own poverty. She added, "Poverty is a useful discipline."

"Watch it," I replied to her. When she went on to say she wanted to focus on her art work over Christmas, I asked her not to return to her house alone overnight. I was assured this was not her intention.

Last Moments (Sunday 22nd December)

After the ritual I caught up with Mr. Grosvenor, my sixth form tutor. He looked pretty good, I thought, and he asked me my age now.

"Turned forty. You?"

"Ah. I'm seventy next year. Now then, what's all this religion stuff with this cross between your breasts?"

"Events. I married Keith Jupitas, who wanted to be a clergyman, but instead I became a clergywoman."

"I read all about the scandal. And you've gone independent. I live here, you know. It's not so expensive, when you deduct some house costs."

"Sir, I did not know..."

"Don't call me 'Sir'. I'm Benjamin, so call me Ben. We used to say in the staff room, 'When is Miss Bode going to wear a bra?' When you took your sweater off, you see, we all got the shape and sometimes your pointy bits. I was supposed to say something to you as your tutor, but I wasn't brave enough. I didn't even ask a female member of staff. But we all knew about your weird family. And now I see them for real - not your family, except a chap who says he's your uncle - but your breasts. About ten years ago I joined the weirdos. I wanted a place to live after my wife died, and this seemed to be a good option. Your impression on me was greater than you think."

"I'm yet to meet up."

"I married Rhoda Hawes after you lot left."

"She was fit then."

"In all ways, but eleven years ago now, about this time of year, she had a massive heart attack."

I said, "Let's find a room to chat."

We found the room that had housed the whist game and sat on two seats facing each other.

I said, "It was quite a disruptive time at school in some ways. Carr Secondary merged with St. Sernin and became Serninsea Secondary, so even in the sixth form we had two tribes. And Labhaoise Vlahos joined the school, the lesbian partner of Ann Dromeghda."

"We didn't know that at the time."

"I did. I went round to Ann's house. She was there."

"Ann was no naturist because the rumours were she didn't like students looking at her legs and breasts."

"They weren't rumours, they were true. She had a go at Adam Magellan."

"Ann and this newcomer left suddenly. Did something happen with him? They started developing houses."

"Adam did get a woman pregnant, a school friend. He went to Nottingham, and returned to Serninsea after ten years."

"I have recognised one of your school friends - Diana King."

"Diana de Groot, since."

"So Magellan, who I gather still knows these ex-teachers, got a schoolgirl pregnant."

"After leaving school. I discovered only recently that the baby was stillborn. Very sad, really."

"Ann Dromeghda was fierce. We wondered if she'd abused Magellan. Rumours built but the now disgraced Kay Parker said let it go quiet as he was leaving. What you say raises more questions. But about you! I read, and heard, that you are not completely female? We had no idea about that."

"I am complete and female."

"You look it."

"But I am intersex as well. So the plumbing is different in outcome. Mainly, with some shape differences."

"Your, er, distinctive pussy cat..."

"Twat? Ah, well, that is unusual, in the sense the clitoris should be small and indistinct; but it isn't. But I think we should just accept these things. You've obviously noticed."

"I notice an ex-pupil revealed to me in all her glory. Two ex-pupils. I'm not sure Diana has recognised me."

"I recruited Diana to this cause. But you could have seen me naked any time, at any age, like on the farm. Not imagining but out in the open. And I did fancy you a bit, sir, as you were always good looking to a teenager. Oh dear."

"I did imagine you. I was always critical of staff room chat about our female students, but perhaps I am here revealing my true colours."

"We are adults, you know."

I touched him with a movement of my hand, and smiled, and stood as if to end the meeting.

He asked, standing, "Do you want something, Miss Bode?" (I remember that question often asked of me, say when I was chatting away in pastoral form time.)

I answered this time, "I could - to complete the past."

He said, "Rhoda saw you after games when showering and commented to me on your smoothness and baldness as I have indeed seen here, if now with a few marks from your age, and I confess making love to her and thinking of you."

So it was that I dropped the towel for my knees and took hold, and inserted him into my mouth, looking up at my sixth form tutor. I peeled him back to make sure it was a most sensitive tonguing and sucking.

"Hmm. Better than Rhoda. I hope I'm not insulting my dear departed."

When I released him from my mouth solid as a rock and ready, I said, "Come on sir, you are a fit sixty-nine year old to go in me."

I got on to a table and opened my legs. He went in.

"God you're tight, somehow."

"The plumbing," I said. "Go on, get a rhythm."

He also sucked on my breasts that had once fascinated him as he did gain and maintain a rhythm.

It won't long before he came and the white stuff went all over the neighbourhood. I sat up on the table and held him close.

I gave him a good kiss and said, "Happy memories, and now another to add."

"Thank you," he said. "You always were a good student at the school. It was a joy to be your tutor then, and certainly you to be mine decades later. A place for non-sexual nudity, says the publicity."

"Oh that's crap," I said. "People behave as they will."

We used the towels to wipe the table and ourselves. With another kiss we left the room, and it was, I realised, time for us to return home.

But that was not before my Uncle William found me and directed me into the same room.

"Hey, somebody has been at it in here. Your father is so proud of you, both of you. He wants his daughters to resolve your differences. May I?"

"If you want."

He ran his right hand over my buttocks in a mirror circular fashion.

"Smooth as you were beyond the marks," said Bill. "There's a lot of guilt about. Your dad tried to persuade Luce about the benefit of her vaginoplasty."

"I see. But not the loss of her oestrogen."

"No. Quite. He supported Luce a lot but realised he's neglected you. Be kind and open to your dad as he makes it up with you."

We parted. Soon I joined the others and dressed.

The helicopter flew in for Christine, Bill and Pauline. The rest of us headed for Serninsea as we had come.

Diana alongside me, as soon as we were out of Bever Wood, said, "Hey, Benny - you know Benny: at last we met! Just before I got my stuff he said hello and rubbed my arm up and down with his hand. He actually lives there, ten months a year."

"He said hello to me."

"I think my nipples lengthened and hardened in front of him," she said. "Did you react?"

"It takes a lot for me to react. I don't send out signals."

"Why are you smiling, Linda?"

"Well, you did once fancy him."

"So did you, back in the day. He's not bad now, either. I suppose, no, your stubby small nipples don't change like mine do."

"Probably not."

"They go like biscuits," said Allie.

"Oy!" I called back at her.

I thought that we should also approach my old club, Saxiclite, to see if they would be interested in a mission later on, so I did a short deviation on the way to call in.

Stripped off again, I was remembered, and I introduced Allie as my 'partner' and this surprised one or two folks there. I spent some time telling some who did not know that my closest family was now resident in Wales, except my older brother residing in London.

Chapter 26 Season's Greetings

Narrator: Linda Massage for An Older Lady (Monday 23rd December)

Back at base we looked forward to the normal business of planning and maintaining a small congregation in the run-up to Christmas.

Meanwhile, we had a visit from Mrs. Gertrude Carter, and she made it clear she wanted to see me alone. So we went into the vestry.

"Well, Reverend, Right Reverend, I'd ask how your mission went."

"Did you want to go on it?"

"No, I'm just thinking."

"It went very well. We mixed with them, told them some of our principles, it was two-way, really."

"So you will carry on doing massages here?"

"Yes, you're right to identify them with our naturist ministry. They are carried out for paying clients with Kathryn and Kathleen."

"Not you."

"I can do them; I can ask Allie to be with me."

"Not Allie. You only. Or a man, maybe, as well."

"Sorry, Mrs. Carter, are you asking for yourself?"

"It was something in my mind, imagining, but trusting in you."

"And a man?"

"Only in the fantasy."

"Not Adam Magellan?"

"No. No: you. I wouldn't want anyone to know about it. A massage. Something that recalls memories. This is very embarrassing, but you went to that naturists place and I wondered why I can't pluck up the courage. Anyway, I've said it now and I will be going. Please say nothing to anyone."

"Gertrude. I'll do it. I'm afraid you do have to sign consent papers but I can keep those in my archive. It's our first weekday back and as I understand it Kathryn and Kathleen are busy catching up today, but they do have a number of clients starting tomorrow."

"Oh. Suddenly it is real. Can I go away and come back in an hour? I'll sign your papers now, but if I don't come back forget it. I'm suddenly very nervous."

"I'm surprised but, look, what happens is we undress, we shower, dry with towels, and there is a wider bench to feel more secure, and I can give you a massage. If you want, you can have a nuru massage - body on body with plenty of lubrication, but you won't want my weight on you - on an airbed, and then we shower and finish in the plunge pool."

"Hmm. This afternoon?"

"Yes."

Mrs. Carter signed the consent form, that accepted our intimate contact and that we'd refrain once asked, and she went away.

I was quite astonished. I then rang through to Adam's and if Roger was available. I thought if he was a donor, he might be less worried about someone Mrs. Carter could look at.

Adam was happy to release him, and he didn't need to know why and Roger didn't need to tell him.

So he came up to the bethel. I said to him, "I think she wants to rekindle memories, so this would be like her remembering back. You might give a part of the massage, but it would be me doing it and really it's only like being naturist. Can you do it?"

An old lady?"

"Well, she's active and retired. She is a widow, I think. Well, I know so. I've known her, and she's known me, since I was a kid running around the farm near here."

He knew she'd be back in an hour.

When Allie came in I told her to make herself scarce, and she wasn't even to see what I was doing. Fortunately, though curious, she agreed, and went out of the building.

Messages received included daddy visiting Mrs. Youell, and I was to go along to see them both tomorrow.

I trusted Allie to go out and walk, perhaps to her house, and not to go to any pub for a seasonal drink. On my own I looked up a few Internet videos on how to do massages better.

When Roger reappeared, I gave him keys as I'd lock the dry cloaks and wet room behind us. He could make an entry after ten or fifteen minutes, I thought. He viewed the seating area across from the small library and meeting room.

So would Mrs. Carter return? Was her fantasy to be made real? She did, and she wanted to go directly into the cloaks space. (There were some students in the kitchen).

She said to me, "I wanted to treat myself in a very different way. Do you mind, really?"

"No, and I'd like us to undress each other," I replied.

We stood close, body to body, and we proceeded. Somehow undoing her bra at her back over her shoulders was a significant moment, to slip it down her arms and see her step back and look up into my face.

I said to her, "Beautiful. I don't know your age."

"Seventy-two."

"You know, I never know what to call you. As a child I called you Mrs. Carter."

"You can call me Gert or Getrude. You call me as you feel comfortable. Now you are naked, again."

"Getrude. I'm going to lower your knickers. Let me take in what I see. Oh, yes. I love it. The swirling of whitened pubic hair. It's so long and curls and journeys."

We had a short shower, and directed the water on to each other and then proceeded to the wet room.

"I'm not bed-bound or even housebound," said Mrs. Carter facing the double width cushioned bench for massages.

She climbed aboard and lay on her front. Thus I took a grip first of her shoulders and moved across her neck and down her body. In applying pressure, I kept thinking of brittle bones and the like. At least the white cheeks of her bottom, and her upper thighs, were easier to handle. But her lower legs, ankles and even feet were more of a challenge.

At this point she said, "Oh a man," and Roger used the showers before towelling himself towards dry and then standing near to the bench. "Oh he is nicely constructed," said Mrs. Carter. "Can I touch that, today?"

"Roger?" I asked.

"Yes."

"Gertrude. Turn yourself over to lie on your back, nice and easily."

"I'm not going to fall off."

I asked Roger to join in, and he did while Mrs. Carter put her hand out to hold his penis that was becoming increasingly rigid. So two of us were working her over, as she nodded to kneading her breasts and moving down

"Your tummy is quite soft," I said.

"It's called having children."

"Oh. Sure. Sorry."

We both went around her vulva more than anything. I spent some time looking at her pubic hair close up. I ran my finger through strands of long white hair, and of course I separated her vaginal opening by parting her thin lips.

"What do you think, Roger?"

"It's like it within doesn't age," he said, "but the hairs are wonderful."

"It does age, and can be very dry."

"Not at the moment!" I exclaimed. "You are flowing. Let's continue this. Gertrude," I asked. "Would you like a nuru massage? This is a lot of goo, on all of us, and then we massage you by our bodies on the air bed down there."

"I'm here for the full Christmas service," she said.

So we helped her off, applied the goo between our three bodies, and lay Mrs. Carter down on the double airbed. I said to Roger, "Don't apply your full weight. Try to hover a bit."

It seemed logical for me to go to her top half and Roger to go below. My pubic area brushed her face and mouth in particular, for which her tongue did come out.

"Will he?" Mrs. Carter asked.

"Will he what?"

"Go in. Rekindle my memories, allow me one more time to experience."

"Roger? Treat it like a donation sort of thing?"

I decided to help. Hovering over her head, I pulled her thighs back.

"I want to see, Linda."

So I moved to the side, and sat on my bottom, just moving my hand around her thighs.

Roger gripped his penis and directed it in carefully. "She is nicely lubricated," he said to me.

I said, "Go in deep as you can. Make it big, long and deep."

So he didn't just thrust: he rotated, and worked her carefully.

"Oh this is so good. I dare say you're better than my husband." (He'd been dead nearly two decades.)

Roger needed no more directions, until he asked, "Do I make a donation then?"

"Inside," I said. "Complete the job."

"What a man, what a gift: thank you Linda."

"Thank you Roger," I said, as he continued and went right in with his long, thick, projectile.

And his thrusts increased and became more concentrated in space. He was pulsing semen into her, and when done she put her arms around him and kissed him.

"What a wonderful young man; what an experience. I could feel it, you know, I really could."

When Roger made his long withdrawal, I said, "Hey, me," and took that into my mouth to taste both of them.

Then I turned to Mrs. Carter and opened her up, expecting a running out of some sperm. But it didn't happen. He'd put it into her deep and that's where it was staying.

"Something I'll remember. Thank you, you two."

So it was we got up and showered (more than at the beginning - the goo to get off), and finally three bodies went down into the plunge pool, to exchange mutual kisses and caresses.

Finally we were in the cloaks area.

"Please," said Mrs. Carter, "Say nothing to anyone. No one. You've brought to reality a desire I wanted to fulfil. I have three hundred pounds I withdrew."

"No," I said.

"For your funds. I insist. I treated myself. But silence on all of this."

I said, "Yes, this in the seal of the confessional. Roger, you did some administration for me. You can talk to me one to one about it later, as can you Gertrude if you want."

"I won't want," said Gertrude. "We carry on as before. Tonight I will have a drink and relive the wonderful sensations of today. Our bodies, Linda, and your beautiful sexual intercourse, young man."

With that we left the cloaks and dispersed.

A little later Allie asked me, "Is Mrs. Carter coming over to us, then?"

I said to her, "I don't think so. She's fed up with over there, but she is such a dyed in the wool Anglican."

"What was Roger doing over here?"

"Were you spying?" I asked.

"No, I saw him coming this way. I went to see Annie."

"Well, as an academic, he does have a writing skill, and I use that when something needs to be 'out of the loop.' And what did you do with Annie?"

"Watched her perform. She was online. No, I was not seen, though she announced she had a friend present. And no I didn't drink any alcohol."

"Good."

Narrator: Linda Massage for Support (Tuesday 24th December)

On Tuesday morning Allie and I lay in bed. Thinking of Mrs. Carter still, and touching myself, I said, "I was thinking that you need to relax and integrate more in this community, so on Tuesday afternoons, and the church will pay, I want Kathryn and Kathleen to give you a regular long massage in the wet room. However, because you and I need to get it together, and Christmas Day is tomorrow, I will do at least the first one and this is this afternoon. We ought to exploit the pastoral potential of the massages."

"I will have to put down that this is happening, and how it came about."

"Plus the massage is to help you stay off the alcohol."

"I made a commitment. I once did in a group in Taunton. I meant it then as well, in those circumstances."

"I'm pleased to hear it. Come with me to Patricia's tomorrow, because we are having a party."

Allie said, "Still, that swimming pool submerging in Bever Wood didn't conform to the rules for the mikveh."

"I know," I said, "but we are dealing with symbolism. If we build one, like we did, we do it properly, but otherwise we adapt to the circumstances. Ritual is not a thing in itself - it's to give spiritual gifts."

So, after lunch, I went with Allie over to the dry cloaks area. I got her to undress, and I did too. We used the single width wet room massage table. She lay on her front to start with, and I told her to be quiet. This was a proper massage, but also a blessing. I kept remembering Mrs. Carter. Eventually I got her to turn over, on to her back, and I worked on her legs, and on her shoulders; I kneaded her breasts more strongly than Gertrude's and finally I told her to open her legs and relax. I would only partly masturbate her in this process. And so I did.

"Do nuru," she said.

I stood and thought about it. "Yes. It's part of the service."

"Oh, that airbed needs hosing down. It's been used."

"Yes, so it seems. Well, perhaps the Kath's used it."

"They weren't here."

"Someone did, obviously."

I hosed it down and then dropped goo on to it, her and me. She sank into the airbed and I pressed my weight on to her, circulating, and soon she returned the favour. We did not do extras: I avoided deliberate direct orgasmic actions. When she put her hand to my vulva, I shook my head, but I was prepared to lie on that bed with her on top of me and my arms around her.

Of course I could only imagine Roger thrusting deeply into Mrs. Carter like an expert.

After that it was the showers, and then into the plunge pool together, and it was all rather pleasant when we dressed.

I realised the obvious: that merging her into the community must clash with her role as researcher. Something, somewhere, had to give.

"I recognise that you are burdened with secrets," I said.

"Correct," she said. "They are a burden. You have yours too."

At this point, I prepared for my lone visit to my father.

She watched me, and I asked her, "Allie, do you think incest is always wrong?"

She reacted, "If this is a reference to Jonnie and me, then he is so distant from me..."

"No it wasn't, it really wasn't."

"And let's not forget you come from a small village with other small villages nearby, up against a river. So the number of families interbreeding will be quite high. Villages are like pinch points."

"I mean, like, Jenny's actual father and Roger with Marie. He fits her like a glove. Did you notice?"

"Not exactly. I don't know how they are sure Bill Masters is the father if it was only a drunken swingers' party."

"His condom broke as they each went inside her. Ugh."

"It doesn't add up," Allie claimed.

"Why not?"

"Because she has her uncle's surname, not her supposed parents'."

"Oh, because they were so pissed and incapable he raised her 'til about ten years old, and then, with her parents, she in effect had her mother's maiden name and her mother used that."

Allie said, "I didn't know that: I learn something every day."

"Goodness me. Pigs do fly," I reacted. "What gets me is he can come to order, at the clinic I mean. Adam must be envious."

"Not Bishop Bill?"

"No, Roger. Marie and Roger must be careful with his jizz. She was on her period at Bever Wood. That was brave to go naturist then. Some do wear knickers," I said.

"I suppose you had a good look at his knob and her 'Mind the Gap'," Allie retorted.

"They're so in love."

"They might be," Allie said. "Question is, how it started."

"They met each other and didn't know."

"If you say so."

"Oh, here we go. You know differently, don't you? Yes, you do. I'm supposed to be the bishop here and offering pastoral support, and once again I'm in the dark compared with you."

"That's not what I said. You assume too much. And not so about Bishop Bill. Jenny never told me he raised her so far. No wonder she loses it. Anyway, your father is waiting."

"Yeah, puzzling that."

"I suppose you two will remove clothes."

"At Mrs. Youell's? I doubt it. The puzzle is why we are meeting there. Do you know?"

"I haven't got a clue."

Daddy Visits Mrs. Youell (Tuesday 24th December)

It turned out that daddy had travelled over on Sunday. He said he was staying at the Titantsea Grand.

Delighted to see him, I was nevertheless concerned by his visit being unannounced so far and said, "You could have stayed at the Bethel."

"I'll deal with this later."

Thus I met, too, again, Eliana, seventy-seven, as daddy met our one time farming neighbour.

Mrs. Youell said, referring to me, "She was very good, very attentive, when Yannis was dying."

"He was once a fixture in our lives," I said.

"Yannis used to say: 'There they are with nothing on again.'"

A little later on, daddy reminded her of that comment, and wondered if she had a room we could use in the farmhouse. "We'll be naturist for a short while," he said.

She said we should go ahead.

We went to a far room downstairs in the farmhouse, and my father said, "Get them off," as he did too.

I was happy to do this, but intrigued.

He said to me, "I've been so disappointed to hear the extent of the feud between you and Lucinda, and you and Larry. Your mother is feeling isolated, and I've come here on my own."

"Larry forced himself on me."

"I've told him, he was not skillful. But neither were you. He should have had your consent; he's your brother and you could have accommodated him."

"He forced his penis down my throat, he fucked me without my approval."

"You were curious and he answered your curiosity. You could have come to me. I'd have told you about the comfort I gave to Lucinda. You didn't even come to me after he did what he did."

"My sister has always accused me."

"Well, I told her she was not too old to get a slap from her father, and neither are you. You feud against her too. Get across my knees."

I stood, looking at him, puzzled.

"I'm not joking. You might be forty but you are still my daughter. You're not going to disobey me, are you?"

"No, daddy."

"But you just have. Right. In my bag is a table tennis bat. Bring it to me. Do it or I'll smack your crotch and you'll know all about it then."

I did get it, and because I'd come close I voluntarily laid my long body over daddy's knees. Thus he began with a stinging use of the bat. I'd have preferred his hand; at least I would have felt his hand immediately. My bottom became hot.

Then he moved his palms over my bottom flesh, presumably checking for any marks. He knew about the sensitivity of my smooth skin, not as perfect as it was once.

"That mirror on the wall; if you look in it downwards, you can see your red bottom cheeks."

Of course I got off his lap and did as I was told.

He said, as I looked, "I hadn't been with Luce since she married Dyfed, but in the end I had no choice. I've smacked her recently with my hand and I've smacked you with a bat. They are different so don't use your experience as a comparison. This feuding has got to stop. It's causing all sorts of tensions back in Wales."

"I've tried to calm things, daddy, but she wouldn't believe me that I didn't fool about with Dyfed. She had sex with my Adam."

"Come here and sit on my lap."

"Yes, daddy."

"Neither are you or her too old to receive comfort from your dad."

"No, daddy."

"Shift about your arse to bring it up and make it stiff."

"I'm sorry daddy but I don't want the feud either."

"I'll suck your breasts. You've got lovely breasts, maturing like your mother's. Lucinda is just the same."

Funny that I had that image again of Roger into Mrs. Carter as daddy stiffened.

He said, "I'll come in you, as I did with Luce just before I came here - to Serninsea, Titansea, I mean.."

He maintained his attention on my breasts as I rose and fell, applying my vaginal muscles as best I could.

"What about Leila? Have you ever done this with Leila?"

"Your mother wouldn't approve."

"Mummy approves of Luce and me with you?"

He didn't answer, instead he thrust more.

Soon, he came in me, and once again we cleaned up what had to come out. Nothing had come out of Mrs. Carter.

"You're a good lass," he said, as I sucked his penis clear of our mixture.

"Thank you daddy; I love you daddy."

He gave me two Christmas presents: a vibrating egg attached by wire to a battery pack with speed controls and a corkscrew tapered dildo, probably to pleasure my bottom. I thought the best way to present them in front of Allie was to give them to her as a combined present.

He said, "That's it. I'm going home now. I've been meeting friends and associates before Christmas. Ah, your mother and Leila sent a card, and so did Dyfed on the side - but not your sister or your brother. Get them from the top of my packed case in the hallway. My presents are instead of a card. We'll go and present ourselves, like this, to Eliana and then dress. Well, she should see us."

So this was a different view of me than the one I presented to her and her husband recently. We dressed in front of her, which in some ways was against the naturist ethos. You undress and dress out of sight or in an appropriate place.

I took the cards as instructed. I didn't know why his suitcase had (I supposed) been brought in from his car.

Daddy kissed Mrs. Youell on the lips. He and I went to our vehicles, me carrying his suitcase. He said, "I'm going to find a time to bring all the family, and we are going to end the feud all together. This includes Lawrence. Until then, then."

He kissed me on the lips and squeezed my still sensitive bottom. I still felt aroused as if I wanted him to fuck me again.

Daddy thus drove off, suitcase in the vehicle, and I felt confused.

I went back to the bethel and said nothing to Allie and folks other than that we had found Mrs. Youell in good health if still grieving. I said that my father had also come over to see some friends.

I douched myself early on so that Allie wouldn't discover sperm or my arousal. I made a special effort to keep my bare bottom out of her sight until it was back to the same colour as my back.

Christmas Day Morning (Wednesday 25th December)

And so along came the Christmas morning service, and a moment for me to help define the place. The service was presided by Bishop Elizabeth, and I was the preacher. Allie, Peter, Kathryn and Winnie made up the team. All others were elsewhere.

It was a good gathering, partly because a number of Anglicans chose to come across on this day. These were Gertrude Carter (as if nothing had happened), Mohammed McArden, Madge Jack (mother of Bella, who'd come along), Catherine Mould (mother of Cheryl), Sheila Gillespie, Tom Bowler, Tracey Graham, Ralph Thickett, Jim Sayle and Flòraidh MacLean.

Additionally Elean Efan of the Serninsea Vestal Virgins was present. So was Eliana Youell, having me my daddy and me. 'Uncle' George Wickenby turned up to, he said, sing carols. We had a kilted reverend who wanted to experience our congregation at this time: Georgie Smith. Her three congregants were with her - to sing, basically. Also, Layla Jenkins, a policewoman, joined us. The Seregas, naturists, came long too.

Friends Diana and Patricia turned up with their husbands and children.

Ralph and Tom probably spoke for many when they made it clear to me that they had come because Rhiannon Fleetwood wasn't holding a Christmas morning service in Serninsea, but in Serninsea Marshes, and they thought they'd make an exception to hear me, despite making it clear they did not agree with what I had done in moving.

They heard me say, well into the sermon:

"In standard Christianity, Easter is more important than Christmas, because Christmas is, if you like, the coming of Incarnation whereas Easter is its crowning, Christ-crucified and then the miracle of resurrection. Yet more attend at Christmas than attend at Easter. There are still some biannual Christians who also turn up at Easter, reminded of such by the one day most Sunday shops must shut.

"And to be sure, now is often about Yuletide and Saturnalia, or about Spike Milligan's 'Walking Backward into Christmas', by which he means a return to a childlike understanding and celebrating this point of the year. It refreshes us: it reminds us of where we once were - a beginning - and of course, as in Christianity, there is an end to all of this.

"I'm going to be stark with you. No one walked to Bethlehem, with or without a donkey, to have a baby. There was a baby, because there was a man, but the baby was born in obscurity, and the later man, a builder, started a religious ministry by breaking free from his mentor, John the Baptist. There is no record of any census, and the Romans were good at keeping records. The Romans would not have had mass movement to non-local places for a census. There was no threat to the first-born from Herod, nor was there a walk from or flight into Egypt. The boy had two parents, whether married, unmarried, or what. The fact that two gospels can give two very different genealogies shows construction. There are no careful 'witnesses' who remember what happened around the birth that give the stories any historical credibility. The fact is that the stories are all post-Easter, that is to say documents of story-making by early Christians who were saying this man was a prophet chosen by God. The mythology reflects how they believed and their culture.

"To be a bit more theological. The earliest 'divinity' given by followers to Christ was post-resurrection and believing in a messiah. Then came the kind of divinity as in Greek culture where a God has sex with a human and produces a chosen one. Later we have that pre-existing divinity.

"So the birth is a pleasing fantasy. Whether the resurrection at the other end is an equal fantasy I leave to another discussion, another sermon perhaps. That has a more communal punch, more expectation about it, indeed more pregnancy, than the birth narrative. Still, it also pushes credulity in the modern mind.."

It looked like Ralph Thickett was getting up to leave.

"Are you going, Ralph?" I asked. "The thing is, in this church, I say what I believe with more honesty, and, equally, you are very free to disagree. I am not required to 'preach what the Church teaches'. Perhaps you will hear me out, with more positive comments too, and then make up your own mind?"

He sat down, and perhaps that prevented a larger walk-out.

"So what are we doing then? Is Christmas just Yuletide and Saturnalia dressed up? Not quite. Because some of the things I used to say in the other place remain true in the story-telling sense. First of all, there is an appeal to the poverty in which one finds a kind of honesty - not in money. There is an appeal to the irregular household: we are not all perfect families. The lowest and despised are welcomed, like the shepherds. Although the birth narrative is rooted in its own culture, the wise men represent an appeal beyond the tribe. Gifts matter, and we give them too. The star involves the cosmos, but please don't try and speculate what comets were passing at that time. This is to fall for an explanatory literalism that isn't needed. Why not replace the census with a sense of pilgrimage? The walk is to somewhere that becomes a holy place. The two accounts in the two gospels cannot be melded, although people do try this: but the emergent tradition, with the Magnificat, sets the scene on the actual adult ministry that perhaps lasted around a year and was ended mid-expectations in a historical sense.

"The fact is that people as groups and individuals celebrate, and here is a celebration. No doubt, for most, Christmas is pretty secular: a demand to shop, eat and give presents. It's very Jewish in many ways: a family event that defines much of who we are, if secularised. But to come here, or go there, or go to a non-conformist place, or indeed for Muslims to say 'Merry Christmas', as their Buddhist or Jewish or secular neighbours can do, is to do the anthropological thing of making an effort to celebrate and to gain the enjoyment of the celebration, and not least to dress it all in coloured lights and a tasty feast to challenge the darkness and scarcity of the time. And then we take this solstice, this Saturnalia, and stretch it to making a New Year, the new out of the old, so the end celebration is about a new beginning too.

"So what then if nothing happened? We make up stories all the time, and out of them we can show the big themes. Religion is undergoing considerable change, and at a time of seeing through the magic and disposing of the supernatural we still celebrate within the solar year.

"Being history-like can be mythical. We simply conclude, historically, that Jesus was the child of a builder, probably working in Sephorris on the coast, born in obscurity in say Caperneum. The specialness to us is in the fiction, is enough to demonstrate that Christmas is really about the universal baby, the humanism that looks at the fragility and yet potential of life.

"I could not have said this in the National Church, where - like I said - I was obliged to preach the Gospel, but now I am independent and have a freedom to interpret, and each of you may."

Afterwards over coffee and snacks Allie found Flòraidh MacLean and heard her Scottish lilting West Coast accent. She tried some Gaelic on her and Flòraidh spoke in that language! I remembered Allie doing this in Margate with the Archbishop of All England, no less.

Mo McArden said he obviously didn't agree with me, and if he was a cleric and thought as I did he'd find something else to do. So I replied that religion was broader than meeting some dogmatic test, and again that I felt free to express my views exactly as I wanted.

"Hello Gert," I said, to be familiar.

"Let me say I don't like what the priest-in-charge Rhiannon Fleetwood is doing in our parish church." (Phew!) "I've heard she is connected with the Reverend Wilson and the Bishop John Barman."

"She is connected to these people but quite how is unclear."

Ralph Thickett overheard this, and said, "Well, Reverend Linda - are you still the Reverend Linda?"

"That's part of it. Thanks for not leaving."

"I don't think she is going to last long in Serninsea. I'm evangelical but she has a harshness of spirit and something isn't quite right. Anyway, I have a card for you, and everyone who has come here has signed it. We've had a Christmas goodwill trip, rather than go over to Serninsea Marshes."

And, indeed, they had all paid attention.

It was hellos of course to the de Groot and Rhymes families and the kids had enjoyed the carols. I'd see them later with Allie.

After the congregation had gone, Allie asked me what the difference was between that sermon and what I used to preach. My reply was, "Honesty."

Allie also noted that Roger and Marie were missing, though I suggested they were likely quite secular. Many were missing, after all.

Tree and Party

It was as if the conclusion of the Christmas Morning Service was the end of activity in the church for most for many days. Bill and Pauline were staying at his home for the holiday. Christine was in Ebbsfleet. Elizabeth had her room at the Blue Diamond Club. Peter, Kathryn, Kathleen and Winnie all went to Peter's father's house in Caffenmere.

But under the Christmas tree in the church the soon departed left presents for me, as I'd handed over some presents to them. Adam, with Peter, Kathryn, Kathleen and Winnie together, had bought me a square cross brooch in an Anglo-Saxon style. "Serninsea Cross!" I joked, as if like the Serninsea Cross brooch. It was not the same, and it was not claiming to be ancient. Maurice Neptune had posted a book to Diana's address which she'd placed under the tree: Krishnan Kumar's 2005 discussion, From Post-Industrial to Post-Modern Society: New Theories of the Contemporary World. It was not a theology book, but it definitely dovetailed with some I had, for example by Paul Lakeland. I don't know how Maurice knew her address; I was surprised that it was not about Judaism at all. It hadn't crossed my mind to send him a present.

Given his very recent viewing choices - Nine Songs and Love, I gave Adam a copy of the film Shortbus, all about some alternative types in the United States. Peter had found it for me at very short notice.

Christine thought she would indoctrinate me by giving me By Whose Authority? Newman, Manning and the Magisterium, by Vincent Alan McClelland, published in 1996. It's exactly why I'd bought her John Hick's The Fifth Dimension: An Exploration of the Spiritual Realm, which is a further examination of his 'Real' theism as Spirit, I think.

I'd secured for Allie a copy of the Evans Pritchard book, Theories of Primitive Religion. She said she had seen it before but was pleased that she now owned a copy. She also received yesterday's sex toys, all wrapped up.

Allie's presents for me were considerable and, frankly, put me to shame. "I know you don't like clothing, but these are in your sizes." She'd bought me a black halterneck dress with an open-ended front zip, showing a lot of cleavage regardless, with a corset-style lace-up detail at the outer thighs and down the arse including gleaming metal eyelets, and all in a figure-hugging leather-look fabric. In addition she bought me women's thigh-high black leather wedge boots.

"I'll wear these now," I said.

She'd got herself a black shiny latex top with a full length zip that went on and off just like a jacket but showed a varied amount of breast to choice. She'd also bought herself women's knee-high black leather wedge boots. This meant she showed more leg, but I showed more arse.

"I'll buy yours for you."

"No you won't. Jonnie added to my account. It's from him and the family."

We both went in the changing room next to the wet room to change and the only thing that stopped us having sex was the need to get to Patricia's.

On arrival Adam and company admired our gear.

"By the way, did you see your father at all? He's been in the area."

"Yesterday. How do you know?"

"Because he's been staying at Eliana Youell's, trying to buy her farm."

"Oh? I did not know that."

"I do because Ann and Labhaoise want the house to sell off the land. Your father's been talking about employing a few farm labourers."

This sent a shiver down my spine: was he splitting from my mummy? Why was he in Serninsea on Christmas Eve?

"Adam. What do you know?"

"What I know is Roger Humphrey's father came and asked me to find his son. I've sent him a Christmas present of a returned deposit saying I know where he is but needs to be left alone."

"Oh good," said Allie.

"Yes, that's interesting, but about my father?"

"Nothing more than the property exchange issues. Oh and your father had occasional relations with Mrs. Youell."

"I did wonder."

"He was staying at the Titansea Grand," I said, as we looked across towards Ann and Labhaoise.

"Rubbish. Your father was staying at the farmhouse. Ann and Labhaoise found them loosely dressed."

Gathered with the host at Patricia's were folks still in the area: Adam, Ann, Labhaoise, Elizabeth, Yojana, Diana, Aardse, and Arthur, and the three families' children. All of them remarked on and stared at our gear being worn, especially with my arse-crack on show. I don't know why, but I tried to steer my direction so the children missed it.

Diana alone said to Allie and me, "Patricia said she'd ask Adam along, why we've ended up with him, his guardians and Yojana. Why Yojana?"

"She's been a client of his," I said.

Meanwhile, Ann confirmed they had negotiated in competition with my father for Mrs. Youell's farmhouse and farm, but he wasn't sure he would buy. They offered the land to him but he didn't seem interested.

Christmas dinner was a goose - what else? - with an alternative of a moist multiple nuts roast. There was jelly with ice cream, and Christmas cake, and television to watch - just about.

Because there were children present, there were all sorts of games to play. Pass the parcel, musical chairs, pin the tail on the donkey. I wore my 'Serninsea Cross' brooch on my leather - oh, how ironic.

Diana bought me a CD of Steve Hackett music. Voyage of the Acolyte, from 1975, was, she said, related to Tarot cards. Genesis folk were involved in it, with Sally Oldfield, a favourite of Diana.

I gave her Cec Cinder's The Nudist Idea, from 1998. It wasn't cheap, this: it's hardback at 678 pages, though sometimes it can cost more than four hundred pounds. Bever Wood had acquired some, I discovered, but had still cost me eighty quid. (I know: I'd spent that much on Diana and yet peanuts on Allie.)

I found for myself, Carnal Knowing: Female Nakedness and Religious Meaning in the Christian West, by Margaret R. Miles, from 1989.

Of the moving around and chatting, I noticed a foursome gathering of Adam, Allie, Ann and Labhaoise that became the latter three only. They actually went away from us into the conservatory.

All done, Adam said he'd move between his office accommodation and our church accommodation. Would I mind if Yojana visited the church?

"Absolutely not."

I asked Allie, as the two of us got into my SUV, "Did you know about Adam knocking around with Yojana."

"Not a thing."

"You usually do."

"I've talked with him recently and he didn't mention her."

"When did you do that?"

"Sunday."

"You didn't tell me."

"I just have."

"And what was that with Ann and Labhaoise and you?"

"It relates to our chat. He's been blabbing."

"Was any of it about me?"

"What it was about was... about my research."

"Here we go again."

"No, Linda, that's how it is. If I told you it would alter things. So you show me some slack. I did know Roger and Marie's father was looking for them. He didn't mention your father to me at all."

I drove off.

"Do you know your present gives me a breeze up my arse?"

Allie said, "I live at 135 Toulouse Road. I have a surprise. Come and see it."

"Oh. You do? I'll change route."

We got out at the terraced house. Mo McArden happened to be coming along with some nice looking woman in a headscarf.

He said, "Bloody hell, curate, are you going to a party here?"

"I'm not a curate any more."

"Well, how many bishops...?"

"Yeah. Stop sniggering, Allie. We were at a party, this is where Allie has a house. Look at her if you're looking at me."

"We are trying not to look at either of you," he said. "This is Adeela, my sister. That was a very odd Christmas service but better than Rhiannon does. See you around some time."

"Well, thank you. Good to see you Adeela. Come on dear," I said to Allie in front of them.

Allie and I went indoors.

"So lots of canvases," I said. "May I look at these?"

"Of course. But I have one for you."

It was a large acrylic painting, on a 100 by 120 cm canvas, and it was me, nude. Its origins were at Maurice Neptune's posing session that I did. My eyes watered at the incredibly competent painting. It was me and no one else, and I was left staring at it for a long time.

I took her by her shoulders, and gave her a long kiss on her mouth, and pulled her into me.

"Allie, it's wonderful. I think I want it in the vestry."

She took me to her bedroom there, and stripped me of my leather and removed her latex. There were four boots in a line. She is one good licker, and rasped me with her tongue like a dog. I knew what she wanted, so I managed to lose one finger, two, four and a whole large hand down her canal.

"Fucking waste me," she said.

This became very intense, and it was more than an hour later when we were back in the car with a wrapped painting. She wiffed a bit of sweat but I don't.

With the main kitchen closed and no one else about, we joined Adam and Yojana already sat in the seating and dining area, but we would use our own kitchen upstairs.

Adam said, "I had a word with Ann about it and she understands."

"Understands what?"

"About you and me not working, and about your true love here. Yojana and I have decided to get together and see how we get on - a loose, free relationship. Sorry I didn't mention it, Allie, but it was too early."

I said, "Good for you. You're not going to be available for Jenny, then?"

Yojana said, "We discussed it. We might look after her, as and when she comes out. We went to see her."

Adam asked, "That's a large bag, looks like a painting."

"Oh, both of you, look what Allie did. I want it in the vestry."

Adam said, "It does show your bare and clear vulva, never mind your tits; it might be more suited to your own bedroom."

"Back me up, Yojana," I said. "Vestry, not bedroom?"

"People won't understand it," she said.

"Upstairs then," I responded. "We'll either put it opposite, alongside the TV screen, or behind us."

"Behind us," said Allie. "I could do another for the vestry."

"So are there four of us only in this building?" I asked.

Adam said, "Might be two. Yojana and me can live at my place or her parents' when she's on duty early. I'll keep my room here for a while."

"I'm fine about it."

A Wet Bed (Christmas Night)

Lights were off downstairs, and I walked upstairs, Allie having gone up a while back. Arriving on the top floor, a naked thirty year old was in the study.

"What are you doing, my lovely?" I asked her.

"Reading this about Manning and Newman and these characters."

"Ah. Christine's reference back to some dogmatic romantics. She can't help it. Did I hear some knocking, earlier?"

"I put up the painting. It is above the bed. If it falls down, it'll go behind the headboard."

"That's reassuring. Well, I need a Tom Tit, girl, and give it ten minutes, which is what living together means."

About half an hour later on Christmas night, I was sat on top of the duvet cross-legged watching Allie go in and out of the ensuite bathroom. I'd already done everything, including my own shower. She was looking at me, drying herself with a towel.

I said, "Come on. I'll get under the duvet and I'll spoon around you. Come and receive a cuddle."

The duvet came back on and she got in on her left side in front of me on my left side, and I came to touch her around my body and put my arms around her.

"Now, you, you can still do your research, and I don't need to know stuff going on. Be assured that you have my love and my protection, always."

"What, like I'm a daughter?"

"Well, yes, in a way."

"There's something wrong, here," Allie said. "I don't need your protection, Linda; Rhiannon Fleetwood went down like a sack of potatoes. She undressed completely for combat and so did I. We faced up in the vicarage garden. She didn't last a second, and I told her that if she continued to be a nuisance I'd bury her in the graveyard there."

I started laughing. "Sorry. It's just, like, what would Colin Cromer have thought?"

"You are not my mawther, and I've told you that before. I was reading this relationship advice blog. Problem relationships are where one partner talks down to the other as if superior, and where there is directed criticism of the person rather than at the event or a situation. So, if you love me, you love me as an equal, and perhaps now you will get this duvet off and let me do what I want to do with you."

"Yes. Yes, Allie. You scare me, Allie."

"What worries me is I'm not satisfying you. Sometimes I think you need a knob and penetrating. These plastic gifts don't do it. And something happened. There was that moment when Mrs. Carter came in and then Roger came along."

"You'll make me laugh. What on earth has Mrs. Carter got to do with this?"

"She gave you a knowing look at the Christmas service."

"Well if she did I didn't know. This is ridiculous. You're talking about Gertrude Carter, upstanding local citizen. And Roger? What has Roger got to do with any of this?"

"Well, something happened, and also something's odd about your father coming here and Mrs. Youell and all that."

"Well, Ann and Labhaoise outbid him and they're selling off the farmland. Perhaps you should join Adam Magellan's investigations firm."

"Roger and Marie are full brother and sister, you know. His dad is called Humphries - i e s - and so are they, depending on how they also changed their name."

"Also?"

"Like me. Everybody's doing it."

"So are you going to satisfy me, Allie, or not?"

So the duvet went off, my legs came forward, at the sides with knees bent, and Allie set to work with her fingers and her tongue, and did a lot of looking.

She said, "I suppose I can still get behind your clitoris - the so-called G spot."

"Yes, Allie, and you're doing it well. You have much experience - with a woman, or women."

"Yes I do."

"Names, Allie. All the first names."

"Abigail and Beathag."

"I know about them. Oh. That's a nice feeling, Allie."

"I was taught well."

"What other names?"

"I fancied Andrea but nothing happened. She was busy. Now she's coming up here; she is married and has a public role."

"Andrea?"

"Lindsey. Plimpton is her married name."

"Sister of Alan? I know him."

"Yes, an ecclesiastical family. A bit like Christine's."

What recent names, Allie?"

"But I have a question for you."

"You're researching?"

"It's background: so background that it's in the dark."

"Go on."

"Did Ann or Ann and Labhaoise ever tell you or you and Jenny to have a go with Adam: sexually experiment and so on?"

"Where did you get that from? Nobody will ever tell you anything that."

"Hmm. People know when Ann and Labhaoise got out of teaching."

"You keep this out of any text. Adam kept his mouth shut, so did I, so did Jenny, Geoff knew little."

"Only that Ann doesn't just bankroll Adam, she also secured this place for you. Adam has no loyalty to you but Ann has some sort of felt responsibility."

"Stop. Stop this now!"

"It's why they were at the party, to speak to me after I spoke to Adam."

"What did Adam say?"

"It's what I asked Adam. He asked about my source. At the party they also said you're becoming my partner to shut me up."

"That's rubbish. I love you. What they did came under the 1956 Act."

"You know that, readily. It's all tru, of course."

"Stop it Allie, just stop it."

"There was something else. Ann tried you out. Ann and Labhaoise, quite likely over some sessions. They did, didn't they? That's what came under the 1956 Act."

"I was referring to Adam."

"Were you seventeen at the time?"

"Stop what you are doing. As you well know I was eighteen on the second of April."

"I need ask you no more."

"That answer was not a 'yes', madam. I'll want to see your script in your Ph.D: don't you start explaining stuff you do not know."

"I'll find a way not to put it. Ann was predatory and trying to sort herself out - Labhaoise was involved for a while in this. Labhaoise knew her own lesbianism, but Ann was more ambiguous. Ann abused Adam and then she abused you, meanwhile suggesting you make out with Jenny and see how you each responded to Adam and Geoff, also see how Adam responded to Geoff. Ann projected herself on to others. Did you give Ann reports?"

"Shit. Where did you get this from?"

"I added two and two."

"The number two wasn't available. It's more like two hundred. Where did you get two hundred from?"

"Come in Number Two Hundred," said Allie.

"You fucking cunt, coming here and investigating my life!"

"Fist me."

"Fist you? I'll split you open."

"Go on then!"

I put two fingers into her vagina, and more, and this was like an aeroplane take off. Soon I had speed, violently thrashing at her opening, and pressing on her stomach to get even more purchase. She became runny, and started to spray, so I curved my fingers, and yes got my thumb into her vagina as well with my large hand, and continued the violent pushing and pulling.

Allie was soon riving, and her eyes went up into her head as she shook all over. I wasn't going to stop. She was pouring liquid over my wrist on to the bedding, but I did not care. For once I had an advantage over her, and she was a gonner. She was having orgasm after orgasm - something I could not do - and I wanted to exhaust her. I started yelling and shouting to summons more energy to keep this going, forcing my thrashing fist deeper in, and the cry she made was weird as her head went red and her eyes became uncontrolled.

Her body was twisting and she ended up on her front, but I wasn't going to let her get away, and I tried to stab her arse with my spare hand. The fact was I was running out of energy, and couldn't keep this going. My heart was pounding and I was in need of oxygen circulation, and I was losing posture myself, that spare hand holding me up again but starting to fail. She was shaking violently, her head going purple, her body red and hot, sweat emerging everywhere, a river coming past my wrist.

Allie was bending forward and back and twisting, shaking, but finally I could do no more. My last ounce of energy was to remove my whole fist in one go, with a torrent of liquid following, and I flopped on to the bed completely knackered myself. She gave out one enormous groan and was shaking on, and as I lay I could tell she was trying to move away from me (or towards the bathroom) but subsequently fell off the bed into a heap on the floor.

"Goodness me," I said. "Everywhere is soaked."

I could hear nothing from Allie, so eventually I summonsed up the energy to crawl over the bed and look down at the naked heap on the floor.

I said to myself, lying on my front, looking down, "I think I've killed her. I wanted to marry her and I think I've gone and killed her."

After about twenty seconds she said, "No you haven't. That's the best I've had since Abigail."

"Since Abigail? Oh, so that's the measure of my achievement?"

"She had more energy than you."

"I'll get a machine to do it, tie you up, thrash you inside all day."

"It was still good, though. Can I come on there and spoon?"

"Yes but we need a dry area," I said, not realising her question there and then, and she crawled up and I spooned around her.

I think she appreciated it. Twenty minutes on we changed the bedding for a wash the next day.

Despite my easy capacity for falling in love, my emotions here demanded that I was more maternal. I had been damaged by Ann (she was right), by Keith, momentarily by Jonathan Eyre, and from the group, but I had also abused Adam and disturbed Jenny. As for Diana, she was problematic throughout. And for a moment I thought of daddy.

Regarding the near violent sex we'd just had, Allie insisted that it was our best yet. Finally she drank a lot of water in the bathroom, had a long audible piss, and came out and stood with a legs wide power stance and stared at me lying on the bed.

She suddenly said, "Let's marry. February I want or some time like that."

My head was all over the place. Daddy had been lying to me when I'd thought he'd always told the truth. I wanted to be mummy to Allie, and tell the truth.

Narrator: Allie Before the New Season (To Thursday 2nd January 2020)

At last I had Linda to myself. She had given me massive orgasms in some wonderful Christmas night sex.

Ever since I saw her at Margate, I had dreamed of this possibility of togetherness with her. To come here, to do research, was a chance I could not miss, and to find out about her on her home turf. I had to reassure her about the content of my research: the line of abuse, from Ann to Adam and to Linda was not the centre of my text. I doubted that Jenny even knew that Linda had been seduced by Ann and Labhaoise.

Meanwhile, this church centre was now ours alone, because on Friday 27th December Adam left Yojana at her parents' home and went to Reading to stay with his still wife Mary Ann and Yootha Ann! He went for a whole six nights. Linda thought this was a long time to spend with them, and wondered about Yojana's role.

We did go out to shop and to see Jenny World on 27th December, who seemed rather confused. Linda explained that Adam was spending nearly seven days with his wife. We did not mention Yojana. We also went out to various parks in the cool weather.

Only two of us rattled around in the centre. The food service went to social services and the local authority and some other volunteers because our students vanished.

I said to Linda on Saturday, "This is one fucking weirdo settlement."

"Settlement? Someone's had a settlement? Not a settlement from Ann?"

"It's geographical terminology for a town or village."

"Of course it is."

"Stop panicking. I've told you. My focus is on the church existing and developing, not backgrounds."

The problem with my Ph.D text was this: anyone outside wouldn't know the location of the church and the names were changed. Journalists could do a minimum of investigative effort to find out the location and connect it to the former scandal, but the real issue was the locals. Anyone in the location would know who was whom and gain information each on the other. So much that was private and secretive would be revealed.

The thought did pass my mind that Linda took me on as an item to shut me up and stop the research becoming a text, but she had not said this.

On Sunday Linda received a message that Adam would no longer use his room. He'd clear it out after Christmas. She showed me:

You might offer it to one or two students, conduct some interviews or similar. Leave it to you.

I escaped to do a little genealogical research, at Toulouse Road on one of my increasingly infrequent moments alone. I'd previously found the Shrimpton connection, after all, using the extensive interlocking Jenner-Rogers family tree with which my family were so familiar. What I was trying out was what I could learn about Linda's ancestry.

Go back far enough, increasing each stage to the power of two, and then go forward with often above the power of two, and connections can be found - as I had found with Akemi Tamuuz. There was, incredibly, very little connection from Norfolk to Foss, but there was Norfolk to the North East. I focussed upon Linda's biological grandmother Janet Anson (born 14th August 1875, died 30th September 1950) of West Stockwith to Gainasburgh; I needed more time but didn't have it because I was with Linda most of the time and she'd understood I'd gone off to tidy up and check everything was all right.

In the Bethel it was like we were masters of all we surveyed, and often we failed to dress.

On Monday 30th, in town, Rhiannon Fleetwood in clerical garb was coming along the pavement. She paused and decided to cross the road. Linda asked me, "What did you do to her?" Her question was rhetorical.

That day Roger Humphrey and his sister Marie Enfield called, and stripped, making four. Nevertheless Marie wanted private words with Linda. What had happened that day when Roger called, when Mrs. Carter was present?

Once they'd all gone, we were back to two again.

A caller on Tuesday 31st was Flòraidh MacLean, who was not bedded in as an Anglican down the road. Linda and I wore dressing gowns and bare (dirty) feet. Flòraidh gave me an opportunity to recall some Gaelic learnt, which I could see being slowly forgotten by me. It had been hard enough getting an ear for it and pronouncing it, never mind learning the words and the grammar. Now I lacked ongoing practice. Welsh or Cornish would have been easier. Those with archaeological interest often chose Anglo-Saxon or Middle English. Absent Kathryn and Kathleen had looked into early and middle English, briefly.

This Welsh aspect raised the question of when I might visit Linda's parents' farm. Linda did shake her head.

Sally Torrance and Paula Campbell called and so four were wearing nothing again. Linda discussed with them the possibility of a Gymnology Centre on site. Linda had received news of just such an intellectual discussion club at Bever Wood - headed by caretaker Jeremy and receptionist Lindy. Paula said how she appreciated Diana's guidance towards greater confidence in the acceptability of her body and displaying it in public. Sally would see her new boyfriend again.

Linda and I went beyond midnight into 2020 with Diana de Groot and family. Patricia and Arthur wanted a more intimate, homely, seeing in of the New Year. We drifted back about 2 am.

Linda said she wanted more from me to decorate the church centre, with perhaps one anonymous nude among abstracts and the like.

"I don't do abstracts, but I can do mystical scenes," I told her. "Abstracts are too difficult."

So for a few moments on the Wednesday away from Linda, rather than pursue the genealogy of Janet Anson, I started a painting, to see if an abstract would work. It would not.

Adam, Kathleen and Winnie were back on the 2nd January 2020. He did not want to speak about his time with Mary Ann to anyone, and as it wasn't a church matter I didn't try to press him. Asked if he'd see Yojana, he repeated, "We have a very loose relationship."

Peter and Kathryn also resumed residency down the road, where Adam had his second and increasingly preferred bedroom.

Elizabeth and Yojana Asthana, and then Christine again, resumed working on Systematic Measuring Services coming back to above the casino. The firm had pulled back on some of its expansionary intentions into South Wales since the scandal broke. This peculiar firm was connecting with Christine's work, for its managers, so that Serninsea was now only a 'rewards' location. ConnectSernin had been added to such firms associating with Christine. Christine told me of meeting a Higher Education student at Foss Upper Coast College, Adrian Laney, that ConnectSernin wanted to employ after his degree. The firm had paid him a small grant, a golden pre-hello.

Linda wanted separation from all this headed by Christine. Yet I knew I'd have to research it, and her motherly approach to me might clash with this requirement.

Also I learnt that Ann and Labhaoise had put up the farmland for sale. Why did Linda's father want it, but lost out from buying it? Linda had never said a word about this and my best strategy (as so often) was to keep quiet and wait.

Narrator: Linda Marie Enfield Calls (Monday 30th December)

Allie and I had been out, and Rhiannon Fleetwood passed us by going across the road and using the other pavement. When back, Marie Enfield called, and wanted to see me alone.

"You should know that Roger and I discuss everything. So what he keeps confidential he shares with me."

"That's a very healthy relationship situation," I said.

"So, to be blunt, the only time he inserts sperm into me is when his manhood gets covered in red. Do you know what I mean?"

"Yes."

"So he told me he'd penetrated this old lady and deposited sperm in her, like he does when giving a donation."

"I wouldn't say she was an 'old lady'. She's seventy-two."

"She has long flowing, going white, pubic hair."

"Yes. It was lovely to see close-up."

"Why did you ask him to do this?"

"I didn't expect it at all. She wanted to see a young man, to rekindle memories. The most I expected was she might have touched him. He was just to stand there. But she was definitely in for a penny, in for a pound. I was shocked, really, but it was important to rekindle all those memories, those desires. He did a very good job. I did tell him to go in deep, and he did have a very good technique. You must be fortunate."

"I am. He ought to have been paid, like he is when he donates sperm at the clinic."

"I agree. Tell me how much and I'll arrange it."

"Fifty."

"Something I need to ask you."

"Yes, our father has been visiting. Go on."

"Well, is it true. You're not half-brother and sister, but full."

"Has he visited you?"

"No."

"He will. Yes, we are fully brother and sister. We told you what we tell others. We started, to be blunt, fucking each other at home. And then we fell in love in that other way. So he and I are very, very solid. Adam hasn't sacked him. Are you appalled?"

"No."

"Our father will try to discover our accommodation, which he will, to drive us out of town."

"That's easy to sort out," I said. "We'll have a room here."

"Knowing that we have the same mother and father?"

"Yep. I'm not sitting in judgment."

"Oh. Not, 'Go and sin no more?'"

"Nope. So hold on where you are, and we'll get you here."

Narrator: Allie Shower Time (Friday 3rd January 2020)

Klärchen Sisse opened her front door, partly hiding behind it, nightie on and breasts visible underneath.

"It's me," I said.

"Come in."

Salome Lichtbau came downstairs, in a nightie only, followed by two dogs, a German shepherd and a golden labrador.

Klärchen said, in her moderated German accent, "Look, Dieter and Hendrik, it's Auntie Allie."

I went in and we'd use the downstairs shower room, as ever, which meant first going into Klärchen's grey floor tiles covered kitchen.

Here, Salome announced to me that she was moving in shortly and would become my neighbour. "We're not sure whether to have a civil partnership or get married," she said, "but we'd like to be respectable to the world."

"Sure," I replied.

"Look," said Klärchen. She had two new products to show me. One was rose fragrance shampoo. "This is for Dieter. It will leave him with a fresh fragrance. It's got essential oils and herbal extracts, no nasty chemicals and gentle on his flesh. Yes?"

"This isn't cheap," I said.

"Only the best," said Salome.

"And this is new for Hendrik," Klärchen continued, showing me plastic bottle number two. It was black pomegranate in a shampoo. "He gets a deep clean, fresh, plum-like yes and for his more sensitive skin. It is more gentle, I think, also herbal and some fruit too."

"And what about me?" I asked them.

"Auntie Allie wants a special treat," Klärchen said to Dieter coming close, wagging his tail.

Salome walked over and gave Klärchen a bottle, saying. "This has a lovely consistency for our friend, bubbly even, thick and luxurious: it's an aromatherapy douch gel excess, for the shower, called 'Adge', to make your skin soft and healthy."

"And what are you two using?" I asked.

Klärchen answered, "We are trying a Prunus Amygdalus Dulcis Gel Douche excess with..."

"Almond?" I asked.

"...Althaea Officinalis Root. 'Padgar' is its shortened name."

"I should have called myself Althea, not Alfia, as I told you before. I should have that, and you the first one. Only joking. And for my hair?" I asked.

"Yah. Salome, please, what do we have especially for our friend?"

"Haritaki fruit shampoo. It will make your hair have more volume still. We have, this time, picea abies and cedrus atlantica wood oils shampoo, called 'Pacaw'. Beautiful, we expect."

They were showing me hugely expensive shampoos and gels. They must have spent in a month, including for their excited dancing dogs, what either Linda or I spent in years on these products.

Nevertheless, all willing, we three women and two dogs headed for the shower room, in fact a wet room of a good size, a central shower hose from the ceiling and (effectively) a plughole in the centre. There was a two person bath to the side where water could spill over without consequence. It was the best shower room I'd seen other than the rabbi's house.

Thus I received my luxurious body wash and allocated shapoo. Their hands on my front and back was as nothing compared with the care and focus given to the once dancing dogs. I took over, including for my hair. I was busy as dog shampoos went into them. Klärchen and Salome also worked the Padgar into each other.

Out of the wet room there were two hair dryers for hair and bodies, including for the dogs. And when I was done and started to dress, Salome announced that the four of them wanted to be on their own.

The dogs became excited again, as it was time for me to go and return next door.

Narrator: Linda News that Needs a Meeting (Friday 3rd January 2020)

Our own people were in and out, including Bishop Elizabeth, so we were completely up and running by Friday 3rd January.

Mid-morning, after the post had come, I opened a letter just delivered, and it was from Jeremy Symes at Bever Wood.

Dear Bishop Linda,

Your recent Advent mission to Bever Wood Naturist Centre was very welcome in tone and direction: very undogmatic and affirming our naturism.

It gave rise to some thinking afterwards among the Managing Committee, of which Lindy and I are a part. We have decided to create a Chapel and Gymnology Centre here, a place where residents and visitors can contemplate and contribute intellectually to a spiritual understanding of being naturist. Perhaps you would consent to being a speaker for a programme of lectures. We should throughout consider the history, purpose and religious connections - problematic and positive - of naturism. We welcome new ideas along with reminding us of established and previously contested ideas.

Yours sincerely

The Rev. Jeremy Symes

Allie was away somewhere in the morning, perhaps to her house I thought. Once back her red hair was absolutely gleaming and shining, "Allie, look, he signs himself 'The Rev.' - I mean that's good he's keeping its use."

Still in the vestry I was watching Bishop Elizabeth going backwards and forwards across the seating area. She was not responding to my gestures to come and read the letter when Bishop Geoff alongside Bishop Luis contacted me via video link to my desktop computer.

"We have some news for the future," Geoff said. "Hello Bishop Linda and Deacon Alfia, from both of us."

"Go on."

"It's excellent news, yet via the sad death of Metropolitan Archbishop Nicholas Peterson of the Charismatic Orthodox Church. Luis has inherited the title. Their congregations are sadly no longer active but the Metropolitan did have a later life in which he still maintained a weekly Mass, some of them by himself in what became spiritualist meeting places."

"Sad? Excellent?" I asked. "Liz! Come here! Oh she's gone again."

Luis spoke. "Yes, because we have decided to merge the two Churches and I will be Metropolitan Archbishop Luis Mar Flacillus. We are going to call this Church, from both names, the Old Charismatic Orthodox Ecclesia instead of the Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia, also making use of the Old name."

I said, "We, the bishops, have not decided this."

Geoff said, "It's an opportunity to make this change."

Luis added, "I'd have thought you'd have rejoiced, Bishop Linda."

"As I thought I'd made it plain, I don't like the use of 'Old' or 'Orthodox', and we have charismatics setting up here and becoming better known. We are none of these. We're not Old but Liberal, we're not Orthodox but Catholic, and we are not Charismatic in any institutional sense."

"We are Liberal or Old Catholicism."

So I said, "I have no objection to you adding titles, Luis, but I want the simple, descriptive, ecclesiastical name. I am going to consult the clergy at this end, and I will make clear my opposition and hopefully theirs."

"Then we call a Council," said Bishop Luis. "We need fifty per cent or more of bishops to call one. We have two here. Bishop Christine might well support having a Council and indicate how the Confraternity can offer guidance. We then need one more bishop."

I said, "Me then. I support having a Council to then decide against."

"Through discernment and prayer with the purpose of reaching a consensus," said Luis.

"Absolutely," said Geoff alongside him.

"By the way," I said, "we had a good naturist mission with a lecture, sermon, contacts and even a magic show. From it I have other news, briefly, just received, that as a result of our mission Jeremy Symes is considering having a Gymnology Centre, a kind of chapel and meeting space to consider theological subjects. We have had gymnology meetings here."

"What is gymnologising?" asked Bishop Geoff Virgo.

"Naked debating," I said. "Where all the topics are discussed naked. We've tried the same here in Serninsea."

Bishop Luis said, "I want to say, when it comes to the body and sexuality, and your related events, I want us to consider the earlier Karl Rahner and even Karol Wojtyła. You do know who he was?"

"If you are referring to above the casino then it is nothing to do with me. And I would have thought we should not refer to Pope John Paul the Second for guidance, Bishop Luis. Liz! Come here!"

She came in.

"I'm going out," she said.

"Where are you going, Liz?"

"Jenny in hospital. See if she is recovering her mind. Your red hair is so shiny, Allie."

"Bishop Luis and Geoff are on screen. They want to call a Council on a potential name change. So do I. Do you agree?"

"Yep. Fine by me."

"They're not sure about above the casino. Bishop Luis Callas wants us to consider the earlier Karl Rahner and even Karol Wojtyla."

"Oh?" said Elizabeth.

Luis said, "The body is the material expression of the inner person, but without any duality. That's because, according to the earlier Rahner, the whole person is represented in every action of a part of the body. Each part used symbolises the whole, ontologically. So we can see how the use of sexual parts symbolises the whole, and clearly on the earlier Rahner's account, the sexual difference between penis and vagina must have symbolic power for sexual difference and complementarity."

"Let's discuss this and its relevance at the Council," I said. "You can introduce it to Christine and Elizabeth. As an intersex woman, I have grave doubts on the productivity of this line of thought."

Geoff said, "We will hold the Council here in Bristol. Bishop Elizabeth: Archbishop Luis has inherited the title from Nicholas Peterson of the Charismatic Orthodox Church. In merging the two Churches and Luis becoming Metropolitan Archbishop Luis Mar Flacillus, we need a name change from Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia to Old Charismatic Orthodox Ecclesia."

"I'm neutral," said Liz. "Arguments both ways."

"I prefer simplicity," I said. "And a recognisable name: called this, means this."

"On balance I agree with Linda," Elizabeth said. "But I am open to persuasion."

Luis asked, "What is all this 'above the casino'?"

Elizabeth replied, "It's a combination of SMS management perks and leisure, with ConnectSernin Limited and a few others joining in, combined with sacrificial theology that approves the body and is sexually positive. The company that pays us is not them or ConnectSernin but a front business called Felixtowe Container Connection."

He wished Elizabeth the best (not me!) and the call ended with Elizabeth agreeing with all that we should have our Council as soon as possible - next week. Liz then left to see Jenny; and I said to Allie about going to Bristol. "You could see your professor at Glastonbury."

"Linda. Christine has suggested I see an addiction unit she knows. She has a lot of women going there, in the sex industry, to clean them out if possible. It includes alcoholics. I'm not an alcoholic, but I am close. I made a commitment to you and at the swimming pool, but it is difficult. Your warmth and our relationship is helping."

"Christine is a good egg," I said. "She's made a really useful and practical suggestion. We need her available for this Council. This denominational name really matters to me."

Narrator: Allie Health Check-Up (Monday 6th January)

In the morning, courtesy of Christine's private health arrangements, I went for a sexual health check at the clinic. The clinic is run by a social enterprise, and does mainly National Health Service work, but there is a private input.

I attended and sat in a first waiting area, and I recognised Roger Humphrey. He came and sat by me.

"I suppose," I said, "I should not ask why you are here."

"Not a secret, well not from you. It's my first sperm donation of the new year."

"So does that, you know, involve a room and mucky magazines - as my grandfather used to call them?"

"Video screen."

"Stimulation, then," I said. "Couldn't your partner come?"

"Marie could come, I suppose. But it might add a bit of her liquid too!"

"She could wank you, like your boss."

"She doesn't wank Mr. Magellan."

"I didn't mean that."

"He does not wank me."

"I only meant his habit."

"So I've learnt about him. He does it on his own. No, I make love with Marie. And you?"

"I make love with Linda. I'm curious. You turned up just before Christmas when Mrs. Carter was visiting. Was there a connection?"

"I can't talk about that."

"So there was a connection."

"I, em, caught the reason why Mrs. Carter wanted to see Linda, so I was told in no uncertain terms to keep it to myself."

"Why were you there?"

"You're a bit nosey, aren't you? Well, given what I knew, I could do some extra administration."

"Can't be why you were asked over."

"Correct. I did say 'extra'. Is your interview over? I mean, why are you here?"

"I'm here for a check up: gynaecology and all that. I just want to be on the safe side of events. Legs open and other groping tells them everything they and I want to know."

"Daft, isn't it, looking at a video, when you're opening your legs for real in another room," he said.

Someone with a female voice called out, "Alfia Shrimpton, can you move to the waiting area down that corridor."

I went down the corridor. "Excuse me!" I said, to a white-coated man leaving a room.

"Doctor Holden Obasie at your service, madam."

"My friend I've just met is here to donate sperm, for which he gets artificial media stimulation. If he came in with me - and I am allowed to have a person come in with me - couldn't he do his donation in the same room, stimulated for real?"

"If you nominate him, he can attend with you, but I'm not sure about the rest. I'll go and ask colleagues."

There was a gap while I sat and held me hard.

Doctor Obasie approached with Roger himself. "So long as Roger here makes the donation, it does not matter to us where. The only stipulation is a pure offering into the provided labelled plastic receptacle. Bring it round to the usual desk," he said. "Doctor Feller is just informing the nurse."

We both stood by an open door.

"Thank you Honor," said a nurse as Doctor Feller was leaving. "Ah, enter. My name is Nurse Ophelia Sandwich and I shall carry out the examination."

I followed her to this desk where we both sat facing each other. Roger became a distance from me standing across the room.

Nurse Sandwich said, "First I have questions. Do you have regular sexual intercourse? Is he all right hearing this?"

"Roger's fine by me. Yes, I have had. I prefer sex with women - hand penetration from women."

"Really. Do you have or have you ever had anal intercourse?"

"Yes, but not often. Usually a lot at once."

"When is your period due?"

"It's slightly overdue, Nurse Sandwich."

"Call me Ophelia, Allie. Will you be sensitive from a breasts examination?"

"I'll be fine enough."

"How are your bowels? Will you want an enema today?"

"Roger, would you get off on an enema?"

"I'd stay soft... Oh, you're having the enema."

"Roger! A spray out of my arse might excite you."

The nurse said, "You evacuate the water and any contents in the toilet there. You're not spraying it across the room for effect. How are your bowels?"

"They're fine, Nurse Ophelia. I'll skip the enema then."

"Sleeping all right?"

"Yes, more or less. I piss a few times in the night."

"First thing then is to remove your blouse and we'll get up and begin. And you are all right with him here."

"The point is to have him here. He is here to donate sperm into that plastic pot he's carrying."

"I know that. Perhaps he'll drop his underpants and trousers and start masturbating."

"She's right, Roger; the stimulation starts now. Get 'em off!"

So my breasts were exposed, and I continued to undress.

Another no-bra wearer. Is this undressing to stimulate him?" the nurse asked. "It's unnecessary at this stage."

"Yes."

Roger now began pushing and pulling his jolly good length of todger and found a moulded seat for his bare bottom.

"Has Linda seen that?" I asked him, with a smile.

"That's for me to know and you to wonder," he replied.

"Not, er, Mrs. Carter?"

"Allie! Why on earth would Mrs. Carter of all people ever see my knob? Give it a rest."

The sphygmomanometer was ready, as I sat down on the padded examining bench and the cuff was put around my arm held up at the same level as my heart.

Roger said, "Having your blood pressure taken isn't exactly very stimulating. Your body is."

Nurse Ophelia said, "I'll test her breasts next; this should help you. So, Mr. Humphrey, you shave off your pubic hair."

"Partner prefers it well down. You removed yours, Allie."

The nurse said, "It does serve a function and it seems a shame to shave off natural red hair."

So the sphygmomanometer used, I stood up, with each arm put behind my head so that the nurse could press around and detect for lumps and the like. Roger was watching and playing with himself to growing effect.

Now she had a metal contraption to put in my mouth, holding it open.

Roger said, "That could be used for oral sex."

I was unable to reply. The nurse used it to insert a wood spatula and examine my throat. I had to cough and say "ah" a few times. So with the BDSM toy (my thought) removed she rubbed her fingers around my neck.

I stood to have a stethoscope placed under each breast and on my back. I looked at Roger, and boy was that inviting.

Now Nurse Ophelia asked that I lay on the padded bench. She wanted to examine my feet. This made me laugh because the metal piece like for cutting pastry was ticklish. I bent my toes and rotated my foot, each time.

Nurse Ophelia prodded and kneaded by torso, but she looked at the pubic area.

"You see, it's a little blotchy from shaving and the hair is only going to come back. I'm a brunette with a thick bush that protects me from skin irritation, reduces sweat, blocks bacteria and sexual, urinary and yeast infections, and it helps regulate body temperature."

"Thank you," I said.

"Oh, and good, thick, curly pubic hair contains pheromones to attract a man." She pressed about the pubic area, and I looked to the side at Roger who seemed to be pacing himself.

I said, "Roger, bring your seat over and have a direct view."

So he moved his seat so that he could see my crotch more directly.

The nurse extended her body survey by pouring little drops of liquid at strategic places for a hand-held doppler test, so that we could all listen to my pulse. She asked me to get off and do some squats, to then get back and hear the increased rate. Roger seemed to increase his rate too, given that my breasts had bobbed up and down and my vagina opened a little when going down.

Being naked was a good opportunity to get on the combined weight and height device. In metric I was 170 cm tall or 5 foot 7 inches and 63.5 kg. Anyone who knows their tables knows that that is ten stone. I had a body mass index of 20.7 or 21.9, because she got in a muddle with calculating it. It was well within the healthy range, said Nurse Ophelia.

Next, while stood, came the bending of my arms and legs. She asked, "Are you actually girlfriend and boyfriend?"

"No," he said. "I mentioned my partner Marie Enfield. Allie is a friend."

It was time to go back on the bench, and lean on my left side. Nurse Ophelia said, "This should excite him." I had a thermometer placed in my mouth, one in my vagina and one in my anus.

A minute later she looked at the mouth one, then the vaginal one and then the anal one. It was 36 degrees in my mouth and above 37 degrees in my anus and rising to 38 in my vagina.

Yes it did excite him, as there was no need to insert a thermometer into my vagina at all. (I knew that much.)

Also to excite him, she examined my outer labia, which meant he came closer and bent down to get a good view. Ophelia asked, "Do you know the parts of the vulva, Roger?"

"Think so. That's her outer labia, those parting now are her inner labia, and that above coming out is her clitoris."

"The clitoris is a much larger structure than just what is revealing itself now. Stimulate around it as much as on it," she added.

"What, now?" he asked.

"Not now. When you two get together."

"We don't get together," he said. "I thought that was obvious."

"Well, what are you doing here then?"

I said, puzzled at this woman's inability to get it, "I invited him as this is better than some video screen for donating. During Advent we did a naturist mission together."

"We did wear the uniform," he joked.

"What uniform?" she asked.

"Nothing! Allie, my partner, me, everyone: we were all naked throughout."

Nurse Ophelia pulled my labia wide apart. "Where does she pee from Roger?"

"That hole below the clitoris, above the vaginal opening."

"Urethra," said the nurse.

"My what?" asked Roger.

"Roger!" I said.

"Oh, yes, sorry, your urethra. I've seen Marie - my partne, see - produce a really defined curve of piss."

"It's a parabola: $y = -x^2$," I said, "starting at about $y = -10$."

The nurse asked, "You do the mathematics of expelling urine?"

"No, but I paint and draw curves from time to time."

"Why minus?" asked Roger.

"Because it is an inverted curve with zero at the top," I informed him. "I learnt this from my folkways tutor, although it was definitely off-topic."

With new gloves put on the nurse said, "So it's the business end now," and inserted two fingers into my vagina to feel around inside, sometimes forming a positive parabola and sometimes a straight line. Then, once I'd obeyed the instruction to face away and get on my knees, a finger went inside my anus. I could hear Roger at this point adding force to his effort.

"I detect nothing," she said, removing the gloves and disposing of them. "One more thing here, now," she continued. "I know: your friend Roger can do it. He'll measure the length of your vagina."

So Roger took what was basically a passive vibrator with a measuring ruler on it and he slowly inserted it into my vagina, thus taking a rest from his exercise.

"What does it say, Roger?" she asked.

"Thirteen centimetres."

"Thirteen centimetres is a good size for any penis," said the nurse.

I asked why I would want to insert a penis in my vagina.

"Your partner does?"

"She has a vagina. Five centimetres."

"Five?" asked the nurse. "Is that all?"

"Yes."

"That's a pouch! Oh. Oh dear. I think I know who this is. I haven't met... her yet, 'cause I'm more on the private side. Male genes."

"I'm told she's bigger than she was."

Then the nurse said, "It also explains the naturist mission."

"How does it explain the naturist mission?" I asked. "You mean she wants to show everyone her body shape?"

"No, in knowing who it is."

Roger said, "Her intersex is a public statement now."

"Well, we are not here to discuss someone else. I need a urine sample next - you, not me," she declared.

The nurse gave me a labelled plastic container and lid, and pointed to the adjacent toilet. Instead I handed the container to Roger, to hold it as well, and follow me, and above the tiles just into the toilet I peed into it (only) to give him some more eye candy. Just to help him, and out of the nurse's sight, I pulled on his todger and gave him a kiss to his left cheek.

"On to the gynaecological chair then," she said, as I handed over the contained amber coloured liquid. I gave Roger another smile as I hopped up on to this thing, with viewing opera glasses of a sort on a pivot to the side, and Roger was given the honour of adjusting the leg supports so that my legs were secured on them and my vulva was on full outer display.

With new gloves worn by the nurse, a speculum was greased and inserted, and the stereoscopic viewer of sorts with a light was rotated to look down the speculum.

"Want to look?" Nurse Ophelia asked Roger. He nodded and took a view down the viewer, pulling at himself more as he did. Once he'd finished looking, they were removed to the side.

"Is it supposed to be red in there?" he asked.

The nurse looked and subsequently took a swab at the cervix, and blood was on it. She dropped it into a labelled plastic container, and then she took another swab on the side wall for the mucus, and it was dropped into another labelled plastic container.

"It's just starting," said the nurse. "We'll do tests on these: results in a week." The nurse moved away to write on the labels. Roger was left looking directly at me and wanking himself rather hard now.

Thus Roger positioned his own container, and wanked his sperm into it, and put the lid on.

The nurse asked me, "Do you want an enema for any reason?"

"No. I've got one in Rhiannon."

"What?"

"Nothing. A joke."

"She isn't that clergywoman is she? Someone attacked her in the crotch, recently. Can you believe it, an attack like that on a clergywoman? Well, I would recommend an enema."

"No thank you. Roger, they'll be wanting that very soon," I advised. "Don't forget to put your underpants and trousers back on."

Nurse Ophelia said, "We are done. Do you want a tampon?"

"Yes please."

The nurse put it in as Roger was getting dressed. He said he would go directly to deliver his product.

Thus I got dressed, and met him at the entrance and exit waiting area, from where we walked to the bethel and he went on to Magellan's Investigations Agency.

What Roger did not know was that this get together had allowed a familiarity between us so that there were more options than Jonnie if I wanted to become pregnant. I was thirty years old, after all.

Keeping so much to myself, Linda was feeling happy. The uncontested divorce was through. So she and I went to the reopened local register office to state that we intended to get married!

Chapter 27 Council and Glastonbury

Narrator: Linda The Journey (Tuesday 7th January)

On Monday while she was elsewhere I sent an email to Allie's professor for me to pay a visit to him in Glastonbury as I would be in the area on Thursday. I thought it best not to say why.

On Tuesday he messaged me stating that there was a conflict of interest with Allie as his student. So I replied that I had pastoral concerns that I'd only discuss there but he could ask Allie if I should see him.

Allie came to me and said she and I could see her professor. I wasn't sure if she meant separately or together. I thought it best to leave such options unexamined.

Allie was in her trademark leathers, and packed some varied gear for the days away. She wanted extra hand and bath towels; I also had changes of clothing, but packed my cassock and full ecclesiastical gear.

She said to me, ready to leave the bedroom, "By the way, I've just started my period and it looks to be a heavy one."

I said, "I noticed the dangling string, this morning. Where did you go yesterday?"

"I just got a health check in as it started. Hey, Roger Humphrey was there donating sperm."

"Huh, in a weird world you could have given him a thrill," I said.

"I'm not so sure even Serninsea is as weird as that, Linda."

"You're such a slag," I said to her. "Anyway, no massage this week."

Meanwhile, as we were getting ready, we had a visit from the Reverend Georgie Smith, she with shortish to her neck hair and like the older Sophy in The Camomile Lawn, who asked to look around the downstairs of the building. She'd come to the Christmas Day service with her three congregants but that was all. She wanted a venue to give a lecture and pointed out that she didn't want to use her own dim and fabric-challenged UPCC chapel.

"It needs so much money spending on it, and there is no money. When I came here in 1982 as a twenty-six year old it had a decent congregation but now there are three of those left."

The occasion would bring along various ministers from all around, as she would include some announcements. So of course I said yes and settled for a date of just under a month.

"We're very different traditions," she said, hearing about our imminent journey, "and I will make that contrast as well. A naturist mission too - sounds like fun - but that also helps me think about so-called 'natural religion' that my tradition kind of rejects."

I said I welcomed some pluralism and difference, to hear a different perspective. It helped to give shape to our own mission and purpose. "The Bishops' Council I'll attend might contribute to clarity," I suggested in a rather forlorn hope. "I'm doing some reading on the Philokalia to have something to contrast their resource using."

"Never heard of it."

"Eastern Orthodoxy, 4th to 15th centuries: contemplative, ascetical, purifying the intellect through awareness; my interest is about the body, being natural under God. Very large collection, came to be known about in English in the 1980s and 1990s."

Adam drove Allie and me to his workplace, and Peter Marshall was already in place at the reception there. "What do you really think of Bishops Geoff and Luis?" I asked Peter. "Their stances?"

"Horrible," Peter said. "They're oddballs. But then I chat to Unitarians and other oddballs. I am completely against the name change. So are Kathleen and Winnie."

"Yes, well, I think their ideas are unacceptable," I said.

Peter said, "Which means what then?"

"Well, I'm considering how to get more simplicity and less hierarchy. We are not changing the name: we must emphasise inclusivity, and, for that matter, I don't want a Metropolitan Archbishop, although it won't have much effect on us. But I don't really care about what he calls himself."

"Sedition in the ranks," said Adam.

Peter said, "You won't get more simplicity in this ecclesiastical outfit: they are determined to go up the candle. Christine can draw on Bill and Pauline for support, and she is likely to support Geoff and Luis going up it."

"Giving them shoves up the rear," I said.

Allie would be the only deacon present at the Council, and there for research reasons only. I bade farewell to them for Allie and I to walk, expecting Christine's helicopter to land in Titansea in some fifteen minutes.

We walked and waited outside the Blue Diamond Club - giving me a shiver. Allie pointed up to the sky and then I heard the rotor blades of an approaching helicopter. It descended to a nearby landing area. Elizabeth emerged from the club that she managed, and Allie and I joined her in approaching the helicopter. Leon Agnew was alone; he told the three of us that Christine, Bill and Pauline had been in Bristol for the previous night. (So she was getting her viewpoint in first.)

As we sped through the air, we learnt that the M42 motorway route was blocked up. After an accident, three lanes had to move into the hard shoulder. Good job there was a hard shoulder, as so many had been disappearing in the cheaper and dangerous move to add a lane in these misnamed smart motorways. Outside Bristol, the helicopter had a place to land a short walk to the Miriam Woodland Hotel.

Elizabeth had her room and Allie and I had ours. I laid on the bed, clothes off. Allie suggested that we shared a shower. I agreed and some blood washed over our feet. After we dried, and I watched as she inserted a tampon, I looked at my gear. I said that next day I would wear my cassock, neglected since Anglican days.

Sharing the bed, I said to her, "This Council we are having: I am going to be outvoted. As you know, I have the rights to the church given to me by Adam, and if we split from the LAE I might have to go truly independent. But I suspect Adam expects me to keep Christine in the building one way or another."

"What about that Margaret Lindbeck and the group she joined?" asked Allie.

"What a good idea!" I said. "Yes. I could get in touch with her."

"Oh no," she said. "I've affected the research; I've influenced you."

"Don't worry. Say I thought of it. And you are a deacon. Secrets, secrets, Allie."

"One thing that might be a secret but I don't think is..." said Allie.

"Go on."

"Kathryn Wickenby is pregnant."

Allie then farted.

"Allie!"

"Must be nerves. Kathryn is pregnant."

"Well, you're not pregnant."

"No, I don't want to influence your decisions."

"You know, I thought she looked a bit broader than her sister. She didn't tell me."

"What you didn't notice was, when I threw up once for being drunk on too much Thedde, she threw up at the same time for being pregnant. In Serninsea, people do keep things to themselves," said Allie. "You don't tell the whole truth, and neither do they."

"And neither do you, dear Allie. And what about your role in this Council of Bishops from tomorrow?" "I'll try to stay silent, or come up with neutral words."

"Well, the Reverend Deacon Allie, you will wear a clerical collar. I brought a spare. I shall wear my cassock. You wear a blouse and put it under the collar. No leathers then. And stop farting!"

"I anticipated this. I've got other clobber."

"The church is paying the taxi fare to Geoff and Luis' home, by the way. Should be interesting to see how the hierarchy lives. Have you farted again?"

"Silent one. You are part of the hierarchy, along with Christine, Bill..."

"How the other half of the hierarchy lives. Now, if you don't mind, before we search out food, and see Liz at all, I'd like my girl to have a cuddle from me."

"And to you."

"Of course. It would help if you didn't pass your bodily aromas into the room."

Council of the LAE Begins (Wednesday 8th January)

This was another large house. How do these clerics afford it? They had a double garage as well, separate from the house, and from the outside too it was made to look like a small chapel with a cross on the apex of the roof and two black arches as if windows painted on the garage door.

Soon after we had gathered, and greeted one another, Liz and I put on the full gear over our cassocks, and Allie put on a clerical collar with her blouse and trousers.

We had a Mass. In attendance were Bishops Geoff, Luis, Elizabeth, Christine, Bill, Pauline and me. Allie was listening carefully. It was very formal and very Liberal Catholic in liturgy. Bishop Geoff presided and began by saying, "We celebrate Mass before our Council in the hope of receiving the guidance of the Holy Spirit."

The homily was given by Bishop Christine, on Church order and its selective sources. Her argument was the consistency of Church Order and "reflective hierarchy" from the very beginning, but included the place of Mary Magdalene, some of those little mentioned other women (including the phenomenon of 'consecrated virgins'), and the early Church.

Allie received communion but did not take part as clergy.

Back in the house we gathered at a round table. Bishop Geoff led us in prayer: "We pray to God the Father, God the Son and God the Holy Spirit, our dedication and worship at the beginning of the Business Meeting of this important Council of the Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia. Amen."

Allie stalled everyone by asking, "Excuse me. I don't normally, but it would help me if I took notes. Is that all right?"

"Bishop Geoff said, "Yes indeed. Bishop Christine will take and produce the formal minutes."

"Mine will have to remain confidential," said Allie. "Thank you."

We had no apologies for non-attendance.

1) Formal release of Mar Akelda, Bishop Margaret Lindbeck.

2) Principatus Theocratic Confraternitati admissis in Ecclesia Apostolica Liberali advice regarding Sexuality and the Body.

3a) Inheritance of the title and elevation of Mar Flacillus, Bishop Luis Mariano Callas, to His Grace the Metropolitan Archbishop of the Charismatic Orthodox Church after the sad death of His Grace the Metropolitan Archbishop Nicholas Peterson.

3b) Merger of the Charismatic Orthodox Church and the Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia.

4a) Name change of the merged Church to the Old Charismatic Orthodox Ecclesia.

4b) Name change of the Principatus Theocratic Confraternitati admissis in Ecclesia Apostolica Liberali to the Principatus Theocratic Confraternitati admissis in Ecclesia Vetus Charismatic Orthodoxa.

4c) A statement of essential principles of the Old Charismatic Orthodox Ecclesia (the merged Church).

The Council was chaired by Mar Arcturus-Virginis, Bishop Geoffrey Virgo. Bishop Geoff said, "Whilst the first item is relatively quick, and the third item is formal, the second and fourth items are going to involve meaningful discussion.

I raised an immediate objection: "This agenda assumes decisions will be made in the affirmative regarding the name change. This is presumptive."

Christine said, "The agenda does not impose an outcome; it simply suggests the affirmative road map but what matters is what is resolved. In any case, the advice regarding sex and the body could have come from an assumed merged Confraternity but it comes instead from the one we have now."

Then I asked about non-circulation of the agenda.

Christine - indeed acting as Secretary - responded, "This is an Extraordinary Council responding to rapid events. Meeting quickly was your wish, Bishop Linda. The process here is that we are asked if we dissent, and if we do we then discuss further, and only when dissent is removed or declared a minority do we accept the position. These are not to be motions but positions of the Church. Also this impacts on the Principatus Theocratic Confraternitati admissis in Ecclesia Apostolica Liberali - its guidance, the proposed name change and then maintenance of its orderly principles - the use of Vetus Charismatic Orthodoxa instead of Apostolica Liberali."

I then said, "I thought we had already accepted Margaret Lindbeck had gone." Christine again: "Yes, without the Council, we had made that decision."

"So as this is Council," said Bishop Geoff, "we formally release Bishop Margaret. Luis."

Luis said, "I regret that she has joined a definitively non-apostolic group, but it does not negate her orders. We can only release her and send a note to wish her well."

Geoff asked, "Does anyone dissent? No? So we move on, unless Linda has any more observations."

My hand gesture was to tell them to get on with it.

Council: Advice

"Now," said the same Chair, Mar Arcturus-Virginis, Bishop Geoffrey Virgo, "we come on to something specific to Serninsea and inherited from, well, bishops who set up the National Church Confraternity as its Vanguard, one of whom was incardinated to us, and another involved then as a deacon of that Church."

I came in on this: "I wasn't involved; I was being pressurised against my will to join in and I investigated them."

"I was referring to Bishop Elizabeth, and Bishop Christine was then a deacon."

"Oh, sorry. Of course."

"Yes, well, that is true about your different involvement, although you are on record as rejecting in the same way much Augustinian theology, Bishop Linda. So by way of introduction I would ask how our experiences and theological outlook shape matters relating to our bodies: as in our gender, sexuality, ethnicity, appearance, age and general health. In this Council we will explore these interactions as a basis for guidance from our own Confraternity. Clearly this is about God, the Ecclesia, and our bodies in their substantive and physical senses. It is not just about bodies biological but bodies cultural, too: the economic, social and historical; and let's not forget that our bodies are part of the wider environment in its dynamic. Luis, please."

Christine said, instead, "If I may. First of all, it's not about our experiences, but whether Augustinian sin theology is reflective of the divine will. Secondly, it's not just Serninsea, but Serninsea is where there is an economic imperative of a religio-secular gathering that brings economic boost to hotels and guest houses, keeps sex workers better employed as hosts, and perhaps keeps a firm involved in Serninsea after pulling out. Otherwise this gathering can move to Casnewydd, because SMS is looking there again after a likely merger failed."

I said, "I thought Wales was off its agenda."

"No, and we could lose our setting of reward and restoration."

I said, "An orgy is an orgy is an orgy."

Christine responded: "That's not what happened at the hotel and you know it. I was in the process of taking it from Bishop John Barman and I ran it differently. You were there. You helped me."

"But you are going back above the casino," I said. "It won't be like lots of hotel rooms and hosts."

Christine retorted: "The body Eucharist we conducted was subtle and restrained, and said 'Go away and do likewise personally.' Yes?"

"This is unusual," Bishop Luis said. "I want to say, when it comes to the body and sexuality, and events around these, that I want us to consider the earlier Karl Rahner and even Karol Wojtyla."

"And the later Rahner modified his stance," I said. "That's because the plumbing argument is so limited because sexual expression is not dependent on plumbing."

"Plumbing?" asked Bill. "I do a bit of plumbing."

"Electricals, then," said Pauline. "Male plugs and female sockets."

"I can wire a plug as well," he said.

Luis continued, "But I am persuaded that there is a natural theology of sexual complementarity - survival and protection of the whole, that obviously involves reproduction."

I said, "I'd rather we drew upon the Philokalia, a body of mediaeval period works, mainly..."

"We know of this," said Bishop Luis.

"If one considers the interpretation of Alexander Schmemmann, in his Journals: we start with the body, for communication, knowledge and communion. We remove self-interest, to free the body from devouring or repulsing, via the awareness of contemplation and ascetic practice assisted by grace through the Holy Spirit. This is much more comprehensive positively about the body. It involves eros, a longing for the Logos through to the Father. This contradicts what are orgies above the casino, for matters of sexuality must be directly pastoral and body-affirming."

Luis interjected: "What you say does not contradict Karl Rahner and Karol Wojtyla, and I detect a oneupmanship here that is rather against its own intention."

Before I could reply Elizabeth said, "Orgies, as Linda calls them, are precisely not for reproduction but for non-possessive sexual enrichment in the broadest sense."

Christine said again, "It is not about experience. Grace, yes."

Elizabeth retorted, "Don't be so dogmatic. Enrichment is the same thing as divinely given: as the one time Bishop of Woolwich, John A. T. Robinson often said: view it from the other end."

"She does when it comes to doing it," I snorted.

Luis went on, "So, fellow bishops, of course the body is central to the economy of salvation. Yes, there are Christian practices that initially overlap with the Buddhist, as in the Philokalia."

Elizabeth said, "The spirit we are manifesting or incarnating above the casino is the spirit of barrier-breaking, of liberating, of breaking down constraints. I maintain, with Bishop Christine, that the orgasm is a distinctive route to the divine. Bishops Bill and Pauline, you practise this together in your relationship!"

"We do," said Pauline. "We think of the mystic William Blake! Blake said 'yes' to sexuality in 'gratified desire' and attacked repression. Gratified desire gives a vision that is the discovery of the infinite. Blake promoted the emanation - the feminine element - where sex is interacting with gender in a complex interrelated way to avoid destructive patriarchy. But then Blake warns that sexuality is a tender trap rather than a force of liberation and then sees the female principle as subordinate to the male. Well, we don't agree with his contradictory reservations - of course."

Luis said, "I think we should get away from the subjectivity of the body in the Enlightenment, and Romanticism, and keep to Rahner, Wojtyla and indeed the Philokalia from the East."

"No," Elizabeth said, "We have an expression of love in the widest sense: love for partner, love for neighbour - and we ask, 'Who is your neighbour?' - and sexual expression for love of all that gives the insight into divine love."

"But love as deep and, in the end, reproductive," Luis responded.

"Hang on," I said. "You are a gay man and clearly love is not 'in the end reproductive'. Same surely for you, Geoff."

Luis said, "It is, when part of society."

"Well," I said, "some societies, indeed all societies, have multiple parenting. Some formalise it, and some deny it - whereas it is a reality. Some children in a household have their two parents present, some in the same household have one of their parents present and there are a number of other parents."

"Yes, it is very sad," said Geoff.

"I'd no idea you thought this way," I said.

Elizabeth, who wasn't sitting on the fence any more, rather agreed, "I am surprised. My divine sexual pleasure with Bishop Terry Barman, Bishop Jonathan Eyre, and indeed with a number of people, never had reproduction as a part of it."

Christine said, "Well, Jonathan Eyre has had reproduction as a result of his activities. Twenty-six is it now?"

"You don't agree with Luis?" I asked Christine.

"I value his teaching ministry."

"Look," I said, "it doesn't matter so long as the denominational policy is gay etcetera inclusion."

"Not exactly," said Bishop Luis. "We are neutral."

"Hang on," I said. "This is the one area of sexuality that is binary. Either we are in favour of inclusive religious marriage or we are not. To be neutral is not to assert it. At Serninsea, our inclusivity is at the heart of everything. I wrote on the documents that the denomination is in favour. If it is not in favour, the authorities won't recognise one of our ministries. This is crazy."

Luis said, "Our policy is not to block it in the ministries. We give sufficient approval so that you can have it. But I think your view depersonalises and is for visualising rather than an expression of the inner body by the outer body, a fruit of goodness. We are not seeking to question your inclusion, nor for that matter stop a peculiar inheritance of ecclesiastical oversight with the reward activities associated."

I said, "That's the peculiar bit I'm rejecting."

Christine said, "Listen, we ought to have guidance. This much is so."

Luis said, "Wojtyla took it back to creation, in how Jesus linked divorce with the first things. Go back to original solitude, original unity and original nakedness. Awareness came to Adam - not your Adam! - that was communal, covenantal, as of a gift, to receive in submission."

"Quite," I said, "Communal, together, communicative, responsive, aware, naked and sexual. What's the problem? I have a sexual relationship now with my researcher. She was my pastoral concern nevertheless, despite her intended neutrality and, as I say, I'm positive about what has happened."

"Linda! exclaimed Allie. "Is what I am or do relevant?"

"It is now."

"I'm not joining in with this. No."

"You are a deacon of the Church," said Luis.

Allie said no more, and looked down at her expanding notes.

Bishop Luis said, "You ask, Mar Reticulum, 'What is the problem?' Sin. Sin requires confronting."

This annoyed me. "Have you been listening to us, Bishop Luis? I said there is no sense of sin. My sex with this woman is guiltless because it is guiltless. It is sacrificial, because I am giving something of my self into this. But there is no sin involved."

Allie said, "Hold you hard 'til we get back to the hotel." This raised a chuckle. "It's not funny, people: she is in for a fistful of trouble."

Bishop Geoff said, "Reverend Deacon Allie, here as a researcher, please restrain your comments."

I said, "I had sex with Rabbi Maurice Neptune. There was no sense of sin. My sex with that man was guiltless because it was guiltless. I gave something of my self into our get-together."

Luis looked around, and continued. "As with the Trinity, we cannot be alone, but enjoy unifying with the other, one humankind in two sexes, and it is in the gift that the two are creative, as God is creative."

"This is hypocritical," I stated. "I'm staggered. Bishop Elizabeth, Bishop Christine, anybody? This is offensive: I am an intersex female as you well know. How can you refer to 'two sexes' in my presence or indeed at all?"

Elizabeth answered, "The outcome of enrichment has more unity than the thinking."

Luis asserted, "Original unity is one for the other, not one for many," which was a statement presumably after Wojtyla.

"So you agree with me on orgies?" I asked.

"The two in the one become so as the Church is with Mary to the Father and Christ - female and male in this theological sense - and the role of the bride of Christ in the means to salvation. See how then, in total, the body becomes a sacrament of the person in a covenant in which sex is an essential part."

"Bishop Luis, this is confusing," I said. "What are the consequences?"

"What necessary guidance comes from the Confraternity?" asked Christine.

Pauline then said, "Follow the thoughts of Nathaniel Hawthorne in the context of William Blake: 'in Heaven's own time, a new truth would... establish the whole relation between man and woman on a surer ground of mutual happiness.' As for what happens above the casino, see it in the context of what Blake would have known: those occult and clandestine places to explore animal magnetism, antinomian sexuality, Freemasonry, radical Christian mysticism, Tantric Yoga, the Kabbalah, and so on.

Christine looked blank.

Bill commented that this was : "A Huge contribution, there, Pauline," although Geoff was about to move it all on.

But Allie spoke first. "The more interesting people are Nicolaus Ludwig Zinzendorf and Emmanuel Swedenborg. Swedenborg believed that the cremaster reflex was able to send the male ejaculate back into the body, sending the orgasmic energy up the spine to the brain to receive it as divine ecstatic bliss. Zinzendorf had an eroticised blood-and-wounds theology where his sermons preached a vision of sucking Christ's side-wound as a symbol of a vagina or womb for birthing purified souls. He also did ecstatic hymns. God and the universe were seen as composed of dynamic sexual potencies, as in the sephiroth, which interact such to produce orgasmic joy when in perfect equilibrium."

I looked at her wide-eyed, as in, 'Where did all that come from?'

Geoff said, "Well, thank you for that strange contribution but, Bishop Christine, don't minute it as this is a Council of Bishops and, as of now, the Reverend Deacon Allie is clearly not a bishop. I want to write something down."

As he did this Christine said, "Well, she's made the best contribution. The cherubim were entwined in the act of married sexual intercourse, and were an emblem of God's joyful marriage with his female emanation, the Shekhinah - or Jerusalem."

Geoff said, "Hmm. Let's see if we can agree on this wording. I can change these words. Here we are:

The Principatus Theocratic Confraternitati admissis in Ecclesia Apostolica Liberali gives its Guidance regarding Sexuality and the Body: The Church is the chosen partner of Christ in the means to salvation. The human body receives grace and via eros seeks unpossessive loving awareness: it is in a covenant in which Heaven expects that glorious sex is an essential part. We cannot be alone, but must join with the other, as in the one humankind, and it is in the gift of loving reciprocated sex that people are creative, just as God is creative.

We agreed with that! The Confraternity had issued its first guidance, and Christine said it would be read out at the beginning of the Body Eucharist held above the casino. Then she said, "Can I say, again, that the Reverend Deacon Allie is right: we should do much more on Zinzendorf, and Mar Reticulum should be interested that he used Jewish Kabbalistic meditations to open a path of an ecstatic visionary marriage with the Sephiroth and to God. He also used classical painting and sculpture, and I know that Deacon Allie here paints mystical religious art. This is important, Mar Arcturus-Virginis, and I would therefore like to indeed highlight Deacon Allie's point and minute my approval of her words."

Allie was smiling.

Geoff said, in response, "Then, Mar Werburga, you should minute these points by our deacon as you, a bishop, regard as appropriate. The Confraternity has given its advice."

Council: Name and Merger

"The next item comes with great pleasure. Mar Flacillus, please."

"Before I knew Mar Arcturus-Virginis, I used to work with - knew quite intimately - Archbishop Nicholas Peterson. He was an older man who showed me the ropes. Mar Reticulum?"

"Seeing as you're using them all of a sudden, doesn't he have a 'Mar' this or that?"

"Sad as I still am at his death, I am delighted that he has bestowed upon me his title of Metropolitan Archbishop. This means I inherit the churches, although they are in name only. They did become Bristol, Thornbury, Stone and Cam Spiritualist congregations, four of them indeed, but they have all since ceased. He provided for personal confessions and performed the Mass often alone.

I said, "You get this title regardless of any merger."

"Oh yes. The intention is to merge in the practices of His Grace with my ministry via a merged group. The merging of the Churches alters the character of the Church, which is why the need for a name-change becomes a necessity, really."

Bishop Geoff took over. "Any questions, contributions? Mar Triangulum Australe?"

"What is the change of culture?" asked Liz.

Bishop Luis answered: "There is a line from the charismatic to the spiritualist, but the spiritualist was a development away. He drew much from the East - indeed drew upon the Philokalia - , and thus from Orthodoxy as order, but there was a freedom of the Spirit too. Charismatic was the adjective. I think what we have called Liberal can be called Charismatic, in this sense, but we also want to uphold the Catholic inheritance by going one stage back to the Old. This is the merging aspect of it. The name change proposal is much more precise, more descriptive, than the name we have used so far."

Bishop Geoff asked, "Does anyone dissent from Bishop Luis receiving these titles, indeed title-deeds regarding the Church itself, the Charismatic Orthodox Church? No? Excellent. Bishop Christine: please record our congratulations to Bishop Luis and that we shall be conducting a Mass of Celebration at his elevation after this Council. So we come to the merger."

I said, "Proposed merger."

Bishop Elizabeth asked, "Tell us, how does a set of defunct churches affect something that is at least alive, something as in Serninsea?"

Archbishop Luis said, "I think this is unfair. There is a culture of inheritance. There is an inherited memory, one that comes from all we know that took place along what we now call the M5 corridor, Fosse Way, indeed. The congregation in Bristol once functioned as a cathedral. All four had congregations built by the Archbishop and his friends. We can read the characteristics of those congregations. They were retained in the memory, even as they were taken over by spiritualist churches."

Bishop Elizabeth further asked, "Were they taken over by spiritualists or became defunct and then were acquired by spiritualists?"

"The latter," said Archbishop Luis, "but he carried on saying Mass as did his one clergyman colleague, the Reverend Father Teddy Ouse."

I said, "There is something delusory going on here."

Bishop Geoff said, "There is nothing delusory about independent sacramental ministry."

I responded to him, "I am trying to run an actual church: get it off the ground."

Bishop Geoff asked, "Do you oppose the merger as such?"

"I would agree with Elizabeth," I said.

"In Council as Chair I insist that we use formal terms," Bishop Geoff ruled.

"Bishop Elizabeth," I corrected. "Is that sufficient?"

"Yes."

"The point is, from my perspective, there is no consequence in merging."

Bishop Geoff thus said, "So although some do not affirm this strongly, if at all, there is no actual dissent."

Bishop Christine said, "The mere fact that one of the two bishops here is now an Archbishop does have an impact. Although the office of Archbishop carries no extra powers, there is ceremonial and there is recognition. When the Church is merged, we will have a greater symbolic hierarchy. The fact is Archbishop Luis's name will stand at the head of the Principatus Theocratic Confraternitati admissis in Ecclesia Vetus Charismatic Orthodoxa, if this becomes the name."

"So I dissent," I said. "We have two Churches. You can be Archbishop, but of the other one."

Bishop Christine retorted, "There is only one Archbishop; the merger should be consequential for unity."

Bishop Geoff said, "So with this important statement of dissent, we need to discuss this further, although we may need to press to a vote."

Bishop Elizabeth then said, "I think if we tackle the name, we may allay some of Bishop Linda's fears. She does not want to lose the word 'Liberal' and if we could keep it in, we may have a compromise."

So I said, "I don't like the word 'Charismatic' and I don't like the word 'Orthodox' either."

Bishop Geoff asked, "Do we agree with Bishop Elizabeth's proposal that we discuss the name first in order to possibly facilitate the merger? Everyone is nodding. Good. Are you following this our Reverend Deacon Allie? Does it make sense?"

"Yes and yes, thank you."

"We'll have two sets of notes," Geoff said.

"I repeat," said Allie: "these are for my research only. I'm researching today."

Bishop Geoff said, "The proposal is to have our merged Church called the Old Charismatic Orthodox Ecclesia. Your objection, Mar Reticulum."

"Bishop Linda' will do. In Serninsea we have a National Church parish that is going evangelical. We have a neo-Pentacostalist church growing down the road. This is an opportunity for us to have something not old but new and inclusive. I want us to be interfaith, open, secular, Christian too, not Orthodox. "

Bishop Christine said, "You're not the only bishop there."

"No, but my ministry is to run that Church. We have different dioceses, remember and mine is local. There is also a question of ownership, but I don't want to push that line. I'm happy that you three give a valuable contribution to its make-up."

Bishop Bill said, "I would like to say that coming here, Bishops Christine, Pauline and I have had a good discussion. We saw on the main website the name proposal, of course..."

"Which was done without any consultation," I said.

Bishop Bill continued, "So we ought to offer Liberal Charismatic Orthodox Ecclesia, so that the word 'Liberal' is in there. Please speak on this, Christine. Sorry, Bishop Christine."

She said, "Names are secondary to proper Church order and the place of the Society but they should reflect this."

Bishop Geoff wanted me to comment: "Bishop Linda?"

So I told them, "The words 'Liberal' and 'Orthodox' contradict each other. The late Archbishop Peterson might have fancied the word 'Orthodox' but he wasn't part of Orthodoxy was he?"

Archbishop Luis said, "His apostolic lines did come from Orthodoxy. Also other places."

I said, "Like you, like me, like all of us, but we are not an Orthodox Church."

Bishop Christine said, "If 'Orthodox' comes out, 'Apostolic' must go back in. Surely, Bishop Linda, you have no objection to this?"

"Nope."

Bishop Bill said, "Explain the Charismatic or free element to these three churches that once existed."

Archbishop Luis did: "The Charismatic was a spirit-led freedom within the congregations. The Mass was formal, but the music and prayer was responsive. The Orthodoxy was about being autocephalous, having authority detached from others of similar kind. I suppose we are independent, a little beyond autocephalous."

Bishop Christine said, "But that's also Liberal Catholicism. Friendly relations with Churches of sound apostolic order, but independence of management."

Bishop Geoff said, "If the proposal is Liberal Apostolic Charismatic Ecclesia, I think I dissent."

"I think I do too," said Archbishop Luis.

"There is a danger of a split here," said Bishop Christine.

"Yes there is," said Bishop Bill.

"Who from?" asked Archbishop Luis. "Us two, you two, you three?"

"From whom?," I muttered.

"What?" asked Luis.

"Nothing."

Bishop Bill said, "From whom? Bishop Linda herself! But, I have to say, if this matter is forced then I will go with her."

"Me too," said Pauline. "Or is it, 'Too meen'?"

"What?" I asked, as Pauline smiled.

"Then," said Bishop Christine, "we must press this to a vote but only under the guidance of the Holy Spirit: we need to keep our unity."

Bishop Geoff said. "I withdraw my dissent. I suggest we call ourselves Liberal Apostolic Charismatic Ecclesia."

Archbishop Luis said, "I do not, unless we agree to merge and then call ourselves Liberal Charismatic Apostolic Ecclesia. Charismatic comes before Apostolic."

Bishop Geoff responded, "Oh I agree. And with the merger."

I said, "The merger follows after an acceptable name change. I don't like 'Liberal Charismatic' together. We are not a liberal form of being charismatic. We are a liberal form of being apostolic."

"That we are definitely not," said Bishop Christine. "Come on Linda, I mean Bishop Linda - Mar Reticulum. Let me offer you a further proposal. Call our local church the Serninsea Liberal Bethel of the... and so on."

Bishop Bill then said, "Good idea. Actually, Bishop Linda, it does make us different from those charismatics in Serninsea. They are definitely not 'Liberal Charismatic' at all."

I said, "Don't try and kid me that you three hadn't thought up that extra little local bone to toss to me. 'Bethel' sounds like brothel; yeah, and it has grown in use. I repeat, we are not charismatic locally."

"We have charism," said Bishop Christine. "Listen. We are trying to compromise here. You've even got a local definition in a name."

"Right," I said. "Back at base I will emphasise the local name. Bishop Bill is correct that we can put flesh on to a local name. I accept. Do we have unity?"

"You agree?" asked Bishop Pauline. I nodded. "Goodness me, the Lord's name be praised."

Bishop Christine said, "Praise God! It is to be Liberal Charismatic Apostolic Ecclesia from the moment we determine this here. Let us do this national name change; you can set and highlight your church name locally."

"Oh no," I said. "Bishops: I want both noted formally, here and now."

Bishop Geoff said, "Very good. The Holy Spirit is with us. First, we have unanimity on the name change: Liberal Charismatic Apostolic Ecclesia. Does anyone dissent? No. Oh, this must be for our present Church. We haven't merged them yet."

"Merge them first," said Geoff. "But we'll have to first vote to alter the agenda order."

"No, let's change the name as it is," I suggested.

Archbishop Luis said, "This is most unsatisfactory. The name change reflects the merger - that's the point!"

Bishop Geoff stated, "We have dissent. What do you want to do, Archbishop Luis?"

"Oh, just do it. I don't dissent," said the Archbishop.

Bishop Geoff said, "Then we do indeed do it."

"Hang on," I said, "Same time, the church of the Serninsea and Eastern Foss Parish is to be called properly The Serninsea Liberal Bethel of the Liberal Charismatic Apostolic Ecclesia."

Bishop Geoff said, "Minute this, Bishop Christine. Any dissent? No."

"Hang on," said Bishop Christine. "We also register the name change of the Society to Principatus Theocratic Confraternitati admissis in Ecclesia Apostolica Charismatica Liberali. Any dissent? No."

Bishop Geoff said, "Praise God indeed: we've done it!"

Council: Stance & Finish

"Archbishop and Bishops," said Bishop Geoff, "we now come to a statement of the Purpose of our merged Church. Archbishop Luis again, please."

"So it seems to me, as in inheritor of the title and thus the closest person to the merger that we need a restatement of our sense of direction. These are my suggestions I wrote earlier, to be put in some sort of order:

"We are optional regarding our relationship with Freemasonry.

We are optional regarding our relationship with Theosophy.

We are optional regarding reincarnation.

We are Charismatic in expressing free responses to the Spirit.

We are Liberal in allowing clergy doctrinal freedom alongside retaining basic ecumenical statements.

Christ is eternal, considered alive before, during, and after the New Testament drama.

Christ initiated special channels of power and blessing.

There are seven main sacraments: Baptism, Confirmation, Holy Eucharist, Absolution, Holy Unction, Holy Matrimony, and Holy Orders.

The centrality of the Eucharist means that we are in Communion around the sacrifice of Jesus Christ, as the highest expression of the love of God

Whilst Christianity is distinctive, there is a mystical unity found within all religions of the world, with particular interest in Hinduism, Buddhism and neo-Paganism.

The mystical fundamentals of Christianity are pre-Christian in date and in this sense we share the faith that has been believed everywhere throughout time, because it is eternal.

Old Catholic Communion of Germans, Austrians and Swiss began in 1870 in Nuremberg and we trace the Church type to this origin and rejection of papal infallibility, with deeper origins back to 1853 regarding the See of Utrecht."

Unbroken Apostolic succession comes through the Old Catholic Union of Utrecht and other valid apostolic Churches.

Bishop Geoff asked us, "What do we, the Archbishop and bishops, think of that?"

"Not a lot," I said. "Is it really necessary?"

Bishop Christine said, "It is useful to have inheritance, but it needs to be thinned down."

Bishop Geoff said then, "Just as a matter of interest, how does the Reverend Deacon Allie understand the Spirit?"

"Me?" she asked.

"Yes. Just to cut the tension. Off the record."

Er... Think of 'Haecceity' that comes from the thirteenth century theologian, Duns Scotus. According to North Uist traditions, he was a student briefly at Teampall na Trianaid, or Holy Trinity Temple, which was a Hebridean university at Carinish."

"Allie, pack it in," I said, quietly but audibly.

"Like quickening," she said.

"Remember your sermon on the Stiffkey vicar? I do."

Bishop Bill spoke. "Let's not get into timeless eternities and mystical assertions, ours or hers. The four operative words are Liberal, Charismatic, Apostolic and Ecclesia."

Bishop Pauline supported her partner by saying, "Bring in the sacraments under the Ecclesia word, then that should be enough."

Bishop Elizabeth suggested that we either do it in reverse order or in order of the words of the Church. "The statement should be the sort you could put on a card. Such as, 'We are an Ecclesia because...' and then the statement is a useful teaching statement."

Archbishop Luis then said, "This meeting has been far more positive than I expected. So let me do this, based on what I wrote but cut down a little:

"We are an Ecclesia because we assert there are seven main sacraments: Baptism, Confirmation, Holy Eucharist, Absolution, Holy Unction, Holy Matrimony, and Holy Orders, and the Eucharist is central in defining our communion around the sacrifice of Jesus Christ.

We are Apostolic because unbroken Apostolic succession comes through the Old Catholic Union of Utrecht and other valid apostolic Churches.

We are Charismatic in expressing free responses guided by the Spirit.

We are Liberal in allowing clergy doctrinal freedom alongside retaining basic ecumenical statements.

"This does leave a lot out. Is it enough?" Luis asked us.

"It's more than enough," I said. "I wouldn't have all that about the seven sacraments. There are many many sacraments. We don't confirm anyone!"

Bishop Christine said, "But we accept the Catholic seven sacraments."

"We should not list what we don't do, and elevate practices into something ontological," I said.

"Then make it loose," said Pauline, "so it's: 'We accept the seven sacraments of Catholicism, and...' or something like that."

Bishop Elizabeth then said something that was very useful: "As we have kept the Liberal title and not Old, we shouldn't confuse matters referring to the See of Utrecht and 1870."

"And the unbroken succession is a myth," I claimed. "There is no point asserting something that simple history undermines."

"It is a mystical assertion," responded Christine.

"It's all very loose now," said Luis. "Yes, fine, we need to give essential positions, in that some of us practise otherwise. So, let me write it." (We waited.) "I'll read it:

"We are an Ecclesia because we accept the seven sacraments of Catholicism, and the Eucharist is central in defining our communion around the sacrifice of Jesus Christ.

"We are Apostolic because we maintain the lines of Succession of bishops in valid Apostolic Churches.

"We are Charismatic in expressing free responses guided by the Spirit.

"We are Liberal in allowing clergy doctrinal freedom alongside retaining basic ecumenical statements."

Bishop Bill said, "That's very good indeed."

We agreed that this would be the leading statement and part of the Confraternity's teaching.

So Bishop Geoff said, "Unless there is anything else, this concludes our formal meeting."

"There is one more thing," said Elizabeth. "Bishop Niall Ifan, the former Welsh Anglican Church Suffragan Bishop of Casnewydd, has asked to join us, and so has Bishop Afanen Ffrwyth, the former Welsh Anglican Church Diocesan Bishop of Mynyw."

"I object," I said. "Given the news that SMS is considering expanding into Casnewydd."

Elizabeth responded quickly. "Well, this is unconnected with them in Welsh Anglicanism. Yes they resigned under pressure, for very little, but they were only proposed for the National Church Confraternity expanding into Wales before it collapsed."

I said, "Rhiannon Fleetwood did less too but look at her ongoing negative impact."

"Who?" asked Luis.

Bishop Elizabeth said, "The new Serninsea priest-in-charge. We knew of her before, and Allie knew her earlier than we did. Very narcissistic."

Bishop Geoff then said, "Policy is that we do not refuse bishops who express an interest, would accept our statements, like the one just agreed, and who we find have an ethical life."

"That is my objection," I said.

Bishop Christine asserted, "They have a more ethical life on some counts than you or me. We have no grounds for refusal."

"Oh well, add them in," I said. "I suppose if they are like Bishop Elizabeth then we've nothing to worry about." People in their pauses weren't sure whether I was being ironic, sarcastic or factual.

Bishop Geoff looked about and simply concluded, "Then we are done. We pray to God the Father, God the Son and God the Holy Spirit our dedication and worship at the conclusion of this important Council of the Liberal Charismatic Apostolic Ecclesia. Amen. I suggest we have our celebratory but brief Mass at the chapel and then conclude with some food.

Prayers and thanksgiving were given for the new Metropolitan Archbishop in the garage chapel. After this we went to the kitchen for tuna mayonnaise and salmon spread sandwiches, both with cucumbers. I declared instead that Allie and I would get on our way and therefore eat out. Still, we were persuaded to have a single sandwich each.

I said to Allie, "Shut your mouth when you are eating. We'll get a bus to Glastonbury, and then tomorrow we'll meet your professor."

"Don't be late for the Serninsea gathering," Christine said to me. "Adam wants you to co-present with Mar Triangulum Australe here."

"He hasn't mentioned this to me."

"It is his lease; he wants you there to represent his interest."

"Simple: tell him to go instead."

"It comes under the religious side. It is your area. Send him a message and see."

Having had the benefit of the helicopter to get us to Bristol swiftly, this left Allie and me relying on public transport for our continued journeys.

Geoff helped by giving Allie and me a lift to Whitchurch Norton Lane, a bus stop for the frequent route to Glastonbury, under street lighting. He'd offered to take us all the way, a journey of maybe an hour, but I said no. With him gone Allie removed her clerical collar. We boarded the 16:15 bus with our luggage.

Narrator: Allie Bus and At the Guest House (Wednesday 8th January)

Once the bus was moving I launched an immediate attack on Linda. "How dare you, 'Bishop Linda', represent our sexual relationship to that bunch of misfits as if you started fucking a parishioner for her own pastoral good? Who do you think I am? 'Oh, poor little young woman there, coming along to my church, a bit lonely: I know what will make her feel cosy, I'll give her a good fucking.' No mention of getting married!"

"Was that why you started showing off?"

"Well, when we make love we do it as equals. And we are tonight."

"They are not a bunch of misfits."

"Fucking weirdos." My guts were moving, and I wanted to use the sensation.

"Hardly the words of a neutral researcher."

"It is nothing to do with my research. I'm giving you a personal opinion. That's what you get when you relate to me as I am."

"Wait until we get to the guest house room. 'Haecceity' indeed, and some 'Dan Scrotum'..."

"Duns Scotus."

I let out a silent fart. It was a beauty.

"A Hebridean university? And then what's all this about Zinzendorf and Swedenborg? Where did you get that from? Oh no, Allie!"

"Study, of course. Swedenborg resisted a spiritual temptress with a vagina containing teeth."

"Lovely. Has your arsehole got teeth?"

"Kabbalistic meditation was his thing - achieving the kawwanah or 'pure intention'."

This short outburst of conversation turned into silence and looking into the artificially lit darkness outside.

We alighted at Glastonbury near a pub at nearly 5:20 pm, not quite ten minutes late.

And so, after a walk, we arrived at our guesthouse and room, with Linda still wearing a clerical collar.

Mrs Nia Farr, the landlady at the reception said, "The room has twin beds and an ensuite."

I said, "Double bed. We are a couple."

"I thought, with the clerical collar..."

"You thought wrong," I said. My directing was despite Linda having arranged the accommodation.

"Room three has a double bed - and the ensuite you requested."

At least Linda was silent through that exchange: she let me assert myself there.

In the room we unpacked, and Linda asked, "Am I landed with you?"

"Well, thanks," I said back. "You are until my research is finished, and then if you want I shall vanish into the night. Bugger the marriage then."

"Oh. Well. So when does it finish then?"

"It finishes when I am satisfied. You obviously want to see my professor tomorrow, interfering no doubt, but I will see him to report my progress."

"I have a right to see him, because you are researching in my church and he is your tutor for the project. Come on, let's find something to eat."

We found a sit down place for a Chinese meal

Passing the lady of the house on return, she wished us a good night.

I said to Linda in our room, "Now, I have bought and brought with me a pair of surgical gloves, and we'll need our own towels."

"Why?"

"When we've undressed, put these gloves on because if you have any cuts or so on then we need safety first."

She did as she was told, as she was bound to do, and I undressed myself and then sat on the towels on the floor with my legs apart.

I asked her, "What do you notice?"

"String, still."

"You pull the string with your teeth and pull out the tampon."

"You're frightening me." She put the string between upper and lower front teeth and pulled the tampon out.

I asked her, "Have you ever done this before?"

"Jenny showed me having her periods, and I showed her not having any periods, as teenagers."

"And did you have sex with her then - when she was bleeding?"

"Not really."

"Well, you are with me. So with your hand, you're going to do as you've done with me before."

"Fist you?"

"Yes. Of course. It's a sensation for me and an experience for you."

"Allie? Allie, stop this please."

"Come on, use a few fingers, work me up, and it will get bloody. But blood is normal. You're the naturist here."

"Yeah, but... You're terrifying me."

"Come on, Linda."

So she did as she was asked, and blood was filling and emerging, so it was quite a sight, and she said, "It feels warm in there. Oh my God."

I said, after quite a lot of this, when she had been fully immersed inside me a while, "I'm going to get on my knees. Taking your hand in and out, you can spread the blood over my bottom cheeks."

So there was this in and out motion, and she was scooping, and there was quite an amount - a mirror showed me.

Linda said, "I think this will affect me psychologically. I'm going to have nightmares."

"If you're not used to it."

"I suppose you are used to it. Allie - what has happened to you?"

"I have had it done to me, like now, and I've done it to Abby too. You do learn a lot. How much blood, how thick it is, how consistent it is, how it runs."

"There is a woman I know called Helen McPhail who does free menstruating."

"We've done that."

"And I suppose Jonnie had intercourse when you had your period too."

"Of course. Most recently. I used to let him put my tampons in, from the earliest age. My first period."

"Really?"

"Oh yes. Linda, you see now how much there is, and I'm warm and squelchy, and it's a heightened sensation for me. But I'm going to sit back on my bottom, on the towels, and I'll try and move some of the blood out now."

I changed position.

"What do I do?" Linda asked, as I sat facing her with my legs apart.

"Nothing. Just watch. The blood will gather and I will squeeze it out from within. It's muscle control, but also bladder control. I'll pee very slightly from time to time, and the blood will dilute a bit and come out. Here we go."

Linda watched transfixed. She said, "I'm annoyed Allie. Not at you but I cannot reciprocate. I can't be fisted, like you enjoy, and I can't do any of this. Your self control: where did you learn all this?"

"Here. Somerset. Not the professor, obviously!"

There was some silence as I managed this process of blood movement. Unfortunately, the movements caused me to let off.

"Allie. You've done it again!"

Then I said, "I think we'll finish in the ensuite."

"Clean you up in the shower?"

"No, you can join in. You can pee over my bottom."

"Allie, I am not a pervert."

"It's only a perversion if you think it is."

"I think it is."

Inside the ensuite I said, "Pee on my bottom, please."

For the first time Linda was squatting over me to pee. We had peed in front of each other, but just in the normal passing processes of going to the loo. This had a sexual edge. Her liquid force removed some blood.

But it did all end with a shower, and folding up some very blooded towels, also used to wipe the floor, with two gloves, to go into a large plastic carrier bags. The final part of our sex was for Linda to insert a tampon into me; I told her there'd be less blood going on it.

In the bed, she stared at the ceiling when I put my arm around her. She said, "I'm shocked and I am frightened. Do you expect me to do this every month?"

"Not if you don't want to - but don't be frightened of blood. It is a natural flow. Like your Helen McPhail friend, you can just go with it."

"She is not my friend. She is the equivalent of that Rhiannon Fleetwood. She is an exhibitionist and probably harmful."

"Anyway, in about a month my primary research might be over, and then if you want I will leave."

"It was only seconds ago we wanted to marry. Was that a rush to the head?" Linda asked.

"No, but you won't treat me equally."

"I suppose you will want to come back here," she said. "Though if you did I might still be able to smell your farts in Serninsea."

"I might fart less if we were married," I said to her.

"They give away your agitation, your anxiety, your self-doubt, despite your show of confidence."

"Oh go to sleep, Bishop Linda, Mawther Reticulum."

Narrator: Linda Glastonbury School (Thursday 9th January)

I was stood outside, in a park, with the Tor in view, and it was light. Allie, naked like me, passed me a cut-throat razor and a can of red foam and instructed me to shave my legs. I said, "I never shave my legs: why would I?"

She said, "If you don't shave your legs, you will die."

"Die of what?"

"Die of my hand."

"I will cut you with this razor if you try," I replied.

She pointed at me and I went straight down to the ground. Blood spurted over the grass from my crotch while I stared at the unused cut throat razor.

I looked at her, and she smiled.

"That is my handiwork: the Devil's Mark on you. Had you done as I said, you would never have lost life-blood."

"But at least I can live."

"You, you barren woman, will die. Your life is a waste, and it is my task to finish you off."

My eyes opened.

I got up first, and checked that I was bloodless. I used the ensuite silently. Allie did speak, but nothing much, and we went to breakfast.

I said to Allie, after eating Mrs. Farr's cereals and cooking, "That park looks nice. And the Tor, obviously."

"Abbey Park," she said.

"Er... You didn't mention Mead when talking about symbolic interactionism. Tell me about her."

"You're thinking of Margaret Mead, who did work on gender in Samoa and thought she could find something unique. The relevant person to my work is a bloke, George Herbert Mead."

"Oh. Go on. Talk to me intellectually, Allie."

"Well, culture is broad enough for choices, and we determine the self by how we see others see us. And that's about the relevance of it. Unlike you, I don't have any actual appointment to see Professor Mitton. Are you dissatisfied with my work?"

"As the person giving you the space to do the research, I occasionally need to see the person in charge of the research. Our relationship is confused, contradicting itself; I want to know from him your actual research boundaries. We have a relationship, with intentions, or at least I think we do."

"Things are getting muddled, but one thing is clear: I'm in charge of the research. It's my Ph.D."

"He is your guide, tutor, or whatever."

"Yes. He takes a very keen interest. He will extract some matters into his own researches."

"Steal from his student?"

"No, he has always cited my work. It gets me known too among academics."

"Why did we do what happened last night, Allie?"

"I wanted sex that forced you to notice me, and that's what we did. Because, for once and for all, we are equal, Linda. You demand to see my professor, but you are not superior to me. Of course you can see him and I've never said otherwise."

"Notice you? One more set of nightmares, I'm sure; thank you very much."

"Are you going to tell my professor that you do not like my work? Why ask him about boundaries? I know the methodology and includes boundaries."

"I want to learn more about him. Also asking about the rules of the research is a means to get you happier."

"I'm happy now."

"Really?"

"Really."

"Whatever, I want to see him on my own, at his own place, so I'd appreciate it if you'd let me go alone. Hang about somewhere, outside."

"Outside the door, more like."

"Not outside the door, please."

"You want to come out and tell me what I can and cannot do."

"No. I don't and I won't. Where do I go?"

"You want the School of Folk and Ethnographic Studies."

"I know that much, Allie."

"I can show you where it is."

"And then walk off somewhere, for about half an hour - I would think."

Outside and over the way, Allie showed me a series of houses, set back, that constituted the University of Somerset's School, and pointed out which house for Roland Mitton. I found his room pretty much straight away and his green light went on immediately for me to go in.

I said to him, almost straight away, "I'm here because Alfia Shrimpton plays this distance neutrality card and I want you to cut her some slack so she knows."

"Well, I am sure there is some slack to cut, as you put it, but can we start and ask about how you are and about your Council of this Church of yours?"

"Who told you about that?"

"Well, you did, originally, and so did Geoff Virgo in more detail."

"Before or after?"

"Before. He might be in touch again with the outcome, but I'd like to hear from you. I will also use the notes Allie sends me for an article of mine because of my interest in fringe religion: I will cite her research. Tell me: did your gathering start with a Mass?"

"Yes, it did, but as for the meeting, Allie did actually take notes, her own, because Bishop Christine Vine was taking the minutes. Allie looked very fetching in her clerical collar. Funny things, clerical collars... Sorry. Yes, a Mass at the beginning and celebratory prayers at the end. I prefer the word 'Eucharist' instead."

"You didn't answer about your own self. Are you well?"

"Yes. Is it relevant?"

"Always. Don't play the neutrality card! Let us also start our meeting in a similar way to your Council." He first picked up two goblets, a wine bottle, and a knife. "Come out to our quadrangle. That way is north, and you can see objects on doubling-up bird tables to the north, east, south and west and one in the centre. I normally keep big bowls on them but I replaced most of them before your arrival. Let's put the bottle, goblets and athame on the centre one, you see. On the north one I already have what is a burner for incense, and I am just going to light it."

I said, "I get it. So the rock is on the one to the east, a lantern is to the south and water container is to the west. Our four winds, then. This is interesting because when the two Bristol bishops held a Eucharist at my old parish church, it had a four elements aspect, and yet this time in Bristol there was none of that."

"They are progressively, or regressively, going up the candle," Roland said. "So there is already water in that container. And now that the incense is making its presence known, let me light the south lantern. Done! Take a goblet there, hold it, and here is some wine for you. Finest red, don't you know. Please, you pour mine... Now, Bishop Linda, take the athame and plunge it into my goblet and then into yours. Good. Place it back, and let me say: O wind from the north, refresh us; O earth from the east, nourish our growth; O flame from the south, warm us and give us energy; O water from the west, give us renewed life. Drink! Good. Drink up."

"Good stuff."

"Let us go back in, Linda, with this lovely purchase of wine. We let them burn themselves out and I'll bring the items back in later."

We sat down back in his room. I said, "I don't drink - but I will this. That's an incredible wall of books."

"Paganism, rituals, folk faith, stories, ethnic languages, adaptations of religion, forms of pre-industrial economies..."

"About Allie."

"Not yet. About you! Your meeting. What did you expect when you went?"

"They wanted to change the name from Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia to Old Charismatic Orthodox Ecclesia after a merger with a defunct Church and a fellow Bishop, Luis Callas - you know him - receiving a Metropolitan Archbishop title. Anyway, I expected to lose the vote. My associate Christine is an ecclesiastical nutcase. Elizabeth Huett sits on the fence. But Bill and Christine I suppose worked out a compromise and had a bone to toss me, to call the parish Serninsea Liberal Bethel. They still tossed the bone, but by going a bit further to meet my concerns we ended up with unanimity. Liberal Charismatic Apostolic Ecclesia. I kept 'Liberal' and avoided 'Old' and 'Orthodox' as well. We even managed a definition based on the new name. And we did a teaching statement on sexuality as well. We are positive about sex. I want to talk about Allie."

"Sure. Okay. Allie admitted that she made a mistake. She is very honest. She said that you should or could contact Margaret Lindbeck's group, someone who's already split away into a new group more suited to your own outlook."

"Margaret wanted our ministry located in her Durham area. So she got it by breaking away and joining the Free Liberal Church, or high Protestantism. I haven't split away, though, and we've resolved our differences. Allie is in the clear on that. We explain what we mean by 'Charismatic' and it supports the meaning of 'Liberal' that we use. So it was a good meeting."

"Allie says there is quite a bit of tension there, in your place, in Serninsea."

"Yes, and this is why I am here, because it has affected her. There was an attack by a mentally ill woman on my then partner; there is all the background to a sex cult scandal; and Allie discovered that my close friend had a stillborn baby long back and named her Linda. Now I know Allie is a researcher, but anyone who comes into my church receives my pastoral care. She wears these leathers and the like, making a statement, and then claims she wants to be unnoticed. You may laugh. One day she was still in partying gear because she was drunk, yet when I saw her in Margate she was not drinking. Now we have started a relationship but it conflicts with her as a neutral, distant researcher."

"Margate was the seaside economy conference, when you two first met."

"Faith in the Seaside. Nothing will come of it. Allie can be quite violent as well; she can scare people. Do you know about this? And sexually..."

"She is not violent; she is capable of self-defence and often defends other people. I hear that Rhiannon Fleetwood, a pest around here, has ended up in your neck of the woods: I bet Allie has seen to it that she has not threatened you."

"The burden on Allie's shoulders, in a weird place like Serninsea, has been too much. She would not discuss her work, although she has found a way to talk remotely about research methods. I managed to get her to talk about George Herbert Mead today. She's been lonely and confused, Professor Mitton."

"Roland, please."

"I know she is thirty but she comes across, to me anyway, as if she is much younger, even immature in some ways. Her immaturity is in her loud dress sense: I've tried to look after her."

"Linda," said the professor, "let's be realistic. Allie is a new researcher. She has a number of talents. She sold many paintings, in Walsingham and here with religious subjects. She is an artist, into the mystic. She is religious, too. I gather from some that she can be sexually exciting."

"She had a relationship with one of your tutors."

"Abigail Randall pressed the reset button by moving to Bristol."

"She'd refused to tell me where she lives."

"I don't think Allie knows where Abby lives now, if different."

"I meant Allie, the house she received from Christine."

"She lives in Toulouse Road, number 135."

"I've been there now, with her. But she is still under pressure to be neutral."

"There is an ideal for research, our 'prime directive' of non-interference. I tell you, it's as useless as the one in Star Trek. Researchers are supposed to blend in. Yet they almost always influence what happens, either by simple presence or by putting their foot in it. Some admit it, in their research methods write-up, and build it in to the narrative, and some don't. So of course I'll cut her some slack. Your church isn't going to develop or fail because of what Allie does, not unless she really puts her foot in it, and even if she did she could even then report it as part of what happened. As for Margaret Lindbeck's group - her suggestion - we can ignore that. First of all, it hasn't happened, and secondly, you would have thought of it anyway. The Free Liberal Church is High Unitarianism. It is based on the Free Catholic model. It is a fringe of a fringe, really."

"No more loneliness, Professor Mitton. No more trying to be absolutely silent. Of course I won't interfere with her research and ask what she knows. But she, like us all, needs warmth. There's something else."

"She is most probably in love with you. You realise this. Are you with her?"

"I find love difficult. I am very fond of her."

"She admires you. It's because she recognises your authority. Some women get right under her skin and you are one of them."

"She wants equality."

"Yes, but she goes for authority figures. She was raised with equality and how to grow up with her near distant cousin. She may genuinely see herself in you. I have an excellent relationship with Allie, and will speak with her."

"You do? I told her to give us half an hour."

"I am going to a farmers' dance tonight. You come, and Allie. I will dance with my student, you dance with your researcher - same person; I hope to dance with you, and there are a few of my academic and Pagan friends there too. Where is she?"

"Somewhere. Give me some guidelines, Roland."

"Be as personal as you like, but don't intervene in her research work. She can write on how she managed a relationship with you and kept her own active intellectual space, her own secrets."

Narrator: Allie Professor's Advice (Thursday 9th January)

I was hovering outside the professor's office a little early, when the red light went green and Linda left, and she tutted at me for being there, and said she would sit down at the end of the corridor.

"What did she say, High Priest Professor Roland?" I asked as I went in.

"Well, she has been concerned for you, pastorally, and so she should be, and wants to know about research boundaries in the context of a relationship."

"Oh."

"But come out into the quadrangle. I've got a fresh goblet - mine I've used - and another athame. This wine is good."

There we did a ceremony, that we did before any chat, even in standard clothes, and it was to the four winds. It framed our meeting. Back inside we continued to drink the wine.

"Tonight we have a dance to attend, and it will be good fun. Country dancing. Linda will go, and you can, and I will, and some others you know."

"Will my High Priest former tutor and secretary be there?"

"Yes."

"Please, I can't come."

"I'll tell them to leave you alone. Dance with Linda. It might help you two get on with each other more."

"We are getting on together."

"So what's the problem?"

"I never finished the extra Gaelic with Beathag, and High Priest Abigail does have connections that inform the Serninsea Vestal Virgins. I don't want to give them any updated information."

"Leave off the religious titles. Abigail knows her obligations as do I. But, look, you'll be with Linda."

"What did she want? I wasn't going to say 'no' to you meeting her."

"Linda feels that you have been overdoing the intended neutrality stance. I suppose you've been too isolated, too cold. Participant Observers do give something of themselves. You've over-compensated. You rightly want to limit your religious activities to the church roles. But you should have given Linda your house address long ago - what if you had an accident?"

"Christine Vine knows."

"Yes, but you tell me she's not always in town."

"Got a good helicopter, though, with a pilot called Leon Agnew. She gives him sexual favours."

"You see, you are getting deep into their lives, especially when you went to bed in between two partners, Allie. I don't know if that is dedication or being kinky."

"I got good information. Anyway, they split, and that was nothing to do with me. I have started a paper on getting in deep with informal decision taking."

"Look at the literature on family decision making on end of life matters; formally designated people there may be, but many family members contribute to decision making. Read Jill Quinn, for example, and others. Revisit Barbara Kawulich for methods. You're moving from 'observer as participant' towards 'complete participant' - yes? You have started a relationship with Linda that has imported difficulties that amount to contradictions."

"Not quite a complete participant."

"Wearing a clerical collar?"

"I did at the Council but I didn't take part. I'll qualify that. I did mention Zinzendorf and Swedenborg - sexual ecstasy and the divine. Well, I'm supposed to be participant observer!"

"Ah: 'What are called vices in the natural world, are the highest sublimities in the spiritual world,' said Blake. Blake drew on the theosophy of desire!"

"Linda dug up stuff on the Philokalia and eros for the logos and God. She doesn't believe in it!"

"You can of course vary your levels of participation and observation, perhaps keeping to the tramlines, and you know that's Patricia Adler and Peter Adler."

"You know my complete religious side. They do not."

"On your effect on things, refer to Sharan Merriam: it's not whether you affect the situation or the participants, but how you account for your effects. So it started with Linda asserting pastoral care?"

"We are becoming lovers. I want it."

"Allie, this really is becoming a 'complete participant', 'full membership' according to Adler and Adler. Can Linda understand this?"

"She thinks I'm a child. I don't know why."

"I detect a contradiction here: you desire her but the reality is disappointing."

"All she has to do is treat me equally. I have made it clear enough. Then it would be excellent."

"You 'made it clear' as in Beathag NicAmhlaigh made matters clear with you? It wasn't just 'extra Gaelic' like you said, when it was you drawing from a powerful woman figure."

"Hmm. I'm making the demands now from what I want."

"Allie. Dear Allie! Don't frighten the horses. Can you not add Linda as a 'collaborative researcher' as after William Whyte?"

"No. I want her. I fancied her when I went to Margate and I trust my own judgement. I've said I'd leave when this research is done but I don't intend to go, Roland. I'm not going to run away from her like I did from Jonnie and Beathag."

"You regret that Abigail moved university?"

"Why did she have to move?"

"Because you weren't the first and it needed to stop. Let's face it, for all your written research justifications, the basic reality is you went to Serninsea to find Linda."

"Yeah."

"Quite a secret, that, from the world and your research."

"There's plenty else."

Glastonbury and Return (Thursday to Friday 10th January)

My professor was as good as his word, because at the attended dance Abigail Randall and Beathag NicAmhlaigh stared at me but kept away. I tried to keep Linda's back to them or deflect her. It did pain me to ignore Abigail Randall, but she saw the reality with Linda and no doubt Roland will have explained.

The professor danced with Linda, when I found at last Katie de Costa, my age, to soon begin researching about spirituality-driven energy enterprises near Aberystwyth, as I did mine in Serninsea.

I enjoyed dancing with the professor, who told me they are going to reintroduce Kernewek Kemmyn to the language packages. They'd secured one of the estimated five hundred near-fluent speakers to Glastonbury: not Dolly Pentreath, he said, who died in 1777, but a man called Kenwyn Kersey who would be saying to students, 'Kows orthiv yn Kernewek.' There were under forty thousand speakers in 1300 CE, thirty thousand in 1550 when the Prayer Book of 1549 started to clobber the language. I learnt so much from Roland.

I also discovered Melanie Windley, from my part of the world, near Fakenham, and not much younger than me. Mel was still doing research methods training towards her yet unformed Ph.D idea on neo-Pagan groups formation. It was like I was being replaced soon! If I was to return to Somerset, I'd be seeking her for a potential relationship, though I'd want her to stop smoking. Linda noticed my enjoyment with Katie and then Mel.

In attendance was a surprise: the Reverend Dr. Andrea Lindsey, the Reverend Alan Lindsey (her brother), Bishop Vivienne Space (the Suffragan Bishop of Morchard) and Lynton Plimpton (the Suffragan Bishop of Sumorsæte). So while I spoke with Mel, on researchers keeping secrets, Linda spent some time dancing with Alan, presumably talking about dialectical theology. Then Andrea approached me to dance. I felt a special warmth from my one-time GP in the locality, as Lynton replaced Alan with Linda and Vivienne was back with Alan.

"You are beautiful tonight, Allie," Andrea said in my ear. "By the way, I've been in Serninsea a while already and you've missed me including at the gynaecology clinic. Visiting here with Lynton to clear up final matters."

"I'm just the same," was my reply.

"You sought out a relationship with the clergywoman in Serninsea."

"Who told you that? Roland?"

"No, of course not. Rhiannon Fleetwood, in one of her communications with me. Such a nuisance."

"I warned her."

"Now then I don't want to have to treat her broken bones or whatever you do."

"You?"

"I will be her and your GP very soon indeed. Lynton will live with me in Serninsea and on his own in Wytham. Are you ignoring, em, Abigail and Beathag?"

"Yes."

"But you're dancing with me."

"Yes."

"Well, let's continue the dance in Serninsea."

Andrea returned to Lynton, as would be expected, but she didn't look happy to me.

But only with Linda did I say, "Now hold me hard!"

And when we walked towards the guest house, we did wander along hand in hand together in the street-lit dark. Inside, I was soon on top of Linda, and we had less threatening (to her) sexual fun, even with my remaining period.

Linda said, laid out and reddened from my intense 'cow licking', "You didn't introduce me to anyone there from your past."

"Well, I knew some of them, but we kept our distance."

"Deliberately?"

"They are my past. Abigail Randall was there and the secretary Beathag who speaks Scottish Gaelic. Andrea was my GP. Ha! I've had my legs open in front of her. She's with Lynton now, and Alan definitely has his eyes on Bishop Vivienne Space, the Suffragan Bishop of Morchard."

"Andrea told me she'll be our GP."

"They are ambitious priests, I think."

"You could have introduced me to Abigail and Beathag. And the younger two?"

"Katie and Mel. New as students to me. Mel's from Fakenham - and was in a younger year at my school. I'm an old hand in Glastonbury now."

"Anyway, your professor is a good man."

"He's sixty-five. I'm close to my professor. It is a very small community and people do come and go."

"I see."

"And do you agree with the sexual antinomianism of Zinzendorf?" she asked me.

"Of course. Weren't we doing it?"

"Hmm. Moving away from it, I hope."

After sleeping closely together through the night, there was then a knock on the door to wake us. When Linda answered, poking her head around the door, it was Leon Agnew.

"Christine Vine has instructed me to come and get you two, so that you're both fresh and ready for tomorrow."

Linda said, "She's got that wrong. She's not fresh because she farts and we're not going."

"I am going," I said from the bed.

"You are not."

I sat up. "I am, because it is about the development of the church."

"It is not the about the bethel; it is well beyond the bethel. Allie!"

"It still relates to the bethel, Linda."

"Here we go again." Linda moved from behind the door, showing her tits as I showed mine. "We're having breakfast first, Leon. I fancied staying one or two nights more."

"We're done here," I said. "It's a free helicopter trip back, Linda." (I certainly had more research work to add because I'd not seen one of these above the casino gatherings.)

Leon said, "It is ten-thirty already. The landlady said she will cook you two something, and I might have something myself. Christine's instruction is to have you back before this evening. Saturday evening they come from the Titansea Grand and other places to above the casino."

Linda said, "Wait for us to wash and come down, Leon."

"By the way," he said, you two look lovely. I didn't get to have the pleasure at Bever Wood."

"Get on your way," Linda told him.

We showered together and got dressed, packed our luggage with change of clothes to leave, and with bags taken downstairs had our full English breakfast served by Nia Farr. Leon had already eaten his one-off paid-for meal.

Given the speed of a helicopter trip, we told Leon that we first wanted to do some browsing in the New Age and similar shops and that he would have to wait further. After not too long browsing we got into the helicopter, rose high above the Tor, and, for that matter, the University's houses and inner quad, and then moved in the direction of Serninsea, to land in Titansea, near the Blue Diamond Club, just as the daylight was lost.

Chapter 28 Crisis Point

Narrator: Allie The Argument The Night Before (Friday 10th January)

Going up the stairs with me, Linda said, "He's gone then. Door left open. That was quick."

"Advertise it to some students," I suggested.

At the top floor open lounge, the conversation returned to what was bugging Linda. She said, "How many times have I got to tell you? You are not going above the casino tomorrow night."

"I am and you can't stop me. You said Roland told you not to interfere in my work."

"He said not to intervene, and this is different. I insist you do not go. It's not of the Bethel, and you're not going. What is the point of being my fiancé if you just carry on as before?"

"It's all connected and I am going."

Christine rose up the staircase slowly to emerge where we were. (She shouldn't have: this was personal space.)

"Sorry. Don't mean to interrupt. Listen. I have this statement, and I want to put it now on the local website. Do you agree to it, Linda? I'll do it tonight for tomorrow.

The Serninsea Liberal Bethel of the Liberal Charismatic Apostolic Ecclesia has this statement regarding sexuality.

As embodied humans, we are sexual beings. Each person can and should learn how to be a good sexual partner. Avoid unwanted pregnancy and pursue sexual health.

Love is positive and sex is positive. We reject any denial of the consensual physical and sexual. Carnal desires are not sinful. The costly sacrifice involved in mutual sexual expression means it should be carried through with due care and attention. The Trinity of Love is inexhaustible; the glory of sex is the sublime grace that comes within its practice, evidenced as a divine gift by the sign of the orgasm.

Self-righteousness has no ethical place; seeking advantage is not a relationship; purity culture is inevitably hypocritical.

Through better sex, the Spirit descends and God is closer.

"Yes, Christine, but why now?"

"Because they are coming here, locally."

"But what you are doing is your own ministry."

"Even if that is true, it is related to this church."

"See," said Allie.

Christine said, "The statement doesn't refer to any event. It is just a stance."

"Christine, I wash my hands of it."

"I'll keep my eye on Allie."

"Christine. Like you did with me? And these stairs are to our private quarters."

"Can I talk to Allie please? She might decide not to go."

"Yes. Please do."

"Let's go downstairs, Allie."

So I left Linda and descended with Christine down into the main seating area. Christine asked me, "Is she cramping your style?"

"A bit, but I can handle her. Things might be improving, except for above the casino."

"She wasn't in love with Adam, and in a way Keith and she drifted, but you're a bit like a cross between her passion for Jonathan Eyre, that he exploited rather than reciprocated, and the potential of Maurice Neptune."

"I'm trying to educate her away from becoming insufferably motherly."

"Nothing is insufferable, Allie. Listen. Suffering is part of life - for a greater purpose. Let me come upstairs and come up with some bullshit for you."

"What?"

"Skirt around things. Not that you wear skirts. Have you just dropped one?"

"She's making me... cramping my style."

"You need to cramp or clamp some more."

So we went up the two flights of stairs and I just opened the bedroom door to go in. Linda was sat on the bed and seemed to wipe away a tear.

"Listen," said Christine. "Allie is particularly interested in what she'll see as the ceremonial side tomorrow. She's not likely at all to join in. In any case we are using partitions and screens, and she can report on that development. She's also more interested in the tension between you here and what is going on there as a kind of inheritance from the old regime. I'll look after her; she won't get into mischief."

"I give up," said Linda. "Anyway, you can fuck off back to 135 Toulouse Road."

Christine said, "Linda, you don't mean that. Allie, make her feel special tonight."

"She can't if she's not here. This is important to me: she will not do what I say and this is important."

Christine added, "Stop being paranoid, Linda. This is no more than research. You and her are a different matter."

"There is no me and her," Linda said. "Not if she cannot understand why she cannot go there. Where is her empathy?"

Allie replied, "Research empathy is via experiencing what you experienced. It's methodology to gain empathy."

"You forget, young lady, that there is a human being and her experiences there. All this academic crap and you don't see the essential wood for the fucking trees."

Christine had a comment. "Cut out the 'young lady' superiority, Linda. She's trying her best."

I asked, "What am I doing Linda? Am I staying or going to Toulouse Road?"

Christine said, "Staying here."

"Linda?" I asked.

"Oh, other people make all my decisions these days. Stay then. It's a big bed; I can ignore you, as long as you stop farting. Cunt."

Christine then said, "I shall leave you two... lovebirds."

Linda insisted, "You've got it wrong, Christine. Look, are you using the computer tonight?"

"Yes," Christine answered her. "That's what I said. Get this message up."

"I suppose that A-frame contraption I was hung on will be a leading attraction."

"That's up to Elizabeth - facilities. Yojana and I have different contacts. People will have safe words and don't have to be cruel, and none of this has absolutely anything to do with Allie."

"Arrgh! Well, Allie, if you're staying here, get a wash and get to bed, as I will as well. That's your side, there, you know, where Adam used to sleep."

Christine then said, "Hang on. Allie. Go to the kitchen below and I'll come and get you soon."

"Changed your mind have you?" Linda asked Christine. "Fuck off then, Allie."

So I went out of the room and went down one flight of stairs.

Now Elizabeth came up these private stairs and approached me. She had been organising aspects of what was to happen above the casino. She wanted to know whether the woman or women who were rumoured to have close relationships with dogs would go to the gathering. They could educate people.

"I know who you mean but you assume too much."

"But will you go to these mystery women and ask them."

"You've got it confused."

"Who is she, who are they? What do they do?"

"I'm not telling; there's nothing to tell."

"But will you do it?"

"I'll see if she is interested in attending, but I can't ask about rumours."

"Thank you."

Elizabeth went away down the stairs.

Narrator: Linda The Night Before Resolution (Friday 10th January)

Allie had walked out of the bedroom and now Christine faced me across the bedroom.

"Listen to me, Linda. I haven't changed my mind and I don't make decisions for Allie. And neither should you. Don't go on with this superiority footing, because you'll never get off it."

"I'm frightened for Allie. She's vulnerable and not the confident bitch she pretends to be. We'll end up with a second Jenny. This place is sending her round the twist. We can't have her looking at strangers humping."

"You are too motherly."

"Sometimes I think it would be good if I was a mother. I might have had a normal, boring life. Take Diana. She has a normal life with a couple of kids. As for Allie, you are not a good example for her."

"Come on. You know that she has seen and experienced far more than most. Think Zinzendorf, Swedenborg and Blake."

"You're right. Of course you are right. She is a complete and utter slut. If she was my daughter, I'd be ashamed."

"Linda. She is not your daughter! What is this? She is only ten years younger than you. She has whipped her clothes off in front of people with confidence; she seems to handle herself very well physically and sexually."

"At one point I knew so little from her she might well have had her hymen intact. Then I discovered she's been shagging her cousin every night since puberty. She's faced domineering lesbians at university. She comes here and it gets worse. There's that pornography actor Annie and that one who does her hair. I've had it bad - and in that very place I never want to see again that she wants to visit - but I don't want a new wreckage next to me."

"Don't be ridiculous. Let's repeat the point: you are not her mother; she is your equal. Fiancés are equal. And yes you had a bad experience in there, but don't project that on to others."

"I just feel this need to protect her in the circumstances of you and Liz organising another orgy in that horrible place."

"You need a child, Linda. You're forty and a maternal desire has caught you up. I got rid of my urges long ago."

"Huh! I gave that one up through sheer necessity, because I am barren. A bloke in female clothing, some think. I don't want a child."

"You have feminine feelings."

"I can't have a child. I can imagine an ordinary life, can't I?"

"She can have a child. As a couple, you can indeed have children. Stop denying your own feelings."

"She was a filthy bitch at Glastonbury. She more than matches you."

Allie wants to use her skills to protect you. Think of Allie's treatment of Jonathan Eyre and what we are sure happened with Rhiannon Fleetwood. She was on her period, wasn't she, going to Glastonbury. So I can guess what happened, more or less. Helen McPhail does it. I do it."

"How do you know?"

"I bet above the casino will turn her off. She'll see the ceremony we do, and she'll come away from what people do and that's it. If she's so advanced, it will not matter to her."

"Advanced? Advanced? I give up. Oh, I'll let her go there then. Advanced my arse. But make sure you watch over her."

"Linda! It is not your place to let her go or not go anywhere! She makes up her own mind! You could come. Adam wants you to go and make announcements."

"I am not going in that place and not to that event. Full stop. Fuck it - I can't control her but I'll damn well control me."

"Fair enough. So be clear that Allie your fiancé is not an extension of you."

"Bring her back now."

Christine went to get Allie. She came back.

"Well?" Allie asked me.

"I don't want you to go, but I won't stop you," I told her.

"And do I go home now?"

"No. It might be the last time we're together, if you do something beyond observing when there."

"Well, I'd better stay then."

Christine then said, "Bye bye, you two. I'll get this on the website and I'll lock up when I've gone."

Lying in bed, neither of us doing anything, Allie started to sing:

"I like...

Digging out the rigging

*Or frigging in the rigging,
But tribbing on the rigging
Is what I want to do."*

"Not tonight. And I repeat about tomorrow: this might be the last time we're together, if you do something beyond observing. Slut. Go to sleep."

Narrator: Allie Asking Klärchen Sisse (Saturday 11th January)

I was irritated about what Elizabeth wanted. Christine was in and out again on Saturday so I told her of my irritation. "Elizabeth wants to exploit rumours when Klärchen is my friend."

"Elizabeth wants a 'spectacular' event. To me, even if it is true, there is no redeeming of animals via a relevant ritual. At the minimum animals need to have a symbol system to communicate and show deviousness. And animals do not give consent."

"You're all assuming too much."

Still, I rang the neighbour's doorbell. After some minutes holding herself hard, Klärchen answered the door from behind it, concealing herself and telling Dieter and Hendrik alongside to stay. "Oh, Allie, hello; come in please."

So I did. She was in her nightie and nothing else. I said to her this: "Right. There's this above the casino event tonight, and do you remember about all that in the media before and I mentioned it to you."

"Yes."

"Against my better judgement I've agreed to ask if you and Dieter want to go to it, and Salome too with Hendrik."

Salome Lichtblau emerged at the top of the staircase, also in a minimal nightie and gave me a view of her fluffy pubes. "Why would we want to go there?" she asked.

"Because of the rumours," I said. "I'd advise you both - you all - not to go."

"Does everybody blab this now?" Klärchen asked.

"The problem is, as you know, once Linda told her husband that you'd said 'not now' to Dieter, it went all around a certain type of person. Elizabeth is that type but she asked me who is involved and what they do, as if she doesn't know. Christine thinks it's you."

"You surely know my answer, and Salome's"

"Of course. I agreed to ask, so here I am. Anyway, it's tonight so it's not as if they gave you much notice."

"Nor have they the guts to come and ask me and Salome themselves and be confronted about the rumours."

"Linda never gave away your identity. Christine found out otherwise. And I think I have disturbed you."

"And perhaps you would tell this Elizabeth and Christine too some personal information that I am with Salome and the dogs are downstairs, evidently."

"No, I can't because I'd confirm your identity. I am sorry to have disturbed you two."

"But would you like to stay, Allie? We can come down. We can all shower and wash your hair. We missed you yesterday."

"Linda will be happy that you have said no as she is dead against the event. She knows who you are; she's warned me off seeing you."

"Perhaps you can nudge Linda in the direction of having less interest in us."

"I try and I tell people it's none of their business. Some of them will think I am researching you, when I am not; you have no connection with anything I am researching."

Salome walked downstairs and the dogs became excited. Salome asked, "Are you researching above the casino, Allie?"

"Yes. It is connected with the Bethel, whatever Linda says."

Salome said, "It's an orgy, isn't it?"

"It starts with religious ritual, and then I think it may well be."

"Are you joining in?"

"To the extent that people answer my questions. I've had a health check."

Klärchen asked how the mission went.

"It was a bit difficult because I learnt things I didn't know and others didn't know. We were exposed, in a sense, in more ways than one. But beyond saying this, I can't say anything more. It was at Bever Wood, the site of an old colliery returned to nature."

"You like walking about naked?" Klärchen asked.

"Yeah. I'd better be going."

Then Klärchen said to Salome, "Let's all go back upstairs. If you do fancy a shower, Allie, we'll be having one in about an hour."

"Thanks. Also I'll go to the sea front before I go back in so I can say I've been there."

"All the best for this evening, if we don't see you before," she said, as I left them.

Back at the church I told Elizabeth, as it happened, that "these women" are private people and the ongoing rumours are damaging. They weren't going to 'educate' anyone, as they had nothing to educate about in particular.

"So there are more than one of them. We'll just have to have a different attraction for everyone."

That said it all, really. An attraction she wanted. Indeed Linda was pleased that Klärchen and Salome had turned down attending, and commented that I should have done the same.

I then went around there for a shower and had my hair done. Back at the Bethel, when Linda saw my hair all full of volume and shining an uncoloured bright red, she was furious.

"You've been next door to make yourself look good for tonight. You utter, utter, slut, Allie Shrimpton. Put one foot wrong above that casino tonight and you are out of here: out of here for good."

"Calm down. I've only had my hair done. They did theirs and their dogs'."

Narrator: Linda About the Room (Saturday 11th January)

So they'd all gone across, leaving me and a few others in the building. Then I had a visit from Marie Enfield.

I said, "The room is available if you two want it."

"I suppose there is a price to pay."

"There's a rent; it is quite reasonable."

"I mean in terms of Roger. You want sex with him."

"Well, even if I did I couldn't have what I admired: the image in my head."

"What image in your head?"

"Completely inserted, deep into Mrs. Carter. It was beautiful."

"Hmm. What about seeing him and me?"

"He'll fit you like a glove."

"So would your price be to add this image to the one in your head?"

"Much as I'd like to see you two, I am not making any such demand!"

"You see, the rumour is that Mrs. Carter is telling people that you are inventive, creative, people-focussed, and she has impressed the UPCC minister - the one who's retiring - so much so that she chose this place to give her retiring lecture."

"I didn't know there was such a connection."

"Mrs. Carter, I hear, knows the remaining women in the UPCC chapel. I heard from Mo McArden's sister. By the way, has my father visited you?"

"Nope."

"And what if he does? Would you be forced throw us out?"

"Absolutely not. Look, it's just a room but you would get all these facilities too."

"So what is going on away from here?"

"They're having an orgy. I'm sure they'll welcome you in, but they'd want you to attend the religious ceremony."

"Is it like the Romans then?"

"Could be."

"Roger and I only want our privacy. We supported your mission - supported you - and we also wanted to try naturism where we were not known. But not something like that."

"Good. Do you want to view the room?"

"Roger is in town. I'll call him and bring him over."

In some fifteen minutes he came in and waved across to me. He went up the stairs and after another fifteen minutes they came down the stairs and, holding hands, put their thumbs up and left the building.

I received a text half an hour after that saying they'd take the room and move in as soon as possible.

Narrator: Allie Introducing Above (Saturday 11th January)

I'd come in with Christine, and all I needed to do was watch people arrive. They were making their own way from the Titansea Grand and other hotels and guest houses, including Yojana Asthana's.

I was surprised that Kathleen Wickenby turned up with Winnie Lott, who said, "We'll be naked but only serve snacks from this kitchen. I've brought these leaflets about the Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia."

"Out of date," I said. "They changed the name."

"Still, people can look. We like your gear. How do you get your hair to look so lovely?"

My gear was from Somerset originally: latex based, shapely, revealing my crotch shape, with some flaps to open: nipples, crotch and bottom. Christine was like Elizabeth, in front-opening ecclesiastical gear.

Linda's feared A-frame contraption or anything like it was not present. In the narrow end of the oblong hall, with the kitchen to the left and entry doors to the right, there was a white cloth covered long table with candles and goblets on it. There was an open space to gather, but then this hall space contained many four-way partitions and screens. In and among these dividers were many beds, couches, airbeds, chairs, cushions and a long massage table near the kitchen to the left. Curtains were closed but the fire escape was clear to the left, with a long set of steps down to a service road behind. Furthest from the altar table were some rooms at the far narrow end. There used to be stairs there to a theatre stage in the floor below, the stairs gone.

Condoms were in bowls. There were vibrators, dildos, anal balls, and various oils on scattered tables and the odd trolley. Whips came in small cat o'nine tails and single strands. Beyond the double doors masks were available, for entry. Out there were the stairs down to the steel double doors for both entry and exit at a one end sealed-off passageway, but off to the left on this first floor were showers and cloaks and toilets. I realised that anyone disabled wouldn't come up to this first floor: there was no lift up and down.

Masks worn made it difficult to know who was coming in. However, unmasked Kathryn Wickenby came in with unmasked Peter Marshall, and Peter helped me identify the people to later put in my notebook that I'd left in the kitchen for rapid notes. Some names would definitely have interested Linda.

Some of these had undressed in the cloaks area, but others wanted to remove their clothes in the hall, perhaps at a particular bed or couch. Perhaps it marked territory and reserved a space.

To assist Bishops Christine and Elizabeth were Bishops Bill Masters and Pauline Junor, in yet more open to flesh ecclesiastical gear. I knew nothing of Bishop Arianwen Bron, a bishop in Eglwys Geltaidd Mynydd Trawsnewidiad, a Gnostic group, in a simple open green and gold gown and whose revealed body was early pregnant, like Kathryn, and very attractive, other than for some crass tattoos. Why she was present was a puzzle. Obviously I recognised the naked Rabbi Maurice Neptune, who said, "Allie my dear!" to me and hoped I would provide him some company later on. James Thorne, in a t-shirt and trousers, was one no longer at the parish church, who once worked with the defunct choir.

Sir Sanjay Bunker otherwise known as San Bandyopadhyay, Chair of SMS and much else, had a room to go to at the far end and emerged from there undressed. There were Archibald Holborn, the Research and Development Director at SMS, and Janet Hayes, Marketing Developer across the SMS business, both in the buff. Some other business people included brothers Charles Brabazon, a banker, with his brother, Peter Brabazon, into marketing.

Laura Kingswood arrived alone. My memory suggested this was unusual. George Wickenby had come along, banned from having any more massages at the Bethel. Naked Kay Sally Parker, a now retired headteacher of Linda's old school (her headteacher back then) came along with naked friend Annie Fenwick and Jordis Bingham, sex workers. I was surprised that Sanjay Singh, a newsagent in Serninsea, had come along (there was Sikh couple that ran a different newsagent) and he was yet to disrobe. There was naked Fatima Tamuuz, Jenny's one-time priest-in-charge, who'd been seen in town with her daughter, my sixth cousin, a few times. Her daughter was elsewhere, thankfully.

Others along were Christine's helicopter pilot, Leon Agnew, undressing, and Kathleen and Winnie's Vestal Virgins colleague, Gloria Mabaso, who had a gorgeous brown to black skin. I knew they weren't virgins but I didn't think any of them mixed in this company.

Kathleen pointed out that several people attending were controversial from Linda's point of view. There was Helen McPhail with Stephen McPhail, the exhibitionists and already rubbing each others' bodies: Stephen had mentored Linda. Most controversial of all for Linda, surely, was mask-wearing and in the buff Keith Jupitas himself, Manager of Compliance at Harwich, Linda's divorcee, arriving with local and also mask-wearing naked Yojana Asthana, involved in planning this event. So what was all that about her and Adam Magellan? Keith was supposed to be with Cheryl Mould living in Harwich, and he was back with her. Adam and Yojana had been deceptive, perhaps. The two really controversial people not present were John Barman and Jonathan Eyre.

However, controversial to me, and showing that all the fundamentalist and GARFOB stuff was rubbish, was Rhiannon Fleetwood. "Hello Violent," she said to me. "I wouldn't miss this for the world. Fancy a fuck with a big dildo later on?"

"Not really, thanks," I replied.

She gave Fatima Tamuuz a sloppy kiss. However, she coupled up with James Thorne. That was interesting.

Furqan Ahmed, of ConnectSernin (a technology firm: no connection to the public house) in Titansea turned up.

In addition there were a good number of Werburgh Geese and Ganders, basically bare and crotchless gear prostitutes providing ad hoc partners. I knew about the multiple meanings of 'Geese' local and mythological.

A few people were business-based that Peter, Kathryn and Kathleen did not know.

Christine, Elizabeth, Bill, Pauline, and Arianwen stood behind the table, and naked reverend Deacons Winnie and Kathleen brought in wine and bread to the long table.

This was when latecomers arrived, including Margaret McEnhill with Penny Schofield. Their presence surprised me. "Allie, where's the best place to lie down and enjoy?" Penny asked me.

"I don't know. I'm here to observe."

Bishop Elizabeth said, into a microphone on her opened gown, "Ladies and gentlemen - in a non-binary way, of course: in a minute or two we'll start."

I went in the kitchen and wrote some names into my notebook while Kathleen and Winnie got in some early naked groping and snogging. Then I came out.

Elizabeth spoke again. "Well, it's absolutely great to be back with you again. Most people I recognise and some I don't. I'm Bishop Elizabeth Huett, and the last time I was involved in this gathering it was led by the Contraternity in the National Church. Now, however, we are part of the Liberal Charismatic Apostolic Ecclesia, and we are continuing to be very positive about sex and the divine orgasm. You were all asked to look at the Serninsea Liberal Bethel Statement on Sexuality made available online early today, and we have a similar teaching statement on the LCAE website as guided by its Confraternity."

"Pity," said Rhiannon Fleetwood aloud.

Christine said, also into a small microphone, "That's the way it is, Rhiannon. But thanks for coming: you're very welcome."

"We're under new management," said Elizabeth. "However, we still require your discretion, including Rhiannon, because this is that sort of event that we want you to know about but not everyone wants to hear about. You may remember last time when Rabbi Maurice Neptune led us in a chant to say, 'I promise to support the The Worshipful Company of Serninsea Theatrical Players by observing the utmost discretion in wider society.' Well, we are not doing that any more, but the stance is still relevant and it is good to see him again despite receiving a denominational rap on the knuckles. If you want refreshments, Kathleen and Winnie are naked in the kitchen but not accepting offers for sex and please don't go in the kitchen yourselves. They'll come to the door and bring what you want. Please drink plenty of water. Alfia Shrimpton in the rather fetching latex with flaps is a researcher, and she's all confidential."

"Can I say that I can go into the kitchen so won't always be out here. I might want to talk to some of you people along the way."

"Try not to upset their enjoyment too much," said Liz.

Christine said, "I see her as part of God's work. Try and help her, folks."

What interested me here was the references back to The Worshipful Company and the Confraternities, which suggested continuity rather than something fresh. Christine was the new boss: same as the old boss, perhaps.

"Now," Elizabeth continued, "everyone here is to enjoy themselves, and that means you go with whom you want along with the proviso that the word 'no' means no. Plus you've either been to the clinic and are clear right now, or there are those preventers in bowls. Also, sit on towels like the naturists do; with the best wills in the world, some of your arses are shitty.

"I've forgotten some important points. First of all, can we just think of our late friend and one-time participant, the Reverend Kenneth Osis, who recently committed suicide. We also should think of our fantastic initiator, Jenny World, who is in hospital, I'm afraid, with her recurring mental illness. I think she would have joined us tonight. We won't do a minute's silence and all that. And hello to new people: you're not forced to do anything. This includes our researcher. Watch others, if you want. Photographs and recordings need consent."

Christine said, "This is not a dating agency either. Sex in here is to be for its divine impact. What happens here is sacred to here."

With Elizabeth's introduction over, Kathleen brought Christine an aspergillum and an aspersorium, and she thus went around the space dipping the former into the latter to spray water all over the people and place. Christine stopped and exclaimed, "Every blessing and bring down the Holy Spirit on our activities."

Once done, Kathleen took away her water-spraying devices.

Elizabeth continued: "Can I mention that we rejected having security cameras in here, but masks are for your anonymity if needed. Please don't ignore our raffle. We are collecting for a good cause, for retired seamen."

I gave a smile over that choice of charity.

She went on, "The prize is a session with our slim Lucy Catchpole here. She does have a lovely young body, as you can see in all its glory. Lucy says that she wants to lose her virginity to one of you folks here. If a female wins she can still give her a good time. For that reason, she doesn't have a Werburgh Goose badge yet. Tickets are ten pounds each, but where could you meet a delightful lass like this for ten pounds? Tell you what. Show us what the folks here can enjoy."

"No dogs?" asked Helen McPhail.

"It was a ridiculous rumour with no reliable basis in fact," said Christine. (On the other hand, the rumour had spread around this lot.)

On the massage table, the featured young woman got on, widened her legs and spun around.

"But I have to say that unfortunately our sixth former here excludes our headteacher, deputy head and teaching student from the raffle entry, just in case. You see, Annie, you're a year older now and Lucy has taken your place! You can put a tenner in."

(I did not know a deputy head and teaching student were present. I had it to add to my notes.)

Some came forward readily dropping ten pound notes into a dish by the kitchen, and Kathryn, showing her small bump of pregnancy, was handing out numbered tickets.

"Before we go to our beds and seats and airbeds, let us consider by ritual the revelation that comes through the orgasm. We have two women and one man to be initiated within today's Body Eucharist. Do you want to join us at the altar table, Rhiannon?"

"No thanks. Anglicans cannot participate in others' rituals."

"Won't stop me," said James Thorne out loud.

"I'm a clergywoman with responsibilities," said Rhiannon.

Narrator: Linda Christening of Sorts (Saturday 11th January)

Roger and Marie came into the building carrying bedding. I was in the library/meeting room, considering some additional titles to have delivered, when he came over and said, "Give us fifteen minutes and come up."

So I did, and when I went up I was almost embarrassed to be the only one dressed. I should have undressed before ascending the stairs. My togs came off rapidly and was immediately drawn to Marie's body.

I ran my right hand down her left arm and said, "Obviously I saw your body at the mission, but it is beautiful. Roger is so fortunate to have a sister and lover like you."

"One breast is bigger than the other."

"Marginally. So what? May I touch them?"

Roger said, "Don't get Marie too wet or I won't have any purchase. It's why we limit foreplay. We are going to christen our new room, and it's great you are with us, Linda."

I did feel her breasts, and she reciprocated. Hers were smaller than mine but a shape that would have set mathematicians with all sorts of lines and angles to discover perfect ratios.

I asked Marie if she'd mind bending over, so I could feel her bottom cheeks. She was quite smooth.

"Your rosebud is delightful," I said, spreading her bottom cheeks.

Of course I reciprocated.

Roger indicated that Marie should get on to the bed quickly, on to which they had put their bedding, the duvet now pulled off to the floor.

He nodded so that I should get alongside her. I said, "Please, let me?"

As a result, as he made himself more ready, I exposed the head of Marie's clitoris and applied my tongue around. I parted her lips - as much to look as excite - and saw some moisture.

He said, "If you over stimulate her, I'll have to go into donor mode."

"Did you with Mrs. Carter?" I asked.

"No. I suspect she produced more than in decades but there was purchase, grip, and it was good."

"It was," I said.

So now I lay alongside and put my hand on Marie's left thigh as Roger positioned himself.

I said, "I did something like this with a friend and her husband. It was part of a programme to spice up their sex life - my presence."

Marie asked, "Did you do anything?"

"I did, yeah. She was rubbish at fellatio, he was rubbish at cunnilingus."

"Show me - with Roger."

So Roger diverted his target, as I paid him attention. I did a lot of tongue work, but when he went in deep to my throat Marie's eyes almost popped out.

She asked, "How do you do that?"

Obviously I could not answer. But when he came out I said, "I'd have to teach you, and it does take time."

Now he went into her, and as I suspected they were a perfect fit. He went right in and right to the limit. He had full manoeuvrability, and his technique, and her reception, in her face and body, was a delight to watch. I touched his balls, but neither he nor her needed stimulation.

"Marie is on the pill," he said, "but what about I come in you, as part of the christening? You, our landlord, so to speak."

"I'm not really your landlord," I said. "Allie and I rent to the bethel in the same way. It'll have to be shallow."

When he withdrew the complete length from Marie, I opened my labia to welcome him in, and certainly plenty remained outside, glistening with her lubrication.

Very soon he pumped into me, and he cried out, "The bedding!"

Marie jumped to protect their sheet, cupping her hand to receive what he'd put in, and sucking from it, meaning she was tasting and consuming a combination of his semen, my lubrication and her lubrication.

When he was done he went on to his back, and we made space so that Roger was in the middle. It let us touch him as he started to go down.

He said, "I name this room our new home."

"Well," I said, "that was very pleasant. It will definitely add to the images in my head."

I then asked them if they would consider using the mikveh. It could be now or later. We'd need to shower first.

So we went downstairs. We showered, including directing the hose into both Marie's and my vaginas. Then we headed naked over to the mikveh - only some catering students were in the building - and I read a text of blessing.

I said, "Let us submerge the old life and head towards the new life, of living here and your relationship with other residents like me."

So down we went - Roger, Marie and me one by one - into the water and submerged, to hold hands under water, and return up the other stairs one by one, to walk around and leave the mikveh with hugs. It was back to the wet room and cloaks.

They went back up the stairs but I stayed naked in the consulting room. I'd chosen the books. Roger and Marie, now dressed, brought me my clothing, and they left for a restaurant.

Feeling satisfied, I put my clothing on in expectation of people returning from the orgy. I was satisfied that I'd had sex personally and pastorally, not impersonally and with exploitation as above the casino. We agreed to keep the sex quiet, as with the encounter with Gertrude Carter, but we'd admit to the mikveh transition.

Body Eucharist

Elizabeth now said, "Please be gathered at the front for our Body Eucharist, a celebration of all things sacrificial and good, to include within it the initiation of Michaela MacKenzie, Rebecca Holloway and Leslie Paul."

I guessed that Michaela might be forty-something and the other two fifty-something, all of a little larger than average builds.

After a pause, Bishop Bill Masters began by saying, "In the name of God the Father, God the Son and God the Holy Spirit. In Christ's Body, the Church, this Mass incorporates a Sacrificial Service of Initiation into the Vanguard of the Church under the guidance of the Principatus Theocratic Confraternitati admissis in Ecclesia Apostolica Charismatica Liberali or the Confraternity of the Theocratic Principality of the Liberal Charismatic Apostolic Ecclesia."

Now I had seen this service on the website, as it was practised at the Titantsea Grand Hotel. What I wanted to note were the changes.

Christine Vine thus repeated that the Vanguard is not about a superior form of Christian but about guidance to bring about the expected Kingdom. It was sacrificial, to bring about salvation. Now she said, of course, "Only bishops of the Ecclesia Apostolica Charismatica Liberali organise the Principatus Theocratic Confraternitati admissis in Ecclesia Apostolica Liberali; and their priests may join them as initiators, although guest clergy may assist in the Eucharistic act. Those initiated come under the authority of the Principatus Theocratic Confraternitati admissis in Ecclesia Apostolica Charismatica Liberali and receive a white Badge of the Werbergh Goose in black.

This was similar to Confirmation, and yet not, she explained. She said to them that we are all: "erotic theosexual, Christosexual, Spiritsexual beings, aware of our lifespan, bodies and sexuality." She praised God as before, in a trinitarian kind of way.

I was confused: were initiated members of the Werburgh Geese members of the Church or not? Apparently they were not; perhaps like the famous Winchester Geese they were part in and part out. But what were they then?

Bishop Bill Masters spoke in the liturgy as before, that we find God in our corporeal selves, again in a kind of trinitarian manner - Communion is gaining an awareness of our bodies. This he linked to the original Jewish source, and then sending out Apostles to all nations.

None of these initiates were clergy, so the instruction that clergy had to be able to at least say the Creed, the Lord's Prayer, and the Ten Commandments hardly mattered. The others just had to give service and sacrifice - including their own corporeal being - to others.

Christine said that the candidates had given written consent, but they were asked here to assent and confirm their coming under the authority of the Principatus (etc.).

"We do," the three said together, from the liturgy.

The "Body Mass" (Christine) was approached with an instruction to seek forgiveness and make amends or, if not prepared to do this, consider skipping the Mass itself.

Bishop Bill said that in the "Body Eucharist" bodies are offered in preparation for God's grace through God's body. Bishop Pauline addressed the initiates to take the fluid of bishops carefully and healthily. She mentioned that all concerned had received certificates of good sexual health within the past days.

So much said by Bill and Christine was about preparation and cleansing and to receive mercy and praise to give thanks.

Bishop Bill gave the Collect: "O God on this day, bless our gathering and our intimacies. We humbly beseech you so that in all our thoughts, words, and works, we may ever seek your honour and glory."

Christine's Creed was completely different from the one recorded as given at the hotel. Instead she used the Council Stance. "We are an Ecclesia because we accept the seven sacraments of Catholicism, and the Eucharist is central in defining our communion around the sacrifice of Jesus Christ. We are Apostolic because we maintain the lines of Succession of bishops in valid Apostolic Churches. We are Charismatic in expressing free responses guided by the Spirit. We are Liberal in allowing clergy doctrinal freedom alongside retaining basic ecumenical statements. Amen."

It was back to 'The Peace' and 'Draw near with faith' as before. I joined in with the kissing, and some meant it too. Quite nice, really. I accepted Rhiannon's deliberate approach.

Then Bishop Christine stated: "And so we, the ordained of this Ecclesia, will transfer part of our living, Spirit-given, life-fluids, to the candidates for initiation, in an Act of Apostolic Life, and then you may come forward for Communion. Take our sex areas to your mouths for the embrace, and then receive."

Clearly this was going to be a more explicit event than at the hotel. Linda had approved of that one.

Christine instructed the people and the initiates. "Our Lord said, this is my Body or Flesh and this is my Blood or Vitality. Initiation candidates, come and wait until all have partaken. All the time on this earth you have enjoyed your body, otherwise you came into this world with nothing and you will leave with nothing."

The bishops seemed to make tongue and genitals contact with each other, in the form of kisses to said parts, and one penis insertion into Elizabeth's mouth by Bill, prior to eating the bread disc and prior to drinking wine. We had here Christine with wine, Elizabeth with bread, Pauline with wine, Bill with bread and Arianwen with bread.

What was I to do? Observe or participate?

Among others, about half way through, I went forward. I approached Arianwen to first lick her hairless pubic mound, and then after wiping the area with a cloth she gave me my bread disc, and I ate it as I chose Pauline to lick her equally hairless pubic area, for her to wipe it and then for me to receive a sip of the wine and have the goblet top wiped.

What this meant was that not only were we sharing wine between different mouths to the same goblet, but this followed licking what seemed to be very recently shaved and lightly perfumed pubic areas. I had thought of taking in Bill's penis, which meant his grip of the cloth on his member after such an insertion. And I noticed the odd man who inserted it too, so Bishop Bill was being very holy about it, because he was definitely heterosexual by my information, the gay stance being a diversion for his daughter to think she was his niece.

The one person who did not partake was Rhiannon Fleetwood; yet I and others had received her kiss of peace.

The three candidates for initiation waited until the end. Three airbeds were brought forward by Kathleen and Winnie and placed in front of the altar table. Michaela MacKenzie, Rebecca Holloway and Leslie Paul lay on one each from our left to right.

"Listen and remember," said Christine: "we are erotically theosexual, Christosexual, Spiritsexual, and this act is inspired by the Holy Spirit."

Christine squatted above the head of Michaela, Bill above the head of Rebecca, and Pauline above the head of Leslie. I didn't know if Michaela was lesbian or not, but the upshot was she was manipulating with her fingers Christine's pubic lips and inserting her tongue, whereas Rebecca was licking Bill's balls and taking in his penis to her mouth, and Leslie was doing as Michaela did but heterosexually.

I suppose rubbing the cloth so often meant that Bill was more easily able to ejaculate into Rebecca's mouth after some of what she did rather impressively to him, and then he was able to rise, turn and acquire for her a bread disc to chew as she sat up. Christine urinated a small amount into Michaela's mouth, and thus Bill leaned over and gave her a bread disc too. I think Pauline was just wet from engaging in sex, and this was deemed enough, and so Leslie received a disc from Bill as well. From sitting positions, they turned to receive the wine. There was no attempt to rinse their mouths. This was the point: they had taken the bishops' fluids as part of receiving the hosts.

This was full-on, then, and not as circumspect as reported about the hotel. They meant it, and everyone saw it. This Body Eucharist, a thanksgiving to the Divine, was strongly sexual. I wish I'd been at the hotel to make my own evaluation.

"Candidates," said Christine, "By taking our bodily fluids, in the context of a Holy Thanksgiving, we initiate you, Michaela MacKenzie, Rebecca Holloway and Leslie Paul, into the authority of the Principatus Theocratic Confraternitati admissis in Ecclesia Apostolica Charismatic Liberali or Confraternity of the Theocratic Principality of the Liberal Charismatic Apostolic Ecclesia. You are now Werburgh Geese, male and female, and you give your complete loyalty to the Confraternity into which you have been initiated and do support with intimate bodily love other Werburgh Geese, male and female."

Christine again: "God, hear our prayers."

We all said, "God hear us."

Christine again: "These people as Werburgh Geese, both male and female, will give their complete loyalty to the Confraternity into which they have been initiated."

So they were 'in' then, I thought, still unsure.

"Support them please, and make love with them! Let us pray. Almighty, eternal and living God, who once regenerated our initiates by Water and the Spirit, and who forgives them since: through your gifts of grace at this ceremony give them a renewed sense of purpose in membership under the Principatus Theocratic Confraternitati admissis in Ecclesia Apostolica Charismatic Liberali, and give them the confidence to use their bodies and life-force in the spreading of service within Your Gospel. Amen."

I noticed the slight clumsiness with using the word 'Geese' and dealing with two females and one male.

The service concluded as it had at the hotel, and the airbeds were taken back to their positions before, and the folks went off to get their places around various screens and partitions.

I went into the kitchen to make some notes. After a short while, Christine came in, still in her open gear. She said she'd needed the loo, the other side of the wall, having stopped her own peeing within the ceremony. Relieved, she came in to ask me if I had questions.

"Why were you more explicit this time, Christine?"

"It was more restrained at the hotel but here they're used to it. I said 'yes' to Elizabeth in that the McPhails wanted to come and Fatima Tamuuz being in town again. Liz, Fatima and Akemi visited Jenny yesterday. I said yes to Keith with Yojana, only because Linda had refused to come along, otherwise I'd have rejected his participation. Elizabeth did not ask if John Barman and Jonathan Eyre could come, and if she had I would have refused them regardless. Listen, Allie, I believe in this. I didn't orgasm straight after the hotel ceremony, but I will tonight, mingling with the people of God, and Bill did in fact for the initiate, which is pretty good at his age! We are trying to bring in the Kingdom, and this is how we do it. God will be impressed and must respond."

"But are they members of the Church are not?"

"They are Werburgh Geese. That means they agree to come under the authority of the Church's guiding institution, and accept the vanguard role."

"But if as baptised they are members of the Church; what is the sacramental act of initiating? What does it change?"

"Two questions. They are baptised to be saved. Baptism is an act of salvation, and yes they are members of the Universal Church. Werburgh Geese involve the baptised, and the initiated are confirmed to its programme of action. They act on the guidance of the specific Confraternity of the Church. But the Liberal Charismatic Apostolic Ecclesia has minor and major orders of clergy only as members."

I wrote this down because it seemed to me to involve a contradiction.

Members of the Serninsea Vestal Virgins and of Taunton Tantria were primarily members of those groups. They were also members of the loose overarching The Bodies of the Concerned and were Ambassadors and Fighters of Concern. This is why a member of one group was expected to become a member of another in a new locality. That's why I broke my initiation act and vow, and 'bodies' meant my corporeal body and all the institutions of the post-Buddhist groups that had formed. Essentially the Christians and the post-Buddhist Pagans were playing around with the same concepts. (The post-Buddhist groups were not Gnostic in basis.)

Christine had more to say. "Linda thinks we are extremists. So what? We haven't given up on this at all, not a bit of it. And Apostolic Succession is absolutely crucial - our body fluids have to be valid and legitimate when we or our priests initiate. I tried to get Bishop Niall Ifan, or Nigel Evans, to come and would have sent my helicopter, and incardinated him first, to then initiate Michaela, but he is too ill presently. We needed another male, really. Michaela did very well, under me, because, as you'll see, she is very heterosexual. She showed an example there of self-sacrifice, licking me and accepting my urine."

"Don't the post-Buddhist groups solve the confirmation puzzle?" I asked.

"Your Taunton Tantria etcetera are all confused, because your lay membership seems also to suggest some sort of priesthood."

"Protestants?" I asked.

"Well, there you go," Christine replied.

"I'm not in it any more, but we recognised our bodies as we were and who were were, and offered service via a commitment to develop them in assertive defence and sexual confidence. I still have those principles but broke from membership to do my research."

"You could rejoin, now. Aren't you a Fighter of Concern?"

"Anyway, they might not have me. And what about actual Pagans, with levels of initiation?"

"Too much is ad hoc to be sure about what is going on there. Werbugh Geese should develop sexual confidence. But they are lay. Listen, the ontological difference is reserved for clergy, and priests are extensions of bishops. We give a little bit of ourselves to laity as a mark of their decision towards commitment."

"Pagans have High Priests."

"Yeah yeah. Now much as I'd like to chat, I want someone to give me an orgasm. This orgasm is an extension of the ritual thanksgiving. I suppose it would be best if I'd done as Bill did, orgasm at the ritual itself. I'll admit that much."

"One more thing. Rhiannon Fleetwood is here."

"Oh, Elizabeth invited her and it's fine by me."

"She's a troublemaker."

"Elizabeth has told her to behave. If you want, you can have sex with me in this setting. Do you want that? You'll have to make me come!"

"I'd rather interview," I said. "I've kept my gear on."

"You've got flaps! The offer is open, Allie. I'd like it."

Christine thus went searching for her requirement, and I also went out of the kitchen in my intention to interview.

Interviewing Above the Casino

Business trader Peter Brabazon was engaging in the missionary position with Bishop Arianwen Bron, on a bed. So I sat on the floor nearby, and I reached her body height.

"Hello," I said, unsure what to say.

"Join us," said Peter Brabazon, while pumping away. "Have to get that gear off."

"If you can answer, bishop, please do. Take your time," I said to her as she turned to look across at me, her face strained and her breath quickening. "What Church are you from?"

"I am a... Druid-Bishop in the Eglwys... Geltaidd Mynydd Trawsnewidiad. Mmm. We are, as Christine would say, apostolically sound. Gosh. He's good, isn't he? It is bringing back the Druids... that we lost."

"I'll move on. You're too busy."

"Read up on the Unitarian lolo... Morgannwg and his, mmm, connection with the... Druids, and now... their place in the Gorsedd."

"We studied him," I said, and did not add that lolo Morgannwg was a fantasist.

"I'm getting... closer, Peter." She further said, "Can I answer you later, my sweet? I'd like to have you, as well. Get your clothing off."

"Thanks. Enough for me," I said, getting up.

Around another partition was our Peter and Kathryn, and they were fucking quite gently. "We're not going with anyone else. Supporting Christine."

Moving about, I gave a wave to Leon Agnew, the pilot, who was enjoying one of the sex workers brought in for the occasion.

I found Charles Brabazon, Peter's brother, fucking into a substantial growth of pubic hair possessed by Helen McPhail, alongside Stephen McPhail fucking Fatima Tamuuz. "Can I talk to you folks? Please don't stop. It will be very brief." They seemed to nod. "You're Stephen McPhail, and you were Linda Jupitas's mentor, weren't you?"

"I was. She was disobediant. It's water under the bridge. Hey, Rhiannon's coming over. Go with her."

"I'd rather not. But you're on the 'other side' of Christine Vine versus John Barman."

Helen said, "Christine's Church runs the show. But we know Tess, obviously."

"Tess?" I asked them, as a woman behind me stroked my bottom.

Rhiannon said, "Come on, let's have some pleasure for a change. Get that fucking stuff off."

"Excuse me, I'm busy. Who is Tess?"

Helen said, "Bishop Elizabeth. It's a pity Jenny couldn't come. She once had a queue of seven blokes, one after the other, with a thirty minute total stopwatch on all of them. She was good."

Stephen then said, "Rhiannon wants you."

"I don't want her."

"I'll find someone else," she said, grabbing my PVC covered right breast from behind and then letting go. Then she realised, and opened the flap for my breast to drop out. "Peace and love, woman!" She went looking for someone else.

I felt an itch on my left breast so opened that to scratch around it.

Helen said, "Hey, she's come prepared after all! You're researching Linda Jupitas's new church?"

"Yes." I closed the flaps.

Helen said, "She had such potential with us. Have you had sex with her? Come on Charles, get the rhythm right or I'll have to sort you out."

"I'm not sure I should say," I said.

"I'll take that as a 'yes', deary."

"The point is, did you?"

"Definitely. Both of us. Linda finished us off all right with it all going public. Thus we have Christine now. Tell her we were all very troubled by Ken Osis dying."

"Why did you punish Linda?"

Stephen answered. "She needed virtually destroying to come back up reformed... Christine, for all her... talk about sacrifice, believed too much in personal choice."

Fatima said, "Interesting questions and answers. Get on with it."

I said, "Christine has a sacrifice view but also has clients."

Stephen continued, "Jim Wilson and Connie - shame they've gone - weren't hard... enough if you ask me. Sorry, but that is what I think. We nearly succeeded so that Linda would never again disobey."

Helen said, "She had a duty as a priest. She let us down. But we forgive: it's in the past."

I asked the woman under Stephen. "Fatima. Sorry to interrupt. Do you have any ongoing relationship with Philip Shrimpton?"

"No. Are you related to him?"

"Yes. Fifth cousin once removed."

"That means you're sixth cousin to Akemi."

"It does. I know because of my heroine Alice Shrimpton. Alice is the four times great aunt of Philip."

"Love to talk, Allie, but I am busy and have my priorities."

"I'd like to meet Akemi."

"You would?"

"Yes."

"Sixth cousins are very distant. It'll have to be soon."

"Four in the afternoon tomorrow? 135 Toulouse Road."

"I'll bring her. Akemi has a baby sitter."

"Thank you very much. Enjoy your evening."

I found Maurice Neptune, leaning back against the wall between curtained windows, who was being masturbated by one of the provided Werburgh Geese. "Allie, beautiful Allie. Will you join me?"

"I want to interview you."

"On the end of my penis, I hope."

"Er, well, you're busy." This did not work, because he dismissed the prostitute, and thus I was with a familiar man facing an unfamiliar proposal regarding men and me (other than Jonnie).

"Is this sexy gear to protect your virtue?" he asked. "I've seen such gear: flaps to open."

"Linda is my fiancé."

"Share and share alike," he said. Thus he pulled at the vulva flap and I was exposed enough for him to simply go into me. I treated his movement as part of the interviewing.

I asked, "You've come here after your disciplining?"

"Evidently. I am friendly with Christine and Elizabeth. I am so pleased that they are working together. I hoped to see Linda here."

"No chance."

"Because she is your fiancé?"

"No. She hates this place after her experiences here."

"I wanted to have her, if for one final time. But now... I have you. You don't think I can see her privately, now?"

"How?"

"I could ring her." He concentrated a few moments on his thrusting. "You really have got a lovely vagina; it is very snug and wet, Allie."

"Yes, I'm enjoying it."

"Would it be worth me walking over to the church? Like her and me there, instead of here?"

"She's so against tonight she'll not want sex. She's warned me about tonight."

"You have to behave yourself?"

"I'm sure I'm fine with you. Are you going to tell me about some Jewish theologian or philosopher?"

"I told Linda those things partly because I wanted her to be a rabbi or an informed rabbi's wife, a rebbetzin."

"Yeah."

"I could tell you instead... about the algorithms... I developed... when I was a banker."

"Nice."

"I made money... when the markets dropped. Are you enjoying my insertions here, just like the market going up and down?"

"Very droll, Rabbi Maurice. It's just a fuck: a male member doing its thing. Though I like you."

"I'm going to have to chat with Charles Brabazon after our pleasures. This is a place for networking."

I said, with my sufficient enjoyment, "I don't want to ask about theologians or banking. John Barman: tell me about him. He used to run this event. "

"Allie: people fuck and then network. As for Barman, I was friendly. I liked them all. I think he has plans to resume... being an active bishop."

"Oh?"

"Along with Jonathan. Widen your legs a bit. I'll open your nipples' flaps. Lean on me."

"How do you know about Barman?"

"Because he contacted me."

"He did?"

"Are you on birth control, Allie?"

"Yes. Something like this could happen and now has."

"Then I shall come inside you."

"Okay."

At this point, Rhiannon was behind me again, opening a back flap and putting a finger to my anus.

"Why don't you fuck off?" I reacted.

The rabbi shook his head in disapproval at my comment. Then he shared his seed with me, and I leaned further over and kissed him, to say I'd move on, turning my to glance at her.

Maurice then said, "Now now, Allie, this is a place to be generous, to turn the other cheek if you like, even to those we don't like."

"She's already been in between both cheeks," I replied.

She said, "Come on Allie. Look at me. Generosity!"

As Rhiannon continued poking my arse, he said, "We two should have enjoyed one another in Wytham. I did admire your body in the jacuzzi."

"Ah," said Rhiannon, behind me, pushing her finger far in, "the truth emerges."

Ignoring her I said, "I thought you had an excellent technique with Linda."

At this point I gave Maurice a kiss to his forehead, jerked my bottom forward to release her finger, and walked around Rhiannon. Suddenly, I fancied experiencing Christine. But when I approached her, Christine called out that the raffle would be drawn and people ought to pay attention, either by pausing or coming from the screens and partitions to look at the draw. Rhiannon followed me closely, as I closed my various flaps, but we stood to look on like most participants.

Rhiannon took my attention by sucking her finger that had been up my arse.

Bishop Arianwen, now freed of her fucking, was asked to draw the one winning ticket. She said, "Someone take away the virginity of slim sixth-former Lucy Catchpole! God loves those who cease to be virgins. Where is she?"

This seemed to me to be an interesting rewrite of the Christmas story.

Elizabeth then added the point: "Yes, someone will deflower our shy and hiding away lassie, Lucy Catchpole herself. Thank you headteacher, Kay Sally Parker, for introducing us to her so that she can do her duty."

The long-serving just retired headteacher waved her hand and then covered her mouth.

The winning number was held by... Keith Jupitas. He emerged (no longer masked), and came to stand near Christine and this massage table.

Christine demanded, "Lucy, come out, shy one."

Elizabeth said, "Take a break from your sixth form Oral levels."

Slim Lucy, his prize, came from the kitchen naked, holding a cushion below her small breasts, her eyes looking down. She dropped the cushion down to drop on to it with her knees, to start sucking off Keith. Yojana came behind Keith and started stroking his bottom as Lucy did her prize-giving. Rhiannon reached around me, pulled the flaps down in front of my breasts and pinched my nipples. This time I let her do it, because I saw Maurice looking at me and smiling.

Lucy then got up on to the massage table, and Keith got on to it as well, with Yojana clapping them, as Lucy lay back and gave her open-legged prize. He was clearly up to the job.

Give an inch... My bottom flap was down and Rhiannon put her finger up me again.

Yojana said, "Deposit loads in her," and thus Keith took her cue. He removed her apparent virginity completely. Everyone clapped, and Lucy withdrew back to the kitchen.

Now came the entertainment, and Helen McPhail came forward, presumably finished with Charles Brabazon. She sat on the massage bench and opened her legs wide. Ah, it was Mr. Oldfield coming through the double doors, and the people gasped not because he soaped her up so rapidly but because he produced his lethal cut-throat razor. He then moved swiftly around her crotch, and when he removed the soap with his rag the hair had all gone. She then got on her knees and stuck her bottom out, so he soaped that and any hair around her anus had soon gone.

"Wow!" said Rhiannon from behind me.

Of course I remembered him doing me, and this man was a pure expert. One of the Werburgh Geese prostitutes came forward, and her hair was similarly gone in a flash, so that the tattoo on her thigh of a snake was revealed fully for its head and tongue touching her pubic lips.

Christine thanked the two women for growing their pubic hair, especially 'Strawberry' who'd lost her new tattoo behind hair to do this. And Christine thanked Mr. Oldfield, known to her family for many decades, she pointed out.

People went back to sharing their bodies, and I thought about my next interviewee, but was again pestered by Rhiannon.

"Widen you legs then," I said to her." She did. I put my semi-curved fingers to her opening, and put my arm around her shoulders. "Ready? I'm going to press down on your shoulders, so you resist me and press up. Ready?"

"Yeah?"

"Do it now!" Pressing down on her shoulders, It took me one thrust to punch my way into her vagina, curling my fingers to a grip and losing my fist.

Of course she screeched, groaned and moaned. I gathered my strength, and with that arm alone lifted her up and placed her on to my shoulder.

Seeing this, Arianwen Bron started clapping, as did a number of people including Keith Jupitas and Helen McPhail nearby.

I said to Arianwen, "Take her off my hands."

"Off your fist," Arianwen said back.

So I took Rhiannon down on to her feet, plopped out my fist followed by some clear liquid, and gave her an aggressive mouth to mouth kiss, pushing her then towards Arianwen.

My next interviewee was obvious: Keith Jupitas, being approached by newly shaven Helen McPhail. She said to me, "I claim the prize-winner, but do come back soon."

Well, I wanted to write up my notes, and did so in the kitchen. A dressed Lucy winked at me and said she would leave the building on Elizabeth's advice. My notes done, I could find Keith.

Helen McPhail was sucking him and masturbating herself, this after his prize-won performance.

I said, "I'm hoping Keith can talk to me."

"You're the researcher," he said. "Linda's church, Professor Roland Mitton, I hear."

"Yes."

"Come closer," said Helen, the result of which was my hand joining in assisting Helen's mouth effort. Gosh, I was wanking a man who was once Linda's husband into Helen's mouth.

I said, "You prepared your ex-wife for her role in the National Church Confraternity."

"I was definitely in favour of her future role, yes."

"She was punished," I stated.

"She became the priest, not me, and she had the special role to enact. I'd have done it; why couldn't she?"

"Did you prepare her over a long period? Her anal canal is enlarged and she said you did this."

"That was when we were students. You've obviously slept with her."

"I've seen it. I'm her fiancé."

"I see," said Helen. "She's turned lezzy to go after you."

"And not for Adam," I added. "You did free menstruating with her," I said to Helen.

"She must tell you everything."

Keith said, "I developed her deeper route in. Keep going both of you. Let Allie suck me, Helen." I did, and put in some effort. "Hey, Allie's good - where did you develop suction like that? Not with Linda, obviously."

"At home," I said, pausing the action. Helen was wanking him. I resumed additional sucking, looking at him.

"All we did together... proved - when the new situation came - that she was a great... candidate for the Confraternity. She would sacrifice herself. When she didn't, she put herself... in a very bad place."

Again I paused. "And you left her for Cheryl Mould."

I resumed.

"The marriage was over. I was acting for the Confraternity. I'd have fucked her later but only within the Confraternity. Now if I do get ordained, it won't be in Linda's Church. I'll keep away."

Pausing the fellatio: "Would it be in Christine's? She's very strong-willed, quite dominating."

Me resuming, he said, "Not by choice. Have you had sex with Christine?"

I didn't answer for a while. Then I withdrew to say, "I thought I might tonight; otherwise she says she's too expensive. Do you want to be ordained soon?"

"Ask fewer questions and suck more!"

Helen got her hand around my body to bring me closer to her, and momentarily change my focus to her. She said to him, "Open the flap to fuck her, Keith, and I'll do the one round the back."

Turned to face her, the flaps down, she placed a finger into my anus, and then raised me upwards, my bottom sticking up.

He went into my vagina.

As he found a rhythm, I asked, "So how will you be ordained, Keith? Obviously not using the rites of the National Church!"

"I'll do similar to Linda. I'm in touch with people. There are plans."

As Helen used a hand to expose and feel my breasts, I assured him. "My notes are confidential, Keith. You can tell me."

"You sleep with my wife!"

"Ex-wife. I'm her fiancé now. I never discuss my work. We have strict boundaries."

"Linda won't like what Geoff Virgo and his partner have planned. I'm in touch with Terry Barman. He has his plans."

"Who's that? John Barman's brother?"

Keith said, "Terry Barman is John Barman. Same man. I'm beginning to like you, Allie."

She asked me, "Have you ever been fisted, love?"

"Often."

"Linda done it?" Keith asked, pumping away.

"I shouldn't really say."

"Did she fall out with that arsehole Magellan? Most people do."

"He's left the premises."

"Then fucking you is quite a privilege," he said.

Helen added. "We always knew that Linda was flexible. Are you flexible? Can I get my hand in too?"

"Do it."

Leaving my anus alone, she adjusted her position. A whole hand was added to the penis in me.

I decided to slow them down.

"Wow, you have some strong muscle power. That's learnt!" Helen called out.

"In Somerset."

"Must be the apples." Then Helen said, "Keith, Linda's got herself one good lover here. She and Linda must be incredible. Allie is a revelation. Orgasm time for her."

Keith soon ejaculated into me, and Helen used the new lubrication to work me up.

"We're going to have to have you at the next gathering here," said Keith. "Yes to Yojana but my journey was definitely worth it, finding you."

Keith focussed more on working my PVC covered breasts with his fingertips, reaching from behind. It happened: I shuddered from Helen's fisting efforts, and she did not stop. So I shuddered again. She realised that I was multi-orgasmic, and on that basis she slid her hand out partly and Keith slid his larger hand in, stretching me. They knew what they were doing, and I had one orgasm after another as they alternated their hand work.

At this point I had an audience: Christine, Elizabeth, Rhiannon, Arianwen.

I was starting to lose it and eventually fell to the floor. They laughed.

Keith and Helen moved away. Rhiannon could not resist but bent down and inserted her fist, and I shuddered again but showed some anger. She soon removed her hand.

As I looked up, Keith was talking to Elizabeth and Elizabeth was shaking her head.

I shook my head too, finally, and was able to get up and, once steadied, roam some more. On a bed Yojana herself was sat enjoying the snogging company of Annie Fenwick, my drinking buddy, and Jordis Bingham, another sex worker, so I leaned on this bed.

"Hello Yojana, hia again Annie, Jordis. I'm researching tonight."

"Supposedly," said Annie for a moment. "You're so wet on your thighs you could fill up Rutland Water." (The flaps were hanging down.)

"Yojana: you've been a client of Adam. You're not really in any relationship?"

Annie said, "Give it a break, Allie. We're having fun!"

Yojana said, "Nah. A useful deception. I saw you with Keith. Did you like him?"

"Yeah. What's Adam's role here - not here?"

"It's his lease, so he is being paid for what is a private party. The finances go his way."

"And we thought Keith was with Cheryl only now."

Annie touched me around where I was soaked. She said, "You must have enjoyed Keith."

"It was mainly Helen," I said, as Annie's set of fingers went the same way as others had gone.

Yojana asked, "Have you interviewed my uncle yet?" Her fingers also slid into my vagina.

"No. He is..."

"San Bandyopadhyay. Sanjay Bunker. He is a client of Christine's and she is with him again in a back room."

I gave Annie a parting kiss and removed both of their fingers.

The first thing I did was go into the kitchen and made a number of reminder bullet points for later longer notes. I closed all the open flaps. I then went to the other end of the hall and a door to a narrow corridor and three back rooms.

I knocked on the door of one of these rooms, and inside sat with her head down was a naked Christine and vomit all over the floor. Her gowns were on a chair. As she slowly turned her head towards me her eyes were wide and vacant. I'd never seen Christine look so white.

I asked, "Where is, er, San Bandyopadhyay?"

"Toilet: the one at this end of the hall, in the far room."

A naked Peter Marshall suddenly came in. "I'm afraid you have to stop. Are you all right, Christine?"

"I threw up on him. Three times. I got him to do it, just the once. That's why he's in the loo: he can't take it."

End of the Gathering

Peter then said, "Look, there are a load of police out there and no one is allowed to leave. But a short while ago Fatima Tamuuz said she was going to the hotel, the McPhails have gone and no one can find Elizabeth."

I asked, "Police?"

Christine stood up. "We'd better see what is going on, then. There's nothing illegal here. San? San!"

Christine put her gear back on, but the vomit made her bare feet slippery on the ground. San Bandyopadhyay wasn't around, so the three of us went into the hall, and I could see that a woman officer was reading my notebook.

"Hey, that's my research notebook!"

"Is it indeed? Well, we'll have it as evidence because I have just seen a reference to sixth former Lucy Catchpole, which was our tip-off."

There were also another five male police stood by the double doors out. Two female officers then came in through those double doors.

This female officer with my notebook said, "So, Ladies and Gentlemen, you'd better stay as you are, in your various states of undress, and you clergy I take it are the ones in open gowns and stuff. No one leaves here until you have given your name, address and contact details, and you may have to look in your bags to give us proof of identity. We will take a photograph of each and every one of you as well. Don't worry, just your faces and any distinguishing tattoos. Start to form a queue."

A policeman among the initial six, PC Duncan Harris, asked, "Who is the principal person in charge of this?"

Christine came over and said, "I am. And I think you'll find that Lucy Catchpole is in fact Beatrice Taverner, who is nineteen and has never even been in a sixth form. She is one of my workers and left to see a client. The police here know me and I don't tolerate underage prostitution."

"Maybe," said the policewoman with my notebook. Ms. Vine, we'll speak to you at the end. Who are you - your name?" asked a policeman, looking up and down my gear.

"Reverend Deacon Alfia Shrimpton. Your name?"

"Not wearing an open gown? You seem to be the only person covered up!"

"I'm a researcher. I'm in the independent church here, but I am a researcher about it from outside Serninsea. And your name?"

"4125 PC Diana Constance."

Christine still nearby said, "Yes, Allie is as she says."

"Age?" asked PC Constance.

"Thirty."

"Your address."

"135 Toulouse Road, Serninsea."

"Have you lived here for the past five years?"

"No. Because I'm a researcher from the University of Somerset at Glastonbury."

"Your home address - before university, please madam."

"Columns Farm, Walsingham."

"We have your notebook, so you'd better have a receipt. Someone get me a receipt for that notebook. Tell me, is Christine Vine here your bishop?"

"Not directly, but it's Bishop Linda Jupitas. She would not come tonight."

"Division in the ranks? She's very wise."

Another policeman came forward and took a photograph. This policeman said, "You can leave. If we need to interview you, then we will ask. Your notebook might need explanation."

"This is for my research; it contains confidential material."

"Or relevant material regarding tonight's event. You'll get it back. Go. We have others to process."

So I walked over to the bethel in my glamour costume while Christine stayed with the police. I expected Linda to be displeased with events.

Bishop Elizabeth Huett had at last displayed her true hand; the police were not knowingly asking after her, Sanjay Bunker, the McPhails, Fatima Tamuuz or, it seemed, Rhiannon Fleetwood.

Narrator: Linda At the Bethel (Saturday 11th January)

"Thank you for telling me anyway," I said to the Reverend Rhiannon Fleetwood, who'd come into the bethel with news. She wanted to make a rapid exit to the vicarage, where she said some of those who'd left early had gathered.

The police had raided above the casino, on a rumour of a minor taking part in sexual activities. She was a sixth former called Lucy Catchpole, although in my visits to the school I'd never met such a named person.

Allie came in through the private door, in her PVC shiny stuff, walking over.

"Ah, here comes the chief slut of Serninsea."

"The police came," she said. "Hey there's some water on the floor and it's a bit damp. Has someone used the wet room, or the mikveh?"

"Hmm, yes. While you were watching people shagging meaninglessly over there, here you missed what you should have been researching: an actual mikveh ritual."

"You did the readings?"

"I did and I joined in, with Roger and Marie taking their room and looking forward to the future."

"The police raided above the casino."

"I know. Rhiannon Fleetwood called in and told me."

"She's quick off the mark. She left early, like all of those in the know."

"There are people who left early and went to her vicarage."

"They would be Elizabeth, Fatima Tamuuz, the McPhails, and probably San Bandyopadhyay."

"What were the McPhails doing there?"

"Enjoying themselves. Look, I am one of the first people out. The police took my notebook. I wrote in it about what various people said. So they are invading my research privacy. They think there was underage sex going on."

"So I've heard. And was there?"

"No, it was a con. The woman was a sex worker, and never even been a sixth former. Keith won the raffle. Oops."

"Keith. You mean... my Keith?"

"Er... Yes. Ex-Keith. Ex-yours."

"And he was with Yojana Asthana?"

"Er look, this is... Look, I found out he wants to get ordained. But this research, it's confidential."

"Don't you come this research privacy bullshit with me, young lady. This is on a whole different level now. Was Yojana Asthana with him or not?"

"Er... Oh fuck it: yes she was."

"What a cunt - him, I mean. Ordained? What's that about? Anyway, his partner is pregnant, for goodness sake. She does not approve of all this either, so it's as good as cheating. Ordained my arse - and what Church? Who else was there? Anyone I know?"

"I don't know who you know."

"Oh deary me. Let me ask you some questions. Was... John Barman there?"

"No, and neither was Jonathan Eyre. Fatima Tamuuz was there. Rhiannon Fleetwood was there, obviously. Someone called Bishop Arianwen Bron was helping to lead things."

"Never met her."

"She is a Druid-Bishop. There's something else."

"Go on."

"Almost certainly Elizabeth and others set up the police raid."

"Hard luck. Who else would I know there?"

"Mr. Oldfield shaved Helen McPhail's pubic hair away in seconds flat."

"She always was an exhibitionist, like her husband. What is Christine doing now?"

"She would have refused the McPhails permission to attend if you'd attended. She wasn't asked but she refused permission to Barman or Eyre regardless, Linda."

"You're a bastard for even going there!"

"Me? What's it got to do with me? I didn't know these people would be there."

"And how did you interact with all these people, eh?"

"I interviewed them. I was the only one clothed - the bishops had open gowns. I didn't get San Bandyopadhyay, because the police came in when I approached his back room and faced a sea of vomit."

"Vomit?"

"All over the floor."

"Christine, I suppose. So he evaded the police? Did they arrest you and Christine and the rest?"

"We were detained and recorded for further possible investigation."

Peter had just come in through the public double doors. "We were each detained briefly on suspicion of criminal activity taking place. I think - we think - that Elizabeth tipped off the police, and the police came for the fun of it. They know Lucy Catchpole was not real. Everyone knew it was a joke."

"I didn't know it was a joke then," said Allie. "When I write notes I write what people say. Inverted commas come later. The police have got my book."

"So Christine is still there, hanging back," Peter said.

I said, "It's no joke at all that the McPhails were there. Hang on, it's the fuzz."

We waited while this single policeman approached, introducing himself as PC Duncan Harris.

"Are you Bishop Linda Jupitas?"

"I am."

"And you are? Oh, you're that..."

"Allie Shrimpton."

"Peter Marshall."

"We're looking for Adam Magellan."

I said, "He's at his own accommodation, above Magellan Investigations. Why do you want him?"

"He has the lease for above the casino. We'd like to know his part in this activity."

Peter said, "It was a private party."

"I'll ask him. Money was changing hands: the raffle and its prize that a man called Keith Jupitas won. That was before you enjoyed him, Ms Shrimpton.

I looked at her fiercely and slapped her face, without her stopping me.

"I could get you for common assault there, Bishop Jupitas."

"You cunt."

The policeman said, "If you mean me I'll arrest you."

"I meant her."

"Moderate your language, please. I shall go and speak to Mr. Magellan, then, madam." He left the building.

"So, who else went into your cunt, cunt?"

Peter said, "Mind if I withdraw?" He did, towards the kitchen.

"I did what I did to get information."

"And so what information did you get from my bastard ex-husband? Hmm?"

"What happened meant nothing."

"Bye bye, Allie, I think you're going to Toulouse Road tonight - and every night."

"That book was in the kitchen, out of the way of most people. Christine might get to read it. You have the seal of the confessional, and researchers should have the same. I'll contact Professor Mitton tomorrow and get him to write a stiff letter of complaint."

"Not the only thing stiff. You're a fool. Bye bye," I said. "You knew the consequences."

"I want my book back."

"Your mother and father did not raise you to be like this."

"I'm not so sure," Allie said, as she rose to leave the building and turned away. "Or about yours."

"What did you say? Fuck off."

I went upstairs to the half empty double bed, angry at the betrayal. There'd be no marriage!

Moving On and More Young Men (Sunday 12th January)

After a standard Sunday when Christine and I took the service, Christine joined me for breakfast. I wasn't too happy with her. The Reverend Deacon Allie Shrimpton had skipped the service.

Christine had Allie's notebook. She said to me, "Once they'd read it they realised it told them nothing, but I think they might have photocopied a few pages. I have a good relationship with the police. Last night they said they had to act on the tip-off but they spoke with Bea Taverner and of course she was nothing to do with any underage sex. She's thin and looks the part."

"Was Adam annoyed?" I asked.

"He's since been informing the media, to see if he can make money."

"Have you been to the Blue Diamond Club and given Elizabeth what for?"

"I suspect she's not there any more, but I will find out for sure. By the way, Keith will come here on his way home back to Harwich. Did you send Allie away?"

"Yes. I take it she fucked my ex-husband."

"And Helen McPhail, Annie Fenwick had a go, and it all started with Maurice Neptune."

"He was disciplined by his denomination, and he goes there?"

"The notebook said he went there hoping to meet you."

"Well, I was but streets away. I suppose she didn't tell him that."

"She told him, if I understood it right, not to bother."

"Oh, did she indeed? Like I wasn't to bother with Jonathan Eyre, that time?"

"She did you a favour then. Shall I ring her and tell her to come over? I'm afraid I have to do some reckoning with her. You behave yourself, Linda, and let me get her responses."

Christine made the call, to discover that Allie was already on her way to face my music.

As she came in and stood facing us, Christine said, "Allie. The police entrusted me to return your notebook. They didn't hang on to it."

"They should have given it to me."

"But I keep prostitutes off the street and I used my good relationship to get it back. Listen: you were a bit free with your talking last night. Sit down Allie. Linda, listen: your researcher, who keeps her mouth shut, was blabbing our business to all and sundry."

"Was I?" asked Allie, taking a seat opposite me at the edge of this long table.

"For example, blabbing that I am sacrificial but act with clients differently, and you expected sex with me but otherwise I'm too expensive."

"Really?" I asked (and it wasn't really a question).

Allie said to Christine, "You said I could have sex with you, but then you were too busy - with your client."

"Mmm. Linda, more seriously still, I had a message from Helen McPhail this morning, because she'd like to see Allie again. Allie, were exercising your tongue. Helen asked you if you'd had sex with Linda, and, asked if it was good, you said, 'very good,' and you asked if she'd had sex with Linda."

"That was the point!" said Allie.

"And when Keith asked you if you sleep with his former wife - he first said 'wife' - you affirmed the matter, but went on that you never discuss your work with Linda and it has strict boundaries. It has to be said, Allie - you were spewing out opinions and other people's private business."

I got up, walked over to Allie, and slapped her across her face hard, and she didn't deflect me. I sat down again. I said, "You two-faced cunt, you. You've spent so much time telling me nothing, and now you've been wagging your tongue about my personal affairs to all and sundry."

Allie called out, "That's my notebook, not yours, Christine!"

Christine said, "Really? Helen thinks Allie is great. Apparently you have strong vaginal muscles, Allie, and Linda must have a good time. Allie, what's been going on?"

I spoke instead. "This... This is nothing less than a betrayal of me: someone who has loved you and cared for you and proclaimed a coming marriage, and yet you... Yes, 'spewing' is the right word because you were spewing my precious personal life to those creeps: people I never wish to see again."

"These were 'other people'," said Allie. "They're outside our conversation loops."

Christine said, "Obviously not, Allie. Listen: you keep your views to yourself."

I said, "I wouldn't care but this is my inner life: I have risked things with you, Allie; and to think I could partner you, when you've just shat all over me."

Christine added: "Things go around the bush telegraph. You took the ritual and you had sex, and some thought that you were Linda's representative because you were self-declared as Linda's fiancé."

I stood up ready to wallop her again.

Christine instructed me to sit down, so I did. She had more. "Maurice Neptune wished he'd entertained you sexually as well, instead of dumping you in a jacuzzi bath when in Wytham. That's not in the notebook: Helen says you admired the rabbi's rhythm with Linda."

I said to her, "My rhythm? How dare you. You fucked a man asking after me, you selfish bitch; you could have told him to come here, you selfish bitch."

"You made it clear you wanted nothing to do with the event. Anyway, he doesn't want to see you outside an event like that."

"Who says?"

"He did. That's in my notebook."

"I want to punch you in the stomach."

"No you don't. That's enough," Christine asserted. "And so, Allie, my final comment is: you don't go blabbing our business to others. Oh, Allie, don't start crying. I thought you were made of tougher material. I hate it when people start crying." Christine looked about. "Yeah, I've said enough. No violence now, ladies. Sort it out peaceably. Bye bye, see you both shortly."

I sat and leant backwards and just looked at Allie. "Hopefully, your research is coming to an end."

"I'll have to wind it up."

I stood. "I won't hit you. It won't compensate for my sense of devastation. You're a bitch and I hate you. You've no sense of reciprocity, never mind any return of the love I've showed you. Do you know what love is? I bet you don't."

Allie was about to walk off, towards the staircase, but with a certain Keith arriving she stayed, wiping tears with the backs of her hands.

"Oh. You," I said. "Here comes a real shit. You're not welcome, Allie, to listen in."

Allie took her cue and resumed going to and up the staircase. Keith was looking over the building, taking his time and I waited.

"So this is the place," he said, eventually. "Modern and quite compact really. The word went out that you wanted to see me. I said 'hello' to Christine out there."

"Come to my vestry."

So he followed me in, as I sat at my desk and he stood. He said, "This looks like part of an extension. I had a look around the back."

"A good snoop, eh? There used to be a garden here. You took advantage of my inexperienced and fragile fiancé."

"Definitely not," he said. "So you didn't really want to see me."

I said, "Yesterday confirmed one thing. I shall drop the Jupitas surname. I was going to keep it, but you are a complete shit."

Keith said, "She's skilled, your new redhead lover. She can take a trip to Ingle Barrow any day to see the McPhails. They want more."

"No surprise that Adam Magellan lost interest in you; but did you lose interest in him, especially with that spirited sex shocker coming along?"

"I'm not discussing my private life with you."

"Your lover - fiancé - discussed plenty. So does she live with you up those stairs then? Couldn't let me look around up there?"

"It's none of your business. What I know is I don't cheat. You're cheating on Cheryl - again."

"Cheryl will come round to understanding it."

"Meanwhile, it is said you are getting ordained."

"Ah, is this why you wanted to see me? That's my business."

"Who will ordain you? John Barman?"

"Then wait for the public announcement. Do you mind if I go to the loo before my journey to Harwich?"

"Over there, directly across. Unisex."

"I'll go on the way out. You might want my address, for any particularities."

Thus I gained Cheryl's up to date address.

Off he went, going to the unisex toilets across the way.

When he re-emerged, Allie came down the stairs with two full large bags.

"Hello, Allie, again," he said across to her, as she stood just outside the vestry. "Thank you for all that sex last night. Rhiannon says you claim to be a lesbian; for a lesbian you're pretty expert at working the old penis with mouth, hand and cunt." He said, further: "With those vaginal muscles, Helen speculated on your incredible lovemaking with Linda. Moving out?"

Allie's response was: "Why don't you get lost?"

"Jonathan said you were an aggressive sort. Bye bye."

At this point two young men came into the bethel through the main doors.

Keith suddenly looked like he wanted to circumvent them, but one of them blocked him and with his hand shoved Keith's chest.

With this, Allie dropped her bags and ran over to become a third person Keith would have to avoid.

"I think I'm going," Keith said. "Excuse me lady, gentlemen."

Allie responded, "You don't move anywhere. Try to and you'll hit the ground. Make your way to the vestry. If you don't, I'll force it."

As he showed no movement in that direction, Allie rapidly kneed him in the stomach and swiftly spun him around to put his arm up his back and frogmarch him to the vestry, to be placed in front of my desk.

"Come, gents," Allie said. "What's this about?"

Thus, I signalled them to come in, past Allie, and she pulled Keith back. I asked them who they were.

"Well, my name is Ludovic Warren, and I'm twenty-three."

"And my name is Kevin McClelland, and I am seventeen."

"Oh shit," said Keith. "I really must be going."

"Stay," said Allie to him from behind him.

"And the reason we are here is because we discovered ourselves as half-brothers, because he is our father."

"Oh," I said, "Well this is news. Do, Ludovic and Kevin, tell me about yourselves. He's only my former husband and yet I know nothing about you at all."

Ludovic said, "My family relocated to Lude because of him and my mum. They would have nothing to do with him. I've since discovered Kevin, and, at my age, I now decide contact."

Kevin then said, "My mother told me - my eighteenth is in March - that I had a half-brother. As you might expect, Bishop Linda - is it? - this was a shock. Mum learnt how the Warren family years before had moved to Lude. She has stayed in Serninsea, and she has received maintenance for me, that soon ceases - father."

Ludovic said, "My mother never received a penny. The family wouldn't accept it."

"Well well," I said. "And Keith, did you know that these half-brothers had found each other?"

"No. I paid maintenance for Kevin, quietly."

"Very quietly. Well, Ludovic and Kevin, you'll be further pleased to know that you will soon have a half-sister. This time your father - you really are low-life, Keith - is actually marrying a woman that he's made pregnant. For all I know, you might get another half-sibling from her stood just behind you!"

"Birth control," said Allie.

"Of course, every lesbian uses birth control."

Ludovic said, "We want to confront him, not just about the past but what is he going to do? Now we've caught up with him, at last, he can at least spend an hour with us."

"Yes," said Keith, "if the redhead let's me leave. Don't have a baby, redhead, because I'm not paying out any more. Anyway, it might be the rabbi's. I think I got some of his spunk on my cock. Right, well, we three can talk among ourselves then."

I said, "I'm really happy to see you two young men at any time, of course, but please do not let me have to deal with this man any further. Take him away."

Keith pushed past Allie, and the two young men left a gap.

I said to Allie, waiting and looking at me, "I'll be glad not to see him ever again. All right, Allie, I'll say thank you. So what are you doing?"

She turned to face away from me. "I am very sorry. I think my research is over, ending with that above the casino event. I can't think there is any more."

"I think you are wrong. I want to uncouple this place from above the casino completely and you can finish your research with that fact demonstrated. I can't choose my researcher but, you know, I'd like her to do a good job and finish properly."

"I stay? Seriously?"

"As a researcher. The fiancé bit will have to die its death. Sorry."

"Originally I wanted to carry on with my research until I was sure that this place is up and running - with your permission. Then I shall leave for Glastonbury and Norfolk. But, if you don't mind, I will take these bags and sleep in my house from now on. I've let you all down."

"Quite. At least you admit it."

"I do want to stop the research as quickly as possible. I'll communicate with my professor from my house about what has happened and send him relevant notes."

She placed her keys on my desk. I was stunned despite the rift. She turned and walked away, with heavy bags, and left through the double doors. I'd said nothing further, because I did not know what else to say.

Ten minutes later Christine came in. "Has Keith been in then? Your eyes are red and watery."

"His two sons came. Look, as you can tell, I'm not very hospitable."

"He's got two sons?"

"They turned up. They must have known his whereabouts and followed him. Half-brothers. Sorry, Christine, I'm just not in the mood to see anyone now - even you. Perhaps especially you."

"Because of Keith?"

"If this was all of it, I'd be smiling."

"Where's Allie?"

"She's packed her bags and said goodbye to the circus. When I've finally separated this place from above the casino - and I mean it, Christine, I shall - she will leave. Please, I want to go upstairs and lie down."

"You've grown accustomed to her face," Christine said. "I'll go over to Toulouse Road now before I get Leon to fly me to Ebbsfleet. He had a good time last night."

"With Allie?"

"Her intention was to interview until Maurice dismissed the sex worker and pulled in Allie. The others had their prices for answering questions."

"Now you tell me."

"So I get to Ebbsfleet and then the helicopter will be going in for a service and the odd repair. Cars are so slow when you get used to a helicopter."

"The rewards of success," I said. "Some have it and some definitely don't."

"See you soon."

"Let her go," I said. "There's a bit more for her to research, but perhaps she should just go."

"She'll want to run away," said Christine. "She's done it before."

"It would be of a pattern."

Narrator: Allie Sixth Cousin and her Mother (Sunday 12th January)

The doorbell went at precisely four. I opened the door and it was Rhiannon Fleetwood, Fatima Tamuuz and Fatima's little girl.

"What are you doing here?" I asked Rhiannon Fleetwood.

"Just that you're dangerous, so I am here to keep watch. Go on, let me in too, I won't interfere."

Both women noticed all of the art work done or being done, canvases to use, and paints.

Fatima said, "Akemi. This is your distant cousin, Alfia. Her second name is Shrimpton, but your second name is mummy's."

I said, "Akemi. I have a ball here that I coloured with my own bright paints. Our shared ancestor is a James Shrimpton, who was alive from 1840 to 1893 - a long time ago."

Rhiannon said, "She doesn't know what a 'shared ancestor' is."

Fatima said, "Say, 'Thank you, Allie' to Allie."

"Thank you, Allie," the toddler said to me.

"My original surname was Rogers, Fatima, and my name was Alice. Alice Shrimpton, James Shrimpton's daughter, was a heroine of mine, born in 1865, and she is the five times great aunt of Akemi. Alice was married to Brian Rogers but kept a lifelong intimate partnership with Elizabeth Ford. Alice lived so long and I discovered that many of them died at a very similar time. Son Morris was born in Wells-next-the-Sea and died in Gainasburgh. His son James was born in Gainasburgh and died in Hull. His son Patrick was born in Hull and died in Hartlepool. They all worked on the rivers or the sea. After that the descendents lived as south as York, and in Durham and back in Hartlepool. I realised that Philip worked for SMS in Hartlepool."

Rhiannon was looking through my paintings. "Mystical Blake. You're into him, then."

"Swedenborg, Zinzendorf. And Abigail was too," I said to her. "Why are you so corrupted?"

Rhiannon said, looking at her phone, "Keith Jupitas has sent me a message. You've left Linda. You're running away again! He broke free of his sons and denied them their conversation and is on his way to Cheryl. What are you going to do now? Running back to Roland?"

"My professor? What do you mean?"

"Come on! He's a well-known Pagan and so is Abigail."

"There's some more research yet."

Fatima then said, "Akemi! That paintbrush is dangerous. Oh, thanks Rhiannon."

I said to Fatima, "Rhiannon here gave away her children but you didn't."

"I didn't just get pregnant from Philip. I wanted a baby and he consented in advance. Akemi doesn't see the things I get up to. I'm not retracting from what I do - it's just not appropriate for a child."

The doorbell went. I answered it.

"Oh, Christine! Em, I have, er, Fatima and Akemi here. Rhiannon too."

"It's all right. Fatima and I used to know each other rather well. What are you doing here?" Christine asked Rhiannon.

"Just offering some protection for them. Keith messaged me a few things including Allie threatening to assault him."

"Well, you're not needed now," said Christine. "Allie may be subdued but I remind you of the vicarage garden."

"Yes," I said.

Rhiannon took the hint and told Fatima that she would be back at the vicarage.

When she had gone, Christine said to Fatima, "You were warned in advance last night."

"Tess told me, Rhiannon, San and the McPhails that we'd have to get out and then reminded us before we actually did."

"I worked with Elizabeth and consented to you and the McPhails being there. She seems to have got her own back."

Fatima said to Christine, "Barman and Eyre would have come - despite your previous dispute with Barman and your success."

"Elizabeth didn't invite them. She's not that stupid."

"She actually told them to stay away. You know, Liz was never part of Linda's outfit. Adam Magellan will have known that."

"I was too optimistic about her. Linda now has every reason to split from my activities. Anyway, I came to see Allie."

Fatima asked, "Is this private? Shall I go off with Akemi?"

"Not really. It's the mess you've left us in, although our specific issue is Allie's fault. Blabbermouth. Did you think they would all disperse and Linda hear nothing?"

"Yes, to be honest. But I got carried away. It started with Maurice."

Fatima then said, "You were impressive. Everyone thought you were fantastic."

Christine said to me, "You do all this research ethic and then you blab away personal stuff."

"You've already said."

"You are also supposed to be a Reverend Deacon; have you heard of the seal of the confessional?"

"Of course."

"Have you left Linda?"

"She says I can complete the research. I don't want to leave. I mean, seeing Akemi also makes me want to have a child."

"Really? You're going about it the right way - not. Have you not thought that Linda has maternal feelings?"

"She does?"

"She suffers. Right. Listen. Linda still wants you, but she thinks she must throw in the towel. The love she has for you has somehow gone down the wrong track - but that's not surprising. I blame her family."

"Why?"

"Because, from what I can gather, she's like some women who have strong fathers and they never seem to separate from them. She also has a dominting sister, an equal, so she doesn't want another competing equal. She'll drop you as impossible and thinks she could give Maurice Neptune what he wants."

"He's not available. He told me."

"What you do is press the reset button. Apologise and ask for forgiveness. You then tell Linda everything: every sexual detail above the casino, especially Maurice. Then tell her he won't be interested in her personally. This narrows her options."

Fatima said, "She doesn't know about Sallie Sarah? Oh dear."

"Don't mention her, Allie; don't give her that name," Christine said.

"Who is Sallie Sarah?" I asked.

"Maurice's intended. From out of his congregation."

"I didn't know. So he wanted Linda as a final hurrah or will he behave like Keith does with Cheryl?"

"Let Linda jump to conclusions because dropping you makes her think of Maurice. Then he will put her off, not you. He still thinks she'd make a good rabbi, but she'd only be a rabbi now. Then you say, you really do want to marry her. It's your future; it will have to be a shared baby."

"I was wondering what I was going to do with my life after researching," I said. "I want to continue the family tree, and I want more options than Jonnie back at home."

Christine advised, "Exhaust matters with Maurice first. Listen, Allie: have you got it?"

"Yes. But Linda is hopping mad and might not accept my apology."

"A massive apology and all the sex details."

"What if she's already contacted him?"

"She is dithering, as ever. I don't think she really wants to lose you. She knows you will research for a little longer, so it gives time to see if things can be repaired."

"Why do I apologise first? I will: I want to apologise. But why first?"

"She will make her discovery from Maurice, about Sallie Sarah, and you'll have your apologising out of the way. She needs to be a proper mother, and this is your life's sacrifice."

"Thanks, Christine. If it works."

"Now I've got some women to see to try and persuade them to leave prostitution, or at least go online and leave the streets."

Christine left, and Fatima stayed. "You should know that Akemi and I are going to Tamworth, and will meet up with the rest of them. Don't tell those you know - I don't care really but I'd rather you didn't."

"I won't. I've learnt that lesson. I really love Linda. The thing is my family wanted me to marry Jonnie. We grew up together and we don't have normal sibling-like taboos."

"You could marry your fifth cousin once removed: Philip."

"I am a lesbian. I really am. I did Maurice and Keith because of Jonnie. I've never seen this Philip and, even if I did, I'd never fancy him. At Somerset I had the freedom to go with women, and ended up with women in authority - a tutor and a secretary of the department. I got into Taunton Tantria like Abigail and she was also a witch. And then there was Andrea, an Anglican priest and therefore only secretly in Taunton Tantria. She was my GP too. She's the one who got away because of Abigail and also her pursuing Lynton, the suffragan bishop."

"Ah. That's one of the group with Anong's group as its origin. Fighters of Concern, or something, they all became."

"Yes," I said. "Anong is notorious, even among those who know her. She pursues the theology of disgust. It suits her extreme Buddhism. Sheila Patterson."

"You are well-informed, Allie. A proper researcher, eh? You seem a bit messed up personally, with this family neighbour so close."

"I love Jonnie deeply, and I could live with him, but I would never desire him."

"He'd give you orgasms. I get orgasms from men. All that fisting you liked, that's a thick penis substitute - especially with that vice-like grip you can do."

"I insist I'm a lesbian."

"I don't want a personal partner. I don't think I could handle that. It's why I dominated Jenny. I know I may not have helped her fragility. She lost all her beliefs, but the rumour is that Sarah Deimos, the suffragan up there, lost all her beliefs as well. That won't be because of Harriet Leda, her live-in partner, who is a Christian and would-be naturist. Jenny keeps Sarah's secrets."

"I've learned my lesson."

"I would have offered to stay with you tonight, but I don't suppose you're minded for that."

"Not really. What about Akemi?"

"One to one with nice people's all right. You're a nice person. Well, Jonathan - ours - says you're a fighter but I have found you to be pleasant. You just don't take shit and neither do I."

"Yeah. Thanks to Abigail and Beathag. Abigail got me into self-defence, via that Taunton Tantria, and Beathag was over the top with the discipline and I had to square up to her. I had some naked fights with Andrea. She's gorgeous."

"I'll be going."

"Where are you staying?" I asked Fatima.

"Yojana's."

"I'd love to go to bed with you, Fatima, but you're right that my head is a bit messed up. I need a clear conscience tomorrow. I need to give a massive apology, and see if Linda responds."

"It's your last night of freedom, then," Fatima said. "I won't tell Yojana where I've been."

"Hmm."

"Go on, Allie. Let's have some lezzy non-committal fun."

"I'll could get a pizza delivery and we can have some non-alcoholic - I'm afraid - drinks."

"I'll get Rhiannon to take Akemi off my hands."

"She's a destructive gossip. No way, Fatima."

"Then Akemi stays here."

Akemi was nicely tucked in on an airbed I kept available, and Fatima came to my bed. She showed her incredible skill, and discovered for herself the extent of my continuous orgasms. And she did say that the Holy Spirit had touched me with the crash of a descending goose. All I knew was that she had worked me through sheer sexual skill, and I tried as much as I could to reciprocate the orgasms. Here it was: technique and outcomes. But I wanted a particular person, and I lay with Fatima asleep next to me, her arm on me below my breasts. Technique and outcomes matter but I wanted a person with whom (as Linda would word it) to build a life.

I dreamt a weird dream that night, even in company. It wasn't about Fatima alongside me, but Abigail Randall, my one-time tutor and lover. This dream was in a Chinese Temple, and it was a bit like an old version of Kung Fu as seen on a satellite channel some years ago. Abigail declared, as she did in reality, that I would never beat her physically, but the context here was to 'draw' with her and complete my time in this supposed Somerset monastery. I was at the exit. Anong was present, and bowed to me, as she had once visited Taunton Tantria. In the dream I lifted the pot, and although red hot it failed to mark my flesh. Outside the monastery exit was Linda, and she was my future, and she had a hot stamp with the initials B and P. I gave her my hands and she so marked both forearms, burning the skin.

However, in the real world I needed courage to approach Linda.

Chapter 29 Aftermath

Narrator: Linda The Police and the Media (Monday 13th January)

I woke alone. I'd no idea if and to what effect Christine had spoken with Allie or not. Bella it was who came up to the bethel with Roger, unwanted by Adam. I was disappointed to hear that Peter and Kathryn had been at the orgy, even if keeping themselves to themselves. Kathleen and Winnie doing refreshments disappointed me.

Soon Bella approached me that there was a telephone call from the police. It concerned Adam and me, and so I wondered if the police had uncovered more than just a joke at a private orgy. The policewoman said that we were each to go in to the local station. We would not be arrested but they had questions to put to us separately.

Adam arrived from his work place and so asked Roger and Bella to return. He said. "Looks like there's a low crime day, or perhaps too many of the Wytham lot are on expenses in Serninsea."

At the cop shop I was first into this small room, where the conversation with me was to be recorded and kept for seven years. The one female officer present, PC Diana Constance, explained (again) that I had not been arrested and had come in by invitation.

"Recognise this?" She produced three hardback writing books inside a clear plastic wrapping.

"No I don't."

"Found in your old curate's house, the one you used to live in."

"I left the house empty except for what belonged to the Church."

"These are the final volumes of the diary of the late Reverend Kenneth Osis."

This was completely unexpected.

"So you think that I cleared out all of my stuff but left that man's diary volumes behind?" I asked, "Have these conveniently turned up?"

"Why convenient?"

"After Bishop Elizabeth did a runner. She knew the police were going to raid above the casino."

"How do you think these got there?" the officer asked.

"I don't know. The Spirit of Ken Osis materialised? Oh no, that did happen."

"What?"

"Nothing."

"A religious joke, I take it. He wrote about you just days before he died. Oh, and many days and weeks previously. In fact, as we know, a long time ago he took pictures of you naked."

"I assume I am in there, yes. And yes I was a model, late to it when twenty-seven. He had been a studio client. He kept the photos. In fact, some of them turned up at my training vicar's when I was there. He didn't do it; Bishop Barman sent them for effect."

"You had sexual relations with him and it is in here in great detail. A touch of cruelty I'd say. Do you normally have sex with your 'confessor'? It says he was your confessor. You were naked with a friend, drawing him in."

"I'm a naturist. So is Diana - he saw us both. I was when I was a model. I have been all my life."

"He writes about Adam Magellan. Why?"

"He was my partner. I don't know why he'd write about him."

"Keith Jupitas..."

"I was moving on. I had to conceal matters in Anglican ministry. It is very dishonest, you know. You cross your fingers at the creeds and you conceal your relationships. To be an Anglican you learn duplicity."

"So did you use Ken Osis? He thinks so, later on in here."

"I wanted to encourage him to have confidence. I wanted him to find someone else. He was fragile."

"I suggest that he killed himself because of you. He also desired Diana de Groot. She's a naturist, you say. What happened was hardly being sensitive towards someone fragile."

"There were potential conversation loops. We had to be sure he kept confidences, that he did not pass on material to John Barman, who was then a suffragan bishop. She helped me."

"Should we interview her?"

"To what end?"

"He wrote so much of it down. He used names, dates. He refers to confidential conversations that are not explained in here but you could find much of what he did write embarrassing. You had a motive to conceal these books."

"Check out Jim and Connie Wilson for motives. I hear that they are in Tamworth. How are travel expenses in the police service?"

"I'll ignore that. Did you succeed in finding out whether Kenneth Osis passed on material about you and Diana de Groot?"

"As best we knew, he kept confidences. The bishop seemed to glory in information about everyone. Bishop Barman obtained these diaries after Osis's death. Reverend Jim Wilson found the diaries, and kept a few back. Somebody has been in town and placed them. The person with the keys to the curate's house is the Reverend Rhiannon Fleetwood."

"You think. Wilson is a name that is in here. Connie especially. This Reverend Jim's wife had sex with Ken Osis frequently and he talks about decision making with John Barman, but he actually felt left out, and then his handwriting is bad after they put him on some A frames contraption and threatened him. He didn't want to join Connie Wilson's group, but they made him."

"Ken Osis imagined he was at the centre of decision making, and he never was," I stated.

"The Reverend Jenny World. She is the one now in a psychiatric hospital, I understand."

"Yep."

"So he and she and Connie were in various orgies, some in the same place as Saturday's, but he did score one success because he writes that he persuaded them to use theatrical metaphors to hide the group. He was trying to recruit you into it, once he was in it."

"He didn't succeed."

"Interview terminated 11:10 am. As stated, we shall keep a copy of this recording for 7 years and you can write to hear the contents if you so wish. The books will be viewed by the coroner. Our reading of them over the last few days suggests that we have nothing to charge you over. The Saturday night orgy was a private party."

"Nothing to do with me, PC Constance."

"Doesn't matter. Interview is over."

"But what about who took the diaries? Because these people kept them from the Coroner, like."

"Your partner is outside waiting. Ask him to come in."

"He's not my partner now," I said to no effect.

Adam came out ten minutes later. "What a load of bollocks. She was fishing for information from me. I told them to ask Christine or you on religious matters and all the sex. I said you became my partner but were free to fuck whoever you liked."

"Whomever." I asked him: "Are you going to investigate the present whereabouts of Bishop Elizabeth Huett?"

He replied, "Not a finger will I lift. Good riddance. However, I've knocked up an article to go with the press report of the orgy above the casino. You'd better read it. Better still, rewrite it and use your name."

"Oh?"

"The thing is, if you don't, Allie's research will reveal what you don't want, especially if you've fallen out with her. Get in there first and we'll take the modest payment I'm afraid into your church and my business - split it fifty-fifty."

I edited rapidly the piece that Adam had written badly; my English was much better than his, even for a tabloid. I also wanted the full story told my way and not his.

After all the scandal of the sex cult in Serninsea you'd think that there'd be no more orgies. But there was, on Saturday night, 11th January 2020. It was led by Bishop Elizabeth Huett, Bishop Christine Vine, Bishop Bill Masters, Bishop Arianwen Bron, and other independent clergy, some of whom had attended before. There was a new participant, the new Anglican parish priest in Serninsea, the Reverend Rhiannon Margaret Fleetwood. Trained in Taunton, she was once known as Briana Margaret Stewart from Chester.

I did not take part. I failed to persuade colleagues not to go. Bishop Elizabeth Huett of my own independent Church organised it. The police concluded, despite their raid, that it was a private party, and that the prize of ending the virginity of a sixth former was pure fabrication: she was a young-looking local prostitute. Also present, and winner of the raffle to deflower the imaginary virgin, was my ex-husband, Keith Jupitas. In the stupidity of the prize, Kay Sally Parker, the retired headteacher of the secondary school, could not enter the competition.

Let me make it clear. I am Bishop of the parish of the Serninsea Liberal Bethel in the Liberal Charismatic Apostolic Ecclesia, and this event was formally detached from this parish. I tried to persuade my researcher not to go, but she saw too many ongoing connections to ignore it. When the police raided the event, they took her notes and returned them the next day.

The lease of the upstairs of the building - above the casino - used to be the Anglican Church's, but it was taken over by a private investigator, Adam Magellan, after the scandal. He took a rent payment from the organisers.

The police raided the party because of the false information given by Huett and some participants; this was 'getting their own back' for Adam's and my exposure of their previous secretive sex cult that also met above the casino in Serninsea. Thus they made their escape before the police arrived, but left behind to face the music were Bishop Christine and my researcher, among others.

With all this scandal and my researcher's ability to dig out local secrets, we come to some connections that involve Adam, myself, his business supporters and ex-teachers. For the first time we reveal connections that have existed in this locality, beginning at the time when Ms Parker became headteacher in late 1996.

From September 1996, both secondary schools had merged into one. An existing teacher at the Saint Sernin High School that became Serninsea High School, Ann Dromeghda, disciplined Adam Magellan for gazing at her body, the result of which was he ended up having sex at her initiative in her house, to be joined by a teacher from the closed Carr Secondary School, Labhaoise Vlahos. He was one of the first students to be eighteen at the school, born on 3rd September 1978. Similarly, it was after my eighteenth on 2nd April 1997 that I was seduced by Ann Dromeghda and Labhaoise Vlahos once I'd asked her about lesbian feelings. She then advised I join with my friend Jenny in controlled investigative sex sessions with Adam Magellan and a gay friend of his - who ran off from our encounters. I could discover my sexual responses.

At that time, duty of care legislation that would have criminalised these teachers did not exist; it was all based on ages of consent. Nevertheless the teachers did not start the 1998 term; they both withdrew together to start a property development partnership. They weren't investigated at the time. Adam and I both showed our abilities to keep secrets over the years, something we'd both use in later life.

Ever since, the two ex-teachers have supported Adam in his business ventures, especially when he took redundancy from the police and began his investigation business. Adam has since fathered their children, but takes no part in raising their family. It seems they have kept an eye on me too. This is how my church came to be financed: not just from the media payments at the time of the damaging scandal, but through their financial oversight. There were always rumours around Adam's ongoing connection with his one time teachers, but of course I knew what happened with me and why Jenny and I approached Adam in the way we did as upper sixth formers.

Ann, Labhaoise and Adam approve of going public on this matter, and it isn't just because my researcher might reveal these connections (how the church was financed), but because it lifts a burden of secrecy and tackles ongoing suspicions and rumours. It is the same as when I revealed my intersex identity: I no longer have the burden of keeping the secret that I did within Anglicanism.

As for the orgies, I want to take steps to remove any connection with my Church - denomination and parish - and although I am positive about sex and the body, this event is inadequately pastoral and does more harm than good. Serninsea has a legacy it must clean up.

Adam approved of this article at lunchtime and with a click it was off to The Daily Morse to appear the next day. He would take all telephone calls and emails in response.

Narrator: Allie A Visit from Annie (Monday 13th January)

I sent a text to Annie and the upshot was Annie said she was working but I could go along to 15 Languedoc Street. I was wondering how, if I no longer was connected with the Bethel, I'd get income enough to survive.

She said, once my coat was off, me in a tight blouse and jeans, sensible shoes, "I only touched you - nice and wet - and got a kiss; too busy with Yojana."

"Thing is, I've likely blown it with Linda. She never wanted me to go. Yesterday Christine came round and said I have to give a full apology to Linda. I have to give Linda the details of what happened with me and the rabbi, but let her find out he's unavailable. Then I've got to offer myself to have her baby."

"Ugh. You don't want babies. You'd have to find a man."

"That's the point. The obvious candidate is my cousin Jonnie, but he'd want the child to be his and mine. The family would regard it as theirs."

"Go to the sperm clinic. We've got one."

"I know. A chap I know called Roger goes regularly. He was there when last week when I was checked up. Artificial insemination is not exactly on the NHS, when you are fertile. Not sure what Linda would think of Roger. Anyway, what about you and Yojana then?"

"Yojana puts it about a bit. She's having difficulty with Keith, that he's not quite as connected with her as he was. Any more showers with Klärchen Sisse and Salome Lichtbau?"

"It's a really happy house there."

"Even Saturday night I didn't see you naked."

"I was interviewing."

"So why don't we ever do anything different beyond the pub, Allie?"

"I'm here now. Things are so fluid."

"Anyway, I've got to go to work. Be different; join in."

"You should go to university, Annie."

"Once again, I'm not getting into debt. I earn money now. Anyway, if you go back to Linda she'll only want to dominate you. I'd give you equality."

"I'm not available if I want Linda."

"But you've said it yourself, she's broken with you - unless you grovel. Anyway, Goosechat beckons. Got to put in the hours."

"You think of things to chat about?"

"The pink thing goes in my fanny or arsehole, Allie, so every time they put in the money it buzzes."

"I'm curious."

"It does involve sex."

"I can sit out."

"Chicken. Having an active guest can more than double income."

"It's your work."

We moved to a bedroom with a computer and large screen. Annie put on two LED lamps. She dropped a couple of hand towels nearby. She went down to red bra and panties, on the bed, but with no underwear on I decided to take the plunge and went nude. I could be a guest, with a pink vibrator inserted either in my arse or vagina.

"Allie, you have to obey the rules of Christine's Goosechat and one is a false name. My name here is 'Headgirl'. You will be 'Gael', spelt like the Scottish folk. Tokens cost them ten pence each, purchased in multiples of ten, and I get five pence for each one, but today I'll splitting them with you."

She gave me one pink, long, thin, bendy plastic thing. It had a small spherical end and a bulbous end. I chose my vagina.

Annie said, "No urinating but you can imitate squirting, so long as it is well disguised. Try not to get the computer wet. Right, time to get connected." She clicked on an icon on her computer screen.

"Is that an HD camera?"

"Christine now insists on it. Widescreen. The messages are on the right, and they see a more compact version. Goosechat will put us through in one minute."

Level 2 - Tip (15-99 tokens) Medium vibration 5 seconds

Level 3 - Tip (100-499 tokens) Heavy vibration 7 seconds

Level 4 - Tip (500-999 tokens) Very Heavy vibration 30 seconds

Level 5 - Tip (1000+ tokens) Strongest vibration 1 Minute

Tip affects all vibes at once.

Annie held up the pink thing and slipped almost all of it behind her knickers. Then she said, "Hello everyone! Hello Dr. John, hello Bob, hello Adam, hello Mikey! It's a special day today because I have a guest and she's ahead of me, in the nud. It's Gael!"

I thus said, "Hello everyone," and waved.

Mikey gave a tip of 10 tokens.

Mikey: Where's the music?

Adam gave a tip of 10 tokens.

Annie replied, "Ah. Our boss says we can't use it now because she needs a Performing Rights Licence. Thing is, Goosechat is a small glamour webcam service, and they know where we are. We're located in Serninsea, Eslaforde, Wulfstan and a few other places. Seems some in other offshore services' narrowcasters can play music, dance to it, sing to it, and nothing happens. The boss is looking for some music we can all use. Sorry."

Adam: Why is your name Gayle, guest?

"Adam, I am called Gael because... Well, let me say: Tha mi dìreach dèidheil air a bhith an seo."

Annie asked, "What does that mean?"

"I just love being here."

"Give me a kiss on the lips."

I did. Annie started masturbating under her knickers, so I did the same exposed.

Adam gave a tip of 15 tokens.

Dr. John: You are awesome, Headgirl. Lovely guest.

Dr. John gave a tip of 10 tokens.

Bob: Beautiful, sexy, both of you. What a guest! Can't we see some more?

Bob gave a tip of 100 tokens.

HelenMc has joined.

It wasn't long before Annie had around forty named viewers. There would also be many more undeclared: stingy, non-contributing viewers. Her underwear came off, her striptease undermined by me being nude. To more buzzes and cash cascades, she presented her arse to me and my task was to place the bulbous end into her anus. So I did the same - it freed up the vulva.

ThicknReady has joined.

ThicknReady: Wow! Who's the sexy redhead? She's got nice tits - let the dog see the rabbit.

"Hello ThicknReady, again. Yes, I have a redhead guest and she's called Gael. Open your rabbit, Gael."

Adam: You two in these Werburgh Geese?

I then said, "Headgirl is, but I'm not. I bet Goosechat likes its cam operators to be Werburgh Geese. Is that right, A... Headgirl?"

"It's not compulsory. You have to be initiated to join that local association."

"Like Saturday."

"Mustn't talk about that."

"Whoops. Sorry."

HelenMc gave a tip of 100 tokens

Annie gave a heightened reaction to the remote buzzing.

The tips kept coming and she waggled the pink thing dangling out of her arse. In fact she kept masturbating, and as the buzzing continued moved her hand rapidly from side to side and then sprayed all over the place. This just encouraged them, and the buzzes were also encouraging me to do more.

After grabbing a towel and rubbing it between her legs, Annie received a question on the side panel.

Chopper: Are you happy with life, Headgirl? Remember what you were saying the other night?

"I have few close friends. One is Gael with me. We go for odd drinks together. But it's fair to say we keep our distances too. Yes?"

"Yes, I suppose so. I'm more my own woman today."

"I don't open up in front of people in real life. I'm more comfortable chatting here. Some people wonder how I can connect with people online when I can't so well in real life. It's because you are all anonymous or with made-up usernames."

I was pretty sure that 'Adam' was the one I knew.

Querceto (new member) has joined.

Querceto gave a tip of 100 tokens.

RobRoy has joined.

Annie continued: "I don't see your faces; I don't hear your voices. But I connect. In real life I am an introvert. I don't get lonely. I like being alone. I'll go to the pub but might sit on my own. But here, within the rules of Goosechat, I can open up and talk to you. I sit and lie down with nothing on, and I can talk to you all while I receive pleasure. I am comfortable with my body. Gael often goes about nude. I did hope..."

"I do in some company. I hope I still have a close, naturist companion. Maybe not any more."

"Online I don't have the same anxiety I have in real life."

Querceto gave a tip of 100 tokens

Querceto: You go to the pub, Gayle, presumably with your clothes on.

The cascade noise of cash accompanied a pulse going right through us. We both masturbated more, and then she sprayed again but by a bit less.

Porterhouse has joined.

Porterhouse: Doing any blue films you two?

After a slight pause, Annie said. "Welcome back Porterhouse. I am. Gael is her own person. There's a barmaid I like and I'll invite her to a video shoot. There's a chick with a dick I'll work with. If she was on here with me we'd have to appear under 'Trans'. Mainly I get gangbanged on video shoots by loads of men but half of them wear masks and face coverings. We women have to show our faces - it's not right!"

I said, "I've done it - in Somerset."

"You're kidding," said Annie.

"When you're an undergraduate student you need cash fast. This might be my future."

Querceto gave a tip of 100 tokens.

Querceto: This is like news to me, you cam workers making videos.

Annie said, after recovering, "That's an odd comment for a first time visitor, Querceto! You're very generous."

(The Querceto word was familiar, but I couldn't place it.)

RobRoy: How do you spell Gayle, Gayle? Just wondering.

I answered, "Gee ay ee el, so it is to indicate Gaelic speech.

RobRoy: You a native speaker of our highlands and islands language?

I said, "Mòran taing. No I am not. I learnt it as part of a means to empathise with Celtic communities of different kinds. I had a Gaelic speaker who was very sexual, and she added to my learning - in more ways than one. Some of my student friends could never hear and separate out the Gaelic words. I can. Some even struggled with pronunciation. The department..."

Annie said, "Don't say where it is."

"They're adding Kernewek to the list: that is something, given there are some five hundred fluent speakers only. It's all learnt and modern Cornish is a bit of a reconstruction."

Dr John: I'd like to examine your tits to begin.

I continued. "I think Scots Gaelic is down to below twenty thousand now, and is struggling. Welsh is doing well with many secondary speakers, speakers who've learnt it. That sports presenter, Muslim chap: he learnt it at his Caerdydd school and then at Prifysgol Abertawe. It needs that kind of support to grow: schools are the key. Youngest minds do languages easiest. You can make first or fluent language speakers that way. That would be almost impossible in Cornwall, though I heard of a couple who are raising their four children through the medium of Cornish. Some think Anglo-Saxon is more useful for archaeology. I'm an academic, sort of."

HelenMc: Tell us your sex techniques, Gael.

HelenMc gave a tip of 100 tokens.

Annie did some shaking.

I thought of an answer.

"Develop your pelvic muscles, HelenMc. I did this with other women in something like combat training. Get control."

HelenMc: Go on, I dare you to do some female ejaculating Gael.

BobbyBalls: Learnt languages and combat training. You a soldier?

I said, "Combat training, or self-defence, is different. It's about women and bodies."

(Then I recalled the origin of the name Querceto, but I would not tell Linda I knew.)

I said, "Okay, I'm going to try to come."

Querceto gave a tip of 1000 tokens.

Adam gave a tip of 15 tokens.

Adam: Does Gael fancy Headgirl?

HelenMc gave a tip of 100 tokens.

RobRoy gave a tip of 100 tokens.

Dr. John gave a tip of 70 tokens.

Bob gave a tip of 7 tokens.

Mikey gave a tip of 12 tokens.

That was enough to send us both mad, so I rapidly circulated my fingers, and sprayed right over the camera. Headgirl didn't spray anything like as far. Water was everywhere.

Annie using a towel around then said, "Of course I fancy Gael."

I said, "I've some relationship repairs to do. Not with An... Headgirl."

"Let me tell you about one chap. He was my fuck buddy, a friend with benefits. I never forget how I felt so betrayed. It was amazing sex, an amazing connection. Of course, with a friend with benefits, we could fuck anybody: it was not an exclusive relationship. But then I discovered he was fucking my best friend at the time. For months they lied to me and yet they could have told me. You're not like that, are you Gael?"

"I'd hope not."

"You'd show me loyalty."

"I would. If things don't work out."

"Second choice isn't a good place to begin, Gael."

Porterhouse: Friends with benefits means casual sex. You going to cry again from those blue eyes?

"No, Porterhouse, It was an open relationship but it still needed trust. No, I am not going to cry because it is a while ago now."

HelenMc: Any men you've fucked recently, Gael?

HelenMc gave a tip of 10 tokens.

With some thought for a certain viewer I said, "I had a long intimate relationship with a distant cousin. He was my regular male contact, but I fancy females. He was with me as I grew up: we had baths together, slept in the same bed; he saw my very first period, we've wiped each others' bottoms. So when I fuck men, they remind me of him. But I want a female long-term partner, and there is one and one only woman for me. Sorry, Headgirl. So, as I say, I've some repairs to do - I'm really sorry for all my mistakes. I want to marry her and have her baby. And with that I'd like to leave all you viewers now with your regular host."

I got up and went off camera to dress.

"Folks. I'm going off line for two minutes to say bye to my friend."

When dressed I said, "Bye Annie. Oops."

Annie said, "No sweat, it's off. I've made a lot of money so I'll give you two hundred quid."

"I pissed all over you carpet."

"I clean it often."

"Bye then. Your customers are waiting."

"Nice to see you naked at last, Allie. Pass me that bottle of water. I'll need it if I'm going to carry on doing the display."

Narrator: Linda Intentions and Viewing (Monday 13th January)

The reverberations continued. "Christine was too trusting of Elizabeth Huett," I suggested to Adam at lunch. Peter and Kathryn had come to eat at the same table.

"So were you," he replied. "Christine didn't care, so long as the event took place."

"You took the money."

Adam said back to me, "I knew the worm would turn. It gave the media something to report. Next time Christine has sole control, or with you, or it doesn't happen."

"It won't happen with me at all," I said. "I want to press the need on all our parish clergy to stay away. Yes, you Peter. You two should not have gone. Kathleen and Winnie should not have helped out. Christine is of a different diocese, as are all the other bishops. And if there is a next time, put it under your holding company, Adam, and not as part of the religious operation at all. Not at all, Adam."

Kathryn asked, "Adam, you don't suspect Christine is part of the Huett people?"

"No," he replied. "She's quite independently minded. She took the gathering away from Barman and was rewarded by the police raid."

I said, "I agree but she still connects this event to the religious operation. I don't want it."

I recalled Allie's idea of approaching the Free Liberal Church. I wondered if this was a possibility, and it might extract Christine and her high Catholicism from me and my high Protestantism!

Allie wasn't about, so next, with Adam gone, I wanted to follow up Rabbi Maurice Neptune's wish to have seen me Saturday night, even if Allie had said he would not want to see me outside that context.

I sent a text to him. It stated that I wanted to discuss everything: Theology, being a rabbi, love.

I received a reply within minutes. He could see me Wednesday. The thought crossed my mind that if I became a rabbi I would not necessarily escape the horrible orgy, because he had attended and might want me there.

Then I had a thought. He was fucking Allie on Saturday evening. Was Allie going to see him outside that context and this was why I could not? Was that it? Perhaps he suddenly preferred her! No, I was getting paranoid.

Then I received a message from Adam with a link to within the webcam prostitution service Goosechat owned by Christine. There was Allie as Annie's guest, 'Gayle' with 'Headgirl', and so I registered as Querceto. Among the tips it listed:

Level 3 - Tip (100-499 tokens) Heavy vibration 7 seconds

Level 4 - Tip (500-999 tokens) Very Heavy vibration 30 seconds

Level 5 - Tip (1000+ tokens) Strongest vibration 1 Minute

Tip affects all vibes at once.

Allie might get this effect too - she was there and that pink vibrator thing was in her too. (I knew what it was.). Anyway, it was time to be generous, especially as Adam was being mean. I kicked off with 100.

I heard Allie say, "I hope I still have a close, naturist companion."

I was about to give a 1000 tip until I realised that was a hundred pounds! I gave another ten quid. I also added a message:

You go to the pub, Gayle, presumably with your clothes on.

Then came a revelation to me. Allie said she had taken part in pornography videos to pay her way through university as an undergraduate. I didn't want to give away my identity in a half-disguised message:

This is like news to me, you cam workers making videos.

Annie responded, after her latest orgasmic display, "That's an odd comment for a first time visitor, Querceto! You're very generous."

'Gael' spelt out her name and mentioned Beathag, as a sex tutor as well as for Gaelic. There was this stuff about her technique and "combat training" that gave an insight into Allie's sexual education. I then realised that HelenMc was Helen McPhail, who challenged Allie to ejaculate.

To back this up I went fully in with 1000 tokens. Others were adding in their amounts. There were buzzes, cascading cash noises and riotous sounds.

The effect of tips was to send them into a masturbatory frenzy. I could see the piss had its origin from Allie's urethra as the spray went right into the air and all over the place. Annie managed less.

After this nonsense, Allie seemed to have enough. She mentioned Jonnie and then "repairs" that she had to do with me, talking intimately. She wanted to have a baby.

She wanted a baby!

I was obviously moved by what she had said, but thought that we might forever go on fighting each other; and despite him going down in my estimation, I ought to at least investigate Maurice and the whole rabbi option too.

Then she decided to leave, there being a small break in transmission. I put it off.

I shivered when I realised how much I'd spent. I hoped much of it would go to Allie. She mustn't return to getting money through pornography: she needed protecting and mothering.

The Initial Reset Button (Tuesday 14th January)

In the morning Jagjit Kapoor sold me The Daily Morse and my article was in there. He'd seen it and said the event on Saturday evening was "disgusting" and he was very sorry for all my experiences over a long time.

"I try to move on. I needed to tell of my experiences, to clear the air at last. As for Saturday evening, I wanted nothing to do with it and am taking action so that in future it either does not happen or is completely unconnected with what we do."

The church received a payment of a four hundred pounds for the article, so presumably the same or more went into the investigations agency or the holding company. It was very much less than payments for the scandal revelations. Adam and Peter came in for lunch, and Kathryn joined them.

It was Kathryn who said, "Uncle George has been doing some ringing around, to the Midlands, doing some back-tracking. We know where she is."

I asked, "Who?"

Adam let out a long breath.

Kathryn said, "Huett is living with Barman. You know which married couple is there as well?"

Adam said, "I do and I don't care."

I said, "It doesn't take a detective to work that out."

She said, "Jim and Connie Wilson."

Adam said, "I let that woman, Huett, come here only because we could monitor what she was doing, and when she went to live at the Blue Diamond Club it was only a matter of time before she did what she did."

"So you wanted the controversy yourself, Adam?"

"Didn't raise much money, unfortunately."

On the same matter, a little bit later on and when I was alone in the vestry, I received a text from Geoff Virgo.

We have heard reports in the media that the so-called 'orgy town' has been at it again. There was a police raid. We read your own disturbing article. This brings the Liberal Charismatic Apostolic Church into disrepute. Whatever our views on sex and the Divine, we must be seen to uphold the highest ethical standards. We already had great doubts about how things happen in Serninsea and this has proved them to be correct. As founding bishops of this Church, we must protect the reputation of our Church and will need some apologies and assurances that we can issue in terms of a press release and website page. These must come from Mar Werburga Bishop Christine (her ministry) and Mar Reticulum Bishop Linda (her diocese). Meanwhile, you might like to read our exciting new profiles on the Church website. The Holy Spirit descend upon you both. Every blessing. Mar Arcturus-Virginis

"It's like the Anglicans all over again," I said to myself. So in the vestry I read the website.

Geoffrey Peter Virgo was originally baptised and raised as a Methodist, and lapsed for some years; in early adulthood his faith found him again and he began to study the early methodical ordained ministry of Wesley the sacramentalist. Receiving faith led Geoffrey Virgo to uphold the traditionalist Anglo-Catholic witness. Nevertheless, he was unhappy with Anglican and Roman Catholic forms, and, seeking further apostolic origins, undertook study at the Norwegian Institute of Early Christian Development. He was awarded many citations for the depth of his study. Roman Catholicism was in no sense 'inevitable' and interest grew in esoteric alternatives that kept the essence of the original faith. A particular interest grew in the earlier and later formations of Old Catholicism and Liberal Catholicism, when he joined the Liberal Catholic Theosophical Church (where Theosophy had become optional), receiving minor ordinations. He met up with Luis Mariano Callas, who shared an interest in expressions of Universal Christianity. This was when they decided to form their own Church, first called the Liberal Apostolic Universal Ecclesia, later shortened by removing the word Universal.

Luis Mariano Callas was by upbringing a Roman Catholic and became convinced that this Church had suppressed essential theological truths, and he joined, also through minor ordinations, the Liberal Apostolic Teleological Church for the possibilities it opened up for discovering lost connections in Christian development and contemporary impacts. He studied at the Continental Theological University in Antigua.

To lead their own Church together, both men were ordained ordained deacon, priest and bishop by Bishop Harold McFague, Bishop Blanco Black, Bishop Matthew Cohn-Sherbok, and Bishop Evan Pritchard. Geoffrey was elected as Mar Arcturus-Virginis. Luis was elected as Mar Flacillus.

For a time they developed the Ancient Religious Society of Saint Alfred, which pursued charitable and educational work. With its rapid development, the institution was passed to a larger Liberal Catholic communion where resources were more plentiful. As a result of this developmental and intellectual action, both men were awarded the Doctor of Divinity from the Continental Theological University in Antigua.

The Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia entered into some years of stability, with both men being conditionally consecrated by Archbishop Bertrand Peepel, Bishop John Lewes and Bishop Lee Merkel, and later additionally by Bishop William Masters, Bishop Pauline Junor and Bishop Arianwen Bron.

Both Bishops therefore enjoy these lines of successio apostolica: Anglican, Armenian-Uniate, Celtic, Chaldean-Uniate, Coptic-Orthodox, Greek-Melkite, Irvingite, Liberal Catholic, Mariavite, Nonjuring, Old Catholic (Junior Line), Old Catholic (Senior Line), Old Catholic, Order of Corporate Reunion, Russo-Syriac, Syrian-Antiochene, Syrian-Gallican, Syrian-Malabar, Syro-Chaldean and Druid-Archaic.

On the basis that the Irvingite succession (correctly the Reformed Apostolic) is documented as coming from the Holy Ghost, each bishop and their successors can be considered Angel and Bishop.

These two leaders themselves led the ordination of three more bishops and a number of deacons.

This year has seen Mar Flacillus inherit the title and elevation to Archbishop, with the merger into the Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia of the Charismatic Orthodox Church, and after the sad death His Grace the Metropolitan Archbishop Nicholas Peterson. Thus the Church is renamed the Liberal Charismatic Apostolic Ecclesia. The renewed Society called the Principatus Theocratic Confraternitati admissis in Ecclesia Apostolica Charismatic Liberali seeks to give educational guidance, monitor matters of Church order, and carry out charitable work.

Mar Arcturus-Virginis is also to be elected Prince Apostle Black IV, Archbishop of Great Britain in the Apostolic Corporate Church, probably requiring a further name change to Liberal Charismatic Apostolic Corporate Ecclesia.

Both continue to advise on the establishment and management of small, autocephalous, dispersed Churches, drawing on their own experience.

"Prince Apostle Black the Fourth?" I exclaimed aloud. "What shit is that? Is this an episode of Blackadder?"

I rang Peter so he would have a chance to look at this. He looked straight away and pointed out that I was also now an 'Angel and Bishop'.

I said, "I've had enough of this, Peter. Yet another name change is proposed. Luis gets ahead of Geoff, Geoff overtakes Luis: Luis is an Archbishop, Geoff is a Prince Apostle. This angel is supposed to issue an apology for Saturday evening. I will not."

Peter called the website, "Fantasy island."

"Shall we change denominational identity? What about that group at Durham - Margaret Lindbeck joined them?"

"I say yes to a more sensible bunch for a denominational identity."

As a direct result I wrote and sent an email to Bishop Margaret Lindbeck, now of the Free Liberal Church.

I hope you are well. I'd like to arrange to meet you at the earliest to discuss to a substantial depth the basis of your Church and its operation. This is with a mind to do what you have already done as a bishop, Margaret: to change allegiance of this place, should my colleagues agree. I'd bring my researcher. Please reply. God be with you. Bishop Linda.

A reply came within the hour.

Bishop Linda Jupitas. Greetings! We would be delighted to receive you, any delegation, and your researcher. I suggest you come to the village of Bishop Middleham as soon as this Friday 17th January. You can then meet Bishop Dominic Himalia and Bishop Alexander Styx and myself. To God be the glory. Bishop Margaret Lindbeck, the Free Liberal Church.

Friday was excellent and by various messages we arranged a time. I then sent a message to missing Allie.

I'm considering changing the allegiance of the Serninsea Liberal Bethel to the Free Liberal Church. If you are serious about completing the research, you need to know that I and hopefully some supporting clergy are going to Durham on Thursday and likely will stay overnight. After all, even if we conveniently forget, it was your idea to approach the Free Liberal Church. I doubt Christine will be interested. Do you want to come?

I wrote to Christine:

I'm considering changing the allegiance of the Serninsea Liberal Bethel to the Free Liberal Church. Hopefully a group of us will go to Durham on Thursday for Friday, meeting them this week. I don't suppose you'd be interested. You're welcome to come, but we'll drive up and so would you if your helicopter is out of action.

She replied:

I would like to come. The helicopter is indeed unavailable, and actually I've stayed in Serninsea throughout and managed my business from here. I was going to travel south on Thursday, but now I'll go north. Send time and place details.

Allie thus drifted in during the afternoon. She said immediately, "Linda. I want to apologise profoundly to you for me blabbing to everyone. I should have taken your advice."

"Oh. The slut repenteth."

"Really, truly."

"Well, Allie, your apology is well received. As for finishing your research, this development means travelling with me and maybe staying with me again."

"Just as a researcher I take it."

"Yeah. Did Christine speak to you?"

"Yes. I will keep my mouth shut in future with other people."

"So what is your view of female ejaculation?"

"Can be excessive lubrication."

"Not over the top of a camera?"

"It's nonsense."

"I saw you online. And did you once make some DVDs?"

"Now you know, Querceto."

"Ah."

"By the way, I forgive you. We can all move on. And regarding moving on, I am going to see Rabbi Maurice Neptune on Wednesday. Perhaps I'd train to be a rabbi."

"Can I come to that?"

"It's potentially more personal. I need to investigate long term stability, both for my career and me personally. If I trained to be a rabbi, I'd make arrangements for here as suggested. Now, have you seen my article in The Daily Morse, Allie?"

"I can feel easier putting that background into my thesis."

"Now, assuming agreement among the clergy, even if Durham falls through, I really do want to leave the Liberal Charismatic Apostolic Ecclesia. Do you understand the strategy? I could be a rabbi and put this place into the Free Liberal Church, or we all go into the Free Liberal Church."

"So I can't come to see you discuss being a rabbi?"

"If you must. But anything personal this time and you must go outside our room."

Allie agreed to have her weekly pastoral massage from Kathryn and Kathleen, and I went into the wet room to view their work and her body, and she returned to 135 Toulouse Road in the early evening.

Her body was exciting, and it might get pregnant with a baby for us both. And Maurice was surely going against his disciplining. Yet I still had to examine these potential futures. Maurice and I were theological equals and I'd learnt a lot from him.

That evening Sea TV said that the police had decided not to pursue prosecution after the raid. There was no one living on immoral earnings. The police apparently had issued advice to Adam Magellan and Christine Vine (I was pleased to be excluded) but were sensitive to "aspects of the local culture."

Narrator: Allie Connection (Wednesday 15th January)

Christine sent me a text:

I've seen a video of you at Annie's webcam. You blabbed out about wanting Linda's baby before you got to apologise and tell everything. Adam had sent Linda a link, and she spent silly money making comments. Are you going Durham way?

I replied:

I didn't know Linda was going to connect. I realised she had because I recognised Querceto was her theological college. I've already apologised a lot and I'll tell all today. I'll follow Linda's travels.

"Good morning, Allie," Linda said, as I arrived for a trip to Wytham and the rabbi. "Are you ready to go now?"

"Yes. Watered and dewatered," I replied.

"As we go", she said, "I need a briefing on what happened with you and the rabbi. I need to be very well informed. Do you understand why?"

"Yes. You've cancelled seeing Diana?"

"Of course. Afterwards, If only others go to Durham, you'd need to be there with them. Let's get going."

We walked to her SUV around the back and she manouevred it to set off.

As we entered the road I said, "I will tell you all. Before I went to Maurice Neptune, I'd not taken part in any sex, and unlike everyone else I had not stripped off. When I approached him he was being masturbated by a prostitute. He called me beautiful and asked me to join him, and before I could say he was busy, to avoid such contact, he dismissed the prostitute. He said he would be interviewed on the end of his penis."

"Circumcised."

"What? I had flaps I could open. He described himself as friendly with Christine and Elizabeth. In fact he said he liked them all, including John Barman. He'd expected to see you there. He wanted to have you there, because he did not think he could see you privately any longer."

"So you told me," Linda said, as she headed for the Caffenmere road to get to Wytham.

I continued. "He had wondered about coming over himself to the bethel. He asked me to use my mobile phone to send for you. He called my vagina snug and wet."

"So why didn't you call me?"

"Because you were refusing to go above the casino."

"He wanted to come to the bethel to make love with me!"

"He wanted to fuck you."

"He has affection for me."

"It would only have been as it was with me."

"How do you know that?"

"Let me tell you it all and what I have learnt since."

"Go on, I'm all ears."

"I half joked if he would tell me about some Jewish theologian or philosopher, but he said he told you those things because you could be a rabbi and could still be a rabbi, and you'd be a good one, and he would talk to you more about that."

"But not about the other."

"Instead of theology he could talk to me about algorithms he'd developed, and about making money when the markets fell. He compared the markets going up and down with me going up and down. I asked him about Bishop John Barman instead. He was friendly with him. He thinks Barman will be active again soon."

"That fits with what Keith said."

"He asked if I was on birth control, and I said yes in case of events like this, and so he ejaculated inside me. I moved on at that point."

"Dripping, no doubt."

"No. He thrust it in deep."

"I suppose his sperm was off to try and find an egg."

"So, to conclude, he will talk to you about being a rabbi, but he cannot see you personally. The rest I have heard since. I can tell you that he is engaged to be married."

"Engaged? You have heard this since, from third parties?"

"You can find out from him."

"I'm not going all that way to find that out. Right, on this road we stop at the first layby."

She pulled in and rang his number. "Hello Maurice. I messaged you about coming and talking to you about theology, being a rabbi, and love. You said you'd see me, but Allie has indicated that you might not want to see me personally."

"Of course I'll see you personally," I could overhear, and so she looked fiercely at me, "but not about love between us. I have become engaged. She is called Sallie, and she is local here, and it will be a good Jewish wedding, and you are of course invited."

"Oh," Linda said. She mouthed the word 'sorry' to me. "The other thing is I've rung because I've just arranged to check out the Free Liberal Church, a group based in Durham. They'll see me on Friday and perhaps I should check them out before I'd ask your advice about roads to being a Reformist Rabbi. I'm most grateful. So I'm suggesting I come over only if that Durham meeting doesn't go so well."

"I thought I would have to wait forever," I further overheard. "I can see that you'd want to check out a liberal Christian based group first. But Sallie will be giving me support as a rabbi's wife."

"She will be your rebbetzin. Er, thanks ever so much, Maurice. I'm sure we'll see you again." The call ended and Linda said, "Oh, shit." Then she said, "What are you staring at?"

"You."

"He's engaged to this Sallie but he's fucking you? I wonder what she thinks about that? That's like Keith all over again. Are they all like this?"

"It is relevant to my research that your half-wish to be a rabbi seems to be at an end."

"No 'seems to be' about it. We'll go into Ingle Park and then go back, after I have gathered my thoughts."

So she turned left off the main road.

At the park Linda said, "Let's get some fresh air for a few minutes." We walked towards a long copse. "Anything else happened of any interest? Spill all the beans."

"Bishop Arianwen Bron was fucking Peter Brabazon and both wanted sex with me, but I declined."

"Don't know them; they are not of interest to me."

"Keith won the prize of the virgin sixth former when she was neither. I wanted to interview Keith, but when I found him he was no longer with Yojana but with Helen McPhail. I ended up having sex with both at the same time. It was impossible to do it any other way."

"Life can be so difficult sometimes. So you were on birth control?"

"Do you know when I started on birth control, taking the pill?"

"Enlighten me."

"I was eleven, nearly twelve, when my mother took me to the doctor's after my first period and I had my first contraception then."

"Struth."

"Aunt Sally, his mum... Why are you laughing?"

"Aunt Sally."

"She showed me how to use a condom. That's how it was. But mum told her I was on the pill and so long as he stayed true to me there was no need for condoms. The four of them wanted us to marry, and did everything to support our intimate attachment to each other. And so, as teenagers, he did penetrate me a lot and I did enjoy it. I wanked him off, sucked him, got fucked, the lot. I liked to play with him. But, the thing is, beyond him, I had no interest in boys and fancied some of the girls at school. But they saw me close to my cousin. Often children so close like this develop a private language, but we did the opposite. We tried to pick and use more universal words and accents. I think it is because all the kids were broad Norfolk."

"You got to university and did horrible porn."

"It was a short step on from Jonnie."

"Oh come on. He was your affectionate cousin. That with loads of masked men was totally different."

"You've had similar - the car showroom."

"Hmm. Let's move on. Do you really want to have a baby for us?"

"Yes."

"Did you say that deliberately?" Linda asked. "What a time and place to say it!"

"I was being different. I slept with Fatima the night before."

"Oh, did you now? There's no point me calling you a slut when that's what you are. Did you say about a baby deliberately?"

We arrived at the copse.

"I just came out with it. I'd forgotten Christine's advice."

"Which was?"

"To apologise first, to tell you all that had happened, and let you find out for yourself that Sallie Sarah was engaged to Maurice Neptune."

"More concealing."

"Well I didn't know until Fatima and Christine told me. Akemi is my sixth cousin. Distant, I know, but Philip Shrimpton is the father."

"So you saw your distant cousin and ended up in bed with her mother."

"She was pretty good too."

"So you would have let me drive all that way to be humiliated by Maurice. I was a sort of Aunt Sally."

"Then I was to make my case, my offer."

"So these days you do what Christine tells you."

"Only because I'd lashed things up so far. Anyway, want hear more about my past?" I asked.

"Go on. Let's walk back to the SUV."

"How exactly did you end up with that SUV, Linda?"

"Get on with your past."

"Jonnie and I were intellectually different, when I went on to do A levels and he decided to work on the farm. As kids we were often covered in paint. School thought I was good at art, but I was as interested in art reflecting belief. That's Walsingham, after all. I got paintings into Walsingham shops. A nice little earner, they were. Jonnie isn't very good at painting.

"With my school coming to an end I looked at university places: he and they saw the Anglia prospectus and the Wytham prospectus but the one that mattered to me was Somerset - Folkways."

"And your tutor became your girlfriend."

"Abigail Randall seduced me in her home and I felt fantastic. She took me to Taunton Tantria - although she was also in a coven - and there I learnt an open sexuality and the so-called combat training. Abigail and I were often naked fighting. She encouraged me to try and attack her hard, but she got the better of me until near the end. We ended up sweating like hell and our wrestling and fighting often ended up in fierce orgasms."

"Stop it Allie, you're making me feel randy. Get in the car."

"She learnt that I orgasmed on and on and some nights I practically passed out. Then she left Somerset for Bristol, although she continued to live in Creech. She'd had a way with students, so Bristol was a reset. By the way, I'd drunk heavily at Somerset until Abigail stopped me, and Taunton Tantria made every effort to stop me resuming my drinking."

"She left Taunton Tantria as well?"

Linda drove off, back to Serninsea.

"As a Fighter of Concern she joined the Sneyd Steamers in Bristol, that changed their name to Bristol Milks."

"You are kidding."

"They did a lot of steam baths and massages. Taunton Tantria did a lot of self-defence and also Tantric practices. I used to like legs open, soles of feet touching soles of feet, staring at vulvas and making deep and loud noises. But they changed their name..."

"To a 1970s joke?"

"...because they use breast milk for communion."

"So does this lot here."

"I left by coming here - so didn't join 'this lot here'. There was also Andrea Lindsey at Taunton Tantria, my GP there."

"Oh really!" exclaimed Linda.

"I fancied her but being my GP stopped anything."

"Someone has to exercise restraint. Certainly not you."

"The School Secretary didn't. Beathag just wanted me as her possession. She did make me go teetotal. She frequently slapped and strapped my arse."

"Good idea. I was considering this myself."

"I tried to get away from her, but only really succeeded when I came here."

"Enough, Allie. I want to consider what I've had, what I've got, and what I've lost - but I want to do it silently, if you don't mind."

After some moments of silence I said, "I fancy your larger body parts and slim shape: your generous breasts, wonderful skin complexion, voluminous hair growing back, a big smile, that you're not delicate and petite."

"Allie, body shape is controlled by the oestrogen from my gonads while the 'Y' chromosome is mainly responsible for growth. That's not my effort: that's how it works."

"I am allowed to fancy your appearance. What big teeth you've got!"

"Pack it in, Allie. What about my personality?"

"You're intelligent. Similar interests and experiences to me, for sure."

"I'm damaged, I'll admit it. I want to mother you in the face of danger because my mother has mothered me."

"Apparently, I read: in the Wild West 'CAIS' women were self-selecting as prostitutes because they were tall, lean, attractive, and didn't get pregnant."

"Annie is a prostitute. She's not 'CAIS', is she?"

"Today, some supermodels are 'CAIS'."

"Are you leaving when the research is over?"

"I told Professor Mitton not that I am leaving and will return to Glastonbury but that I intend to stay here forever. He said this will have to go into my thesis, and would in fact be good material on the progress of an involved participant observer. He also wished us the very best, and insists on coming to our wedding."

"I don't like driving when I am shaking," Linda said to me. "But we're nearly back. So you listen to me rather than Christine, for a change. Like Christine says: Listen! Sometimes, just sometimes, things really matter to me, and you'd better know what they are. I can't help who I am. You just do not understand how deeply I want you inside me, and how frightened that makes me feel and that's why I then say such authoritative things."

"I might understand."

"God, I so want you. Let's go back inside. You can see me and handle me in detail - microscopic detail."

Narrator: Allie The Fall of Rhiannon Fleetwood (Wednesday 14th January)

Back in the bethel Linda's hand running through my hair as Rhiannon Fleetwood burst through the double doors.

"Fucking cunt Linda Jupitas you've cost me my job," she shouted for the handful around to hear.

She made a bee-line for Linda so I rose and kicked her in the crotch, which caused her to stagger. Then from behind her I put my arm around her neck and said, "If you're not careful I'll break your neck."

Linda was frozen and wide-eyed.

Rhiannon started shaking about and struggling. Obviously I couldn't carry out my threat, so I kneed her in the back, turned her and with measured impact knocked both elbows into her upper back to see her fall to the floor.

"Sorry, everyone," I said, "but this woman is dangerous and she must not be allowed to touch Linda."

Fleetwood on the floor, after coughing, said loud enough, if in a croaky voice, "Your article, naming me going above the casino, has caused the PCC to tell the bishop to get rid of me."

Linda said, "See if I care."

I received applause when I picked Fleetwood up, but her arm up her back, gripped her around her neck and frogmarched her towards the double doors. Outside the building I released her, and told her, "I'm warning you. One touch on this property, the slightest touch on Linda, and I will see to it that the rest of your life is physically crippled. Get it? Now fuck off and do what your PCC wants - leave the area."

I shoved her away and she looked back at me, before setting off back to the vicarage she occupied for now.

When I came in, Linda smiled at me, and indicated that she had some business to do. She sent a text to Bristol, containing this:

I notice on the denominational website that you want another name change again. We negotiated the name change in Council, and this is the one we should keep. All the bishops are equal. I note you have separated out Christine and me to apologise, and you as founders and with extra titles suggest you have seniority. You do not. Mar Reticulum.

She received a reply an hour later.

Our seniority is not implied and not explicit. However, with Mar Triangulum Australe having left your locality in less than satisfactory circumstances, the opportunity does arise for a necessary change of identity and projection forward. We are the founding bishops and this Church is a treasure to us regarding its direction. The word 'Corporate' is hardly offensive. We await the apology and explanation from Mar Werburga and yourself Mar Reticulum regarding the police raid so that our Church can restore its good standing, and your good faith in the matter is that the Church name can then be changed. May the Holy Spirit guide you all. With every blessing. Mar Arcturus-Virginis and Mar Flacillus.

Linda said, "I'll try and gather everyone tomorrow, Allie, and we'll have a meeting. Meanwhile, tonight, it's me at your house."

"Yes of course," I said. "What about Diana? You could still visit her."

"Leave it cancelled."

In my house Linda said, "Keith bought one in this style on our honeymoon in Walsingham."

"That's because I sell these," I said, "to people back there. Good kewter."

"Keith sold it on to a priest who was sympathetic about his disappointment after his non-selection for ordination. Keith had enthused about your painting but we were on the bones of our arses then. Not that I'm not now."

"Which one was it?"

"Christ Resurrecting in the Dawn Sunlight."

"I've done very similar so many times since."

"Can you do a Saint Sernin, and versions of artwork already on the Toulouse Basilica and other associated images?"

"Sure."

"Good, so that when done we will get them hung at the bethel and we can represent Saint Sernin better than the parish church. But now, Allie, I think I want you in your bed, with me, here."

"It's not as big a bed as yours, but it is a double."

We had some veggie bake and indeed Linda stayed over. I now allowed myself to be in love with her and the sex we had was very erotically charged. I let her slap my arse a few times/

She said, at that moment, "You're a very bad bad girl and someone has to take you in hand. That someone will be me."

Narrator: Linda Journey and Approach (Thursday 16th January)

Early next morning we took some of Allie's existing canvases to the bethel, and Roger down at the other place said he'd come up and hang the pictures.

Morning calls indicated an ability and willingness for a number of us to go to near Durham, including Peter. I thought the sooner we left the better.

Christine was having breakfast and organising property buying from Ann and Labhaoise by phone. I asked, her "Look, are you going to do a grovelling apology like they want, to go on the main website and have it act as a press release?"

"I don't see that there is any alternative."

"And they are doing the name-change thing again - seconds after agreeing one already. What's a 'Prince Apostle' when it's at home? I am not doing an apology and explanation."

"I'll do it."

"No! Not in my name."

"An apology offers internal peace."

"No! The police raid was based on misinformation from Elizabeth getting her own back. Well, I'm investigating the Free Catholics and we're leaving after breakfast. You can choose for yourself - it wouldn't affect your right to come here."

"Margaret might be apostolically sound, but the Church isn't. I have some ideas on that."

"I might prefer it as it is: Free Catholicism or High Protestantism."

"Indeed! That group as presently constituted has no secure ecclesiastical order."

"Precisely," I said. "Suits me."

"That's a shame," said Christine.

Adam didn't need his trusty sidekick, although Peter had offered to work extra hours some time later.

Then Christine surprised me. "There are suggestions going about that Barman and Eyre are getting active, and, given what Elizabeth has done, they might actually join the LCAE.."

"I thought they wouldn't join our Church."

"Yes, but you've indicated to Rabbi Maurice Neptune and therefore others about moving to a different group. That makes a group they can join."

"There are no private conversations any more."

"And we are supposed to accept all bishops who want to join, based on the veto principle once they've joined."

"But we don't want them!"

"Catholic theory states that the validity of sacraments does not depend on the moral worth of the individual. Nevertheless, if Barman was going to join I might then seek another communion. I really want to keep a grip on the Principatus Theocratici Confraternitati admissis in Ecclesia Apostolica Charismatico Liberali - or the equivalent."

"So you want to see if Durham can change?"

"Dominic Himalia is not a proper bishop. Even he says he only a Superintendent minister. He makes a point of not being episcopally ordained."

"We've got the deacons plus Kathryn going. Two bishops are better than one, Christine."

"I'm also a researcher," Allie added.

I had an idea: "These Free Catholics: could you accept their Presbyterian election principle if we can get them to accept all bishops being apostolic in ordination?"

"The change would be something like that."

"We have disagreements but we've walked our path together. And if you come we'll at least have two bishops up there, four deacons and one lay supporter. My SUV and Peter's van are sufficient for our numbers."

Christine said she did want more information on likely new clergy joining the LCAE, and asked Bill and Pauline by phone if they could get an answer from Bristol.

So we put together overnight bags - Christine had one anyway for staying in one of her Serninsea houses - and we set off in my SUV and Peter's van. I took Allie, Christine, Kathleen and Winnie. The question was who would be in the front seat. Allie gave way to Christine, the two bishops in the front seats. Allie was on the back row, alone.

Christine used her phone to secure initial accommodation in Sedgefield, to discover via Kathleen then on her phone that Kathryn had done the same. Kathleen agreed to include herself and Winnie in Kathryn's found accommodation. The upshot was two modern functional rooms located at the edge of Sedgefield and one room for Christine and one for Allie and me in a refurbished place in the centre of town (Tony Blair's old constituency and where the new Prime Minister stamped his feet to begin as a 'Tory Blair'). This place had a courtyard, with beams across bedroom ceilings, and had St. Edmund's church quite close.

I suggested that we ought to be better co-ordinated than this for our meeting. At least we found one restaurant for all of us in town, called Gogo and Anima, with a bias towards Basque food, where we would be able to discuss our approach.

We ordered Marmitako Tuna, Chuletas de Puerco Salsa, Lamb and Beef Piperade, Kokotxas Gelatinous Fish Heads (!), Pisto a la Bilbaína and Pastel Vasco cake. And why not?

At the restaurant Christine received a call from Bill. Bristol informed Pauline and him that the two South Wales bishops were about to join the LCAE, but there was nothing on the others. Bill and Pauline wished us the best for the meeting;

Christine knew their views and they would follow Christine's advice.

Meanwhile, there was an idea for a women's bath group. Kathleen suggested that the wet room in the bethel could be made very hot and moist, with use of the showers and plunge pool. The unitary WCs with showers nearby could also be made hot. On a Wednesday women only could pay a fee to undress, or wear sheets, to gather and relax in these hot spaces. We could add suitable sofas in the seating and dining area.

I said it just might not be a money spinner with the extra heating and water meter bills, but it could be a service to the community. "Good ideas."

The main conversation together in Gogo and Anima only confirmed what we had decided to do anyway: add our congregation to their denomination and ask for apostolic succession. After the meal, I drove two of our carload - Kathleen and Winnie - and Peter took Kathryn to the other accommodation, before returning into town where three of us were in the same place overnight.

I took out a tablet from my bag to remind me about the Free Liberal Church from the website: names, developments, news.

Allie asked, "Can I use that when you're finished?"

Annie had received one day's suspension for Wednesday for discussing Goosechat policy and payments. "Oh, she's dribbling ice cubes down her body; let me see what messages she's received."

BobbyBalls: I'm the prince with the found shoe.

ThicknReady: I wish I had a lady like you, I would be the luckiest man alive.

DectectoristSex: You're an Anglo-Saxon.

Digger: She's a Viking warrior.

Digger gave a tip of 10 tokens.

Porterhouse has joined.

ThicknReady: I have never wanted to Norman French kiss a woman like I do you.

ThicknReady gave a tip of 5 tokens.

Blowme: You're attracting immigrants.

Porterhouse: Oh I want Norman too kiss her... right down there.

Porterhouse gave a tip of 1 tokens.

Chopper: She's a French impressionist. She's giving an impression of having an orgasm.

Adam: You remind me of a lass during school days.

Dr. John gave a tip of 10 tokens.

SumoThat: Putting ice on your nipples will cool you.

Adam: I bet you were skinny as a kid.

Chopper: Has the cat got your tongue tonight?

Dolt: Cold water won't make you fat.

Dr. John gave a tip of 50 tokens.

Adam gave a tip of 10 tokens.

Porterhouse: Where's she gone?

Doit: Gone to get some more ice.

Porterhouse has left the room.

Digger: She's a Pagan warrior, like a Scandinavian.

Dr. John: have you thought about rape and pillage? I'll elucidate...

HelenMc: Where's the redhead?

SumoThat: Hopefully you've started to cool down, Headgirl.

Painter: Love those pink nipples.

Painter: The light is so good.

Blowme has been removed and offending messages have been deleted.

Dr. John has been removed and offending messages have been deleted.

Adam: Where do you get breasts like those from?

Chopper: Wonderful pubic mound. Subtle.

HelenMc: Headgirl is at the top.

Allie now said, "I think she's doing all right, but she is very quiet. By the way I got two hundred quid from Annie.

"You forget that each token is ten pence and that they add up."

As it happened, Allie and I did not have sex. Simply, we were too tired after travelling and eating.

Narrator: Linda Meet the Free Liberal Church (Friday 17th January)

I drove the three of us to collect the two elsewhere, for the seven of us in two vehicles to move north and slightly west to Bishop Middleham. So appropriate a name! (We might even have chosen pub accommodation with a clerical name.)

In an older house in the misnamed High Street, we met our hosts around a table. Our delegation consisted of two bishops, four deacons and our minutes taker (Kathryn), facing three bishops and three ministers. These were Bishop Dominic Himalia (resident here), Bishop Margaret Lindbeck, Bishop Alexander Styx, the Reverend Paul Kuiper, the Reverend Sally Charon and the Reverend Duncan Deimos. Duncan took their minutes and it turned out that he was the brother of Sarah and Louise. Ex-Anglican Louise was carrying out pastoral work in Peterlee.

After the usual bureaucratic meeting bits, introducing our team, I went first: "We are ordained members of the Serninsea Liberal Bethel, currently part of the Liberal Charismatic Apostolic Ecclesia. This bethel was built very recently from the gutted two houses, a double garage and an added back extension. The extension is also to the first floor accommodation and there is a top floor too. I have managerial rights over the bethel based on ownership by a secular friend. We are proposing to take this bethel out of the Liberal Charismatic Apostolic Ecclesia, and would like to consider joining the Free Liberal Church. We would bring this ready-made effectively parish church of ours into your group, and thus extend your group's reach into Foss."

Margaret said, "I was received here from the LAE, as it was then, and we are happy to receive your proposals. What is it that would be brought into our group?"

I said, "Just the local church or bethel, really."

Christine said, "We have two bishops in Bristol who, roughly speaking, want to do something else. We have two more nearer who will do more or less what I will do. I come into the area from outside. Linda, who is local, like these clergy except one, is driving this proposal."

Dominic stated, "Our team have elected me to speak, and we have agreed positions. However, anyone can speak and we may need to withdraw for consultations. First of all, we would prefer it if you were proposing a merger: if you form your own denominational Church or persuade the Bristol Two, if we can call them that, to leave you with the LCAE. It's neater and more equal that way.

"These are doable technicalities," I suggested.

Dominic continued. "Then there are some issues. First, you do have creeds and articles, even if loose about them. We cannot accept that. Secondly, we maintain the Presbyterian principle; in short, we elect our bishops from the whole clergy equally. Bishops guide, but they do not lead. We are not anti-Catholic, definitely not anti-Universal, and our Christianity comes about through theological preferences not demands. However, we uphold the central Eucharistic rite with many interpretations as to its meaning."

I said, "So as a group we have red lines. We accept doctrinal flexibility. I am quite happy to drop creeds and articles, in fact I am happy to drop them from a great height and bin them. Nevertheless, we want to stay connected to the Apostolic heritage and the family of Catholic, Orthodox and Eastern Churches. Bishop Christine, please."

"You do define yourself as Christian, don't you?" she asked.

Dominic Himalia responded, "Many flavours to the ice cream. I don't mean The Simpsons' joke about Unitarians, either."

She stated, "I see on your website that you describe your ordinations, those with an apostolic background and those without."

"Only as a matter of description."

"Now I have this ecclesiastical name, Mar Werburga, and so we have what we call Werburgh Geese, locally, usually, and..."

Alexander Styx interrupted: "We don't do fancy names. I was offered one in a previous arrangement and said no."

Christine said, "I want to keep a Society guided system of education, social work, Church order, rooted in something like our Principatus Theocratic Confraternitati admissis in Ecclesia Apostolica Charismatic Liberali."

"English only," said Alexander Styx.

"I see," she said. "When you prepared for this meeting - I know you've only had a few days - were you prepared to bring the Apostolic principle into your Church? This is the elephant in the room, I think."

Dominic Himalia replied, "It is, and it has big tusks. Some of us are proud to be non-episcopal in ordination. But we are prepared to be flexible, so long as the principle of equality is not threatened. Nothing by the back door."

"Can we say we have," Christine was asking, "bishops and also superintendents, priests and also ministers, even though they all come with the same rights for voting?"

"Not like that," said Dominic Himalia. "I am not less than Bishop Alexander."

Christine said, "Bishop Linda, I think we need to withdraw for consultations."

Before you do, said Dominic, "Don't you have a principle of sub-conditione?"

Christine said, "Yes, but it applies when someone already has an episcopal-based ordination, when we just don't know how sound it is, or when we apply another one for the apostolic lines. What are you suggesting?"

Dominic said, "In a magnanimous gesture, for the sake of the prize before us, we would accept a case of uniform ordinations, but across the board. Your priests, deacons, yourselves as bishops, and then all of our priests, ministers, bishops - as we call ourselves."

"Bishop Linda," said Christine, "we need to treat this seriously. I still need to tackle other issues of Church Order. We will withdraw to the next room, if we may, to consult."

The upshot was that, to do ourselves again, we would need additional ordainers, people with likely different lines of apostolic inheritance. However, Christine said she could see the rest of us were happy with flexible ministry definitions and if so she would have her own separate ecclesiastical arrangement with Bill and Pauline. But I said again that, whatever happened, she was not going to apologise to Bishops Geoff and Luis in any way that involved the Bethel. Christine decided she would have one more try at securing for herself satisfactory Church order, including for a guiding society. Back we went.

"We would do what you proposed," Christine told their team, "but we need to find other ordainers. However, I want the apostolic principle recognised. So I propose a name-change: suggest the Free Liberal Apostolic Church."

"No," said Bishop [Superintendent] Dominic. "We did discuss, in preparation, accepting a change of name based on absorbing a new ecclesial culture, so long as we don't lose or upset what we already have. If you put in the word 'Apostolic', then we need it balancing, by something like 'Equalitarian' or 'Democratic'."

"Don't want it sounding like a small political party," I said. "Actually, we are making a lot more progress and more quickly than I thought possible."

Dominic said, "The trouble is, 'Free Liberal Democratic Apostolic' does..."

"Sound political," said Margaret.

"All right," responded Dominic. "We could have 'Free Liberal Apostolic Democratic Church' - but it is quite a mouthful,"

Our Peter said, "Free means Liberal. Better to keep Liberal, of the two words. Free means like dissenting Prots."

Margaret said, "I agree, but others here might not. We'd be pleased to hear from your other clergy, as well."

I said, "Well, same way, we'd be pleased to hear from the Reverend Paul Kuiper, the Reverend Sally Charon and the Reverend Duncan Deimos too."

"Your memory for names is better than mine!" joked Margaret. "We need to consult, I think."

So, off they went, which meant that we could also talk among ourselves. After a rather unfocussed chat, I said, "Come on Christine, you can go along with this. After all it has been Liberal before, and the use of 'Ecclesia'. It's not second best to 'Church'."

She said, "I want us to be recognised. It needs to be legitimate."

Kathleen now said, "I read a website where the Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia was, among others, specifically not recognised, and not just over the rumours of Bill Masters' and Pauline Junor's orders. So the Liberal Charismatic Apostolic Ecclesia is equally illegitimate, on that basis."

Christine said, "Our orders are sound. This is circulated rubbish. Yes, autocephalous Churches, of which we are one, are notorious for recognising and not - oh, here they are."

Bishop Dominic Himalia said, "We will do it. Liberal Apostolic Democratic - and we make you an offer of generosity of spirit - Ecclesia. How about that?"

"Most generous," I said. "My clergy please respond."

"Agreed," said Peter Marshall.

"Agreed and most generous," said Kathleen Wickenby.

"Agreed and the same," said Winnie Lott.

"Oh, sorry, yes it is generous," said Allie.

"However, we have a price," he continued. "Your Latin use ends: only English, The Society to Guide the Liberal Apostolic Democratic Ecclesia. Also, drop the Werburgh Geese. If you've got members of something, then they are members of the Church."

Allie suddenly said, "I wondered about this, whether the Werburgh Geese were Church members or not Church members."

"But that was the point," said Christine. "They're not. We are clerical. And how is it democratic to have a laity that cannot vote? In my method, the Geese covered everyone - laity and clergy, associate and just clubbing together as in identity - but there is no pretence that the Geese as such are members."

"Actually," I first mumbled, and became louder, "Deacon Allie is right. There is some confusion. People come 'under the authority' of the Confraternity and yet these Werburgh Geese are not Church members."

Christine said, "Geese act: like responding to the Holy Spirit, they act. They are initiated to give a commitment to act."

"Goosechat," said Allie.

I said, "Allie, stop it. That's irrelevant."

"Oh no it's not," said Christine. "The Holy Spirit gets everywhere, even among online sex workers. I chose that name deliberately."

"But it is not relevant to this and has nothing to do with the bethel," I said.

"We are closer than you think," said Alexander Styx. "After all, we have a pastoral list of laity to whom we minister and we hope they act reciprocally in supporting us."

"Geese? Farmyard Geese," said Dominic, with a smile.

Christine said, "Then I want 'The Farmyard Society for the....'"

"It was a joke," Dominic said.

"Maybe not," I said. "Farmyard Geese instead of Werburgh Geese has a gentle humour to it. Geese is operative to our area, whereas Werburgh isn't. Toulouse, you see, via St. Sernin. Werburga relates to different areas - Chester and Bristol - if also about geese. Then go back to the sixteenth century and in Southwark... Oh dear, this is beginning to sound daft."

"It's not daft," said Christine. "These symbolic words matter: surely you of all people believe that, Linda - Bishop Linda."

"Er, yes, I do. So, therefore, what is the effect of the symbolism of initiating? A pastoral list might involve reciprocity, but they are not initiated."

Dominic said, "Farmyard Geese would need to be a much more separated group, and Society to Guide the Liberal Apostolic Democratic Ecclesia is just that. So we'd have for clergy one big ordination bash and a change of name. Clergy members elect bishops equally, bishops get consecrated along apostolic lines. No creeds, no articles, no doctrines: just a central ritual and an emergent Christianity with a good dose of humanism and the like."

I asked, "Are we happy? Yes? We are. Can I ask your other clergy?"

"Yes," said the Reverend Paul Kuiper.

"Yes," said the Reverend Sally Charon.

"Yes," said the Reverend Duncan Deimos.

"Except," said Dominic, "You go away and think about it. We will discuss it to find any issues and problems. We will send you a document for agreement. It will be based on this, and maybe something we've not thought about. If you don't like the document - but, really, try to like it - say so. All of your clergy will need to sign it and return it."

Allie suddenly asked, "You do do all marriages - not just male with female."

Sally Charon was first to say with direct eye contact, "Yes. It's on our website."

I said, "Good. In the meantime, the bethel comes out of the LCAE."

"No it doesn't," said Christine. "We stay in unless thrown out or do this as we move out."

I told my fellow bishop, "I'm finding your logic harder and harder to follow. Allie, stop scratching your head. It's unbecoming."

"It's about patience, deliberation, pacing, good order," Christine replied.

"Give us a few days to make the declarations," I said. "Happy, Bishop Christine? Yes you are."

"We've not discussed sex," said Winnie, "other than Goosechat."

"What about it Deacon Winnie?" I asked.

"Her sex work, Christine's ministry, above the casino that has the Body Eucharist."

Dominic said, "We do reject original sin but we see no place for a Body Eucharist or forms of initiation. We could draw on your experiences to learn positivity but some of what happened strikes me as mistaken even on a limited ritualistic basis. I thought you were writing against it."

I said, "You wouldn't want to repeat what has happened in Hartlepool and Serninsea, including recently."

"But I would," said Christine. "Properly regulated and organised. Anyway, it probably needs reviving again."

I said, "I won't be associated with any attempts to flog your dead horse. This is about the bethel as it stands and what it does getting a new denominational identity. Dominic is right - I'm against it."

He said, "I assumed you were, otherwise we wouldn't have entertained a merger."

"Good," I said.

My bishop colleague concluded, "Like Goosechat, like any future Geese, you want all that activity remote. I get it."

"This is music to my ears," I said to everyone. "Thank you Deacon Winnie for raising the matter and allowing clarification."

This happy meeting was followed by a social chat, where we also exchanged information on our areas. Their Church was based in the Durham area, but had been stretching out northwards.

Night Thoughts

We returned to Sedgefield for a pub grub meal of pies at the Black Labrador, where everyone was happy but it was plain that Christine was harbouring doubts.

A message from Adam wished us well and stated that Jenny would leave hospital on Monday. I passed on the news.

We asked at our accommodation whether there was a room with a third bed in it, or a good sofa. Allie's plan regarding ongoing conversation was that Christine could get into bed with me at night, and she could be on a single bed or sofa. In fact a sofa in another room was brought into our room with an added pillow and duvet.

I said alongside Christine, in her nightie, with Allie beyond and me naked, "We're dealing with names again. Bloody names!"

She said, "Well, before you sleep and dream about lots of names for lots of Churches, I have some news for you. Adam sent me a message that he wants me to take over the lease for above the casino."

"Why does he never tell me anything?"

"Perhaps he feels no obligation, any more."

"Other than it may be a religious matter."

"You can't have it both ways."

"Your religious matter. Or it isn't at all. Now I do sound confused."

"Listen: if I don't get the lease, someone else will, and we could lose control. The authorities are sensitive about the Blue Diamond Club and whether it really does hold private parties."

"Who's 'we'?" I asked her. "I've just said it is your matter."

"Like it or not, it is associated with the Bethel."

"No! Not any longer. This is top of my agenda. Sorry, but it is."

"But it shouldn't get raided again; there'll be no more silly stunts."

"Not with Elizabeth Huett gone, but would you have the McPhails in again, and travelling Fatima Tamuuz? Moving to the Free Liberal Church under a new name has the opportunity to change all this."

"Not so much if they adopt the apostolic principle, as in the Liberal Apostolic Democratic Ecclesia, the Society to Guide the Liberal Apostolic Democratic Ecclesia and any Farmyard Geese or whatever..."

I said, "Your badges would have to be F and a goose!"

"I want to sleep on it. For me, the Latin added something."

"The common language of the Roman Empire was Greek," I said.

"You said it - 'common language' - whereas Latin has a sacred quality."

"You know, Christine, you're in my bed at last overnight, and yet I have a girl sat on a sofa under a duvet staring at me. So yes we'd better sleep on these things. Have you got everything so far, Allie?"

"Yep, wife to be."

"Oh, yes," I said turning to face Christine. "Would you perhaps marry us?"

"Of course," Christine said. "Light off now, please, Deacon Allie."

But then, with the early light of the morning coming in, I couldn't understand what John Barman was doing in our room. Christine was asleep alongside me. Barman pulled the duvet off, exposing two naked bodies.

Christine woke and said, "Oh, Terry!"

When I looked down at myself, I was pregnant.

Barman had a knife. "I'm going to cut this out."

Christine said to him, "You can put your hand in and pull it out but it won't be apostolic. But cut her open and make her suffer and it will be apostolic."

"This is my baby, not yours," I said at Christine.

Barman said, "Knife, cut, I'll destroy her skin."

"Allie! I cried out.

Christine started masturbating as Barman raised his knife high.

As the knife came down, he slumped to the side and his knife went into Christine. Apostolic purple blood spewed from her slashed stomach underneath him as he laid on the dead woman.

Stood above was Allie; she'd given him a hand chop to his head. "That's my baby to grow," she said, and instantly fisted me, removing my baby and placing it up her own vagina and through her cervix, her arm very contorted.

I said, shaking, "I'm your bishop but I am scared of you. What about dead Barman?"

"I will cut him into pieces and eat him, so that'll make me a bishop as well. Anyhow, Christine's dead. I'll dump her body in the local church."

My eyes opened. Christine was dozing alongside me, with her nightie-clad body facing me. Allie was lying on the sofa over the room, also asleep. I went back to sleep myself and if I dreamed again I did not remember it.

Decision (Saturday 18th January)

In the morning Christine had more to say. "I was thinking, while you were sleep-masturbating, that this isn't going to work."

"I was what? Wake up, Allie."

"What? Where am I? Oh. What?"

"You were dreaming, probably," I said.

"Altjiranga," she said quietly but clearly.

"What?"

"Dream time."

"Allie, Christine has accused me of sleep-masturbating, whatever that is. She has been thinking, hands-free."

"Listen. I have a different plan. Bill, Pauline and I could revive an older Church title from their past. Bishop Bill Masters was of the East Angles Liberal Catholic Church; Bishop Pauline Junor was of the Orthodox Catholic Ministries. They were both one person Churches. What I am saying is that the three of us join up under a scheme that suits us. I can then do above the casino to my aims and objectives, and it need not concern you. Linda, you don't care about Apostolic Church order."

"I've been loyal to its demands."

"But you don't believe in it in your blood and bones. I do. You and the rest can then join up with this Free Liberal Church as being, you know, High Protestantism - if that's what you prefer."

"Oh. That's a shame. I wanted to keep you, despite the above the casino matter."

"Give us visiting rights to your bethel. By the way, you can resume masturbating, if you want. Awake."

Allie gave a kind of choking laugh.

"I wish you'd take that nightie off, Christine," I said to her.

So she did! "If it helps."

Allie seemed to widen her eyes and smile. "Toileachas."

Christine said, "Come and join us, Allie. Sort of celebrate a new way forward. You know I suspended Annie for a day - but of her choosing. I received a report that she broke the rules, viewed it and saw that her talk when you were a guest was on the edge of what is allowed."

"Yeah."

"I suggest Allie that I give Linda the means to receive divine approval. You can join in."

Allie said, "For going into High creedless Protestantism?"

"No! For the peaceable way she, of impeccable apostolic inheritance, has facilitated the preservation of the apostolic remnant elsewhere."

I was brought to a pleasant orgasm by them, assisted by my apparent earlier self-pleasuring.

On my exhaling some gasps, Christine declared, "The Holy Spirit has indeed sent Bishop Linda a sign."

Okay, she was as bonkers as could be: but I rather enjoyed the result.

We requested a further meeting at Bishop Middleham. They'd regather Saturday afternoon. We thus had time later that morning for our group to walk along the river in Durham below the cathedral.

"Altjiranga Mitjina," said Allie.

"What?" I asked.

"Dream eternal.' The aboriginals refer to this when they do the walkabout."

"You are weird, aren't you, Allie."

"That makes at least three of us, this morning," she responded.

"What happened this morning?" asked a curious Kathryn.

"The conversation," I said, "had a very strange outcome."

We made our way to the Cathedral, as Christine was interested in Saint Cuthbert. Then we returned to Bishop Middleham, the place. We met the same people again, plus Louise Deimos, and the Reverend Judith Brown - a specialist on Hinduism, apparently, and not averse to carrying out rituals to Ganesha.

Around the table Louise asked, "Are you glad to be outside Anglicanism? I am."

"Yes, it's less duplicity."

"Better restart," said Superintendent Dominic Himalia. "You requested this."

I said, "You'll be aware that the main defender and proponent of the apostolic principle is Bishop Christine Vine here. Although I wanted to keep her with us, we have decided to part on friendly terms as she sets up an independent sacramental Church based on traditional and apostolic transmission principles, with a guiding society that she likes to see operate. She's still going to conduct services in the Bethel, but as a visitor of a different Church. Therefore, the rest of us - and we are all present - would like to join your group just as it is. I understand it to be either High Protestantism or Free Catholicism, with flexible ministries, doctrinally free, and operating on a Presbyterian principle in electing Bishops and indeed selecting clergy. I will be dropping the 'Mar' name. We will not require a guiding society."

"Quite a change," said Bishop Alexander. "How can we refuse you? But we would want to mark the change, I think, and for this I would like to consult our team."

Louise said, as they got up, "We should welcome them with open arms."

They were gone, and came back after five minutes.

Bishop Alexander said, "Obviously we are happy to receive you and welcome your Serninsea Liberal Bethel, an actual working parish. Please join us as a one-day denomination."

"Serninsea Liberal Catholics," I said, thinking on my feet. "But it could take time to make that a legal reality."

Bishop Alexander Styx asked if this was really necessary. Their discussion had recognised the need to act quickly and generously.

Dominic therefore said, "Then come over as your local bethel. We propose subsidiarity of organising and that we mark your entry by changing our denominational name to the Free Liberal Ecclesia and legally as soon as practically possible. That means decisions regarding your Serninsea Liberal Bethel remain for your people alone, but even with such subsidiarity we expect you to respect the Presbyterian principle locally. This means that the Bishop cannot overrule."

"Ah, a problem," I said. "I don't overrule and don't suppose I ever would, but I have like a reserve golden vote by which I can defend the place and overrule in emergency."

Bishop Dominic Himalia said, "I think we can fit this in as part of our agreement. This is an emergency power, for extreme purposes, such as an attempted takeover. Probably you will never need to use it. We also have defence rights in reserve on property and ownership matters. Make some sort of statement that these powers are intended as emergency only."

"This starts?" I asked.

"One minute past midnight tonight.," said Dominic. "Our name change starts then too, pending legal alteration. Also I'd like to visit your place, for a theological sermon, say 9th February? And perhaps we can see you or one of your folks up here some time?"

"I'll put 9th February in our calendar to hear you. Yes."

This was a straightforward meeting and soon over. We put some signatures on drawn up documents, including a statement that my powers are intended as emergency only but without limitation. Then we left their team with handshakes, whilst giving a lift to brother and sister Duncan and Louise to Hartlepool - a full car load. This time Allie sat in the front and Christine on the back row.

In Hartlepool we said the briefest of hellos to Sarah and Harriet. Duncan would take Louise to Horden near Peterlee tomorrow on his way to Seaham. We went south on the A179 for the A19, the A168 and on to the A1(M).

I asked in the SUV, "What will you do Christine?"

"Messages I've already exchanged suggest that Bishops Bill, Pauline and I are forming The Albion Orthodox Catholic Ecclesia. The guiding society for Church order, governance, missionary and social work will be the Principatus Theocratic Confraternitati admissis in Ecclesia Albionis Catholico Orthodoxa. We chose 'Albion' instead of 'East Angles', because I do travel to Hammersmith and Ebbsfleet and I am from Rainham. We are three equal bishops and we will be looking for more. We will keep our bishop names - I continue as Mar Werburga. The Werburgh Geese are continuing. Ah, there is a message here from Adam, who has received this news. He insists that you keep the overrule on all Church matters. He could give it to me, if you insisted on dropping the overrule power. But I am telling him 'no', now, because this would make your Serninsea Liberal Bethel the visitors. And I can tell him that your complete overrule has been accepted by them. You may need to reassure him too."

We were going down the A1(M) before facing the frustrating slow roads in Foss. And at a services halt north of Wetherby, in the open air, I put together a message with Christine and Allie either side of me.

For Bishops Mar Arcturus-Virginis and Mar Flacillus of the Liberal Charismatic Apostolic Ecclesia (LCAE). This comes with every blessing. Mar Werburga is leaving the Church, the LCAE, in order to form the Albion Orthodox Catholic Ecclesia (AOCE) with the guiding society for Church order, governance, missionary and social work, the Principatus Theocratic Confraternitati admissis in Ecclesia Albionis Catholico Orthodoxa. This Church is being formed with Bishop William Masters and Bishop Pauline Junor. The entire remaining clergy team of the Serninsea Liberal Bethel, including Bishop Linda Jupitas, the former Mar Reticulum, is joining the Free Liberal Church being renamed the Free Liberal Ecclesia from just after midnight tonight. This leaves yourselves as remaining bishops in the LCAE, freed to make name changes and undergo elevations as you wish. We are not prepared to make any apology regarding recent events in Serninsea and you must not give the impression that we do. The police raid was the sole responsibility of the former Bishop of your Church Elizabeth Huett, Mar Triangulum Australe, by misinforming the police, and warning selected others but not us in advance. May the Holy Spirit descend upon your Church ministry. Bishop Linda Jupitas and Mar Werburga Bishop Christine Vine.

"A kiss of peace please," said Christine to me. "It is for all we have done together, and what we will do separately. A bit like this country and the European Union."

"You are Albion and we are very ecumenical..."

"Will you do God the service of the kiss of peace, Bishop Linda?"

"Is that all right, Allie?" I asked her, alongside.

"After this morning?"

"Oh aye," said Winnie, nearby.

Christine said, "Bishops do not need the consent of a deacon, unless this is reflective of your own new Church order."

"It's hardly masturbation," said Allie.

"Oh aye," said Kathleen.

So Christine and I kissed on the lips, which seemed more like a snog with plenty of her spittle.

"We should do more," she said, staring into my eyes.

I said, "We could use the mikveh tomorrow."

"Save it until after a meeting to release us," said Christine.

"Ah, yeah, good idea," I replied.

Friendly Division (Monday 20th January)

Sunday was a refreshing day with Christine doing her worship with her bishops and afterwards me doing our service among our clergy and, more importantly, with a congregation of seven people.

That night in bed I indicated a wish, first to Allie, to soon priest all the existing deacons including herself.

Monday late morning I lay alongside her in bed. "Good morning, Allie. I see you are at last awake. Do you know it's eleven in the morning already? How's cunt? Describe, analyse, philosophise, and present your findings to me in the flesh!"

"So if the universe contains laws, it takes a rational thinking person to operate according to those laws."

"You know perfectly well that I did not ask, 'How's Kant?'"

She then said, "If you think Descartes said, 'I think, therefore I am,' then George Herbert Mead can be thought of saying, 'We interact, therefore we think,' don't you think?" She started giggling.

"You are going off-topic. 'Cunt,' I said, and it was quite clear."

"My professor told me about this 'Religion of the Natives' - a history conference - in Canterbury that he attended."

"Not 'Kent'. I'd asked, 'How's cunt?' and I want your findings."

"Sure. Why am I 'cunt' by the way?"

"Well... It is the centre of your universe. I will buy you an engagement ring."

"I wonder what Annie has been doing. She goes through the night."

"Are you going to look at that every time now?"

"No. Oh, she must have finished. As for a ring, save your money. My cunt doesn't need a ring. Leave that to Kathleen and Winnie."

"A wedding ring on the wedding finger of your left hand, surely."

"Beads. 'A'e you got beads?"

"I shall get some beads, dear Allie."

"My cunt is very receptive, Linda, of communicative subjective sense-experience, from objective touch, if you'd like to investigate."

After placing my hand on Allie's pubic mound and lowering a finger to push inwards, I said, "I want you to think about what men are going in there. It will need a single sperm of a single man to make a baby, but the more sperm in there the better our chances."

"Is it quality or quantity, Linda?" she asked. "It sounds like a choice between working with Annie or perhaps Roger's rich mix."

"Hmm. Interesting choices," I responded. "Meanwhile, Adam is due to receive Jenny this afternoon. We need to treat her with sensitivity if she comes here."

We had a late breakfast in the public area. "Hang on, I've got a long message here," I told her.

We regret but must accept your decisions to leave. We point out, as I am sure you are aware, Bishop Jupitas, that the Free Liberal Ecclesia is not apostolically sound and that you risk your orders as valid but irregular by placing them in such a gathering. On the matter of Mar Triangulum Australe, in fact she remains a Bishop in good standing in this Church. She states that her actions highlighted immoralities within the above the casino event, which she rightly ended through informing the police.

We have news assisted by your departures. After recent pastoral and therefore confidential approaches, we have now decided to receive the following bishops for incardination: Bishop Niall Ifan, formerly Suffragan Bishop of Casnewydd in the Welsh Anglican Church, Bishop Afanwen Ffrwyth, formerly Bishop of Mynyw in the Welsh Anglican Church, Bishop Jonathan Eyre, formerly Bishop of Margate, in the (English) National Church, and Bishop John Terence Barman, former Bishop of Bolingbroke in the (English) National Church. We shall also receive the Reverend Fatima Tamuuz, formerly in the (English) National Church, and we shall ordain to deacon and priest Keith Richard Jupitas.

At the forthcoming Council in which we receive them, we shall first formally recognise your departure from our Church: Bishop Linda Jupitas, Mar Werburga Bishop Christine Vine, Mar Simili Anseres Bishop William Masters, and Mar Popolari Bishop Pauline Junor. We do not recognise your subsequent ministries - you are not in communion with us - and this extends to Mar Werburga Bishop Christine Vine, Mar Simili Anseres Bishop William Masters, and Mar Popolari Bishop Pauline Junor, although we understand that their new Church will be apostolically sound. All the deacons under your superintendance are released as well. Nevertheless we ask the Holy Spirit to guide and bless all of you. Mar Arcturus-Virginis, elected Prince Apostle Black IV, Archbishop of Great Britain in the Apostolic Corporate Church, and Mar Flacillus, Metropolitan Archbishop of the Liberal Charismatic Apostolic Ecclesia (L.C.A.E.), to be renamed.

Allie said, "They love being long-winded, I'd say. So it's four bishops out, and four in, and one priest in and one person to become a priest."

"Keith would not join my Church; well, technically he was correct."

"I'd say I obtained quality information," reckoned Allie, staring at me.

"Research methods have come on in recent years," I commented. "Meanwhile, I'll do the admin to get our Bethel all-marriage registered status under the new denomination rather than the old."

"Is that complicated?" she asked.

"No. Allie: look behind you. Jenny is back holding Adam's hand. Hello Jenny."

Allie said, "Hello."

"Hello," Jenny said back.

Her face looked a bit vacant and strained. Adam, squeezing her hand, said she would share his bedroom elsewhere and he would make sure she took her medication. Adam added, "She knows about Elizabeth Huett leaving, so no need to mention her any more."

"Other than she has the approval of the Bristol Two. Hey, they haven't mentioned the Wilsons."

Jenny said, "Fatima and Akemi visited me."

Adam said, "Fatima has gone with Akemi to Tamworth. Eyre and Barman are in Tamworth, joined by Elizabeth, but if the Wilsons are there then they must be doing something different."

Jenny now said, "Your hair is getting longer again."

"Yes it is," I said, unsure what to say. "Be a while before it is down my back again. But that's where it is going."

On the new democratic principle the message from Bristol was forwarded to all the clergy. We held a meeting later in the afternoon, of all the clergy, plus Kathryn, where Jenny and Adam observed what happened from their more distant seats. Bill, Pauline and Christine attended, as we all agreed their release to form their own Church.

"So we resolve to give access rights: you can happily hold your services other than between eleven to one and four to five thirty. Note Kathryn please that Bishops Christine, Pauline and Bill of the forthcoming Albion Orthodox Catholic Ecclesia are always welcome to use the Bethel and its facilities."

Peter asked about potential of published apologies regarding above the casino.

I said, "Please keep a watch on misrepresenting us on the LCAE website: no apologies or bending the truth."

Adam from nearby said that if they published untruths then he might get a solicitor to go after them.

I asked Kathryn to change the minutes to include Adam and Jenny as guest attenders, also giving Adam's ownership details, and what he said.

Adam said, additionally, "There is a sadness here, that we have lost a friend in Geoff Virgo."

"Thanks to the politics of fringe Churches," I said.

"So-called fringe Churches is how we found him," stated Christine.

The main resolution was that we were now part of the Free Liberal Ecclesia and would organise ourselves clerically on the Presbyterian principle.

Meanwhile, Adam also told us that there was a new virus arising in China. It might affect us and it might not. Its origin was China and its 'wet markets' they thought but it was spreading through the world.

"And now," I said, "I invite us all, including our three leavers, to use the mikveh as we mark a new stage in our institutional journey. Adam? Jenny? Maybe not. And when we are done, we have another new marker for the future.

Warning the public, and closing the doors temporarily (Adam did this), all the clergy then undressed in the cloaks area, showered, checked each other's orifices, and Kathleen and Winnie removed their clitoral hanging discs. We processed to the mikveh, submerged ourselves in succession, and read words of blessing for the future. Kathryn facilitated our drying. We returned to the cloaks area to dress and Adam unlocked the public doors.

Then we had a new painting unveiled on the wall: Christ Resurrected out of the Sea, a mystical, dreamy piece, as painted by the Reverend Alfia Shrimpton.

After all this Peter showed me the website of our former Church. Our departure was noted but reasons were not given nor our destination denominationally. That Church would now become the Old Charismatic Apostolic Corporate Ecclesia (OCACE). It now had two Archbishops: one a Metropolitan and one a Prince Apostle.

He also showed me an email, for the retiring Reverend Georgie Smith wanted to lecture in our Bethel about Christian understanding with reference to Bernard Manning.

"Oh dear," I said to that.

Chapter 30 Potential Futures

Narrator: Allie Archaeology and Sex Work (Tuesday 28th January)

I went to the clinic on my initiative to have an intrauterine device fitted, so to cut out the chemicals.

"Hello Allie. Well, I am your GP again, but here. Knickers off and get on the bench, please."

"Hello Andrea. I thought a nurse would do it. I'm not wearing any knickers."

She said she would examine me before any nurses did and update the records. So in went a speculum, and a light went on, and she had a good look inside. "Everything seems to be all right, with a little redness. May I ask why you are having a device fitted?"

"To avoid getting pregnant until I want to get pregnant."

"I was under the impression that you had lesbian relationships, including now."

"I'm going to have a baby for Linda. How is Lynton? How is his behaviour towards you?"

"Stop! This is a professional consultation only. I ask the questions. How was your last period?"

"Heavy."

"I think I want to take your blood pressure and listen to your breathing. Take your top off, please. My stethoscope might be a bit cold."

"Breathe on it."

"We don't do that." My breasts visible to her, she lifted my left one to place the device below its drop.

I asked her, "What's this virus Adam Magellan mentions? He thinks it matters."

"Keeping a watch on that."

She took my blood pressure - slightly high.

"I heard you were a guest online. Stay out of the sex industry here. I hope I can make a difference, coming here."

She inserted the device.

"I want to stay protected, say from cousin Jonnie and any others, but remove it quickly to conceive."

"I'll say this. Everyone who gets to know you, loves you. Linda perhaps doesn't realise just how fortunate she is that you have chosen her."

She stared at me and instructed me to get dressed.

"Call in at the Bethel, Andrea."

"It's problematic. I'm likely to be doing more at the parish church. Oh well."

"You're a Pagan at heart, Andrea."

"I'm afraid I've my next patient to see."

I returned to the Bethel thinking that my researching phase must surely be nearing its end and new horizons were opening up.

Meanwhile, still under instruction to have a weekly massage, Adam added Jenny to the twins' roster.

I was undressed and lying on my front on the massage table in the wet room. In came Kathleen and Kathryn, and both undressed to nudity, to work me at both ends. Kathryn was now visibly pregnant, and of course I looked at that as my desired own future. So she told me about her morning sickness and sense of changes within. Then Kathleen said that she could not allow her sister to have a child on her own, so that she and Winnie were looking for a biological father.

Kathleen told me that Adam had said that it might now be unwise to get pregnant, because a third of China's patients from this new virus were requiring intensive care. On the other hand, being pregnant might occupy time lost to economic activity!

Jenny walked in, as if there was no privacy.

"Adam doesn't want me to get pregnant. I am forty, anyway. He likes your friend Annie, but only watching her on screen. So I wank him while she does her stuff. He changed his Internet package to unlimited data, before I came back, just so that she can be on screen all the time."

"Why is Adam so interested in this virus?" I asked Jenny.

"He had a virus as a child, before he knew Ann and Labhaoise and even Linda. He's always been on the look-out for viruses since."

"And looks out for most things," I said.

Kathryn said, "Uncle George told me that Adam became intense when recovering from illness alone in bed. He read intensely, he thought intensely, and he predicted future doom."

"It figures," I said. "I'll add it to my background information."

Jenny wandered out of the room.

Kathleen said, "You do know about the father of each of Ann and Laoghaire's children?"

"Oh yes, it's Adam," I responded.

"So we are asking Peter tonight. I mean, Peter and I will get it together with Winnie - all four of us - so that he comes into me in a loving setting."

"Aren't you going to use a turkey baster or something like that?"

"You're far too Norfolk with that idea," joked Kathleen. "Not with someone we know so well. He will be quick inside me. He can take his time with Kathryn, can't he!"

Kathryn said, "He'll be loving with me while Winnie will be getting Kathleen excited and receptive; he can then do his duty with my sister."

"This must be the model for us," I said.

"Oh!" reacted both twins together.

"Yes indeed! There are some options of available males."

"Your cousin Jonathan," said Kathleen. "I want Peter so that, genetically, my son or daughter will be brother or sister of Kathryn's child."

I said, "The problem there is Jonnie would want to be an active father."

Kathleen explained: "Adam can't father more than the two he has. Nor Peter. Everything in moderation."

"Roger donates," said Kathryn, "but anonymously, although the law allows someone over eighteen to find their donor. Adam gives him time off work, like he approves of wanking."

After a short while I transferred to an air bed. The two dribbled and poured gunge over all three bodies. Kathryn indicated that she might have to stop doing nuru massages soon, because it was all based on the pressure of her weight.

I said to her, above my face, "You do know that your pubic lips are thickening. I've just realised."

Then the strangest conversation began, while they were using their bodies against mine.

"There's a new dig starting in the marches," said Kathryn.

"Well, you can't do it. Not after a few weeks more."

"I can sit and scrape," she said, with her larger breasts going across my face.

Kathleen said, rotating on my legs, "Winnie can join in, like I'll ask her for help with massages."

Kathryn said, "We were interviewed on Sea TV this morning. Look at their news cycle this evening."

We were soon done, as ever, and showered before we went into the plunge pool, all four of us, jumping in the water, and enjoying a bit more sisterly and friendly body-rubbing.

Kathryn said in there, "Answer me a question. How come Linda stopped Kathleen and me massaging our uncle and yet she has given a room to Roger and Marie, brother and sister?"

"I think she has moralistic moments and is then inconsistent. Other than that, I do not know. There must be another reason. Yeah."

After everything and we were in the seating and dining area, Kathryn said, "We want to make the wet room hot, and have women in there and around the place relaxing."

I said, "I'll make another entry into my research if it's agreed. It won't make money."

Kathleen said, "Not everything is about income: it could be a relaxing social space."

Kathryn added, "But it used to be a social service provided by local authorities when many people did not have baths in their houses. This was long before I was born. The Romans and others did collective bathing and collective shitting, but we're not advocating the latter service."

Linda approached us. "Wet hair."

"The plunge pool," I said.

The two Kathys saw their next client arrive, a man with a bulging stomach.

Linda asked me, "Did they do nuru on you? Do they always do nuru on you?"

"Yes. Very professional. Kathryn now has all the signs of pregnancy. Bigger breasts, thicker lips and the emergent bump. I'm quite jealous, Linda."

"You mean 'envious'. Is Kathleen envious as well?"

"Put Sea TV on at six pm," I said to Linda.

So at the appropriate time we put the screen on. Kathryn and Kathleen were talking (yesterday) to a male interviewer, a Media Studies student at the college, Karl Turner, on location in the Serninsea Marshes.

Kathryn said to him, "So it will be Roman dig for looking again at what made the economy work at that time. But a dig is a dig. The question is: 'What were the Romans doing in places like this, among the tribal Celts?' Or more to the point, 'What were the British Celts doing to take advantage of the Romans?'"

Kathleen added to him, "It's a question of the day, Karl."

So the interviewer asked, "Which day is that?"

Kathleen put it, "Both theirs and ours, since you ask."

So Kathryn said to him, "And the substantive answer has been different among archaeologists."

The interviewer put it that, "You were telling me before that the old view was Romans were living in cities and military camps; the new view is more flexible."

Kathryn answered, "Yes. The Roman finds of metal, and similar items in places like this, show settlements based around a recycling industry. So the Celts were working alongside each other in workshops and with kilns of various kinds. Today, right - talking about today - capital is cheap and manufacture is so efficient that machines build consumer goods and we throw them away. But in Roman times and coming on top of our iron age (and bronze was still important), labour was cheap and manufacture was expensive. So Roman items of value and direct practical use were repaired and recycled, and value was in the expense of the item and not in the labour cost. So in the area identified where the Serninsea Cross brooch was never actually found, indeed, among an absence of grave goods, there is likely evidence of many Romano-British finds."

"What has been the impact of the fake Serninsea Brooch or Cross?"

"This is the point," pronounced Kathryn. "The fake brooch had the potential to bring local archaeology into disrepute. Good job the bishop fled, I say. He is said to be living in Tamworth. The brooch using a cross was his idea, and carried out, as we all know now, by a very clever craftsperson Helen McPhail with her husband, a metalworker, Stephen McPhail - also a local plumber."

"It had to be declared a fake quickly," said Kathleen, "otherwise archaeology in this area would have been badly damaged. We'd plumbed the depths but this dig is a vote of confidence."

Kathryn nevertheless continued: "It is hard to believe, and long before industrialisation of course and any proper differentiated labour market, that this area was a manufacturing centre, a recycling centre of valuable and wanted items. Individuals had skill and made a living on toga pins and metal for jewels."

"May I ask you about your pregnancy, Kathryn? You can't dig when larger."

"I can sit with a knife and scrape. I can hold a metal detector, although detectorists have had their reputation knocked despite having had nothing to do with the fakery."

"Reputations have been knocked all round," said Karl Turner. "How are matters resumed now?"

"Well," said Kathleen, "we have a researcher at the bethel. We contacted her boss in secret. Professor Mitton of the Glastonbury School of Folk and Ethnic Studies and the University of Somerset used his good offices to contact archaeology colleagues. His intervention proved crucial to restoring local activity and now we have this dig."

"Thank you very much to my guests Kathryn and Kathleen Wickenby. Back to the studio."

I said to Linda, "Professor Mitton has an obvious interest in the organisation of past societies: doing their historical anthropology and sociology, bringing them to life."

"Very good," Linda said. "Barman was a disaster, including to archaeology in this area. I wonder what rubbish he is dreaming up in Tamworth?"

"More positively," I said, "you have impressed my professor. He's supported this area. And now Kathleen is going to have a baby. I want a baby too. This must be our baby," I said, "and not just mine."

"Time to make love," said Linda, switching the large screen off. "Not that I'm expecting any miracles!"

Upstairs, Linda asked, "What's that?"

"An intrauterine device. I went this morning."

"Why?"

"So as not to get pregnant, but also to get pregnant on demand."

"I am not going to get you pregnant."

"No, I don't expect you will."

"So, first of all, you go to a clinic - I assume, unless our Bethel massage service now includes fitting these - and you don't tell me. So you've got protected in case, what, some male of the species pops in there with some semen? Is that the idea?"

"Well, it's about Jonnie, really, and letting the device settle in. Before we marry, I want to see my family, and explain everything to Jonnie. Obviously if we agreed he was to make me pregnant, we can pull it out first and I'm instantly available for fertilising."

"Allie Shrimpton, you are incorrigible in every sense of the word. This thing in there ought to have put me off, but the sight of you exposed makes me feel horny."

"Release your horniness then," I said, "with me."

Narrator: Linda The Reverend Georgie Smith's Lecture (Saturday 1st February)

We had a distinguished turnout come into our building. The Reverend Georgie Smith must have had good contacts.

The Methodists were in early. The Reverend Celia Coggan, Methodist minister in Wytham was present, as was the Reverend Denise Mullins, Methodist minister in Wytham, both seen at the Anglican retreat.

Alongside her was the Reverend Charley Darley of the Foss Group Unitarian Chapels, along with Meg Richards, the American at his Wytham chapel. I said a hello to them and hoped to chat later.

Allie and I of course recognised the Reverend Doctor Andrea Lindsey, GP, and husband, Bishop Lynton Plimpton, the new Diocesan Bishop for Wytham. The Reverend Alan Lindsey, Andrea's brother, was present too.

Other Anglicans were the Reverend Margaret McEnhill, with her partner Penny, and then locals Gertrude Carter, Mohammad McArden, Tom Bowler, Ralph Phil Thicket, Jim Bill Sayle, Beatrice Kerr, Eva Angela Kell, Tracey Graham and Flòraidh MacLean. My former colleague, the Reverend Christian Skidmore, an Anglican Evangelical from Breadwick in Wytham Diocese, sat on his own and stared around the building.

Surprisingly we had the Reverend Benajah Abernathy, Baptist minister and friend of the late Ken Osis. I sort of dodged around him. Presumably he related somehow to the UPCC minister, perhaps of the older 'three denominations' (Baptists, Independents and original Presbyterians) connection.

We had Nellie Richards, External Relations Monitor, and Hattie Schepsutte, the Clerk of The Serninsea Vestal Virgins, attending. They used to use the UPCC chapel.

From the world of politics we had present Councillor Gethin Layne, Transport Councillor in Serninsea, and Stephen James Davison, MP for Serninsea and Eastern Foss.

Most important, perhaps, were Georgie Smith's remaining congregation, all elderly women: June Keble, Florence Newman and Ruth Doddridge.

I would now count Madge Jack and Catherine Mould as attenders of our bethel rather than Anglicans. Sally Torrance, naturist, came along (clothed). Our clergy were all present too, and Christine, but not Bill and Pauline, of the Albion Orthodox Catholic Ecclesia, arrived last minute.

And there were people I did not know.

I said, once the clock touched 7 pm, "We're very happy here to host the Reverend Georgie Smith, who is going to speak on A Free and Full Faith: My Retirement Lecture. She does retire from tomorrow."

There was a round of applause.

"Here we have a free faith, especially since we've joined the Free Liberal Ecclesia. Yes, we are no longer Liberal Catholics here but Free Catholics, that some see as High Protestants."

"Or High Unitarians," called out Charley Darley.

"Our speaker will explain her own definition. We have kitchen eats and drinks afterwards. Welcome to everyone. The Reverend Georgie Smith has been part of our towns' Christian ministry for as long as anyone can remember."

There was more applause.

Georgie took up a position behind a lectern just into the chapel. She had prompt cards only.

"I thank Bishop Linda and the owners and occupiers of this church - I understand you call it a 'bethel' - for letting me speak here rather than in my own building. I'm reliably informed by local Anglicans still that Linda is the source of much excitement in these parts but whether it's doctrinally sound is a matter for discussion. I'm the Reverend Georgie Smith, the UPCC Minister, indeed here since way back in 1982 when I was but twenty-six. The latest news in my building is not good, as my congregants will testify, and had the Vestal Virgins not moved to here I would have advised that they find new premises. My congregants are but three in number (and I hope they don't mind me saying) elderly female members of the United Presbyterian and Congregationalist Church locally. I introduce June, Florence and Ruth. No men, no one younger than seventy.

"Let me refer to the group who used to pray for the area and paid to use our building. Nellie and Hattie are here. I know that the Anglican vicar, Colin Cromer, would have nothing to do with them. We didn't either - they just hired the space, but we are all human beings, all trying our best.

"There were consecrated virgins in the Roman Empire, beyond the Vestal Virgins. They rose above gender laws, and, being free of men, became free to preach and minister, like Apostles. Coming away from their families, these virgins opened house churches and did not veil themselves and indeed adopted men's clothing and hairstyles or even shaved their heads. Theirs was a bracing and sharp presentation that could not survive the coming descent of tradition. By the late third century, the emperor Diocletian ordered violent attacks on chaste Christian women.

Soon, women were unable to minister, prophesy, or baptise. Well, I have ministered, prophesied and baptised and I look back to the first one in this country, Constance Todd, later Coltman. For in 1917 she became the first trinitarian ordained female minister and was a Congregationalist, if rather an odd one, believing in the Virgin Mary as an intercessor. The Congregationalist Kings Weigh House in Mayfair, London, was as high as a kite, and had the sacramentalist William Edwin Orchard as Minister, and he was associated with Joseph Morgan Lloyd-Thomas, the Unitarian. I'll say hello to the Foss Unitarian Minister Charley Darley, who is here. I'll refer to Unitarians later. Kings Weigh House is now a foreign community Cathedral.

"Seeing as I'm talking about others, what about here? Here is so very different from my inheritance. You are all clerical, and I can imagine one of my predecessors turning in his grave as he waits for resurrection. Well, he's spinning already with post-Buddhist Vestal Virgins and Unitarians present.

"Anyone heard of Bernard Manning? For those who have: you'll likely say that he was that revolting comic in the 1970s. But I mean Bernard Lord Manning, who was a Congregationalist that defended my corner of the Christian Church and would have attacked such theological diversity and priestcraft. He was born in 1892 and died in 1941, son of George - a Congregationalist minister. Our Manning was a university lecturer in Mediaeval History and an expert on hymnody. He argued for a free faith and also a full faith, and thus attacked the Anglicans, Methodists too and especially Unitarians. The Unitarians were free but not full - rather empty in fact, rather like The Simpsons joke about nothing contained in the Unitarian choice for ice cream. Manning made some key speeches in the 1920s and 1930s. These lectures of his formed something of a defence and advance for the future of Congregationalism. He saw the potential of close relations with Presbyterians and Baptists, whilst recognising their particularities. Given that so many English Presbyterians went Unitarian, it was the Scottish and related Presbyterians that merged with his old denomination, forming the United Presbyterian and Congregationalist Church, and the Baptists have carried on. So those that had presbyteries of ministers joined with those whose congregations called ministers. I was called to Serninsea back in 1982 and stayed here. Some have accused me of running down the church, losing the faith as decline set in.

"Unfortunately we are all, including these new and diverse types mentioned, dealing in tiny numbers. It doesn't really matter if you're liberal or of a supposed full faith - all who were once large are going the same way. Oh, yes, there are charismatics down the road. I can see them rising and then falling. There is no magic formula, and let's not bring magic into it. Bernard Manning wouldn't have.

"Please don't confuse my seeming negative comments with a long held desire for ecumenism, because we do the Table of the Lord and not the Table of the UPCC. But there are conditions, and these are the pursuit of a free and full faith.

"A free faith means freely arrived at, defended and promoted, and not governed by the State. Legal, yes, but not privileged.

"What is a full faith? It is by both Word and Sacrament. On the Sacrament, it is the food blessed by the prayer of his Word, by which our own flesh and blood is nourished, as Jesus was made flesh. But the fellowship of doing this comes after Pentecost, the completion of the act of God that brought about the Church. It is after Pentecost that the fellowship can form to do the transforming act. This is after Justin Martyr's insight, and it is a very strong doctrine. The Word is the proclaiming of all of this, the telling of which comes through the formed fellowship. I was but difficult sixteen when the UPCC formed.

"Something else. It happens that this place has adopted the most used name in the New Testament: Ecclesia. Hebrew based, Ecclesia always asserts an ongoing dynamic coming together or response as well as a being together.

"Some think the Church was how the proclamation and good order was made, but Bernard Manning called this an inversion, the cart before the horse, and it's by putting the Church first that mechanical and legalistic conceptions arose. Thus come notions of valid but irregular, and regular but invalid, something of issue to many Catholics. So in our witness, apostolic succession is guaranteed by Word and Sacrament - the Good News creates the fellowship, or ecclesia, whereas in Linda's previous grouping the claim is that apostolic succession guarantees Word and Sacrament."

"Bishop Christine remains as a Liberal Catholic," I said.

Christine added, "More now an Old Catholic. Church order matters."

"I'm more religion as art, symbolism open to interpretations. Sorry, Georgie."

"So the ecclesia fellowship is vital, and Manning admits it's all pretty instantaneous, but the fellowship necessarily completes. We insist on the historic background for the Gospel Word we proclaim and its unification in the Sacrament, whereas you here seem to think you can have a spiritual exercise when the history is in doubt. This is also in reverse: it puts the rite and its effect before the basis of the rite."

Allie then said, "The social anthropology of rituals does put the rite first, because the rite binds people in a material and spiritual gift-exchange. It works across religions."

Georgie continued. "You've got the particularity and generality the wrong way around. We insist on a particular divine order, not a general human order, and this is what is meant by a full faith freely maintained. Members should not be members who are unwilling to take the Sacrament. You talk about Church and denomination, and that's the common expression, but by it we mean the fellowship.

"Bernard Manning was right to say we proclaim the mystery and do not diagnose it.

"In these parts, to make our witness, we UPCC have two churches in Wytham and one in Spaldswick. We contribute to one more. That's it for the whole of Foss. For such a vital insight, that's not a lot is it? I received recently an instruction to move, but I am not: instead at sixty-four years old I take my retirement, and I'm afraid the Serninsea church will close for good.

"Bernard Manning defended the Reformation as forged in Geneva. Luther was a transition, basically. Hus as a radical background doesn't get a mention. The Reformation was indeed a re-formation, and radical in a narrower meaning of return to roots. Myself, I think Calvin in Geneva was a most distasteful character, but from him and that version we get the 'full faith' that we freely proclaim.

"Bernard Manning meant the delivery through our Church of a straight-talking and plain administration of the Word and Sacraments. I notice the art in here: he had no time for it as such. Everything was biblically based, of course, New Testament after the Old. He disliked the Anglican tendency towards natural religion, the supposed equivalent of a picnic or a game of golf on a Sunday. He was unsurprised that a Unitarian minister could move to Anglicanism and find it 'full' in the sense of natural religion and ordered legalism. Oh, he was critical of Methodism too, as in the Anglican shadow, as it never found the roots of the original Reformer denomination fellowships. Ecumenism is based on fellowships giving their witness, not on denominations, despite the need for legal identities that do function in human society, that saw our merger in 1972.

"Linda here tells me she co-operates well with the Unitarian minister for his Foss churches, so Bernard Manning would double his dislike of you for both ritualism and vacuity and I know that Charley and Denise are friends despite no institutional sharing relationship with their churches. Same with me: I meet Charley quite often and have private confidential talks, but actually we don't agree on belief."

Denise spoke up: "I think, whether as a Methodist or not, I reach over to encourage and be encouraged by Charley on some belief matters."

Georgie stated, "Forced comprehension or unification was replaced by toleration, but toleration does not mean agreement."

She continued. "See, some say the age of the Father was until the appearance of the Son, and the age of the Spirit followed the ascension of the Son. But this is to divide the Trinity, and that we do not do. Nothing is superseded."

"Unorthodoxy is found throughout, and in latitudinarian Anglicans, but it isn't liturgy that preserves orthodoxy but divine grace as a passion preached."

"Congratulations to the new diocesan bishop taking his role, and his wife Andrea, coming here. I love you, really. Regarding Anglicans, you may say that the new occupant of the vicarage in Serninsea is not like this at all, being of full faith, but she operates in the context of Anglicanism in its broader setting."

"She's leaving," said Mo McArden. "And she won't come in here."

"So I gather - both of those. Rhiannon Fleetwood has certainly ruffled some feathers, but not one of her fallout came the UGCC way. I understand one or two have come this way, assisted by Linda being the former curate. One person has been to see David Scott the Methodist minister of this circuit (but he's not present). Let me try another colleague. The Reverend Christian Skidmore - and hello to him - to the south of Wytham diocese seems to have a more stable Anglican charismatic evangelical foundation. It suits well-off, ambitious, London commuters. Bernard Manning could not see Episcopalianism in all its varieties - despite the fact they are outside England - trying to avoid its Christianity resting on the lines of the Mosaic dispensation. The Church of Scotland fared better, more distant from the State's control, but still has tinges of Erastianism."

"I knew the Anglican vicar Colin Cromer as long as he was here in Serninsea but I'm still not sure about his stances. I got on with him well enough, but he seemed to represent a highly institutional middle Anglican way. You surely knew him closer than me, Linda, but in terms of golf he was straight down the middle of the Anglican club."

"By the way, from your online record of your sermons, I don't agree with you, Linda, either. I just don't get it as offering anything to grasp. Same as Charley."

I said, "People who come here observe basic rituals but think for themselves, and that's what I encourage."

"That won't do it for me. I have to pronounce when I preach. However, unlike fierce Bernard Manning, and his unwelcome references to the 'Judaic' in his stereotype of Judaism, I'm going to admit to being tired in what I do offer. I may as well be honest. You see, this has become for me a too long and too hard a witness."

I'm indeed accused of serving out my time, and letting a church run itself down.

"Its more serious than this because the tradition is basically done. It's very depressing. For a long time, up to 2002, say, I talked growth and recovery. Then I realised it was fantasy. But there was even then still an offer to make. It's not just that their one-time young minister isn't any longer, but there is no demand for what is supplied. No one understands what Bernard Manning and others readily understood. Of course I continued to minister pastorally, but we are not social workers. So we must stop the huge effort of running a place that cannot be run by three people and one more, even one more paid a wage thanks to historic trusts and a denomination scared of its future prospects.

"You see, I am orthodox - I really am - but I am going to admit that I don't think like my forebears did in any ordinary sense. I think for everything else in a naturalistic fashion, and so I combine both Christianity and quantum weirdness. Apparently quantum weirdness explains things. So I do understand Linda's quest to have a religion that relates more directly to ordinary methods of thinking and add in quantum weirdness. But what of our stuff? Is it stuff and nonsense? Given her views, I don't understand her clericalism at all, although she seems less wedded to it than her recent co-religionists. I just wear a skirt, you know, to present the Gospel.

"So let me be positive. I believe in our orderly religion, plain and simple. Surely the founders of the faith and the Reformers had profound receptive insights. I don't like all these poststructural theological devices, literary biblical methods, ecclesiastical Platonisms, and all the rest. It has to be historical, even if it is hard to do. The supernatural intervention may be fantastical, but it does have to relate to that man Jesus in his actions and outlook and that direction set by Saint Paul. The early churches matter; what happened as insights into gathering doctrine also matter. I can't admit that the trinitarian direction was mistaken. Running through all this something called the Holy Spirit. The Bible isn't all history, but there is enough in it and the Church Fathers matter.

"Some will say I am hesitant, and thus no wonder the small church in my charge has failed. But I have, in freedom, maintained the full faith. I'm just admitting to the difficulty and one wonders then about the Holy Spirit here and now.

"What should happen here is that someone new comes along and ministers to the UPCC witness here. But no one is coming. We won't even have the visiting minister, like the Methodists can. Methodist numbers are also pathetic and, again, it lacks any modern day unique selling point. No one understands these divisions any more. I'm told there were once Methodist Unitarians in Lancashire, and for a time their church polity was different from the English Presbyterians as Unitarians. They knew about these things then.

"Apparently the Methodists today have an active closing and merging strategy, but the UPCC just lets its churches fall off the crumbling cliff. No one wants to come over from Wytham or Spaldswick to some isolated spot on the coast. They didn't and they won't. I might draw their suspicions, somehow.

"So it will be interesting to see what happens right here - I mean in this building. You've got naturalistic religion, even naturism I understand (you can't get more naturalistic than that), lots of bishops and priests as a craft, and some sort of pastoral service and rituals based around food and ceremonies for moving through life. It wouldn't get me out of bed, as I say.

"I will go silently into the night knowing that ministry is often an experience of weakness and failure. I would join the list of ministers on the chapel wall, one of whom was UPCC, but that wall will crumble or be brought down and so this addition will not happen. Thank you for listening."

A muted applause followed.

Lecture Questions and Chat

There were some questions.

"I am the Reverend Benajah Abernathy, Baptist minister, and I admit I've had conflicting feelings about coming here - with what happened with Ken. Perhaps the sin of curiosity has got the better of me. Congregationalists often regarded baptism as relatively insignificant in order to ease their ecumenical union with Baptists. It never happened. Why not be a Baptist for your remaining years?"

"Because I regard the 'full faith' as including full baptism. From the earliest days baptism was of families including children. It's part of grace, part of the full faith. It is an act of the Ecclesia not just a response of individual adult belief. Baptists ought to centralise more, as the UPCC has done. I'm sorry that your friend committed suicide but we can't go on blaming others for an act of destructive self harm."

I said, "And I do not accept the blame, if this is what is implied."

The Baptist minister shuffled in his seat but said no more.

The Reverend Celia Coggan, Methodist minister in Wytham, asked, "So what's wrong with Methodism?"

"It's the junior partner to the Anglicans, from where they came and where they could return. They arguably have 'missing bishops'. Congregationalists and Presbyterians go back to primitive origins. Both Episcopalians and Methodists have only the ghosts of Presbyterianism in them. Presbyterians were the centralised and organised result of Congregationalism and Congregationalists the result of decentralised Presbyterianism. It made sense to come together. And the Baptists didn't."

Celia commented, "He rather liked Methodist hymns, the earlier ones."

The Reverend Alan Lindsey commented: "You have given a very sad and defensive approach. My sister here, the Reverend Andrea Lindsey, the new GP here, will have her own view, as will the bishop, but if we accept the notion of a 'full faith' then it is best established in argument, via a dialectic against naturalistic or any other kind of faith. This notion that a free faith is free from the State is but an institutional freedom and has rarely been so historically; rather, I see freedom as in the theological cut and thrust, tackling tradition, throwing at it theological enquiry, and then discovering the strength of the full faith. You have suggested the beginnings of this approach: the inadequacy of naturalistic faith point by point against sacrificial Christianity, but I'd just put up one against the other, and also bring in the working of the Spirit."

Georgie said, "Welcome Andrea and Lynton Plimpton to where we live."

Andrea informed us, "I'll move into the vicarage once Rhiannon has gone; Lynton will also have his large property in Wytham."

Her husband Bishop Lynton said, "I'm a focus for unity, not disputation. I'm going to maintain my silence."

Andrea said, "I will say that naturalistic religion has a sacrificial nature, and the understanding of Christian myth comes from naturalistic death to life."

I said, "You're doing what Allie does."

Andrea continued: "Son of Man had various strains but people were well versed to take up a sacrificial interpretation of Jesus killed on the cross - the good death. So, yes, general concepts guide specifics. Being dialectic, though, is like operating a yo-yo, and in the end can make one giddy. Sorry, bro. Better to build slowly with what works, using plenty of analogies, and understanding myth. Allie of this bethel is pretty hot on that."

And do you preach that?" asked Georgie.

"Oh I rarely preach anything. I heal people using science and also the full range of their minds. I'm a stop-gap in local Anglicanism. Rhiannon Fleetwood and I have got on in the past, but I will be quite passive in the local church once she's gone."

Sally Torrance spoke up. "I do worship nature, and so what if I can do it here? I don't mind people knowing that I am a naturist, and this place accepts us."

"I said of a certain excitement coming from here."

Charley now said, "I'd like to comment. Every Unitarian keen to learn their own institutional memory should read Bernard Lord Manning. He attacked us and modernism in general, and saw modernism as drawing in the fundamentalist who promotes another kind of legalism. Freedom carries risk, and for many liberty leads to liberal interpretations. You're a moderate caught in a trap, by separating this from that, and so you are as institutionally unfree as all of those you accuse. Congregationalists kept their orthodoxy through confessional statements and membership, whereas Presbyterians rented pews and let their ministers get on with it, ministers who'd attended the academy and wondered why they should preach differently from what they had learnt. So Congregationalist ministers have always been in that confessional trap, though some churches did become very liberal in turn and on their own."

"I'm not trapped; I'm taking about consequences," responded Georgie. "I'm not for a Cheshire Cat approach to religion."

Charley went: "Miaow!"

Allie then said, "We also have the phenomenon of secular clergy, who preach what the Church teaches but in fact do not believe it and wait for the moment to get out."

Georgie replied, "But I at least wanted to believe it, and recognised this duty of proclamation. I've admitted to the difficulty of the free and full faith and my tiredness given the contexts of today - the ideological challenge, its lack of social purchase. At least I have avoided in my working life what I see as a descent into naturalistic religion which, frankly, anyone can make or follow."

Charley added, "Talking of hymns, I think Manning liked the hymn It Came Upon the Midnight Clear by Edmund Sears, a Unitarian minister, because Sears believed in the divinity of Christ. But Sears took his viewpoint from John's Gospel, which some see as distinctly Arian, especially John 17:3."

"It's why Protestants do believe in the Church Fathers. I preach the faith of the Church, because the Church gathers to preach the faith."

Christine commented. "But they were formed, in the Church, advancing to a settled doctrine! Listen. The New Testament wasn't written beyond a setting and then sought people to gather. Its oral traditions, and scraps of writing, for the Gospel writers, were the Church. Before anything was written, the resurrected Christ gave the gathered Apostles their Great Commission. From the beginning, bishops with groups of churches organised the sacramental practices. The Church is continuous and the point of tradition is to maintain consistency."

"But if the revelation is of God, then the Church gathers to receive it. The Muslims have it that the angel says 'recite' and, in a sense, that is what happened here, although we admit to human vagaries and linguistic imprecision in the act of reciting. You turn the Church into a form of Qu'ranic perfection."

"I do not," responded Christine. "But the Church is the Body of Christ and carries his authority through its apostolic representatives. Jesus didn't say, 'I have these ideas and you might like to come along.' He said, 'Follow me!' and so they were there. Those of authority lay on hands and bless ministry like a chain."

"But Christ, the revelation, sought them out, and they followed! And we say the apostolic representation is in the free and full faith expressed. You can appoint all the people as properly as you like, but if they spout heresies then they are not transmitting the apostolic faith."

I said, "We've reached an impasse there."

"But I am gathering no more, and I won't be having a retirement ministry. Some retired ministers go on and on. At my age of sixty-four I stop. I have already served my notice. My three congregants know that there is no service tomorrow, and no more from me ever. They too will soon retire their duties: chair, treasurer, secretary. I'm not winding the place up: they are. I won't be involved."

Charley offered the thought: "Who could ask for more, when you're sixty-four?"

Denise Mullins then noted, "Not one of your colleagues is here. Why is that? Is it your straight talking or because you have refused to relocate for your final years or for a retirement ministry?"

"Ah," Georgie said. "A request did come to relocate, but was it insincere knowing I'll say 'no'? I bought my house here and exchanged it for another via women known to this place. It wasn't a manse, as such. If you are suggesting there is gossip, well I have always found gossip destructive but all ministers have it to bear. Linda here tells of those who knew her as a teenager here and some keep what they know to themselves - protecting their own. I was born and raised in Derby, and came here aged twenty-six to minister after theological college and university at Manchester. Yes there was new gossip here but based on my role."

I had my own comment. "Manning's view of Judaism is surely a caricature, and Jesus himself was part of messianic Judaism. Jesus did not free us from it, suggestable only via an incorrect reinterpretation of Paul. Manning can say what he likes about legalistic episcopalianism but he cannot equate it to apparent Jewish legalism."

Georgie said, "Yes, it's all wrong, that, but it doesn't take away from the wider argument, the return to roots via the Reformation in Geneva, the free and full faith, and the fellowship that gives it expression and completion. But this is an argument for others, from tomorrow onwards. The records of the UPCC church, here, and a detailed history, will be deposited in the Foss County Record Office at Wytham."

I called the questioning to a halt, and invited people to use the kitchen, and conversations could commence.

I gravitated towards Charley. I asked him why he would be friendly with straight-talking Georgie.

"There is a pastoral coming together, but Georgie will talk to you. First let her retire and get used to a new life. There were other places to meet, such as the Church Hall, but, partly with my influence, and from the odd Anglican, she chose to speak here."

"I'm intrigued."

"She meets Denny and me, partly because I meet Denny. There are these unofficial friendships - almost networks - in Wytham. She's kept to a stricter and more isolated existence in Serninsea, and has done so for forty years. Let her come to you. Anyway, I might be around a week tomorrow and, also, let me know when you have a naturist get together."

"Really? Our Gymnology class resumes on Wednesday for 7:30. I'd be delighted if you came. Is this about your breasts removal?"

"Partly. You've heard that Alan and I have separated; removing my breasts was the final straw, but Alan was distant even when Christine and you first met me."

"It's been a lot to ask of him?"

"He married Charlene. Charley meant Charlene, then. Wednesday might be difficult. We'll see."

So I would wait for Georgie to reveal more of herself, literally.

I noticed Allie talking with Andrea, and of course we'd met so recently in Glastonbury.

Georgie asked me, as people left, "I wasn't too antagonistic, was I?"

"It was all in the best possible taste," I said.

"Oh no," she said. We don't want to move from Bernard Manning to Kenny Everett."

Narrator: Linda East Wemyss Prize for Diana (Monday 3rd February)

Christine walked in with a clergy friend visiting. He was the Reverend Jógvan Dahl, an independent Catholic priest, with his wife Oddvør, she a member of the Fólkakirkjanboth in the Faroe Islands. Christine and Jógvan held open bags with robes visible inside. Introduced to Allie and me, the couple were living in the Shetland Islands and he was becoming part of The Albion Orthodox Catholic Ecclesia. This meant Christine's Church would have a very large geographical spread, but very thin in between!

I asked Jógvan and Oddvør if Allie and I could talk alone to Christine. Oddvør took Christine's bag.

I said, "After Georgie lecturing here, very different from us, I'd at least like to talk to these charismatics in town. You are related to this movement."

"Yes. My family connections. You've met my Roman Catholic brother, Linda, and then Peter Vine is our maternal grandfather, and Daisy was his wife. Daisy was the religious one; my mother was less fervent. I'm afraid I am the black sheep of the family. I am a prostitute, and Daisy in old age did regard me as sinful even before I became really sinful. I mean, she set the standard and my brother and I rebelled in our own ways. I have met Martin Burton, the inspiring link, and he has little time for me. Have you got this, Allie? You're the one for family trees. Who found this out?"

I said, "Adam, not Allie."

So it was that Allie, Oddvør, Jenny - joining us - and I watched activity in the chapel as Bishop Bill Masters, Bishop Pauline Junor, and Bishop Christine Vine ordained Jógvan Dahl as priest sub conditione and then Bishop of Hjaltland and Føroyar of The Albion Orthodox Catholic Ecclesia. Sadly, they did not use the mikveh.

Jenny came and chatted with the man she considered her uncle. Once the Church contingent and Oddvør left us, Allie, Jenny and I had some lunch.

"Hello Diana," I said to my friend walking into the bethel. "To what do we owe the pleasure?"

"I've won a competition! I've got to pick a day before the tourist season starts to stay two nights at Mrs. Cairns' in East Wemyss, except it isn't Mrs. Cairns' in real life."

"Ah, The Jacobite Gap Years book one."

"Not quite correct. As on TV. Television pictures parts of East Wemyss as old Inverness, with a little of the 'Lang town' in Kirkcaldy for some modernity. Our 1990s charity nurse visiting Clava Cairns with her female friend vanishes. Our heroine ends up in old Inverness."

"I read the book's opening scenarios."

"The prize in the real world is a room for two or three for two nights, where the Smiths stayed. Would you like to come?"

"Why not Aardse?"

"He's busy. It's even with a choice of dates, in March. You and Allie could come - there's a single bed along with a double bed. I'd rather not go on my own."

"Where exactly is East Wemyss?" I asked.

"Fife. East coast. Near Kirkcaldy. We could travel around from there."

Diana was going, regardless, of course; she said she would pick mid-March, and she might drive there and use the holiday to see similar television locations, for example around Edinburgh. She would contact her online friend, Glenda McKay, up in An Aghaidh Mhor, apparently something of a The Jacobite Gap Years obsessive herself.

Allie was positive about such a trip; she'd like to see Scotland, but she doubted there was anywhere to try out her Folkways learning of Gaelic. She had one ancestor who was born in Crianlarich and might look up the original home. Kirkcaldy was well away from any Gaelic speaking area, and always was, although Gaels called the town Cair Chaladain.

Diana left us looking rather happy.

I said to Allie (and vague Jenny) it could give our wedding a timing for sure and our honeymoon some structure: places to go. But would Diana feel like a spare part? Allie thought not, in as much as travelling to television interpretation locations would offer her own focus.

Adam turned up to collect Jenny and offered some foresight that we might be isolated in our houses after the World Health Action for Treatments (WHAT) declared a Public Health Emergency of International Concern on 30th January.

When Allie and I were at a loss at what to do, so we went and had sex together, after which we both read some Carol Christ and Judith Plaskow -

Womanspirit - stuff.

Gymnology (Wednesday 5th February)

I received an email from a chap called Daniel Beeching, so attended to it privately.

My family are paying a visit to Serninsea. A friend Jim with Harriet from the old days has moved there. I don't think you know them. We're staying at Promenade Guest House for a few days. Remember me? I remember you, certainly, at Saxiclite. Now I live in Nantwich, with wife Tina Dee, and our children Thomas, 10, and Theresa, 9. I saw all about you in the media. We arrive late Sunday 9th or 10th, weather depending, and leave Thursday. Could have some time alone to say hello, or bring the wife and kids who'd prefer the beach even in the cold.

Tuesday 11th, say 2 pm? Serninsea Liberal Bethel. It's on Upper Road: the new chapel in the old terrace - double doors and a single door at each end, tenfoot alongside north end. I could meet the wife and kids - up to you.

People were coming in to our Gymnology 'Class' before 7:30 pm. We were undressing in the cloaks area and moving swiftly to squeeze into the consultation room, with its library element. Towels were on the seats and more available.

The unclothed core number were my friend Diana de Groot (still excited about East Wemyss), Kathryn (showing her ever bigger bump) and sister Kathleen Wickenby with Winnie Lott, Bella Jack, and Allie Shrimpton, of course. I asked Allie to introduce us once everyone had arrived.

Coming from upstairs were the otherwise very quiet and almost unnoticed Roger and Marie. He said, "We think we can come here with discretion."

"Yes," I said.

Next layer I suppose were Louise Saraga with husband James Saraga, Sally Torrance and visitor boyfriend Jack Smith (the name caused Diana to smile), and Paula Campbell.

Then we had a new fifty-five years old person with us called Janet Jenkins (an attender at the Saxiclite Club). Andrea Carrithers, forty-two, came with her husband John Carrithers, forty-eight, of no former religious association at all, but who thought we might be a safe space to meet. Evelyn Johnston, sixty, had been to Wytham Unitarians a few times. Aadesh Easwaren, fifty-four, arrived with his boyfriend, Adrian James Wigmore, sixty: they had visited the parish church on moving to Serninsea and could not stand it. Celia Haddon, an online publisher, thirty years old, came in.

Then in came a young woman, Megan Furley, a long black-haired barmaid known to Allie. As she appeared from the cloaks area, Megan proved to be very hirsute with wild black hair around her crotch and underarms, except that she'd oddly crafted eyebrows with grey makeup. Perhaps she had shaved her legs. Megan had a large rose and a thorns flower tattoo on her inner thigh and a moon one on her back. Megan asked Allie after Annie, but Allie supposed that Annie was working.

This was such a crush in that room that I said, "Someone go out there and inform the folks that we are coming out into the seating area, and close the doors to any more of the public - except naturists. Please take the towels and continue to sit on them."

Allie then said, "Megan, I didn't know you were sympathetic to naturism."

Megan said, "Annie's trying to get me on Goosechat, so I've come here to see. I came here for small numbers but there seems to be a crowd."

I said, "Megan: we all respect each other here. Well done for coming here."

So we gathered at the sofas and seats, on towels. There I said to them, especially Kathryn and Kathleen, "It's a pity we haven't found a practical way to do the steam room provision. The wet room is too small, and there are more showers elsewhere but we'd need the heating so high, and we want to keep the mikveh as sacred and not double up as another plunge pool. Much as I'd like a ladies only and even a gents only gathering, this is not in the ethos of naturism. But over twenty of us here, including some of our clergy, is pretty good. And one of these clergy, Allie, has some big words for us."

"Hello," said Kathryn, turning her head. "You are?"

"We're late. It says, 'Closed to the public,' but we came for..."

"Fine," I said.

"Carol Wood and Gilly Wallace. Do we undress now?"

"Go for it," said Kathryn. "We don't do strip shows, but just lay your clothes on a seat over there."

"This gymnology is starting to get traction!" I commented loudly. "Bring a couple of seats over, Carol and Gilly: welcome. More towels! Are you friends? How old are you?"

Gilly said, "Special friends. Thirty-two and thirty-five."

"You are?" I asked of yet more coming in.

"We are Geoff Hindley and Janet Gibson. Man and wife, fifty-one and fifty-five respectively."

"I recognise you," I said.

"My brother, he being the MP for the south of this county. Surprisingly, he's visiting us but would not come."

"Well, naturists are discreet. Take your clothes off and pull up more chairs. We sit on towels." In a louder voice I said, "I haven't had a congregation this big yet! They have grown in number, but not to this."

We all sat and were chatting.

Allie at last stood and said, "A brief introduction! Hello everyone! This is a Gymnology class of the Serninsea Liberal Bethel held as part of the Free Liberal Ecclesia. Now Katágymnos is a Greek word meaning completely - katá - and naked - gymnos. And here we are: katágymnos. Gymnasium is a term which should mean we exercise naked in a place, but it is used now as a place of any indoor exercise. Our gymnology is the exercise of the mind, and we do it naked. Gymnosophy would be to study nakedness, but we are not doing that. We just study, and do it naked."

I said, standing up, "Allie here once told me about indexicality, that is how we assume a church is a church. We are stretching matters to meet naked."

She said, "It is how one assumes something is something, and based on conforming to expectations, almost like having a list."

I then said, "We here widen indexicality. Now, if we think about the New Testament, there are commands, and these form the indexicality of a church. These are: to meet to worship, as in Hebrews, to give thanks, as in Thessalonians, to baptise, as in Matthew, to celebrate communion, as in Matthew and Corinthians, and to preach the Gospel, as in Romans. Do we do these? In our Serninsea Liberal Bethel, in the Free Liberal Ecclesia, we have the right to be theologically selective in how we do these."

Allie looked at me a bit deflated and sat down.

I continued what was my lecture. "We see here that some of this material comes from Paul, not unusually. I think we have to be very selective, not as to whether a text comes from Paul or not, but whether it is relevant. And a lot of it just isn't. There can be universal principles from specifics in his time, but this is always a matter of interpretation. If you reject the specifics, but keep the universals, you have to be pretty clear what the universals must be. Disagreeing over such universals undermines the concept of the universal - when a universal becomes specific."

Louise Saraga said, "What?"

"Huh. They always said I wasn't very clear when I was a curate over in the other place. So, what am I getting at as 'universals'? Beyond prohibiting false teaching, whatever that is, there are other suggestions: don't presume, and people should be peaceable in approach. But what's all this about women? Some in the evangelical world think that women can teach in a church, but only until it becomes established - when a man should take over. The specific stuff about covering your head by Paul suggests a more universal point about appropriate dress for a woman in a church. Well, we have an answer for that one here. We're not covering anything. You can see the lips of my vulva, if you want, and James' and Jack's and Roger's, and so on, penises too. On the Pauline specifics, we all ought to be married, and widows over sixty years old should be listed. How do we universalise these? Some say all this is anyway to concentrate too much on the messenger rather than the message.

"Incidentally, Allie and I are going to be married naked. People are just going to have to adjust to us standing there. Are you going to shave below Allie, and look like me?"

"Yes. Then you'll even more easily see my lips as well."

"Why I don't shave," Megan said. "Especially today."

"Anyway, back to my point about what we do in a place like this."

Allie said, "It's naturism!"

"It is that," said Janet Jenkins.

"Yeah, sure. Liberal High Protestantism says we are free to be subjective about beliefs and inheritances. We had a lecture about a free and full faith recently. We'd go back to Jan Hus and the earliest radical reformation. Eastern Europe had a short time of toleration and pluralism. Equals all, and naked we are equal."

Allie said, "You can go right back. Never mind the Reformation, the Adamites combined Christianity and nudism. Augustine of Hippo denounced them. In 380 CE the Synod of Saragossa forbade Priscillianist congregations from reading scriptures in the nude. But the later Hussites were split: some Hussites killed most of the Bohemian Adamites."

"Well, back to Paul then," I said against my intellectual competitor. "Therefore, as I was saying, we don't know what the universals are, and as a result we just discuss how sources, whatever they are, might apply - if they do. We discuss and do not impose. So, I get to my point. I used to go along with a collective belief stance and, you know, people supposedly then varied in their interpretations. Now I'm not going to tell any of you what to believe. Instead, we say, in High Protestantism: there is a collective element in that we just do the rituals and see what comes about, and see how the actions guide us. Allie, do talk about indexicality and the gift."

She said, "Not about Bohemians?"

"No."

"Our indexicality includes meeting for worship. We give thanks. Gift is a mystical benefit that we may receive. If we baptise, we do it as a symbol of gift. We do celebrate communion but interpret this in whatever way we wish, in the hope of gift-exchange from the actions, and we preach, not for the apparent authoritative stance, but for the purposes of discussion."

"Thanks. So I no longer care whether you or I are Christian or not, and I don't think it matters."

Aadesh Easwaren asked, "Really? That far? You really are the polar opposite now to Rhiannon Fleetwood. She's also started wearing brighter fashionable material."

"The PCC passed a vote of no confidence," said Adrian Wigmore. "But the bishop has the final say; he received deputations very quickly but she could stick it out."

I continued. "And we are not 'this place being a polar opposite to that place'. This is not what we are about, whatever the importance we may give to institutions. Do you want guidance, Aadesh and Adrian?"

"Possibly," said Aadesh.

"I can provide resources that come from learning, but then we all can. Some of my theological learning is pretty useless now. By the way, Evelyn, I want Charley Darley to come over more often. He might have come today. There is no competition between Free Liberals and Unitarians."

"I go only very occasionally. He came over here to see Georgie Smith. He is separating from his husband, since his breasts were removed. I think something is up between Georgie and Charley."

"Really?" I asked. "Do you know anything about this, Allie?"

"No and why should I?"

"I thought you knew about everything that was going on."

"My research is coming to an end, and I don't research everyone and anything. I research about here, like it going Free Catholic and hosting a naturist gathering - anonymity assured."

"Good. So then, we are High Church in our activities, meaning being gathered and ordered and symbolic. We do things well and this is to facilitate everyone's sense of enquiry. And here we are, doing it." Janet Jenkins said, "Can I suggest why we do it naked?"

"Brilliant. Please do," I replied.

"Because it means we don't hide anything, and we lay things on the line, so to speak. This is all we have. It's almost like a kind of poverty. I wish, actually, we could walk around here every day like we do at Saxiclite. By the way, they miss you there. They know about you - even remember you growing up and as an inquisitive teenager, though they say you were a bit of an innocent."

There was a chuckle of laughter.

Sally said, "When Jack visits, we are naked. Of course we are. We go over to Bever Wood."

Allie said, "I need to know more, Janet. You, Linda, an innocent?"

There was a further chuckle of laughter.

I said, "Let's stick to the point for now, Allie."

Sally added, "Look, the students aren't even blushing at us."

"We will soon go over to them for some drinks and snacks."

Celia Haddon then said, "We often publish material referring to Paul. He is an ambiguous figure. So many follow him slavishly, but you alluded to the fact that not everything in his name is his."

Aadesh said, "And one of those who does follow him slavishly - she says she does - is the Reverend Rhiannon. Jim Wilson did before her; did he really hurt you, Linda?"

"Yes he did, but fortunately most marks are nearly invisible now. Perfection is not what we are about, however. Experience is written on the body."

I noticed Allie look down.

What Diana then said was interesting. "I used to wonder how you could be in a Church. Now I see you have moved to something, albeit tiny, that changes the rules. So it lets you breathe. Some people need the guidance and stance that you won't give, but I'll accept instead that some prefer resources. I'm not a Christian and don't pretend to be, and I've come here because this is the only functioning naturist gig in this town. I'd rather talk about Adolf Koch and the Freikörperkultur with the Lebensreform movement."

"You could introduce it."

Janet Jenkins said, "I'm up for that."

Diana said, "He wasn't a Nazi; he was a socialist in his naturism, and that's important. He had a difficult time."

"We must discuss this," I said. "It is directly relevant to religion, and a church is a proper place to discuss the whole ethic of nudity and the body. If it isn't the place to discuss the body - incarnation - then I don't know where is."

So I ended my presentation, and we stayed naked and milled around as we were for diverse chatting. Some students had decided to remove their clothes but put their aprons back on. This was very clearly one of the directions in the future for this Bethel.

Roger and Marie told us that earlier on Roger had been to the clinic. He was donating sperm again. Allie and I looked at each other. My thought and hers surely was: why couldn't he donate some in our direction?

Janet Jenkins remembered some names from the Saxiclite days with Allie listening intently. Dan Beeching was a name mentioned, about whom I said nothing whatsoever.

This session had been a big success and clearly it had a clientele. They also donated money and it more than paid for itself.

I suggested to Allie that we bring forward the next gymnology meeting, perhaps to have it in a house somewhere, a meal, to keep this good thing we'd found going. Would someone do this?

Suggestion for Diana (Wednesday 5th February)

Allie and I went to Patricia's, still excited by the progress of the gymnology session. This was, however, our time, a private time.

Allie gave Diana a suggestion we'd discussed. "Our honeymoon. Where we go matters not to us, particularly, but I would like to go to Crianlarich, the birthplace of Margaret Urchardan, my most far flung ancestor. But for the rest of it we can tour around daytime and enjoy ourselves night time, you know. And I'm suggesting that you, Diana, might decide all these places in Scotland. Add it to your prize in East Wemyss. Your prize also determines, more or less, the date of our marriage."

"Right..." Diana responded. "Well, I'd like to tour some of the locations in The Jacobite Gap Years. I can meet a friend too, at the end - probably."

Allie said, "You plan them; we can fit in. We shall marry on the twenty-second of this month. We will romance ourselves, and you can romance literature and television."

Diana said, "Great! I'll do the route planning, with places to stay. The obvious places are Glasgow, Edinburgh, obviously the Kirkcaldy area, Stirling and Clava Cairns, and other places relevant to The Jacobite Gap Years."

I was pleased that my friend mattered to Allie.

She said to Diana, further: "I'd like Jonnie, my closest lifelong intimate friend, to give me away, as he needs to release me; so then, as you two are pals, please Diana have a significant part in our wedding: not to give Linda away but be a supporter, be her best woman."

As for a gymnology meal, it wouldn't suit here at Patricia's and Diana didn't want it at her house. Aardse wouldn't like it, and many people required a lot of preparation and clearing up.

Narrator: Allie End of the Research (Sunday 9th February)

Ovulating was about now and we needed sperm-giving candidates for my pregnancy. Current names were Roger, whom I'd been with in the clinic, and Jonnie, my fourth cousin once removed.

We had an unexpected and last minute visit from Charley Darley, free this Sunday. (The previous Sunday was Candlemas; Ash Wednesday was coming up on the 26th.)

He came with Georgie Smith, the recent lecturer. We were able to chat more, and he spoke of recovering from his transgender operations. Our new denominational Bishop Dominic Himalia, a superintendant bishop from the Free Liberal Ecclesia, arrived after them. He'd set off early but under-estimated road speeds available at this end.

I sat next to Linda, who intended to take back seat at the front throughout. However, as Dominic Himalia had said that he had the outlines of a sermon to give with ad libs, Linda asked him if he would dialogue with Charley Darley, and they agreed. This dialogue was something new for me to record, where Dominic would begin with his sermon he had planned, for Charley to interrupt and then it all might go off-script.

We had a congregation of seventeen to hear this, not including the clergy. This was by far our best yet, including clothed naturists, and three that were Unitarians of sorts in this area.

Dominic said, "Well, thank you very much for hearing me preach, and I welcome the opportunity to have a dialogue sermon now. What a wonderful idea. And I'm very pleased to engage with a member of the Unitarian denomination. I don't think we've met before, but I have heard about you."

Charley asked, "When this church in Serninsea took your road ahead, I thought I would look you people up. Similar, is it not, to the 1920s?"

"With some theological updates," responded Dominic. "For with our formal liturgy we have freedom of thought. I think we are freer than Liberal Catholicism and not likely to go too high up the candle."

"William Edwin Orchard, down at Mayfair, did."

"Not Holy Trinity Mayfair," butted in Linda.

"No, Linda. Yes he did, Charley. Quite right. But Lloyd-Thomas did not. I wish to preach on the Real Jesus. Who was he and what does it say about God? The notion of him as a cosmic redeemer is a myth, and I mean myth both positively and negatively."

"I would have asked you about that," said Charley, stood close. What do you think, Georgie?"

"No no, this is your shared sermon. I'm listening."

Dominic declared: "I dismiss the mission to die as a blood sacrifice, that death was defeated and he gave a mission to the Church. He did not demonstrate nature miracles; he well may have demonstrated healing and made a theological point about healings and exorcisms in the battle against evil that the Kingdom would complete."

"I agree," said Charley.

"Oh dear. I do hope we have a debate."

"It depends if you've come for a debate or contradiction," said Charley. "Remember the Monty Python sketch?"

"Hmm. His main teaching was the Kingdom of God - especially in Mark, a source for Matthew and Luke. Close, very close, about which he spoke in verse and epigrams - like the rabbis did."

"Yep."

"He said this Kingdom reversed the usual order: it benefitted the downtrodden and the outcast."

"But were his disciples such?" asked Charley. "I think they were resourceful people, business people, and they had to leave their families."

Maybe," said Dominic. "He drew on Jewish rules, but then would add, 'But I say unto you!' in his assertions."

"It does not add up to uniqueness. Many rabbis will also have asked what were the important, deep, spiritual messages in the rules - how to obey the rules in their spirit of their meanings."

Dominic responded: "I did not claim uniqueness. He said character matters and rules are useless without compassion."

Charley said, "He was not God incarnate, because he prayed to God! Evangelicals skirt around the impact of John's Arian 17:3 as John has all the 'I am' statements. Here we get to a divine Son of God as a philosophical development by Christians but even then not God the Son. So what was the context of what he did believe?"

"Perhaps, Charley, Mark thought Jesus was divine, but Jesus didn't say it, and surely if the 'I am' statements were early or from Jesus's lips then Mark and the rest would have thought these worthy of inclusion."

Charley said, "Don't forget that every Bible other than the Jehovahs Witnesses' one keeps in the story of woman caught in adultery - in John - despite the fact that it was not original and appears as an extra story maybe in the 300s Common era."

Dominic answered, "I suggest we go back to the inter-Testament belief among Qumran Essenes for a priest Messiah and a King Messiah."

"Not an Essene, surely."

"I didn't say he was. Background. We have the Teacher of Righteousness as well, a founder from around 140 BCE. It's not Jesus who is directly influenced, but John the Baptist, and Jesus accepts the Baptism in water that John offered - a sign that the Kingdom was coming, the Spirit was outpouring, that Israel needed cleansing. Jesus is different from the Zealots, in that Jesus expected the peaceful conquest of the world. What do you think, Charley, about Jesus in this?"

Charley responded: "We're having a problem disagreeing. We should have asked Georgie. Say something Georgie!"

"I am saying nothing."

Charley said, "Well, thank you for saying something."

Dominic said, "Jesus probably didn't consider himself as Messiah earlier, but might have done later. But I think, with Machovec, that Jesus expected another: that he was nevertheless essential in the preparation for another to come."

"Possibly. Who is Machovec?"

Linda asked, "May I?"

"Yes," said Charley.

She said, "He was a disillusioned professor of dialectical materialism and Marxism-Leninism in Czechoslovakia who wanted to advance the political-cultural ideas of Jan Hus and the pre-war president Masaryk. He wrote A Marxist Looks at Jesus, unpublished and destroyed in Czechoslovakia, and found himself dismissed until restoration in 1989."

Dominic continued. "Thanks. Now Galilee did produce a number of failed messiahs. Jesus was one of five sons and several daughters, and he became a builder. He didn't marry..."

"Contested by some, but I agree. The wedding feast was not his own."

"And his metaphors came from building, and from fishing and ploughing. He used this for the coming future of bounty and conviviality, for which removing demons and renouncing sin was the path. He did not found a school or community, but was a wanderer with purpose."

Charley said, "This might be a moot point - you're splitting hairs. The disciples were the heads of the tribes for the Kingdom, actually or symbolically."

"Hmm. Around the Lake they went, and soon headed for Jerusalem, to prompt God, so to speak. Give history a push. After such preparations and offered meanings, the Kingdom would come in by an eruption. Those sayings that make up the Sermon on the Mount - they are about how it will be. Still not disagreeing? No?"

Charley said, "Enemies and criticism he had. Locals at Capernaum saw through him, they thought; many Pharisees would have regarded him as lax in his choice of company. He seemed to lack respect for supposed religious experts."

"Ah. No." Commented Dominic: "He justified it all expertly and was open to debate, in a forthright manner. He favoured those who knew they needed salvation, rather than those who expected salvation."

"Oh, I agree with that," said Charley. "And women provided support, like 'The Tower' in the person of Mary Magdalene."

"But Jerusalem was the centre," said Dominic, "and there they had to go. And this is where he made his crucial disturbance."

"Yes he did; but he would have fully observed the Temple in its divine purposes, including ritual animal sacrifices. He did not prefer Synagogue type religion. I don't think he demonstrated preference."

"Maybe or maybe not," said Dominic. "But he pronounced God's judgment on the Temple, and that annoyed them. At the likely passover meal, Jesus ritually bound the disciples to his necessary fate - the fate that would lead God to act. He did not institute a new ritual."

Charley then said, "If not a passover meal, it was in the manner of one. I think Jesus planned with Judas to betray him. This was a Hebrew Bible prophecy Jesus acted out. It wasn't just annoying the Temple authorities and waiting to be arrested."

"This leaves an ethical problem," said Dominic, "if you think that."

"That it left the Bible writers with a problem is a different issue," said Charley.

"Not sure it is just theirs," responded Dominic. "But look, against your suggestion, Jesus agonised over his future: not to be put through the trial."

"The suffering servant model," said Charley, "and the agonising still happens even if Judas does the necessary."

"Really? But what of Judas and his death? Surely if Judas was doing what Jesus asked, he wouldn't have ceased to be a disciple via self-destruction."

Charley said, "Well, their view of death was different. Judas had nowhere else to go, having acted as he did, even in a plan. Jesus would die too. In death, if the righteous would be raised, Judas would be raised, if he did the right thing. Whatever, the account as given is not quite right at all. The writers opted for a scapegoat not a colleague."

I asked Linda. "What do you think about this?" I was loud enough to pause our preachers.

Linda said, "There is a clear moral issue about manipulating events. But we just don't know. Georgie, please say something more than 'no' to us."

"I go by the account as given. Carry on, you sceptics."

"Well, some more speculation," Dominic offered. "Jesus's disciples showed weapons. Why? This meant a fast tracking past Ciaphas to Pilate."

"I'm saying there is so much wrong with the story," said Charley. "I think it went more or less straight to Pilate's signature and he gave it not a moment's thought."

"The disciples ran, but Pilate tried to find out what was happening to Jesus. No disciples saw the crucifixion. We think he was called King by the notice that makes up the upper part of the cross. And then we get Jesus buried by a devout Jew."

"Or left for scavengers, or a common pit," said Charley. "The Romans didn't care about the convicted. They had problems with monotheists who did not accept polytheism."

"Was Jesus buried?" asked Dominic.

"Nah - a later tradition to emphasise the body: spiritualism was rejected on Jewish grounds. But you see the pull towards the Gnostics. The Jewish Church, of course, failed."

"You think he was raised?" asked Dominic. "Spiritually, I think so," he suggested first.

"I think it was rituals, and visions in expectations. Once dead, it could not be another expected; he was the cosmic Messiah to come, and was expected, or he was nothing and he wasn't nothing. They weren't defeated. They had the one hope, and they had their religion with its outpoured spirit at work." Charley looked at Dominic with some intent.

"Possibly. Or it is precisely the defeated who have to have hope. People who are doing well don't need a leg up. But what does it mean?" asked Dominic. "Like to this day?"

"That's the problem," said Charley. "Because of a wholly different way of thinking - then. The demythologising of doctrine now destroys doctrine. What is left of the mythos that you mentioned first?"

Linda then said, aloud: "It's not what the good Bishop Christine thinks, who admittedly stayed in Liberal Catholicism. She thinks the whole story is about sacrifice, and sacrifice yields results."

"It's not what I think, either," I said, wondering if I should chip in but doing it anyway. "Giving material effort into something offers real results in binding people together. That's where sacrifice happens - the material giving."

Charley said, "You don't think we are left with a religious humanism, Allie?"

"Binding through offering is human. It is the relationship of the individual to the collective. It is why the myth works, at least at some level."

"You really are religious," Linda said to me.

"Why do you doubt it?" I asked. "I've had many religious encounters."

"Spiritual?" asked Charley.

"No," I answered. "Religious. It involves collective memory, and it is remembered and misremembered in institutions."

"She agrees with me," said Linda. "You two preachers seem to agree."

"Ah," said Dominic, "but although the earliest Jewish believers in the Jesus movement did not believe he was divine, they focussed in on him very much, and it isn't just the move to the Gentiles that developed notions of divinity in Christ. And this is why I am not unitarian in my theology, because although Christ had no conception of himself as divine, it is reasonable to give that notion of divinity to him, if not exclusively or completely. It is reasonable to consider the real, body-based world of Jewish belief and resist some of the stresses of Greek philosophy to turn Jesus into some sort of philosopher of heaven - but the language of divinity and connection starts to be relevant."

"Well," said Charley, "Jews spoke Greek; the Hebrew Bible had a Greek translation. It was the common language of the Roman Empire. But monotheism was attractive to Gentiles, and the Jews had that, just as it also became attractive to the Arab world - to embrace Jewish monotheism. The symbols were not the cross, but others, like the fish."

"Fish around the eucharistic bowl," said Dominic.

"So I think the implication is a high up even pure God, yet one that is coming to touch people," said Charley. "And that leaves a kind of spiritual humanism, because we do not retain, here, Jesus's supernaturalism and we've lost connected revisionisms since."

"I think the implication is the divinity in humanity," said Dominic. "Clearly as a result of reflecting on resurrection faith, as a result of Judaism going Greek."

"But comes at the price," said Charley, "of Jesus the God being unaware that he was God, and surely God is all-knowing. So, in a way, we have to start again. Jesus is worth learning about, but is dislodged. All these movements were relative."

"Ah, but I think there are more closer, material, theological implications," Dominic said. "I agree with Allie. What about others down here?"

Deacon Peter then said, "I think I'm more in the spiritual camp. Practice, like Buddhism, like the imagination of the Pagans. I don't agree with Linda and Allie, or you, but more with Charley."

Deacon Winnie then said, "I think we are bodily, and what we have comes through our flesh and blood, our milk and our mucus. When Kathleen gets to a certain point, she will be ready to give milk. That is a profoundly binding act, giving milk - healing and sexual as well."

"Binding to feed my baby and no one else," said Kathryn.

"I shall be more generous," said Kathleen. "Baby comes first, but I shall share."

"So more is involved in this," said Dominic. "Anyway, my point is that we must investigate a historical Jesus; we must recognise the problems this raises, but we are entitled to shift our religion too in a reflective manner, as it has shifted all along."

"Oh," I agree with that," said Charley.

This was the end of the sermon and debate, and fortunately Jenny had recorded it through various microphones. It went on the website quickly, as a sound file.

Georgie then said, "I've said to Charley before, if you mess about with it then it starts to crumble. Bernard Manning thought something happened to you via the cross and Easter. I used to preach this."

As one Deacon I presented the elements; Dominic presided, with Linda in support.

In the notices at the end I had an announcement.

"Everyone. As you know, I have been here researching this place to see how a church gets going. I am now satisfied that this church is established and likely settled denominationally."

"I hope so," said Bishop Dominic.

"And whilst I will listen on, tonight's research diary entry will be my final regular one. I might do haphazard updates. I will write up my research, and I will examine a lot of literature, here and at my Toulouse Road house. But from now on, I am in this church and community like the rest of you, and the main thing is that I will marry Linda in our naturist wedding. I will of course respect confidences, but not with the same motivation as before - instead I'll do as others do and pastorally too. As for the research, I want to just think, write and form it into a readable text of about 90,000 words. So I should say, also, thank you for tolerating me, but rather than leaving, I am staying."

To demonstrate the new situation I did not follow Linda into the vestry when she had chats with Dominic Himalia, Charley Darley and Georgie Smith. Called in by her I said, "The researching phase is finished." Instead I talked weddings with the Wickenby twins already making arrangements and rapidly to marry. They could share our day - naked or otherwise. Spread the love!

It turned out that Charley and Georgie would try some naturism at a more private, closed gathering. They left first.

I wished Dominic a good journey back, going into increasingly windy conditions to the north.

I fancied going out, and Annie would be in the pub before she went to work. I told Linda, that I would not follow Annie to her work. "She'll be on her own."

Linda said to me first, "Charley wants to go naked - with his breasts removed and vagina clear for all to see. Why Georgie wants to accompany him is a mystery. She's been absolutely single for forty years here, you know."

"Curioser and curioser," I said and then set off.

"But we need an event of invitation."

Narrator: Linda Future Teaser (Sunday 9th February)

I had a four-way chat with Bishop Dominic Himalia, Charley Darley and Georgie Smith in the vestry. Allie refused to listen because she had stopped researching!

Dominic first asked how the place was self-financing, and I said it was early days but it didn't look good. I was trying to be a full time minister, and soon Allie would have to find some kind of income.

Charley said he had a potential solution, of two prongs, which he had wanted to talk about, and it was to draw on the trust funds of the Unitarian denomination itself and then local trust funds in the county.

"Come on, I've only just joined Dominic's group here, and I've no reason to be unhappy with it."

Charley said that, first of all, they were desperate for ministry candidates; secondly, I have had real relationships with Unitarians. I further came with ecumenical relations and structures including these liberals, and I could be seen as a pivot, even bringing along a new congregation. It could mean more flexibility via going on the Roll of ministers, after training, and therefore being able to draw on national funds.

Dominic didn't see it; he thought the denomination would reject outside bodies like ours.

Charley said, "The thing is, and it applies to you too, Dominic, they've got loads of money tied up and a comparative absence of people. Now the whole training regime used to be rigid and college located, physically, but they've had to open it up to a whole variety of people in a whole variety of situations. I want to investigate."

"Except," said Dominic, "there is a historical rejection of Free Catholicism: that it was seen as disruptive, fantastical and unstable, and they don't like our practice of frequent Eucharists. It's a different approach."

So he said, "Believe me, Linda is in a strong position. She's got a background now and she has this physical place, and if the Unitarians can be fully represented in this place, even if it is attached to the Free Liberal Ecclesia. They will want her - and some will seek to offer her employment on specific trust funds. It could be that, formally, someone else here heads up the Free Liberal Ecclesia authority and Linda becomes semi-detached."

I said, "I didn't expect this conversation."

"And this brings me to Foss Unitarians as a group. We have trust funds for this county based on historical developments and associations, so we have money for a part time minister in addition to me. This person would travel about, supporting the other small churches, and you could do that Linda as well as be here. I'm under pressure by the denomination and by locals to have a colleague, and I want to recommend you - and you have been seen in Wytham. They like you. You can do support us now, of course, but so much better if you have Ministry status on the Roll."

I said I'd want this place to pay for itself, primarily, if it could, but Georgie said it was highly unlikely given the condition of organised religion these days.

Then Charley said, "Would you allow me to make enquiries, whether they'd be interested in using funds to extend training to you? The thing is, they want to interview very soon, and they do need candidates. There'd have to be a quick Executive Meeting decision, probably, and then the Ministry Committee decide to invite you for interview. It might be exploratory only, or they might just go for it full on."

I told him to make enquiries but, obviously, I'd have to agree to anything - and I might not.

Then Charley and Georgie said they would like to try one of my naturist gigs, but preferably in a closed meeting where people don't gossip and don't look in. Removal of breasts and a visible vagina might shock some, he thought aloud. Dominic tried to avoid reacting. I said I thought we could have a meal in a house - something like that - but we did not know where.

Charley and Georgie left us, for Charley to return to Wytham, but Dominic and I discussed denominational matters, of which there were very few except some enquiries about gay marriages and some pastoral work, which were local to the north east.

Narrator: Allie The Goose with Annie (Friday 28th February)

Annie had suggested we meet at The Goose, and I found her propping up the bar. The place was getting very busy.

Megan, in black top and trousers, with a bare middle, was behind the bar. She said to me, "I work in a number of pubs, Like The ConSern. What do you want now?"

Annie said to her, "Come on Megan, you'd be a great guest, and money to share."

"So you say. I went to that naturist meeting and you weren't there. You are dragging me down."

Annie said, "Be my guest, Meg, and you decide what you do. Just watch me. If Christine Vine gets Sexedcam, also local, which she will, she'll have all but a local monopoly. She still might set up All Supporters, or similar. Some are on Masturtalk - it's international and huge."

I said, "You've had me as your guest. Can you have another?"

"It's February," said Annie. "New month, new guest. Come on Meg. How many were naked in your company?"

Megan replied, placing glasses for three middle-aged male customers alongside me, "About twenty or so."

One of them said, "I'd like to have been there."

"It was in a church," Megan told him. It seemed to silence him. "Why did you guest on Goosechat, Allie?"

"I went to see her work," I replied. "No blood, no urine, yet you can piss in the air if it's disguised as an orgasm."

Annie said, "Allie should have her own account and earn some money."

"Three quid," Megan told me. "Sorry. It's expensive. All those men, wanking, paying."

"Higher than your wages here," Annie commented.

"No wonder I prefer dogs to people," Megan said.

I decided to say nothing to that innocent remark.

Annie said, "Your Adam Magellan gives me a lot of money. Got to stick a specy in and show him my cervix, stuff like that. He likes it when I do a squirt."

Megan lining pints up said, "I don't know how you do it. It took me all my effort to go to that church. Ten eighty, Dougie!"

"You get used to it," said Annie. "And I tell stories about my past. It's a good income, and, actually, you're safe."

I said, "I do need some money with the research finishing, with married life coming."

Annie said, "What about some sort of porn shoot? They come to town on Tuesday or you might have to travel. We have a ready labour force here."

Busy Megan asked, "Does this Adam watch that stuff as well?"

"Apparently not," I replied. "He likes either the longer cultured stuff, with a story, or plain and simple like Goosechat. We've found him wanking in the past."

"You just need stamina for a porn shoot," said Annie. "One I did was in a glory hole booth: one bloke after the next and the pay you get reflects that."

"Ah, Linda had some direct experience like that."

Megan asked, "So Linda has even done a porn shoot? Just who are you people?"

"I don't think she realised what it was."

"Hey?" asked Megan. "I think I'd know."

Annie said, "It is fucking lonely, Serninsea. Anyway, Adam should be wanking to me later."

Megan asked, "Is this your whole life? Webcams and porn shoots?"

We let Annie go to work. I waved to busy Megan with my juice finished.

Narrator: Linda Meeting an Old Friend (Tuesday 11th February)

I asked Allie, when we had got up and washed, and the rest, if she would check my arse.

"What for? I did it the other day."

"Do it today. I've had a shit and I want to know it is clean."

"Why?"

"Because, from time to time, I like to know."

I bent over and she separated my arse cheeks and then pulled my bumhole wide.

"Let me get the light. If you must know, it isn't."

"Well, let's get it clean then. Shower some water in and use some toilet paper."

I pointed my bum at the shower cubicle, and she made the area wet and wiped my arse with paper disposed down the toilet.

"My turn then," said Allie.

"Why?"

"Same non-reason as you."

So I turned Allie to catch the light and did the harder job of opening her up for inspection.

I said, "You need cleaning up."

So Allie got the same treatment, and then at twenty past twelve said she was off out with Annie.

I asked her, "Is that why you needed your arse doing?"

"She's not doing the webcam this afternoon."

"Oh. Okay. When are you back?"

"Five? Dunno. When the shops shut."

So she went out and I hung around. I thought I'd wear the thinnest top for my one-time naturist friend.

At precisely 2 pm Daniel Beeching came alone through the double doors.

"Ah, this is it," he said. "Arrived yesterday; shit weather. Linda! Linda, Linda."

We hugged and I kissed his left cheek.

"It's so good to see you, Dan, and let me give you a tour. Twenty-five years on and you still look fine."

"So do you," he said.

"You're the one no one knows about," I said. "And with my partner out with her friend, it might stay like that."

First thing I did was give him a tour of the property downstairs. I discovered that the wife and kids - Tina Dee with Thomas and Theresa - were walking down the beach and would return to their friends Jim and Harriet. After Storm Ciara, more bad weather was forecast for this weekend with Storm Dennis expected on Sunday.

I asked Dan about his naturism. He met Tina Dee at a naturist club. "It's on the other side of Congleton. We are now one of the highly valued families."

"I'll show you my room that I share now with my female partner, called Alfia."

Up at the top floor we did a left turn from the stairs to show the lounge and the study furthest back, and then we went the other direction into our bedroom.

I said, "I'd love to see you again as I remembered you." This meant that we removed our clothes and faced each other across the foot of the bed. "What I tell people is that familiarity at Saxiclite led to lack of activity, and that I was unsure."

"I kissed your nipples and your vagina - I recall your clitoris."

"It was my vagina that worried me then."

"You froze on me. I needed to be gentle with you. Some other lass later did the business with me."

"You kissed me nicely, Dan, but I was surprised. I just wondered why or how anyone would put that gone rigid in their mouths. It wasn't long before I found out."

"I remember you declined. Who showed you?"

"Do you mind if I don't say?"

"Sure."

"Where's your pubic hair?"

"Now?"

"Yes."

"Hmm. Tina Dee doesn't like pubic hair. She removes what you've never had."

"It gets in her teeth?"

"Think so. You always were the enquiring sort without blushes."

"Talk and no action."

"Some action. I stroked you," he said. "And you did touch me; you did give me a wank, just to see."

"You were the first person where I saw a completely erect penis, other than on my dad. Even then he was semi-erect, usually."

"I saw him erect with your so similar sister."

"Hmm. She excited him, let's say."

"I recall trying to say carefully that your dad was a bit odd."

"In fact, I was envious of her, because he was giving her emotional attention and support."

"But about you. I wanted to take your virginity. Someone else had the pleasure."

"Yes. I didn't want it, Dan. Again, I won't say who. Same person."

"You yourself were just an attractive lass with an incredible head of hair and then, close up, such smooth skin. You used to sit legs wide and everything was on show. It was lovely. But you confided more and more in me. You said about your dad feeling guilty about his contributions to making two 'defective' daughters."

"Funnily enough, it's my mother who carried the androgen insensitive x gene - her x, his y."

He said, "You look remarkably good twenty five years later. I remember you as a bit thin, and you still don't have the width of thighs of many women."

"I won't go through a menopause. The doctors still want to remove my gonads. My sister has been on Hormone Replacement Therapy, because they removed hers. Show me your penis erect, Dan. I'd love to see it again. It became rock hard, like a copper pipe - it fascinated me. I remembered again and again the white stuff coming out."

"Would you like to do as once you didn't?"

"I was frightened. If that went in my mouth, I could bite you. It couldn't fit in my vagina. I can do everything so much better now."

I got close and dropped to my knees to use hand and mouth.

"Wow!" He said, "I don't ejaculate like I once did but you might just change things."

I got on to the bed and on to my knees and stuck my bum out at Dan.

I said, "Look, this can take a whole length."

"I can see immediately. When we had our moments together, your arse was a pin prick in some reddish rippled skin. Now there is a rubber ring appearance."

"You can go in there if you want and go all the way in. It is clean."

"No. Go back on your back. I'd rather do what I was unable to do and wanted to do at the time."

So I lay on the bed face up. In the missionary position he penetrated my improved pouch.

I said, "You are still kind: how you are doing this. I would have had a vaginaplasty for you. I'd have told mum I wanted it. The risk was losing my gonads. But then you left."

"I wasn't old enough other than to follow my family. I thought about finding you, but there were new distractions at Crewe."

After some silence I said, "You're finding angles and doing it sweetly. This is one of the best fucks I've had in many years."

"It's not just how you do it, but why you do it."

There was a lot of kissing involved too.

He ejaculated into me, something I'd imagined from him, not having to wash my arm, and like a gent he found some tissue in his discarded trousers and cleaned up what was running out.

Also like a gent he lay alongside me, working my clitoris area with his fingers and then his tongue, and did so until I orgasmed.

I said to him, "If your family hadn't left the area, my life could have been so different."

"You say if the doctors had done a vaginaplasty for you and me, they'd have removed the gonads?"

"It was a risk. Mummy was adamant."

"Yes, your dad was always touching Lucinda's back, stroking her bottom, standing closer to her than to your mother."

"Round here everyone thought we were weirdos. But even our fellow naturists?"

"We did think your family was slightly strange."

"I never realised that, even at Saxiclite."

"I almost took pity on you. You could be distant."

"What about my brother?"

"Well, he wasn't close to anyone. He seemed to have a violence about him from his father's authority. But there were three daughters of interest to me when sixteen. Beyond 'daddy's girl', Leila was a bit young and your mother kept her close. Leila had smaller breasts and wider thighs, and she had the beginnings of pubic hair. You were so intriguing."

It wasn't long before we were dressed again.

"You work in Crewe as well?"

"I do, still."

"Any chance of a transfer to Doncaster?"

"Not really. This area is quite foreign to Tina Dee."

"So are your hosts here naturists then? Janet Jenkins remembered you in a recent gymnology meeting. We met here all naked. Fantastic."

"No, no. Just two people who came here. Janet Jenkins was our age now back then. She was a good looker. Do you know where..."

"I'm not allowed to hand out contact details. Sorry."

"Sure. We shall probably lose contact with Jim and Harriet, in the end. But we made the effort, and I followed up the leads when you were in the media. I found you easily."

And then he was gone - an encounter to be forgotten. I had a shower, to remove the evidence, before Allie was due to return.

When she returned Allie looked drawn and knackered and said she was tired from moving about with Annie. Allie had a shower and crashed out on the bed, so I just thought of Daniel and masturbated.

Chapter 31 Norfolk

Narrator: Allie Back at the Rogers' (Wednesday 12th February)

Adam had suggested we get on with it regarding a wedding, given the Novel Covid landing in a number of countries. It could happen here, causing all kinds of disruption, he'd said.

Perhaps the same idea was in mind, with a message from Georgie Smith of all people to Linda to hold a fireside naturist meeting in her house, with Charley attending, on Friday 21st February. This surprised Linda, who said this was the last place she'd have expected it - but it meant Georgie adopting natural religion!

The night before the wedding was unacceptable but a message returned that it could be on Wednesday 19th at 7 pm. Yes, good. Her house was at 17 Gaillac Road, the large detached house obtained from Ann and Labhaoise. (Yes, another one!)

Jenny wandered in and I gave her the list of attendees, to add Charley and Georgie, with the date, time and address. She could distribute or ask Roger.

With all our intentions, it was time for us to reconnect with my family. I might be ovulating soon; my period was due later. We travelled in Linda's SUV and I took a couple of my completed canvases from 135 Toulouse Road.

We did a diversion. Instead of heading to Fakenham, we went to Docking and Burrenham Market via lesser roads. We passed the south side of Holkham Hall's grounds - the place of much agricultural innovation. Perhaps the strips based names of our farms indicated early resistance or identity. I used my mobile phone to alert my families, soon to be Linda's too, and a return message told us to come in the front way at Columns Farm.

East of North Creake, going south down Wells Road, we entered Little Walsingham where one finds the tourist railway. Saint Peter's Road and Westgate took us to the smaller Great Walsingham. Going east from Great Walsingham and turning into another road we found Columns Farm on the left to see Selions Farm further down on the right.

We turned into the farmyard behind, her SUV joining a couple of cars, tractors and wagons. We parked by the garden, for less mud on our boots. We walked around to the front door where I opened the door and we went in.

In the hallway already were my mother Alicia, father Alfred, Aunt Sally (as I called her), Jonathan and Uncle Paul (as I called him). Four said, "Hello Alice, hello Linda," in turn but then Paul said, "Hello lass, hello kid," for some unknown reason.

I kissed them all in turn, first with a finger up to pass by Jonnie, and finally kissed Jonnie fully on his lips. Linda remarked that she'd soon be changing her name to Shrimpton. That went down well - not.

So I said, as we went into the front lounge, "Shrimpton's a more ancestral family name."

Linda said, "I could have become a Mrs. Rogers, or even a Mrs. Jenner at our wedding."

My father said, "Aye indeed: Bishop Rogers, why not?"

"Whatever, I want rid of Jupitas. If I was not marrying your daughter, I would have gone back to Bode. I thought I'd leave it be, but once I saw my ex-husband again I wanted a change. I like Shrimpton."

Uncle Paul said, "Ancestral or otherwise, you'd be surprised what does appear in our family trees. I've been doing some research."

"On which point," I said, "I met my sixth cousin, a five year old girl called Akemi Tamuuz; her father was a Shrimpton."

"You said before about her. Sixth cousin requires going a very long way up, but it's what you have to do."

Linda said, "Allie is so knowledgeable about her family trees. You're all so intertwined."

"You tell her, uncle."

"I'll take you one higher still at Raymond Jenner born all the way back in 1832. He died in 1894, aged sixty-two. He was born in Binham, and died in Walsingham. He was five times great grandfather of Alice, and three times great grandfather of Jonathan."

"Gosh - but one removed," Linda said.

"Doesn't work like that, kid. That was two different. I'm an old father myself, making the generations uneven. Raymond married Jennifer Rogers, indeed one of our Rogers. And of their four offspring, Janet Jenner was our young ones' here common ancestor, born in 1850 and died in 1880 and lived in Walsingham throughout her life - in the house that was here before this one replaced it. Janet was four times great grandmother of Alice and three times great grandmother of Jonnie."

"By 'common' you mean direct to both. Not an uncle or aunt."

"Quite. But Janet's brother, Peter Jenner, was the two times great grandfather of Jonnie. Janet married John Grant and they had Peter Grant in 1872 and Sarah in 1880. She died giving birth and husband John Grant killed himself soon after. Sarah was three times great grandmother of Alice, but three times great aunt of Jonnie, and Peter was two times great grandfather of Jonnie and four times great uncle of Alice."

"How do you remember...?"

"Because we know how we all link up. So Alfred Rogers here was three times great grandson of Janet Jenner, and Alicia was herself three times great granddaughter of Janet Jenner. So they are themselves directly related before their marriage happened. But it gets better. My wife Sally, Jonnie's mum, born in 1961, was two times great granddaughter of Janet Jenner, and I am, in my own right, born 1945, the great great nephew of Janet Jenner. So my wife and I were related also before marriage."

Jonathan spoke for the first time, quite softly. "So the pattern was established before now."

"Wow!" Linda said. "I could not possibly remember all these names and dates, and not from our previous chat, but thank you Paul."

"I do," I said. "Most of them at least."

"Yes, lass," he said. "And, Linda: by marrying you will be my third cousin four times removed. I will have more to say tomorrow."

Before tea, my mother asked Linda a pertinent question: "What does it mean being a dedicated naturist? We are not but we often relax in states of undress - nightwear and flimsy materials. The whole family is staying over here this evening and tonight. So shall we do this? Otherwise we'd be respectable for you."

"In my eyes respectable is undressed. If you're comfortable with this, then I would be delighted," Linda said. "I'm ideologically naturist. I'm not just a beach naturist or water or wood naturist. I have a club - that's important - and I believe in it. Allie can be as she would be here."

I said to Jonnie, "Let's go the whole hog." Thus Jonnie and I both stripped off as did Linda; however, I had an action to make. I asked Jonnie to come with me, and we headed for my old bedroom.

He said, "So you present Linda as your fiancé, definitely. It's a disappointment to me."

"Jonnie. Once again, you're very special to me, but I fancy women and only women. I can fuck men and it has a passing enjoyment..."

"You've fucked other men?"

"So? But I've had only girlfriends. You'll find Linda is generous. I have to be with someone I connect with as a passion as well as someone who is deep and reliable."

"I cannot forget and neither can any of us that you have a family responsibility," he said to me. "My father laid it out; you know the importance of our families."

"The responsibility became oppressive. Am I to live like Alice Shrimpton, who was married to a man but whose real love was another woman, all the way to a nursing home?"

"We could have an open marriage."

"Linda thought she was loyal to one man, but he betrayed her. Then she tried a more open relationship and it died before it got going. There is a you and me, Jonnie, because we have a history, but there is no you and me getting married. I am marrying her. I want to ask you something. I want you, as my cousin, as my brother, as my sexual partner in my life, to give me away. I want you to give me to her."

"I want someone to give you away to me."

"But I've been with you all my life!

"You ran away."

"I did. Now I'm confident with her, and you should support me. Give me away at my wedding. Our parents will understand this. Come on, they're preparing tea and Linda is rattling around naked on her own."

"You ask too much," he said.

"I also thought about asking for your sperm to have a baby for Linda and me. I decided that would indeed be too much. You'd want to be the father."

"Too right."

"Then let's go back."

I soon took Linda, bare, into the farmyard briefly. (She wore flip-flops and had spares for me.) It wasn't weather for nudity. Also, there was a public footpath across at the back of the yard.

"Your cousin is upset," Linda said to me.

"Because I neglected him in carving out my new life."

"Surely we can take the risk of bringing him back in. He can continue the family line by providing the genetic material."

"But, Linda, that makes three in the marriage and I want two in this marriage. If he'd said yes he'd want to be involved - he will need to be marked on the family tree. He said an effective no."

"Then we lay out terms!"

"You don't know him."

"No, I don't. Get him in our bed again tonight, and see if he can accept our marriage and can agree to a role and be disinterested."

"You might think you can find some angle of approach. You often do. But this time you really could be playing with fire. Curb your enthusiasm. Don't encourage misunderstandings."

"To get somewhere on this, Allie, we have to take risks."

"Roger Humphrey is a safer bet."

"But that denies so much. I'd like Jonnie to be involved."

So tea was eaten in states of undress. Linda spent some time describing her family tales from the Nottinghamshire to Foss border and own memories north of Serninsea.

Paul, Jonathan's dad, wasn't too interested in the offering on television. He started up a conversation.

"Looking at you, kid, it's difficult to understand. This intersex thing..."

"It is the reason why, in wanting a child, Allie has to have the baby. I can't. I am genetically male, but formed female, without the reproductive plumbing. My maternal feelings have to go through Allie."

Alicia said, "You look like a strong Amazonian female to me, and those big hands, and Alice acts like one."

Bedtime came along, which for farmers, unlike ministers of religion, comes earlier not later. Indeed my parents said that since the General Election they'd stopped watching late news analysis on television whereas before it they'd been hooked on all the intrigue.

I said, "Jonnie. Would you join us tonight? Join us this time knowing Linda and I really are an item and we will become wives."

"Both?"

"Yes, both of us."

Sally, his mum, nodded at this; I think she was appreciating that we were accommodating him and helping him understand the new situation. He looked a little unsure, however.

Narrator: Linda Bed (Wednesday 12th February to beyond Midnight)

"What'll be the arrangement this time?" Jonathan asked. "Allie in the middle, then Linda next to her and I be other side of Allie?"

"No," I said, "not this time. You're in the middle. I want to experience you and I want to talk to you. Directly."

So we squeezed in, but actually, when in, we were stable. I didn't feel like I was about to fall out. Then he turned his back to me, and started to touch Allie between her legs and around her chest.

She said, "Jonnie, you're being rude to Linda. Lie on your back. By the way, you never came to see us in Serninsea."

He said, "No, I wanted space myself."

Allie said, "If you found another woman, I'd be delighted."

"I've something to tell you. At the beginning of your second year, I took a trip to Glastonbury. I asked questions of people I met."

"Ah. I was told someone was asking questions about me. We had some enemies then. You bastard, following me!"

"You'd not been back home."

"I thought the questions might be linked with Rhiannon Fleetwood and her ilk."

"I didn't know her, there."

"What do you mean, you didn't know her 'there', Jonnie? Oh, well, she did go off to Kent."

"Let me explain, my way. I dodged about in Glastonbury and Taunton. I saw you in both towns and you didn't see me. I assumed you hadn't."

"I hadn't. This is news indeed."

"I found out about you and your tutor, because there were rumours. You'd been having a sexual relationship with this woman tutor of your Folkways class - Abigail. I asked about her, and even saw her. I learned she was in a coven, and that she had other associations. So I followed her around, and you and her were definitely together."

"You know, in the Taunton Tantria we were supposed to gain awareness. We did know someone was around, but not that it was you. First year and summer, Rhiannon Fleetwood didn't just picket us, and confront us, but she was following us around. How long were you in Glastonbury, following Abby and me around?"

"Four weeks."

"Four weeks? It must have cost you a fortune!"

"Six, because I had two more in the next year, to update the situation. Rhiannon was gone."

"You neglected the farms?"

"They did without me, as well as without you at summer. After a bed and breakfast, I asked about for places to stay. This the unpaid Reverend Andrea I met by looking into local religion and she took me in, first time, but on really good terms. Gave me a room."

"You found your way to her? She was my GP, like for many students. It proves she kept her eye on me. She connected with Rhiannon Fleetwood, despite being different in outlook."

Jonnie said, "Andrea said she was a doctor, Christian priest too but broad regarding natural powers and women's sensitivities."

"Spying on me!" Allie deliberately turned so that her back and bum faced Jonnie. "Bastard, Jonnie. People Rhiannon encouraged were opposed to Abigail's and Roland's coven, and the Taunton Tantria. They were targetting tutors and some students - like me."

I said, "We are talking about Andrea Lindsey."

"Keep up," said Allie. "Married the Suffragan of Sumorsæte for advantage. Andrea always worked it both ways, so she herself clearly used you, Jonnie, to know more about me and Abigail's activities. For some, it was religious, for others it was staff behaviour, for others it was envy."

"For Andrea?" I asked Allie.

"Rhiannon got down and dirty, crashed about. Andrea kept her distance but smelt the results."

Jonnie said, "If you keep your back to me I'll fuck your arse. Some said next year your School's secretary was interested in you and not for folk languages."

Allie turned towards him. "Jonnie, this is like betrayal. Abigail was breaking boundaries, so loosened me and Beathag got her opportunity. I'm surprised you didn't come to Serninsea recently."

"I did. Followed a telephone lead from Glastonbury."

"Jonnie! Since Linda's visit here?"

"Before. No one knew you - except two, one of them in a pub."

"Calm down both of you," I said. "Can I play with him?"

"Be my guest," Allie replied. "Annie Fenwick?"

He said, "No. A barmaid called Megan. But I met Rhiannon Fleetwood, new to Serninsea itself. I went to the Anglican priest or minister and discovered it was her! She said there's an independent church owned by some investigator, a rebuilt place set up, and you were a researcher there, so I thought I'd better keep my distance from him."

I then said, "I wonder if Adam knew?" as I grabbed Jonnie's penis.

"Magellan? About me?" he asked me.

"Yes," I answered. "How long were you in town?" I asked him.

"Five nights. I first stayed in a pub called the ConSern. And I saw Alice and dodged away when it was very busy. Second time, next night, you seemed to be chatting up a woman, getting pissed."

"Chatting - not 'chatting up'."

"In Glastonbury and Taunton you'd been drinking again and stopped. Here, Megan, the barmaid with the big tits - and she has a rose and thorns flower tattoo on her leg - told me all about you. You sometimes drank with a Jenny, and more often with an Annie. Having seen you, I checked out of the pub, and stayed three nights... at the vicarage. I was invited to stay there. The reverend woman was fascinated by the priest who'd gone independent and became a bishop - you, Linda."

"You've got a grower there, Jonnie," I said, working on him.

"Megan thought you were coming on to her as well as on to these other women, like you were looking to get laid."

"Not me," I said. "When?" I asked, running my thumbnail over the eye of his penis.

"Wednesday 27th November, and on the Thursday you were with this woman, Alice, and both of you hammering the ale."

"Jenny," I said. "That was Jenny."

"Jenny," said Allie. "She was slipping somewhat, mentally. It's not funny, Jonnie."

Jonnie asked, "Were you more intimate with Jenny, Allie?"

"No fear."

"Hmm," I said. "Annie?"

"I'm not lying. Jenny was bad news, unfortunately for her."

Jonnie said, "I left on the Sunday, when Rhiannon said that you, Allie, were preaching in the independent place. It meant to me that you were involved in a big way, so I came home - after hearing Rhiannon preach."

Allie asked, "Jonnie, did you have sex with Rhiannon?"

"Er..."

"I'll take it as a yes," she said.

"How many women have you slept with?" I asked Jonnie.

"Four, it will be."

"Allie, Rhiannon? Two left. Allie is here and would love to know."

"Arseholes," Allie reacted.

I asked Jonnie: "Tell me what she preached - Rhiannon Fleetwood."

"I was surprised. She preached about sin. Very harsh. Hardly about what she did. But I wanted to be faithful. Yet I'd seen you and heard enough. I'd seen you in Glastonbury and Taunton twice and I'd seen you in Serninsea. So, in the end, what if this vicar did come on to me?"

"She's not a vicar," I said. "She's a priest-in-charge. She's a complete fraud and the good people of Serninsea, even the evangelical ones, took very little time to see right through her."

"I've counted three. Who's the other one?" Allie asked Jonnie.

I asked, "Who's the third woman?"

"You, you nelly. I'll find my zither."

"Anton Karas."

He corrected us: "You're the fourth. Mel. Glastonbury. She wanted to do a further degree. She was a year below you. She recognised my accent; I couldn't disguise it down there."

"From Fakenham, by any chance?" Allie asked.

"Er, yeah."

"Windley," said Allie. "I didn't know her before."

I said, "Jonnie, we met her on a recent visit. I went with Allie to see her professor and there was a dance."

"Blimey," said Allie. "You fucked my enemy and, before her, my admirer. You don't half pick 'em, Jonathan Jenner."

He responded, "I got home from Serninsea disappointed. Rhiannon was really good in bed, but I didn't go for that. Megan prefers dogs to people. She didn't know me. I went to find out what you weren't telling anyone here. When I got back I told mine and yours and they kept quiet when you two turned up."

"Sounds like success," I said. "You'd found Allie in Serninsea."

"It confirmed my worst fears."

"My best hopes," said Allie.

"Right, Jonnie," I said, "I want to ask you something sincerely that will bind us three together. Clearly we are here, in bed, comfortable, able to converse, and we have a request. And given that beautiful thing in my hand, we can do it now."

"What?"

"Allie is going to get pregnant. The best person to be a sperm donor is you, you because of the genetic line."

"He'll have a job," said Allie. "The coil is in!"

"Allie! You know he is at least an option!"

"Would I be down as the father?" asked Jonnie.

"Biologically, genetically," I said. "But the family tree would have to have Allie and me as parents."

"Then you wouldn't have united the family in our child, in the public sense. Not doing it."

I said, "It is possible to do what was done with Alice Shrimpton."

"That's not the case between us two. Her marriage was a sham, a marriage for offspring. Times have changed."

"Can't we note the biological father?" I asked as a suggestion.

"I'm going to come," he said. "Where am I putting it."

"Me then," I said. "Come on, on top, Jonnie."

"Slag!" said Allie.

"You have to push a bit, Jonnie."

"I already know you are tight."

"Of course."

He ejaculated, and it ran out; Allie put out her hand, to stop the spillage to the bed, and she subsequently licked her own hand. She positioned herself to suck him off.

I said, "You're very nice, Jonnie. Very nice."

"Allie and I agree," he said. "I have to accept that you're lovers, that she settled on you, but I can't father your child."

To support Allie I said, "And I love her, Jonnie. We want a man who donates his sperm in a loving context."

"A child from me has to be a Jenner with the Rogers. Alice has to be mother, and me the father, officially. There are other cousins in this family."

This seemed to kill the conversation. But after I went in the night to have a pee, and had it, a certain intended was stood facing me.

Allie said, "I told you, Linda. You haven't listened to me. You've made it worse."

"I did listen to you and I haven't made it worse and I think it's a shame he's said no."

Allie said, "He snooped on me, in Somerset and in Serninsea. I wanted him to give me away, and now it is more difficult. Spying on me is creepy. Anyway, I need the loo as well. Go back to bed, I'll want to sleep."

"He loves you and you abandoned him. Who's taking the dictatorial high-handed approach now?" I asked.

"You should know it when you hear it," she replied. "Fuck off: I need a shit, actually."

Full Day Around Norfolk (Thursday 13th February)

Having all of us slept, and woken, Allie said to Jonnie, "Go on then," almost in a resigned manner. So I lay there as she put her arms completely around him and the thirty year olds connected at their genitals.

I said, "I spy with my little eye something beginning with cock." I leant on my left side and watched them. "Do you play 'I Spy' Jonathan?" I asked.

"Alice should eat more fruit. When she did, when she was here, her cunt juices were really sweet and her arse stink was more pleasant."

I said, "I know. Sometimes I think this girl likes lots of pork sausages with herbs."

Allie started to giggle.

So Jonathan's mess at the end was mine to lick.

Breakfast followed with us three eating, with Alicia being the only other person in the house. All the rest were out farming, including looking at wind damage and preventing more. After his cup of tea, Jonnie put on his overall too, in a dull orange like some prisoner, and he went out to join the others across both farms.

Alfia, or was it Alice, took me into Little Walsingham, both of us buffeted about in the wind, where I had once honeymooned with Anglican Keith. And she took me to the very shop where Keith and I had bought one of her paintings. There was one left of hers in the shop, and I stood back as Allie showed the middle aged male collectibles shopkeeper some more on her phone. She said two suitable were available now, if he wanted, and he did, so I took the two of her Madonna and Child paintings brought along from the boot of the SUV, ready-framed, and we thus had more money in pocket than when we had arrived!

"Will you be the Madonna and Child?" I asked her.

"No, I definitely need a man. Roger Humphrey is the man to ask."

"Getting rough. All right, Jonnie is off the agenda. What I really think is genealogy is full of lies. They are no more than social statements."

"But not with my lot."

We visited shop windows full of trinket trash, leaning into or away from the wind.

I said, "I prefer your Glastonbury to your Walsingham. Roman Catholicism encourages superstition."

At the Anglican shrine I said to Allie in the wind how this stuff matters to Christine, but doesn't matter to me. And we looked at the Roman Catholic variant shrine as well. There I said how Christine would not be attracted to Roman Catholicism, not with its Thomist legacy. Thomism was probably more important to me, I claimed, bringing an Aristotelian wordly realism into theology. So Allie said that on that basis, she was more on my lines.

"Christine didn't take up my brief interest in the Philokalia either."

"The body is important to me. Haven't you noticed?"

"I haven't had a lot to go on until recently," I replied.

Then, for variety, we left Little Walsingham and went to Holkham Hall, now open for visitors, to take in not just the windswept grounds and house, but the local history regarding farming.

Allie made the point that we both had been farm labourers, but never made anything of it. I responded that this was because we had both rejected it for other more inner mindful concerns.

So we went to Wells-next-the-Sea, encountering the sea chucking itself about, because Allie wanted me to view the residential home where her ancestor had ended her days with her lesbian lover. Allie herself wanted to find out more.

We rang on the bell and asked to go in. The Deputy Manager, Mrs. Michaela Forbes, was happy to get us inside out of the wind and show us around, and she went to find a leather bound book held in the office safe to show to Allie.

"Our entry with notes. Alice Shrimpton, born 1865 and died here in 1966. She was born in Stiffkey. She just made it to a hundred and one years old. Elizabeth Ford was here, who was born only two days before Alice. Elizabeth died here in 1964."

Allie took over: "Alice was married to Brian Rogers, but he died in 1932. She had children with him, who visited her here, but she had a sexual relationship with Elizabeth far more than with him even during his lifetime. She loved Elizabeth. She is my heroine."

"Yes," said Mrs. Clara Bellow, the Manager, entering. "In those days this place was a council owned residential home. My husband and I bought it from the previous owners, so it continues as a private business residential home."

I said, "We think it looks well-kept. I'm sure if there is a National Social Services, private businesses like this will be providers."

"That'll be the day," said Mrs. Bellow, "for that sort of State organising. As for this ancestor, there were stories about Mrs Shrimpton and Miss Ford, and the fact that one of their rooms was often empty at night."

"Remind me," I said. "Alice was your..."

"Four times great grandmother. You might say that Elizabeth Ford is my step four times great grandmother."

"That's a wonderful thought," I said. "Perhaps you and I might end up in this place."

"We'd be very happy to receive you, wouldn't we Michaela! Except we won't - you two seem much younger than us."

"That would be my plan," said Allie. "You and me finishing here would make my life complete."

We thanked the Manager and Deputy Manager. We nodded and smiled at present day residents in one of the lounges as we left - those that were not asleep - and shook hands with John Bellow in a chef's uniform.

We looked at the coast, from inside the SUV to avoid being blown away, and turned at an angle to look towards Serninsea (too far to see).

I said, "Hopefully, we will have an interesting honeymoon. I hope Diana doesn't think she's a gooseberry, in the modern sense."

"What sense?" Allie asked.

"Originally the person playing gooseberry was a chaperone to a couple, but she later became unwanted. So she was at first like a gooseberry picker, giving a pretext for a couple to go out together. Jolly decent all round, don't you know."

"Diana is your Jonnie. You want her to be there."

"No, not at all. All unrequited. She is giving us somewhere to go, visiting locations for The Jacobite Gap Years and for that she is wanted. It'll be an interest in the daytime and then we can have fun after dark."

Allie said, "You'll want sex with her on our honeymoon."

"I've just said I don't have sex with her."

"Really? Start remembering! Consider a certain nightclub."

"I hate you Allie Shrimpton. I suppose you spoke to Kathleen and Winnie. It's the inequality of it all. It's why I sympathise with Jonnie. He knew nothing either and had to find out for himself. Good on him."

"Well, he knows now. I didn't contradict him."

"Does he sleep with us again tonight, Allie?"

"I did used to sleep alone sometimes, you know . So he should leave us two to be together. I'll ask him nicely to leave us alone."

"Welcome to the weird world of Alfia Shrimpton," I said. "Oh, Annie!" I sang.

"Phuh. Welcome to the weird world of Linda Jupitas," she said.

"Try a different surname," I suggested.

"Welcome to the weird world of Linda Bode."

"That's better. Shrimpton? I'll like that, Alice."

"I am not, actually, Alice Shrimpton. I wouldn't presume so much. Look, the weather is shit out here so let's go back to my home."

"Your home?"

"It is still that, I suppose."

"Won't be your primary home for long," I suggested. "You'll be my wife."

"You'll be my wife - my domineering, mawtherly, overly presumptuous, overly permissive, wife."

"Yeah, and just what you want," I asserted.

"Rubbish."

"Correction: what you need."

"Fuck off."

I said, "I'll accept: 'decisive, efficient, investigative, latitudinarian.' I am good for you."

"You're insufferable - but I like you."

"Hey, Dick Emery rides again," I said with a smile.

Allie asserted: "You're a dustbin of clapped out media. Mrs. Trope."

At the Jenners'

In fact, as the SUV was buffeted about, the instruction was to return to the Jenners' house: Selions Farm. Everyone expected flooded fields and damage.

"So," said Sally, "this house is similar to theirs, but we have a different arrangement of rooms. Our kitchen faces the road, theirs the farmyard, so that our living rooms face west and south. And we have a conservatory."

I said that I like a conservatory. Both houses struck me as more similar than different. Again we had a bedroom with a double bed, but in this house.

At the meal table, where all four parental adults had prepared the meal, I said about the wedding we were seeking. I wanted a naturist or as near to naturist wedding as possible. "We already do naturist things in the bethel now. We relax and we have a gymnology debating group. Yes, we do it nude."

"Guests only?" Alfred asked.

"We put a notice out at the front doors. We had to move into the main seating area as there were too many for our small meeting room. Next up is a meal in a house of a retired UPCC minister."

Paul said, "Strip off if you want."

"I always want to but we'll eat as we are," I replied.

"And this wedding ceremony?" Alfred asked.

"Three couples will marry in the same joined-together ceremony. There'll be invitations of course but then open to the public if they understand what they might see: some nudity, a mainly naked Eucharist, and the use of our mikveh, where people submerge naked to emerge into a new life."

"Must we take our clothes off if we are there?" asked Alfred.

"Oh I hope you will be there, but it is like one of those beach signs: 'Clothes optional'. Some will, and some won't. Maybe most won't, except for the more confident naturists. But this is what we want to do."

Fortunately Allie nodded. I had not really consulted her, nor the others marrying at the same time.

Alicia asked, "And what about the honeymoon? I assume there is one."

"We're combining it with a friend's holiday, giving places to go. Allie can see where the Gaelic she learnt still operates."

She said, "I've only ever suggested Crianlarich and Gaelic has retreated from there. In fact I know it was ten to fifteen percent at the very most at the turn of the millennium."

There was some silence over tea, and then I decided to give a speech. Allie had no idea I was going to say this either.

"Look, everyone, this is an unusual situation. Allie - or Alice - was brought up with Jonnie, to be very close in a family structure across these two farms. I accept that Jonnie cannot be a male donor for us, because you'd want him on the family tree. But, look at it this way..."

"Linda!" said Allie, thinking I was about to flog a dead horse again.

"No, I'm saying Allie is coming to a new home, a new life. So I will have a supporter, like a best person, my friend Diana, but I would like Allie given away, and Jonnie could give her away. What do you say, Jonnie?"

"Don't know."

"Let me put it this way: there are few families where even fourth cousins once removed of the same age have double beds in their bedrooms, where the children who knew each other so intimately transition into teenage years and, you know, all that such change brings about."

"Are you criticising us as parents?" Alicia asked.

"I'm the first to say relationships are complex. And you have such a fascinating families structure. In a way Allie is part of that but is entering a new life in a new direction. Allie has a suggestion for a sperm donor."

Allie looked to the ceiling.

Jonnie said, "This is getting embarrassing. We have protected ourselves from outsiders."

"We're letting Linda in," said Sally to her son. "And we don't want Alice to run away again."

"Well, Jonnie makes my point," I said. "You've got this strong, inside, self-defining ethic, and those who don't understand it are outsiders. Look, I love your daughter and your cousin, and that 'cousin' tag refers to three of you here. But here's the rub: I would be prepared to be her lover and watch her marry Jonnie..."

"No," said Allie.

Alfred asked, "Linda! Are you trying hard to be a woolly all-accepting liberal? Alice said you are a liberal."

"No. Situations are as situations are. These two have no taboos - and that's good. But, instead, treat what we'll do a bit like 'open not closed'. There were divergences or dispersals, were there not, in your double family?"

"Yes, dispersals," said Paul. "But strands often came back. There are other Rogers and Jenners around here; just look in the old fashioned phone book. And, em..."

I said, "It would pain me, and be a real sacrifice, but I concede that there could be an Alice Shrimpton and Elizabeth Ford relationship, where I'd be like Elizabeth while Allie here is married formally to a Jenner."

"It will not happen," said Allie. "Pack it in. Once minute you're describing a naturist wedding with me, and next minute you throw away the towel."

Allie's Uncle Paul said, "There wouldn't be a towel to throw, lass."

"Actually," I said, "Naturists do carry towels."

"What I don't get," said Alfred, "is if Alice Shrimpton is Alice's heroine, why can't she replicate this by marrying Jonathan - and why change your first name, Alice? Alfia is daft."

"That's your opinion," said Allie. "I am marrying her and that is that. We are doing it nude because naturism is so important to her. Understand this now, everyone. If you don't want to give me away, Jonnie, don't; if you don't want to get your clothes off, you don't do it, if you don't want to come..."

Paul said, "Let us calm down, and change the room regarding the elephant. It is time to sit down in the lounge and view the elephant from a very different point of view."

Allie said to me only, in transition, "When are you going to stop putting your bloody great foot in it; when are you going to consult me and even listen to anything I say?"

"I'm just teasing out the possibilities and the boundaries."

"You're a verbose bull in a dictionary shop. Self-centred to the extreme."

We went in to the main lounge, leaving the dishes until later.

I said, "Look everyone, we are now allowed to marry, and surely, if they could have married, Alice and Elizabeth would have."

"Your Church doesn't recognise it," said Sally.

"No, my old Church doesn't. Mine definitely does. The Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia I joined did allow it, and the Free Liberal Ecclesia we are in now definitely does, as I say. And we offer this service to the public. We are licenced."

"Bode," said Paul.

"Oh, do call me Linda."

"I mean, kid. Just here's looking at you."

I said, "You have done some genealogy on 'Bode'. Go on."

"Yes, so, let me address the elephant in a way that might satisfy us all. 'Bode' means 'messenger' and you've got some famous or significant people called Bode, like an American academic and philosopher, a German classical philologist and translator, a German astronomer, an English priest, and the German Bode Museum's one time art historian and curator."

I said, "You know more than I do, although O Jesus, I Have Promised is one of John Ernest Bode's hymns. He was rector in Cambridgeshire from 1860."

"He is not one of your Bodes," said Paul.

"No," I replied.

He began. "This is the result of my researches, starting with your prompts the last time you were here. The Bodes: your dad is sixty-four, born in Dunham-on-Trent, just into Nottinghamshire from Foss. Your paternal grandfather, born as early as 1902, in Gainasburgh, and died in Dunham-on-Trent."

"Thus the paternal side and maternal side went to Saxiclite too, off the B1190. My family moved to Syerston for a period before getting a better offer, cheaper land, after my eldest brother was born in Syerston."

Paul said, "So, Grandfather Robert Bode married Felicity Don." Paul picked up a notebook that had been left on the settee arm. "Born 1926, she died aged 56 only."

"A younger generation," I said.

"So let's go up from her. Alan Don, himself born in 1901. He married Rosemary Otter, another younger one; 1919 she was born and in Saxfosdyke in your county. She dies aged sixty. So there's a geographical movement from the east there. So let's go up from her."

"Right," I said.

"I looked at them all, and as you go up of course the numbers double each time. So I am selecting after the fact."

Allie said, "Uncle Paul is very good at this stuff."

"Yes, lass. Joseph Otter, born 1898 - so many born around the same time - died in Saxfosdyke aged 96, but he was born in Wilfredham. Now we move up to Charles Otter, and at last we are away from the early 1900s; he was born in 1870, but in Saxfosdyke, dying in Wilfredham at sixty-eight. He married Helen Terry, with an aitch, born a dyke off the coast in Wulfstan, much further east."

"Born a dyke?" I asked.

"No, a dyke as in water course, kid," he said. "She was the daughter of Cornelius Terry and Mary Helen Wood, and Mary died after childbirth when fifteen years old. She's of interest because of her own complicated very important parents."

"We specialise in them," I suggested.

"James Wood, 1845 to 1911, was from Sutterkirk, still in your county but much to the south, and he married Janet Walker in 1863, and she was alive 1845 to 1933; but Mary Helen, born in Sutterkirk in 1865, was not Janet's daughter but Claire Jenner's. Claire was born in Binham but died aged 16 the day after Mary Helen was born."

"Many died giving birth, back in the day," I noted.

"Claire Jenner is your ancestor, but as Mary Helen's actual mother she is often overlooked. Claire was Raymond Jenner's first child, and that makes you, Linda, part of the Jenner-Rogers family."

"Oh wow!" said Allie. "We are related, Linda."

"Welcome to the family, kid," said Paul.

"Why do you keep calling me 'kid'?" I asked him. "Do you think I'm a bloke?"

Allie said, "Uncle Paul fancies having a goat."

"I've told him to stop his forced familiarity," said Sally. "Kid? She's not exactly long 'til her menopause."

"I won't have one of those," I told them, to surprised faces. "My testicles, such as they are, keep pumping out oestrogen." They still looked wide-eyed.

Paul said, "It was only that I'm of an age where Alice is a lass and so you're a kid."

"Surely Jonnie?" I asserted.

"He's my son. My 'kidder' would be my brother. Jonathan is my kid but I don't call him that."

"Stop digging," said Sally. "And stop being so proletarian. She's told you she's got high up bollocks so doesn't want to be called 'kid'."

"We are related. How?" I asked.

"Let me complete. Claire was born in Binham, like her father. He was born in 1832, and Jennifer Rogers, her mother, was born in 1834 in Wigton - but the point is that these parents died in Walsingham, and not just Walsingham but at the site on which this newer house stands. This is why I wanted you to come here."

Alfred said, "You told us you had something special to reveal, cuzzy."

Alicia said, "Cuzzy's a new one."

"I'm so excited!" said Allie.

Paul continued: "The time has come to weigh those things. Claire Jenner is the five times great grandmother of you, Linda; Claire Jenner is the five times great aunt of Alice here. So Raymond Jenner is the common ancestor: oddly, he is the six times great grandfather of you, Linda, and Raymond Jenner is the five times great grandfather of Alice. So, in a sense, you are re-uniting our family by marriage, or at least tying another string."

"Gosh," I said. "And look at you, Allie, being delighted by it!"

Paul said, "So, although not biological in your case, your child will be of the family line down both parents, you and Alice. So often Raymond Jenner is discovered as the kingpin of the family trees, and we run up several routes to him and to the Jennifer Rogers he married."

Allie said, "Two generations further up and we touch Crianlarich, in Scotland, thanks to the brief marriage of James Rogers with Margaret Urchardan, born 1790, another one dying during childbirth - so far from home - and she was seventeen. Her son Cornelius survived. Jennifer Rogers is the daughter of Cornelius. James Rogers, Jennifer's paternal grandfather, is the furthest back we go, though we know Mairead or Margaret's parents Dòmhnall Urchardan and Fionnghal Caimbeul."

"A place for our honeymoon indeed," I said to Allie. "And, Jonathan, knowing what we now know, that I am connected after all, will you now be the biological father of our child?"

Allie said, "You do know how to ruin a party."

"No, because we can know the biological source; it keeps it within the family," I suggested.

Alfred said, "You're applying a bit of undue pressure, Linda, on the back of actual news from Paul's knowledge and work."

Jonnie asked, "Does it change anything? As Allie has said to you, 'Pack it in,' Linda."

I had to back down. I thought I was trying to help. "Sure. I am quite amiss. I'm sorry. I'm lacking in some direction."

"I'll speak to you two later," said Jonathan. Here the conversation ended, with me going over and looking at Paul's notes.

We went to a computer, where Paul had already added this information into a dynamic family tree, and Allie sat down with retrieved notes to put in a line down to Akemi Tamuuz. Thus Allie was able to discover that I was the step sixth cousin once removed of Akemi.

Later on, I said to Allie alone, "This is a three-way relationship now, in terms of the family tree. I just so want to love him too sexually and work him towards a point where you can take over and then he can give you his life-force. Don't you see it? No, I'll stop it."

"Thing is, I do now. Of course you must be involved," Allie said. "Things are different now. Oh shit. Jonnie is one of those in the family who can keep the lines going."

A little later on, Allie took me into this main bathroom. A wetroom, it had a large central bath in it, with a rounded back and side taps. We shared it, getting a good soak and playing with each other, and there was a knock on the door. It was her mother, Alicia, with a camera, and she took several photographs of us from both ends and both sides.

Allie gave a nod, and so Jonathan came into the bathroom, and carried out the Archimedes measuring principle as water slopped over. Allie's mother now took more photos, and in came his mother, Sally, to take her own threesomes of us. I was now a member of their family.

"They can come in," said Allie.

So in came Alfred and Paul to join the two women.

Paul said, "Linda, the sixth cousin once removed of Alice, and more remarkably you are my first cousin six removed. Here's looking at you, kid."

Sally groaned, saying, "Don't play that again."

I just started laughing.

(I was also the fourth cousin thrice removed of Sally, the fifth cousin twice removed of Alicia, the fifth cousin twice removed of Alfred and the fourth cousin thrice removed of Jonathan Jenner.)

Bed (Thursday 13th to Friday 14th February)

After drying, Jonathan and I only went into the bedroom we were using for this second night, now at his house, and he lay alongside me. Then Allie reappeared with two hefty photograph albums, the sort that people used to have before the digital age.

Allie (still dripping a little) announced that she'd leave us two together with the albums and return after talking to all four parents. She was arranging wedding details, like them staying at her Toulouse Road house and other places.

"Jonnie, cousin. You wanted to say something to us. Before you do, I just want to say, this baby is to be conceived in love. This involves the love between Allie and me but it can involve the love we have in the family. We'd like your love."

"I have told her I have one condition," he said. "Any conceiving by me is done here or at Collums. I'll come to the wedding, as they're arranging it now, but I am not coming up to Serninsea to do more attempted conceptions. The baby is conceived by me here or in the other house."

"She's been on the pill and has a device in her now"

"Why was she on the pill when she was getting on with you?"

"Well, she wasn't getting on with me until fairly recently. So there was a sexual risk."

"She's supposed to be a lesbian."

"People were organising sexual activities and there was a risk through her research. For example, I knew a randy rabbi."

"She didn't keep to women? She did in Somerset."

"It was a risk. It was a risk."

The albums showed photos of him alone, then Allie alone and then both together as new born babies.

"We were both born at King's Lynn hospital, 12th February me, 20th April Alice, 1989, but home is Walsingham from the beginning."

As Jonathan turned the pages, the babies turned into toddlers. They were shown together in this very location, including asleep on a bed. From the very beginning, they often but not always slept in the same place.

I said, "You don't have red hair but Allie does, and her hair is long quite soon in life."

"Her grandfather had red hair, although a lot of the colour went. Some Rogers and some Jenners have it."

"Red hair frequency and intersex frequency are said to be the same."

"When she first said you were 'intersex' I thought she meant enthusiasm."

"Aha. I notice something here, with Allie."

"Her breasts. I noticed them before anyone her age - obviously. Eleven, she was, when they were noticed."

"And her first period?"

"She showed me. Soon as it happened. She bled more heavily later. I've always known when she was having her period, usually directly. Boys at school talking about tampons and so on - 'Have you got your towel? - were just silly. I told them so and it raised suspicions. We tried not to raise suspicions. One suspicion was Alice kept beating up these kids; I was a bit of a 'poof' - as in effeminate. Me, like, who did heavy work in the farm. So did she."

"She protected you."

"Has she protected you at all, Linda?"

"Yes, actually. One of those sexual risks. He came on to me and she threatened him. He knew that he had to back off, and he did."

"Were you grateful?"

"I was afterwards. She was very wise and I was foolish. I see more body shape, both of you."

Jonathan gave an obvious commentary on the photographs: these two got taller and filled out a bit and became distinctively shapely. Holidays were taken staggered, but the kids went together and often had twice the number of holidays of the parents. (The farms had to keep running.)

The photos tracked them into their twenties, with later photos having been printed out from digital originals. There were CDs and then USB drives in the back pockets of the second album. Jonnie said that he hoped Allie would supply some pictures from Somerset.

"As for Serninsea," I said, "I cannot recall a single family photograph being taken. I'm in loads taken by other people at Saxiclite and Beaver Wood clubs and elsewhere. And I was a model."

Then Jonathan went to a drawer in the bedroom, and produced a third photograph album. Ah. This was much more personal. Spanning from later childhood into early adulthood, and including their parents, the photographed were rather lacking in textile attire. They were both domestic and holiday, some out in the fields, but some had them in the bath, like we had been. Alfred kept with Alicia, Paul kept with Sally. The latest pictures lacked Allie. Today's photos would be added, and now I was in them.

The three photo albums were closed, and put down on the floor by the bed.

I looked at him, and so I said, "I think I want to kiss you Jonnie, and let's begin. Put your hand on my right breast and don't forget the left one. I like a bit of foreplay, Jonnie, so do you like going down on Allie?"

"Do bears shit in the woods? I love it."

"OK, then I'll kill two birds with one stone. Get into position." He did. I then opened myself up. "That's my clitoris, above, and you should see my pee hole, yeah, but look. There's a sort of depression where the vagina is, so it is sort of there, but there is no cervix, no hole to reach. I've dilated using... They look like vibrators... It's still shallow, you see. Use your tongue, Jonnie. The usual way."

He was good at it too. I wondered what he had learnt from Melanie Windley and Rhiannon Fleetwood; otherwise his only teacher was Allie.

It was like telling a grandmother to suck eggs. So to sixty-nine: the best way with the female on top, his hands separating me as before for his tongue to apply pressure.

He signalled that he was on his way, and so we both shouted out for Allie, who arrived naked a couple of minutes later - it seemed a long time. The coil was in her hand.

"Mum removed it."

Having put some loose photos on top of a chest of drawers, she got into position on her back. I got off him and he got on to her and inserted, for him to pump quickly and rapidly. He sent a good amount of his sperm into Allie. After he'd finished and withdrew, we grabbed a leg each and held her bottom up.

"I'm like a fucking farm animal," she said.

And, once she was back down, she went to the loose photographs with almost clamped together legs and added them into the third album.

Next morning our horny male cousin was at her in a more conventional way, giving her more sperm again.

And so it was that breakfast followed, and we said goodbye to the other adults, and gathered our stuff from this house and the Rogers' house, to drive back north and west into the next county and up the coast to our own town and our shared living quarters.

Near arrival I said to Allie, "You criticised me constantly but I was right to press Jonathan to be the donor."

"Only when the circumstances had changed, cousin," Allie replied.

"That's right, lass."

"I won't call you 'kid' and you don't call me 'lass', right? He's the old goat, is Uncle Paul, and we make excuses for him - and 'cause he be good at family trees."

Chapter 32 Wedding

Narrator: Linda Fireside Gymnology (Wednesday 19th February)

Allie and I showered in preparation and checked out our bum holes. Georgie might not know the naturist ethos, so we took a stack of towels with us and not just one each. The bethel had plenty of towels.

We went out in a minimum of clothing to dispose at the destination, and picked up Kathryn, Kathleen and Winnie meeting together at Adam's.

We five were the first to arrive, at before 7 pm - I thought I'd help Georgie if necessary. My passengers carried in towels and we found clothed Georgie in the kitchen. Then unclothed Charley appeared to offer wine and glasses - to soon prodeed to the dining room. There was a double-take because his breasts had gone, bandaging was still across and there was of course his vulva, shaven.

"Is it shocking?" Georgie asked.

"No," I said. "And what about you?"

"I don't want to get splashed."

"You can wear an apron over nothing," I suggested.

"Why all the towels?" asked Charley.

"Because of sweaty bums and shitty arseholes. You'd be surprised. Do you have a room to remove and fold clothes?"

Such was also advice. So we were offered a room to remove and store clothes, which we did once we put the towels into this roomy dining area with cloth covered trestle tables. Then we had some wine - I and my accompaniment chose red.

Louise Saraga with James Saraga, Sally Torrance and Paula Campbell arrived. They knew the drill for undressing and using a towel each.

Next in were a gay couple, David McCormack and John Jackson, with their tattoos. Belinda Jack brought along her mother, Madge, and Flòraidh MacLean too. Most naturist gatherings these days were of older people; we had a wider age distribution expected.

Diana came in and the woman behind her was really puzzling. I'm not sure how these invitations went out, or what happened to them, because Andrea Plimpton (Lindsey) arrived, on her own.

"Just trying one of the local attractions," she said, with Allie excited to see her.

Also welcomed was Megan, the barmaid, adding some youth, saying, "Thanks for the invite. I'm trying again." She seemed hairier than ever, and of course also had all those tattoos.

Just before 7:30 pm a double line of people turned up: Carol Wood and Gilly Wallace (lesbians in their thirties), Gerald Hindley (brother of the MP) and Janet Gibson (in their fifties, married with different surnames), Andrea Carrithers and husband John Carrithers (forties), Aadesh Easwaren (fifties) and boyfriend Adrian Wigmore (sixties)

Then we had three singles: Evelyn Johnston (sixty), Janet Jenkins (of the Saxiclite Club), and Celia Haddon (thirties).

First of all Georgie called out from afar for us to sit down using towels! Then Charley came in.

He said, "We don't want to frighten the horses, especially the naturist foals among us. So I am still bandaged for a while longer, having had my breasts removed. This is my first time at a naturist gathering. Our meeting here is at the retired minister's house, Georgie Smith, and it is her first time too. But she will be naked and will be something of a surprise to you. Please be tolerant."

Georgie came in. She had breasts that were small but seemingly natural, enough of a female body shape, but the huge surprise was that she had a penis and testicles. There were gasps and my eyes were wide open.

"Yes. I am and always have been a transgender, male to female. I started changing, with hormones, when I began at university. I dressed as a female. As everyone seems to know, I've always worn a skirt. What you don't know is I stopped wearing male underpants, so I've been like the archetypal Scotsman. I went into theological college as a female, and the tutors agreed to say nothing, so long as I said nothing. The principal was comparatively radical and sympathetic in the 1980s, but even he advised I ministered somewhere out of the way. For two less than forty years I've been here and never had a relationship. In Serninsea I could be convincing as a female and indeed I said nothing."

I had to say, "Well, you are very welcome in this naturist community, to reveal all among this company."

"I have to thank you, in a way. There's been a little chatter from Anglican directions locally about you, Linda, being a fountain of excitement and a sponge of active toleration. It was suggested I did my retirement lecture at your building because you are up for all kinds of things, and of course you are known for your naturism and I remember your family at Buzzard Farm."

"Ah," said Allie. Just before Christmas."

"Oh. Just after Christmas actually, when local stalwart Gertrude Carter suggested Linda and her Bethel as the place to go - although I chickened out of the recent gymnology meeting."

"And Roger," said Allie, quietly.

I looked at her with a stare.

Georgie continued, "So I'd like our gathering now to be on the private side, please, though I don't care any longer about rumours among my former colleagues in Foss. I am being the real me. Now people can understand why I have been friendly with Charley, who is transitioning the other way, but whereas he wants to gain a penis, I didn't want to lose mine."

Andrea Carrithers said, "You could always swap."

"What a good idea!" said Charley, whose response allowed laughter.

"A razor blade and some superglue," said David McCormack, to some more laughter.

"We do have circular spoons," said Charley, "and you can now choose oxtail or vegetable soup."

With our hosts gone to the kitchen, I had to speak. "Everyone, can I just say that coming into the naturist scene involves bravery but this is exceptional. A number of you are first timers, or near enough. Part of the naturist ethos is to accept variation in bodies and not to stare. I am myself intersex but, for me, it's easy because I am all woman on the outside. The trans person is like a cousin to me, because, just as my phenotype emerges as different from my genetics, so the trans person arranges their appearance to be different from their genetics in accordance with their self-knowledge. Well done, I say to those two, for 'coming out' like this."

Georgie came back in. "I heard that and I want to say more. Let me speak. I went into university and theological college already in transition. Some church folk from way back knew, but everyone who did has kept quiet. Let me tell another secret. For the most part, I have never worn underpants or knickers and no one has ever seen me not wear a skirt. My breasts were emphasised via a bra, and the oestrogen grew my breasts. Charley's testosterone will make him more male. In my time here my libido reduced and my body fat redistributed. As my changes happened I had no need to remove my penis."

"Wonderful," I said.

"Oh, by the way, these tables to fit us in are from the UPCC chapel - my last interaction with the building. They cost about ninety pounds new each, so the retiring treasurer sold them off to me, without knowing why I wanted them. Back to the soup."

"Pity we got ours earlier on," I said.

Allie stood, "So we are having a big three couples marriage on Saturday. We will likely have different stages of undress, so it will be naked optional. The doors have to be open to the public, by the way. Just want to say, on the bravery front, well done for Andrea coming along, and also Megan again. I thought Megan wouldn't come but she has."

"I might sign up for Goosechat but not Supporters All."

"Oh, so you're making sure by coming here?"

"Again in your company."

Andrea said, "I'd like to repeat Georgie's request for relative privacy."

"Talking of relatives," I said, "someone did some remarkable genealogical work and we've been told that I am the sixth cousin once removed of Allie. How about that? I'm marrying my distant cousin."

Soup arrived and was consumed. Lamb, chicken and a nut roast were the choices afterwards. Ice cream and fruit was to complete.

After much chat and distribution of the ice cream and fruit, we arrived at the scheduled high brow Gymnology conversation, with Kathryn and Kathleen talking about the resumed local archaeology.

We learnt and discussed that the Celts under the Romans in these parts towards and around Wytham carried out metalwork repairs, as labour was cheap and materials being traded were expensive. When the Romans left there was no evidence for subsequent economic decline. Trade continued across the North Sea, from textiles to metalwork to jewellery, with some repairs and intermediate adaptations. Agriculture continued pretty much as before and there wasn't neglect. Beyond the Vikings coming, as they did, the standard view has become people spreading Anglo-Saxon culture. Therefore violent attacks were small and in the longer run insignificant. Each area retained its identity based on its topography and how folk exercised their rights to farm, but some decline in the climate meant less arable farming and more pasture.

The question arose of where to put some skeletons being dug up and analysed. A possibility was one of the underused Serninsea Marshes churches could become a store for listed skeletons. A coastal church had heritage oversight, but the air might not be the best.

"It's how they manage the inside space and air quality," said Kathleen.

Kathryn told us that calling the post-Roman period 'Anglo-Saxon' might even be misleading. Immigrants would have been more diverse in origin for some time. Arguably there was no rapid takeover by strangers and political change evolved. Trends suggest dividing the time between the Romans and the Normans into three: 400 - 650 CE, 650 - 850 CE and 850 - 1100 CE. A name to read on this is Susan Oosthuizen. Bede said that in the 700s people could speak Old English, Brythonic, Irish, Pictish, classical Church Latin, and especially vernacular spoken Latin, but nevertheless the dominance of English needs some additional explanation and perhaps migration increased over time - Old English itself was extremely close to Old Frisian and Old Saxon.

Our archaeologists further explained that German Saxons and the like were not in Britain during Roman times, and Brythonic definitely moved away from the east with the Romans gone. We do know that to the west the Celts and the Anglo-Saxons did have fights and thus you get Offa's Dyke.

We all thanked our archaeologists.

Of course we also thanked and Georgie and Charley as hosts. I also said that we did not always have to discuss theology.

The meeting wound down. There were some smaller group conversations (like Allie and Andrea, before Allie returned to me) and people drifted away.

"I still say we are not servants of the servants of God when ministers," the woman with a penis said. "But Charley doesn't even say that."

"No," he said. "I don't like the language."

"What else are we supposed to be?" I asked.

"Ministers of the Gospel," she said. "I still have no other language."

Then Allie came from behind me, the others near. She said, "I have a request for your consideration, Georgie, given your revelations."

"What, being a retired minister of the gospel or having a penis?"

"Both, really, as I see it."

"Which is?"

"We want a baby and you have sperm."

"I don't think so."

"Why not?"

"Nothing personal. I'm sorry but studies suggest that eighty per cent of transgender women have germ cells present in the testicles and spermatogenesis. Making sperm to do the job you want is preserved in approximately forty per cent of these individuals. After all my time with no sex and oestrogen, I'd be surprised if anything comes of there of any use to anybody."

I said, "To get a baby from you is like getting one from someone like me, even if transgender isn't being intersex."

"What does this involve, exactly?" Georgie asked. "Indicate precisely what you mean to say."

Allie said, "Having sex with me, probably several times, in a loving setting, involving Linda."

Charley said, "Wow. And I thought naturism was only about removing clothes."

I said, "It's not naturism but reproduction. Mothers Shrimpton, we want to be.

"On top of this, I am sixty-four. This is more than sending me a Valentine. I could be handy, mending a fuse, but not entering Allie, thus to reproduce."

"Oh very good," I said. "So no further postcard, stating our point of view?"

"Sorry," Georgie said, "but I think you need someone reliably rich in content. A minute ago I was an isolated worker for the Gospel, doing what was expected, surveying the barren land, and now, the moment I release myself to a select few, discretion assured, you want me to behave outside every expectation and experience of my life. But - hang on - I appreciate the good reason for asking me to fornicate."

We all smiled, and it wasn't long before we two had left.

Allie said to me only, later, "So Roger fucked Mrs. Carter in this bethel! Why? He donates sperm and she's past the menopause."

"She wanted a Christmas gift. It was about memories revived."

"Georgie Smith might want the same."

"Gertrude Carter has expressed her reaction of delight without saying what precisely happened."

"And what was your role?"

"I just facilitated the get-together. I'm not like you."

Narrator: Allie Before the Wedding (Friday 21st February)

I was not pregnant, I told Klärchen, whom I'd met alone with her dog, and now having a shower with the dog. Klärchen was doing my body and hair and the dog's. Some of my residual blood attracted the dog's attention, but Klärchen didn't mind. Clearly the dog was used to hers. Well, Klärchen was a dab hand with the hairdryer for both me and the dog. The dog started jumping around and it was time for me to go.

I returned to the bethel with the cleaners in. Linda gave me a long stare.

"Perhaps I should go next door and get my hair done. You could have invited me but you don't."

"You're right. I don't. You've offended her."

Jonnie was coming to Serninsea with his parents for the wedding. Linda's parents would be around later in the afternoon

Linda said, "Before Jonathan gives you away, when it is bad luck for me to see you, sleep with him and take his sperm."

"I'm not going to be deceptive," I told her.

"I need to see my best woman, and my family. I need to finalise last minute arrangements."

I asked, "Will Diana be naked or not?"

"I think she stays clothed when they watch The Jacobite Gap Years. She watches it again on a Friday, the first one - it's episode two of season three on Monday. "

"Ha ha. You know what I mean," I said to Linda.

"I wonder if Andrea will be nude? I doubt it, open to the public. Jenny isn't well. She is slipping mentally again," Linda told me.

"So what happened at the fireside stays there?"

"Unless it's in your research."

"I stopped. Don't you listen to anything I say?"

"Adam is going on about this virus again. He said about 11th February, when World Health Action for Treatment (WHAT) called the disease Novel Covid and the virus Severe Novel Acute Respiratory Syndrome or SNARS."

"It gives a label," I said. "Labelling is a key moment, say social scientists."

"Yes, it's given the virus its taxonomy, although the SNARS name isn't used much because 'the Novel Covid Virus' is more descriptive, or NC."

"Before I go: we do have the format finalised for the wedding?"

"There'll be three sets of vows but Christine is merging a number of texts."

"Put up a warning notice for entrants; don't let anyone in without them knowing what is inside."

"And after the ceremony?"

"You've said in the past that you would willingly walk down the street naked; you've said when you were a photographic model that they'd only do it for money whereas you'd have done it anyway. So this is what we should do. So long as we are clean, and neat, our hair is done..."

"Yours is already. Mind how you sleep on it. Don't let Jonathan pull on it when he fucks you."

"Linda, honestly! Jonnie doesn't pull my hair. The guests should not bat an eyelid once they've seen us once. So afterwards we are the same."

"I'm beginning to think you're a libertine."

"Beginning? You've called me much worse. I'll see you tomorrow. It's the beginning of the rest of our lives, Linda. Don't do anything I wouldn't do - you have one night to behave yourself."

"Surely that should be 'misbehave'?"

"However you feel comfortable," I responded.

"I'm going to see my family," Linda said, "staying at Yojana's and I've told Diana to meet me there."

I went to my house at 135 Toulouse Road, with a bag of borrowed crockery and cutlery, and spent time there packing my honeymoon suitcase as two cars found parking spaces nearby. All five blood relatives came over, and I pointed out that the parking of other vehicles probably suggested prostitutes' clients visiting.

So at last these adults saw inside my house. I told them that Christine let me have one all to myself and for my art.

My parents and others had double height airbeds to pump up I'd taken from the church before. Two (one per person) would be downstairs among the artworks downstairs and two in the unused bedroom upstairs. Jonathan, however, would sleep with me, partly because we had issues to discuss.

We went out for a meal, all six of us. I stressed that any participation in the nude was voluntary, though I wanted Johnnie to be in his birthday suit.

Aunt Sally said, "You shouldn't have changed your name. We were all disturbed by that and now it will show an anomaly on the certificate."

"I wanted a change of life. And now I am changing again. I'm marrying and Linda is taking my surname. I saw Linda at Margate and I knew she was right for me. After Abigail and after Beathag, she is the right person."

"You think she is faultless?" asked Sally.

"Oh, she is far from faultless. She has a sense of superiority over me, constantly undermined by her arrogance, stupidity, duplicitous..."

"We didn't even know you had lesbian tendencies," said my mother. "We brought you up to be open and unashamed, yet you gave us no idea, no indication."

"How could I do when in bed with Jonnie all the time? That was the point of leaving: I had no room to breathe."

Meanwhile, I had a request regarding my Uncle Paul. "Genealogy, uncle! Not us, this time, but someone who is coming here called Andrea Plimpton, and who was Andrea Lindsey of Somerset. Does she have any historical links to anyone famous? I'll leave you the details via an email so you've got them printed, though some you may need to find out."

"Fine, lass," he said. "I like a mystery."

Narrator: Linda Diana Recalls Mr. Bode (Friday 21st February)

So I drove to Diana's but she wanted to leave quickly with an overnight bag. This was unexpected, that Diana had previously slept in my bed when I was ill!

Aardse and the kids were behind her and sort of in the gloom, from my outdoors perspective. I'd expected to chat in her house, so instead I returned to the bethel.

There I said to her in the conference room that I hadn't got long as I was soon going to meet the family, as my daddy would try and reconcile deep family disputes. "This all goes back a long way, some deep rooted disputes and cuddle time matters between my dad and Lucinda."

"Then you need to know what happened to me."

"You?"

"Background information. Your father."

"Go on," I said.

"It was Sunday May 7th 1995, and it was really warm out, perfect for my second visit."

"Second visit."

"Roman Numerals had it as VII • V • MCMXCV and I knew this because it was the fiftieth year since Victory in Europe Day. We'd had a sixth form assembly on Rabindranath Tagore, a Hindu, on the Friday. Some Might Say by Oasis was top of the pops and Norway had won the Eurovision Song Contest with the song Nocturne by Secret Garden."

"It is really etched in your memory."

"Quite. As still a new friend I was coming along to be involved in Sunday's farm work. My mother said they were a dodgy lot at Buzzard Farm, and best to keep out of your shop. I noticed a little bit of tension then between mother and father; they'd had some sort of disagreement on the Friday when away from the farm.

"When I arrived you had nothing on, and it made me jump a bit. But to go in the shop you put a long blouse on, like, to cover your bits. 'Plimsolls'll do,' you said. So then there was another kind of thrill, really, when I had to do the undressing like you said to go with your father while you helped in the shop. You saw me naked for the first time."

"Yes. I remember it was during the second visit."

"You were dressed! I could see your mother's mammaries as she walked through the corridor."

"I've not got long."

"Your father would show me the farm. You'd said, 'I'm having to help mummy. Put stuff on for inside the shop when back.' You gave a kind of 'mmm' sound at my appearance.

"Your father was pleased I'd walk with him. There was a barn he wanted to visit out in the fields to pick up some tools. Along the way he just pissed, without touching his cock."

"I should have warned you."

"So, I thought, as a seventeen year old, I'd show I was mature and adult by squatting and pissing - and that was because I needed to go.

"He nodded and I was pleased. 'Hey, I think you're one of us,' he said.

"We went in the distant barn and he told me that Luce was coming for what he called 'cuddle time' and it meant naturism inside as well as outside the body."

"Not heard it like that," I said.

"He said that you were not as mature as your sister. He thought I was mature.

"Lucinda came into the barn, completely naked of course, and she looked at me as she pushed her body into her father's, squashing her breasts on him, and he ran his hands down her back and over her bottom.

"He asked, 'How's it going out there?'

"She said there was progress and the tates were in well."

"First early potatoes," I said.

"Then he said to Lucinda, 'Go and do some more,' and then he started chatting to me about American television. Back in 1973 on 4th May American television showed female nudity for the first time. 'The Americans love their violence but are squeamish on sex,' he said, and that this was all wrong!"

"Steambath on their Public Broadcasting System. It's about a gateway to the afterlife."

"That's it," said Diana to me.

I said, "She was the sexy Valerie Perrine. Bill Bixby was on it, the green skin bloke ha ha."

"Right! Your father told me that this woman did some modelling and it would be great if his daughters could become famous models, posing and that."

"He never said that to us; my modelling was my doing."

"He then said Luce - he called her that - had changed and asked me if I'd changed? I said I thought so, if puzzled, because puberty was now obvious. He said we naturists folk don't worry about looking at these things that textile folk cover up - things that go redder, pinker, spongier. So I commented that they don't tell us this at school and he said this is why Lucinda was more advanced than you, Linda, because he'd made her more mature and he thought I was."

"This sounds like rubbish to me," I said

"I asked what to do, so he told me to sit on the bale and catch where that light is coming in. I had to open myself. I wasn't doing it enough, and he wanted me to get my fingers in and really pull. He asked about my cervix."

"Aha."

"I asked if that was the opening to the tubes and he joked that it was like going in the London Underground to the escalators. He said he could use a man's strength to open me up."

"Sounds like Keith - later. I've got a few minutes before I must go."

"As he did this, and manoeuvred me to get the shaft of light in. I said to your dad, Mr. Bode, that his thing was growing. He said it was normal. He asked me then if boys were chasing me and I mentioned then upper sixth Keith Jupitas - they're a respectable family and that my mam liked him - and Adam Magellan in our year. Others were nothing.

"This was when he said I needed experience and he could do with what he does with Lucinda, and that was the reason I should tell you nothing. Your time would come, soon, but not yet. So I agreed. He told me naturists are freer than others, and do not brag about it, and that he'd been cleared medically, and thus I nodded when he pulled his todger and indicated he wanted to go in. One nod and so he did, Linda."

"Never did you tell me!"

"He told me to widen and then narrow my thighs as he thrust his penis in my vagina. I said, 'I'm getting sensations, Mr. Bode,' and he said this was proof I had been growing up. We were two natural people doing natural motions. He said my breasts were well developed and he felt them. I must have developed quickly."

"I don't know what to say."

"He asked me to describe what I felt. I said it was different from my finger. I described something extra happening but couldn't quite tell - a bit warm. He withdrew and said, 'Oh look, we've produced some white liquid,' and when he said he'd clean it I thought it odd that he cleaned it by getting his head down and using his tongue - on his own stuff in there."

"A mixture," I said.

"Yes, I know that now!"

"Sorry. I'm shocked."

"In fact he said chemicals in the mouth and vagina work together. So he kissed me and said I should get the taste."

"It should not have happened," I said. "I loved my dad like crazy and yet he stayed off me - until recently."

"Recently?"

"Yeah. I finally got to experience what Lucinda had for so long."

"Forty years old?"

"Yes. He should have left you alone but he's my daddy."

"Honestly, Linda! Talking of Lucinda, she came back in and your father added that she knows Keith Jupitas. She implied having had sex with him - fancy telling her father! They were in the same year, of course. She said he's a bit 'animal' and his family are stuck up. And this point I had to go. He told me not to go in the shop naked because the locals don't get it. If I wanted to stay unclothed I had to call you from the back. And I had to remember that people don't understand until they've grown up and you hadn't."

"Perhaps he believed this."

"You've one hell of a blind spot, Linda."

"I must go," I said again, and this time I did, leaving the conference room for the back door.

But as I did she ran to just behind me, saying, "It was Adam Magellan and not your dad or Keith that meant I had to stay at Rasa Market."

Narrator: Linda Family Attempts to Reconcile (Friday 21st February)

I'd expected a chat with Diana at her house about last minute wedding preparations. Instead I motored to the Maa Skelter Guest House to arrive a few minutes late.

Yojana was at the reception.

"Saltmarsh Room, ground floor. Naturist rules. Strip off here if you like and I'll keep your clothes."

That's what I did.

I met my father, Lucinda, mother, Leila, and even Larry. Dyfed wasn't present.

"You're late," daddy said.

Leila was close to mummy on one side of the room from the other three. Daddy then took Lucinda's right arm with his left hand and spoke.

"This family has become divided, fractured: all from events in the past between us. As Linda marries Allie Shrimpton, it's time matters were put right like I said. Yes?"

"Yes," said Lucinda held by his grip.

"Yes," said Larry, looking at them. I wasn't sure how daddy persuaded him to come, and I wasn't exactly sure I wanted his presence.

Daddy looked at me. "Yes," I said.

Daddy then said, "Leila has laughed at us all. Your mother has been upset. So everyone is involved. At the heart of this is the intimacy of this family, when intimacy is good. It doesn't matter what the world thinks and I am the head of this household. Isn't that right, Linda?"

"Yes, I suppose so."

"You suppose so. You are at the centre of matters, like it or not. On your side of things, you should have welcomed your brother. He could have obtained experience from his sister and you could have offered it. But on his side, he should have been more persuading."

Larry started masturbating in preparation for something. I looked at mummy who seemed stony-faced, and Leila was wide-eyed with her mother's arm going around her shoulder and pulling her in.

"Come here," daddy said to me, "and touch your brother. You know exactly how. Your brother is going to respond to you, fully and properly."

"Daddy?" I asked.

"If you love me you love your own brother as well."

It sounded religious, that, but I said, "No daddy, I won't."

Larry said, "You wanted to know, you wanted to find out."

I replied, "I'm not going through all that again."

"Luce, show her what she's missing."

"Er... I'd rather Dyfed was here. I've my own repairs to make."

Daddy said, "Mr. Cadwaladr is not part of this long running problem."

"I am Mrs. Cadwaladr, please daddy."

"What daughters! right, well, Leila..."

"Oh no," said mummy, "you don't touch Leila."

"I was about to exclude Leila - it's about these two and him."

Then I said, "Daddy, I have heard what happened with Diana my friend when she was seventeen. You exploited her. You'd started doing cuddle time with Lucinda and you spun a tale of Diana's maturity and she thought naturists fucked each other. That's what you did."

"We do."

Lucinda said, then, "I'm going to find Dyfed, to be in time for him."

Daddy said, "That solves nothing."

"I'll try and get on with Linda better."

"Stay here while Linda does what this head of this household says."

Mummy then said, "Leonard, they have spoken their removal of consent."

"They are as my slaves in my household, something Linda herself once told me about - whole families being baptised and all that?"

"I was talking about then, a different kind of family from today's."

"But not here, not this one."

At this point a clothed Dyfed walked in, with Yojana behind him but the door was shut against her.

Dyfed said, "I'd appreciate it if you'd leave my wife alone. What you used to do is not starting up again."

He said, "It already has."

"Leonard!" called out mummy.

Dyfed said, "Lucinda: come out and get dressed."

"She stays here until matters are resolved my way, that this family connects intimately again."

Lucinda looked at daddy, and looked at Dyfed.

"Sorry daddy."

The two of them left.

I said, "I'm leaving too."

Daddy said, "You get against that wall, so Larry can do you properly and restore matters and then I will put the seal on it."

"No daddy," I said. "It stops now."

Mummy said, "You heard her."

I then took courage to leave the room, to hear raised voices as I dressed with the clothes handed back by a frowning Yojana.

As I was ready to leave the guest house, daddy came out and said, "Right. That farm is mine so until you come under my authority again everyone can stay away. That includes your mother and your sister."

"Ignore him!" mummy called out.

He said, "I'm going straight to Wales."

With his need to dress, I left directly for my SUV and drove to the Bethel. I'd no idea, then, if any in my family would attend the wedding.

Narrator: Allie Night and Morning (Friday to Saturday 22nd February)

My mother and father used the upstairs bathroom and downstairs toilet, and upstairs my aunt and uncle used that bathroom and toilet, as did Jonnie and me. He went in the bathroom before me and found my bedroom as I went in.

"I said to the adults, shouting down the stairs, "Jonnie and I are turning in now."

"Have a nice night," said my mother, who sounded sad.

He was already in bed as I undressed and got in. "You're happy to still sleep with me the night before," he said to me.

"Crumbs, Jonnie. There is no taboo between us, or shouldn't be. It wasn't you I ran from, but the pressure all four of them were applying."

"And me. I wanted you."

"All all my time in Somerset I was never tempted to go with another man personally."

"Do you still love me?" he asked me.

"I've always loved you. You're in my bed, aren't you? Let me have your knob. But I don't love you like having passion. When I'm with Linda, it's like an edge, it's passion. When we fight, it's because there is passion. I never fight you, Jonnie. I fight others over you."

"I want to fuck you, even if it is one last time."

"You can and there will be other times! You know I accept you. But where are you going to put your sperm? Don't start wearing a johnny, Jonnie."

"On your leg. I'd have had a marriage of convenience: you could have gone off with others, like Linda."

"I have to marry her. Don't you see? I need that bond, that union. Go inside me. I like you inside me, if it comforts you."

"Don't you get any sexual satisfaction from me inside you?" He entered me.

"Of course I do. I do like you in me, but I've never longed for any other man inside me, even if I've had one or five or forty-five. Yes, that's nice. I'm used to you."

I held him while he built himself into a strong rhythm, and then he withdrew and his sperm went all around my slightly hairy vulva, on the outside.

"Yes," I said, looking at the fact that, here, on my body surface, every sperm was not sacred. "Linda and I want a child. She cannot have children, so it is up to me. And I need another male donor. And now I need to ask you something more."

"What?"

"We'll be marrying naked. Will you be naked, giving me away?"

"I'd rather not. Not in front of everyone."

"That's the general idea."

"Is it compulsory?"

"No."

"I mean, is it compulsory for me?"

"I'd prefer it. I'd rather you were, but most important is you give me away."

"Probably no, then - being naked."

"Will you think about it?"

"I'll think about it."

"I want some sleep."

"By the way," he said, "I noticed you've lost even more of your accent. I know we once tried to be more cosmopolitan - you called it - but you seemed to have succeeded."

"And it wasn't easy in Somerset, either, with their local accents. Go to sleep my cousin."

In the morning I reminded my parents at breakfast (using crockery and cutlery from the bethel) that they'd have to decide what to do regarding our naturist wedding segment. We six behaved loosely in the evenings at Walsingham, but they were reserving their positions here. Jonnie hadn't yet agreed to be naked as such.

Father said, "Jonnie should give you away with his togs off, lad."

Jonnie suddenly responded, "I don't want to give you away. I'm not giving Allie away to anyone."

This led me to say, "Jonnie! You agreed!"

"It's too much," he said.

"For once and for all, I need an emotional connection in a full way with Linda. It doesn't take away the closeness of you and me. But I have one life, and I want it with her, a partner in a new way, here, now, and forever, and you said 'yes' only last night. You don't need to take your clothes off - my nakedness is for Linda."

"Running away," Jonnie said.

"You are like a brother to me. With Linda I want the passion, the attraction, the wanting: her family is in town and they'll be naked."

"What you want. But what about family duty?" Jonnie asked.

"She's already a cousin, like you."

"That argument is over, Jonnie lad," said Paul.

"Jonnie, you are heterosexual. You'd get everything from a marriage with me. I wouldn't. I'm sorry that I am our only daughter for you."

"Don't blame us," said Sally. Both families had still-borns. You two at the same time were like miracles. We all protected you two, nurtured you two, brought you up together."

"I'm marrying out. I am being made to look like the black sheep of the family."

"We don't have any sheep," my father said.

"Nor do we," said my higher generation male cousin Paul.

"I'm going to shower and use some strips to match her natural pubic appearance in public. My hair was done yesterday. Yes, she could give me away. Klärchen can give me away."

"I did promise," said Jonnie.

I said, "I give up."

I had a shit and shower and invited Jonnie to bring up a one minute microwaved sugar solution in a jar. I showed him how the strips have to be used in the direction of the hair. He had a go, and then he did my inner arse a lot easier than I could have. That's when he checked it was clean.

Once we had finished it happened that Kathryn and Kathleen visited, to say they were getting the flowers from the florist.

Diana arrived a little later, with her hair done, the latter asking to be sure that Jonnie would give me away.

Diana told me, outside the back door, "The family reconciliation was a bit of a disaster, apparently. Her father has gone back to Wales - she thinks - as Linda said no more incest."

"Incest?" I asked. "Linda?"

"Her sister too. Oh crumbs, I didn't know you didn't know. Well, I didn't either. All I know is I lost my virginity to her father."

"You did?"

"I was seventeen. Keep it to yourself. It's not relevant to your research. oh shit: your research."

"No it is not."

So we two and Jonnie went to the bethel with the family following. Linda would stay over the way in the vestry, so we three were in the dining and seating area.

People started arriving. One was my professor, Roland Mitton, my one-time lover and tutor, Dr. Abigail Randall, and the Gaelic speaking secretary Ms Beathag NicAmhlaigh.

"We couldn't miss this for the world," said the professor.

"We'll be togs off," I said. "Naturism, religion, us: Diana here the same, as Linda's supporter or best woman, and Jonnie will be giving me away clothed or possibly unclothed."

Roland said, "I think we can manage that. Abby?"

"Yeah."

Diana said, "Then change nearer the start in the cloaks area next to the wet room, where Allie will hang around. There'll be flip-flops for your feet, but we four should be completely bare. Notices will be up; a wedding must be public but we don't want to frighten the horses."

For their wedding, Kathleen and Winnie would dress like the Vestal Virgins and Kathryn with Peter more traditionally. Diana asked me, "Are your colleagues naturists?"

"No."

"So they'll just take everything off?"

"Yeah."

"Why?"

"You ask me? I'm only the student."

"I need to get over to Linda. So you go to the cloaks on arrival."

Narrator: Linda Weddings Immediately Before (Saturday 22nd February)

From my bed and our breakfast, and some telephone calls, Diana had gone to her house and to bring back Allie. I went immediately next door. Klärchen Sisse answered partly hiding behind her door with her dog by her feet.

"I thought you were someone else, early."

I said, "I don't want to be presumptuous, but Allie had her hair done yesterday with you and our hair no longer matches. Can you do my hair, please? Please come to the wedding afterwards."

"You won't let my dog in your church."

"It's the public food regulations - but we could say it is a guide dog."

"Come in. You're fortunate. Hendrik is expected very soon."

"Yes, your friend is invited too. Salome Lichtblau."

"The dog is coming in, not Salome. We've had an argument. Our plans for a civil partnership have collapsed you know. She drops Hendrik off to see Dieter. Salome will only let me talk to her to talk about the dogs' welfare. Allie would have to invite her separately and then I'd have to arrange to take Dieter and come back for your wedding."

"I'm sorry to hear all this. Nothing to do with Allie coming here?"

"No. Get your clothes off in there and we'll all shower and I've got some nice hair shampoo I used on Allie yesterday."

"That would be lovely."

I sent Diana a message that my hair was being done by Klärchen Sisse. Soon after, a silent Salome dropped off Hendrik. It was all too complicated to invite them both to the wedding.

Thus it was that I had another woman's hands over my body on my wedding day, and I offered to scrub the dogs with their exclusive dog shampoo. But Klärchen said no, because it would give Dieter and Hendrik "the wrong signals," and only she (and beforehand Salome) could scrub the dogs.

I had to admit after the washing and drying that my hair looked fantastic, and so did the dogs' for that matter.

I just thought, returning to the bethel, that Allie's paintings throughout were such suitable celebrations of the body on this day. Sisters Kathryn and Kathleen were placing flowers all over the place. They each remarked that my hair was full-bodied, flowing and natural. Soon they left the building.

I was packing suitcases, including some of Allie's items, as we would go directly from the wedding to our honeymoon. Allie, I understood, would do some packing at Toulouse Road.

Diana messaged me that she didn't go home. She went to a salon and she had on a minimum of make up. Diana would appear like us two at the wedding.

Winnie was at the investigations premises with Adam Magellan, Peter Marshall, his father Cyprian Marshall, and Winnie's mother, Kimona Lott.

So Diana returned with Allie and Jonnie with an hour to go. She confirmed that Allie would indeed be given away by her cousin. She had news too. "Her professor is in town, along with two other women. Two of them will go naked, so the cloaks area will be used by them - not you and me."

"I could have had a naked meeting with her professor in Glastonbury."

"They're not naturists. Allie wouldn't say why they'll strip off."

"Par for the course with Allie. She has improved lately."

Diana said no flip-flops for us: we would be completely bare. We would have a variation to the mikveh: rings would stay on, because we'd have rings from the marriage service as symbols of continuous eternal love. "Circles," said Diana. "Sacred symbols of eternal love, and yet even death - think of the hangman's noose."

"Why consider that?" I asked.

"I got it from a certain drama. Hope I can catch part two on Monday."

"So how are the other two couples presenting themselves?" I asked Diana.

Diana replied, "So we'll have nothing on; Kathleen and Winnie will be in translucent gear, with some of the Serninsea Vestal Virgins present; and Peter and Kathryn will be in standard wedding gear despite their naturist presence at the mission. I suspect it's Adam's influence as his best man."

As the clock ticked on, Bishops Bill Masters and Pauline Junor came in. I waved across.

When, in a big surprise, Bishop Derek and Mrs. Louise Imperial came in and even started looking around, I had to go out and say hello. They understood I needed to retreat away again.

Also arriving were Bishop Sarah, the Reverend Louise and the Reverend Duncan Deimos with Bishop Margaret Lindbeck from the north.

Bishop Christine Vine arrived and joined Diana and me in the vestry. The Reverend Charley Darley came in the building with the Reverend Georgie Smith to sit down.

"Thing is, Linda," said Margaret, "if you are going to be naked, you've got a problem because the doors must be open. The wedding is public."

"We've considered this; we have warning notices. I'm not compromising on this. I am proud of my body. I'm saying to everyone, alongside Allie, 'This is who I am.'"

Missing among the gathering were members of my own family. I'd have to see the effect of the disastrous 'reconciliation'.

Diana went out to meet Allie's other family members. I had to stay in the vestry, and I undressed. Allie disappeared back into the cloaks area.

Diana rejoined me and undressed. She was well-scrubbed, like me. The various bishops left.

Then music began from the CDs, being selected and played by Jenny from the seating and dining area.

Therefore Diana and I, completely naked, on our bare feet, walked over to the chapel, she to my left. We passed Derek and Louise Imperial sat well back; it was the first time he'd seen me like this. I passed by a smiling Gertrude Carter, sat next to clothed Georgie Smith and Charley Darley. There were a more gasps as we went into the chapel.

One person who didn't gasp was Annie, with equally clothed Megan alongside.

Lindy Peacock and Jeremy Symes were naked. Some of the gymnology crowd were present and naked. Roger Humphrey, Marie Enfield, Belinda Jack and Madge Jack were sat waiting (and clothed - despite their participation in naturism).

Worryingly, only my mother and Leila were together, both without clothes, in the forward seats. Mummy looked stoney faced. Lucinda and Dyfed were elsewhere and clothed! My very own sister was denying that for which my family stood.

There were still a number of unoccupied reserved seats regarding the supporters and families of the six getting married.

The altar table was along the long wall. Therefore, our bare backs and bottoms faced out into the seating space.

Professor Roland Mitton and Abigail Randall were completely naked, but Beathag NicAmhlaigh was clothed. The flesh-displaying pair were sat by the created aisle.

Friends like Patricia, Arthur and Aardsee were now seated, and the de Groot children, all clothed of course, just as were all others present. (They were used to the odd occasion when mother had nothing on. Patricia's children were not.)

Diana to my left and I stood up and waited, to then be joined by Winnie to my right in a body-revealing white translucent gown, although her mother, Kimona Lott, by her right hand side, was in a white suit. Looking back I saw Carrie Chopin, Gloria Mabaso, Paige Tuck, Bethany Gorge, and Hattie Schepsutte, each wearing translucent gear.

Suited Peter arrived and was accompanied by Adam Magallen on his left. Peter's father, Cyprian Marshall, also suited, came in and sat down.

Thus six of us were stood waiting. From right to left were Kimona, Winnie, Peter, Adam, myself and Diana.

At the service front behind the altar table we had Bishops Christine Vine and Margaret Lindbeck also now stood waiting. Bishops Bill Masters and Pauline Junor came and sat near the altar table, looking at the increasingly large congregation. I could hear but not see late arrivals behind me.

The Weddings

The music faded to bring on the principal tune, Here Comes the Bride, and the three brides arrived with those giving them away. There was Kathryn in a flowing white wedding dress over her increasing bump and Kathleen with a see through-translucent gown. In between them was their uncle George Wickenby. Kathryn found Peter and Adam, and Kathleen found Winnie and Kimona. If Kathleen received a few gasps, Allie and Jonathan raised the human volume level as both were completely starkers, including bared pubes and bare feet like Diana and me. Allie reminded me of Crystal Tipps and Alistair (though her hair was purple).

Oddly, before complete arrival, Jonnie and Allie paused, and her naked professor and dazzling female colleague stood up, faced her, and they each placed their hands on Allie's head, and the three in contact nodded. Professor Mitton and Dr. Randall then sat down. I'd have said that was a blessing.

It was busy along the front as Allie and her supporter finally lined up: right to left was Kimona, Winnie, Kathleen, George, Kathryn, Peter, Adam, Jonathan, Allie, me, Diana.

I smiled at Allie, who beamed back, and I then looked around. My mother and younger sister smiled, and Allie's dressed ones seemed to be taking in Allie's and Jonnie's nudity very easily.

Bishop Margaret then said, "Welcome one and all to Serninsea Liberal Bethel, for the celebration of the marriages between Peter and Kathryn, Winnie and Kathleen, and Alfia and Linda. We will have a Communion service during the service, with a Body Eucharist element for our marriage partners. We begin with a hymn: the original is I Would Be True, by Howard Arnold Walter, but we've changed the 'I' to 'We' and 'me' to 'us'."

Once the two verses were sung, Margaret asked, "Winnie and Kathleen, who gives Kathleen away?"

Kathleen said, "This is my Uncle George Wickenby."

Then she asked, "Peter and Kathryn, who gives Kathryn away?"

Kathryn said, "My Uncle George as well."

Then Christine said, "Alfia and Linda. Who gives Alfia away?"

Allie said, "My fourth cousin once removed, Jonathan Jenner."

Christine asked, "Peter and Kathryn, who is Peter's supporter?"

"He is my employer and friend, Adam Magellan."

"Winnie, who is your supporter?"

"My mother, Kimona Lott."

Now Margaret asked Allie and me, "Linda, who is your supporter?"

I said, "My good friend, Diana de Groot."

Margaret said, "Thank you all. Those of you who are giving away, you are releasing them now. You have each given away the one you love into this ceremony, during which they will join their partners in holy matrimony. Would these named supporters please sit down?"

They did.

Christine said, "The supporters here we shall call upon soon, but in the meantime also please sit down. We have our three couples standing."

Now Margaret said, "Grace to you all; let us rejoice and be glad."

Christine took over. "We have come together under the presence of God to witness the marriage of these couples, to rejoice with them and to ask God to bless each of them."

Margaret said, "Marriage is a commitment between two people before witnesses. As friends, all six here have decided to undertake a joint ceremony. In marriage, Winnie and Kathleen, Peter and Kathryn, and Linda and Alfia, make their solemn covenants before God. In their new lives of faithfulness and loyalty, they will in marriage also enrich society, strengthen community and share their possessions with each other and with those in need. This broader commitment is evident from the beginning in this shared ceremony.

"Marriage is to be entered into reverently and responsibly. This is the way of life that Winnie and Kathleen, Peter and Kathryn, and Linda and Alfia have chosen. These couples have come to accept each other freely, to give their consent to each other in solemn promises."

Now Christine said, "God gives love to all here this day: your love is both agape and eros and the way of forgiveness and peace; loneliness is banished and community is enhanced.

"God's love into the creation and recreation is already here. This renewal of love will come through Winnie and Kathleen, Peter and Kathryn, and Linda and Alfia, continually, shown in affection and faithfulness in their future lives. Amen."

Margaret read from the Song of Songs 2 verses 10 to 13, Matthew 5 verses 1 to 9; and Christine read from 1 Corinthians 13:1 to 8a plus 13 and 1 John 4 verses 7 to 19.

Then Margaret had some words for us, as a homily using some basic notes. "I'm very pleased to be here again, representing the denomination, with the Reverend Duncan Deimos in the congregation, perhaps, giving a Free Catholic - sometimes, if confusingly, also called High Protestant - liturgical approach to a marriage ceremony, assisted by Bishop Christine here with her Liberal Catholic hue. In addition we have post-Buddhist, neo-Pagan, and humanist elements. This is quite unusual in itself, and so is having three couples at once. A service for two couples has been known. The 1995 television version of Pride and Prejudice put two couples together: not so in the book. We have to make it very clear who is marrying whom - and so long as each couple does the legal bits, we can combine the rest. Much more efficient.

"In principle and personally, we affirm the body. We affirm sexuality: all these couples will be sexually active this evening!

"Indeed, two of our brides are pregnant: Kathryn is visibly well on her way, and Kathleen will show a bump soon enough. I am told that Allie intends to have a child. So very soon these three will have similarly aged children. It will change this place as four of them are residents.

"Normally the doors are locked for naked or near-naked including events, but for a wedding they must be open. The fact that the doors are open indicates that this is a communal and even community event. Marriage, we say, strengthens social bonds, and certainly this tiny denomination of ours favours complete inclusion in marriage. Yes, sir, you may take photographs. It is public recognition. Our mission includes social solidarity; it includes personal solidarity too, and this comes through intimate association.

"Intimacy is biological, cultural and religious. Theologically, we believe that grace comes through the body, and is in the bodily life. And our theology of this, then, is about incarnation. Free Catholics, if not Liberal Catholics, tend to believe in a more broadly universal or, even, subjective incarnation, assisted by liturgy; Liberal Catholics tend towards a more mystical Christ embedded through his Church. I see that Bishop Christine is nodding. So via the mystical or via a collectivised subjectivity, we do give breadth and ease to any specific belief.

"Nevertheless, whatever the metaphor you may use - depth, height (and I prefer height myself) - and whether you consider God as absorbed or distinct (I try to go for distinct myself) we do use the word 'God' as a kind of shorthand for however you envisage this source of connectivity. We think God affirms sex, and strengthens the commitment of marriage.

"The body element is emphasised at the mikveh ceremony that concludes these weddings. Here they will all be naked and will completely submerge, each couple together. A mikveh ceremony is not baptism; nevertheless, looking at this mikveh, I am reminded that a baptismal bath best resembles a tomb. Because, in such a whole body font, one dies and rises with Christ. Here we do something similar. We submerge the old life and we emerge into the new direction. The mikveh symbolises intention. So there is a connection with regeneration and recreation. Water both kills and gives life. New trials will come, and the human struggle continues, but we set our sights ahead. And marriage is like this. It is a gathering, a moment to reflect, and a moment of recreation together if not the focus of actual new creation in reproduction through the basis of parenting.

"Marriage was once a private and not a Church concern. It became part of the Church's universe. Unless we are polyandrous, we pair up, and the Church affirms pairing, and we give recognition to birth and upbringing, sorting out inheritance and continuing the family line. So this is what we are doing, under God. Amen."

I noticed at this point Allie looked over to her family; thus Allie and I were continuing her family lines.

Now Christine spoke. "Before our God and this gathering, I will ask each couple to declare your readiness in a condition of freedom to enter into the covenant of marriage. I will also ask your families and this gathering to affirm and support these marriages."

(It seemed to me that my parents might have to reaffirm their own marriage.)

"We have promises in the negative, knowing no reasons why not, and then we affirm for ourselves and then give the positive legal commitment that does the job.

"I ask the congregation: If you know of any reason in law why Peter Marshall and Kathryn Wickenby may not be joined in marriage, please declare it now."

There was a pause.

"So, I must ask you, Peter and Kathryn, to declare that you know of no reason in law that you may not be married."

Peter and Kathryn each gave their declaring facilitating legal messages as required.

The congregation kept quiet for the next couple and Winnie and Kathleen said as the first had done.

The congregation then was asked in our case why we should not be joined in marriage.

Someone said, "Yes. Her real name is Alice Rogers."

It was like I had a brick in my chest that dropped to my stomach.

"No it is not," said Allie.

Rhiannon Fleetwood had stood up and spoken. The congregation hissed at her, and she left the building, saying, "Neither of them are faithful to each other."

Bishop Christine said, "We've gone into this. Her name was changed legally. Allie is definitely Alfia Shrimpton. Now we come to your own knowledge and understanding. Sorry about that.

"Say, after me, if it is true, 'I declare that I know of no legal reason why I, Linda Jupitas, may not be joined in marriage to Alfia Shrimpton.'"

I said, "I declare that I know of no legal reason why I, Linda Jupitas, may not be joined in marriage to Alfia Shrimpton."

Now Christine turned to Allie. "Allie: Say, after me, if it is true, 'I declare that I know of no legal reason why I, Alfia Shrimpton, may not be joined in marriage to Linda Jupitas.'"

Allie said, looking over to her family, and then to me, "I declare that I know of no legal reason why I, Alfia Shrimpton, may not be joined in marriage to Linda Jupitas."

Margaret took over again. She declared: "O God of all faithfulness, we pray for those who will make their positive promises today: bless them with sincerity and give them your grace. May Peter and Kathryn, Winnie and Kathleen, and Linda and Allie, know that their love for each other draws upon the will and pleasure of God. May these promises set their lives ahead. Amen."

Margaret then moved the service on, to the declarations. "I come now to some general statements of commitment, and go along the three couples again.

Peter Marshall and Kathryn Wickenby, and then Winnie Lott and Kathleen Wickenby, affirmed marrying each other.

Margaret asked us the same: "Linda Jupitas and Alfia Shrimpton, will you share in the bond of marriage? Will you love, comfort, honour and protect each other, in times of prosperity and poverty and in health and sickness? Will you be faithful to one another for as long as you both shall live? Will you raise any forthcoming children as faithful and loving parents? Say..."

We said together, "We will."

"I must ask the families first, regarding the families of Peter and Kathryn, Winnie and Kathleen, and Allie and Linda: Will you, of their respective families, bless, support and encourage them in their marriages?"

"We will." Mine said it from their distanced positions.

"And those who also know them - or are likely to know them, as friends and associates, gathered here today - will you support the couples you know?"

"We will," said various people in the chapel and seating area.

Christine, also as an authorised person for marriage, came to more of the legal stuff. "Listen. As required by law in England and Wales each person declares in the presence of the Authorised Person and two witnesses the statement that fixes the marriage. Be ready all three couples! Each person face their partner and hold hands.

Regarding the first couple, Peter went first to take Kathryn as his wife, and then Kathryn went second, to take Peter as her husband; regarding the second couple, Winnie went first to take Kathleen as her wife, and Kathleen went second to take Winnie as her wife.

Then came our turn.

"Now to this couple, to say the vital legal words. Linda: Say, 'I call upon these persons, here present, to witness that I, Linda Jupitas, do take you, Alfia Shrimpton, to be my lawful wedded wife.'"

I thus said, eagerly, "I call upon these persons, here present, to witness that I, Linda Jupitas, do take you, Alfia Shrimpton, to be my lawful wedded wife."

"Allie: Say, 'I call upon these persons, here present, to witness that I, Alfia Shrimpton, do take you, Linda Jupitas, to be my lawful wedded wife.'"

Allie said, "I call upon these persons, here present, to witness that I, Alfia Shrimpton, do take you, Linda Jupitas, to be my lawful wedded wife."

Margaret now said, "We have witnessed these three couples making their legal declarations, and they were given in accordance with God's holy will: to have and to hold from this day forward, for better, for worse, for richer, for poorer, in sickness and in health, to love and to cherish till death them do part."

"Can supporter Adam Magellan please come forward with the rings, and give them to me. Thank you, Adam. Please be seated.

"O God, whose love encircles us all, bless the giving and receiving of these rings. Love never ends. Love is received with bodily presence."

Margaret gave a ring to Peter, who placed it on Kathryn's given finger. Then she gave Kathryn a ring, that she placed on Peter's given finger.

"Can supporter Kimona Lott come forward please, with new discs for Winnie and Kathleen and give them to me. Thank you and please be seated. Carrie Chopin: please come forward and give a prayer."

Carrie said, from near the front, "Magdalene! Come down, bless these new discs; bless their wearers, that they may come together, in deep and sensual love, not forgetting their love for their fellowship members."

Margaret said, holding the discs, "O God, whose love encircles us all, bless the giving and receiving of these circular discs. Love infills and strikes like the silver moon. Love is received with bodily presence."

"Everyone, receiving these discs involves a little delicate manipulation, for the Serninsea Vestal Virgins wear rings on a loop and then another loop through the clitoral hood."

Releasing her hands from Kathleen, Winnie got on her knees, and removed Kathleen's disc, and gave it to the minister; she received the new one from the minister, and Winnie attached the new one to the lower loop hanging down from Kathleen. Winnie kissed the disc and kissed Kathleen's clitoral area. Winnie stood up.

Then Kathleen got on her knees, and removed Winnie's disc, and gave it to the minister; she received the new one from the minister, and Kathleen fumbled a little as she attached the new one to the lower loop hanging down from Winnie. Kathleen kissed the disc and kissed Winnie's clitoral area. Kathleen stood up.

Then Carrie Chopin and Gloria Mabaso came forward and separating their respective velcro strips opened their own translucent gowns to reveal their breasts, tummies and pubic areas; Carrie dropped to the ground and kissed the discs of each wedded woman. Standing, each marrying woman sucked on each of Gloria's nipples, resulting in actual breast feeding and milk consumption. I could have done with a drink at that point, with my mouth somewhat dry. Both covered themselves again (joining each velcro), moving back to their seats.

"Can supporter Diana de Groot come forward please, with the strings of beads for Linda and Allie?"

Margaret took the two strings of beads from Diana, displaying her gorgeous naked body, and Diana went and sat down again.

"O God, whose love encircles us all, bless the giving and receiving of these beads of amber. Love is ancient, present and encircling. Love is received with a bodily touch."

Margaret handed Allie and me our strings of beads, kissing each string of them. Allie stretched a little and put the beads over my head, and put my hair over them. I then took the beads in my hands, raised my arms high and placed them around her head, and moved her red hair over them.

Christine said, "Each couple. Hold one another with willingness and give each other a long, loving kiss."

I did not know what the others did. All I know is that I held Allie, and she held me, close and pressing, and we snogged for some ten seconds or so, and I placed my hand between her legs, and her hand touched my yoni area too, and the gathering in the chapel and seating area burst into applause.

Christine said, "Our God, the source of all true love, we give you thanks that Peter and Kathryn, Winnie and Kathleen, and Linda and Allie, have given each to the other in the covenant of marriage. Bless them, lead them, give them your grace to forgive when disagreement comes, and give them strength to endure with them able to call upon mutual support. May they be thankful; may they joyfully embrace this new life into its future time. Bless their families and friends, that they may also give these couples support, and bless their homes. The people: let us be of practical support as we can, as begun today with those that gave away and those that supported. Amen."

"Peter and Kathryn, Winnie and Kathleen, and Linda and Allie, have declared before God and before you the gathered people that as couples they will live together in the bond of marriage. They facilitated, promised, made vows, and exchanged symbols of their new lives together."

Margaret then said, with Christine, "We, the ministers of this ceremony, therefore declare them to be married, under the Creator of all, the mystical Christ and the active Spirit. Those whom God has joined together, let no one separate."

Margaret then said alone, as Christine approached a long table in the seating area, "We now have registration papers to sign, so we shall sing a hymn and listen to some music. The hymn is Break Not the Circle by Fred Kaan.

The congregation sang as we had three papers on a long desk to sign, each couple and representatives doing this alongside each other.

Naked Professor Roland Mitton was a witness for us, and so was Patricia Rhymes. Two of the Serninsea Vestal Virgins, Hattie Schepsutte and Paige Tuck, were witnesses for Winnie and Kathleen. Roger Humphrey and Belinda Jack were witnesses for Peter and Kathryn.

Bishop Margaret sat down near Bishops Bill and Pauline. Bishop Christine returned to the altar table.

Wedding Eucharist

Next came a Communion Service, to be in two connected parts, a more intimate Body Eucharist for the married couples with a Eucharist for everyone else.

Bread discs, some being large, and wine in goblets, were placed on the altar by Bishop Bill Masters and Bishop Pauline Junor, and Pauline began with the words:

"God be with you."

We all said, "And also with you."

"Lift up your hearts."

"We lift them high."

"Let us give thanks to God."

"It is right to give thanks and praise," we all said.

"God whose power is compassionate: you invite us to share your own life-giving Spirit, for love is your nature. We offer our praise to your unending glory: Holy, holy, holy God of power and might. Heaven and earth are filled with your glory."

Now Bill said, "Jesus of Nazareth lived his life for others, and was the model for reconciliation. Towards the night when he was to die, he showed his compassion for all."

"At supper this man with his disciples took bread and offered thanks to God. He broke the bread, and gave it to the disciples, saying: 'Take, eat. This is my Body: it is broken for you.'

"After supper, he took the cup and offered thanks to God. He gave the cup to the disciples, saying: 'Drink this, all of you. This is my Blood of the new covenant poured out for you and all others to consume."

"Love is unending in communion with Jesus Christ."

Pauline said, "We do as he says, and reflect upon his passion, death, resurrection and ascension ahead of the coming of his Kingdom. This sacrifice is one: it is of then and now, a living sacrifice."

"We minister using these tokens for our eating and drinking, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, that they may be Christ's Body and Blood, and generate love between our newly married couples and indeed among the gathered."

Christine came to the fore, and Bill and Pauline stepped back. Christine said, "For the Body Eucharist section, the couples should now face me and each person make good contact with a hand on their married partner's flesh. Find somewhere unapologetically intimate, if possible. For two of our couples this is quite easy, Peter and Kathryn might struggle a bit! Holding a waist under the clothing is all right."

My hand rested on Allie's pubic area and so she did the same back, all six of us facing Christine.

"Each one of you six will take the larger disc from my mouth by getting close to my face and gently biting it away, taking it all into your mouth."

Thus Christine received from Bill a disc, and Christine placed one between her teeth. Still making contact with Kathryn, Peter came close to her face, but some laughter arose as he bit into the disc and took only part of it in his mouth. She offered the rest, sticking out her tongue, and he took it from her tongue with his lips.

Christine said, "You have received the body, the holy substance."

Then Bill placed another a disc in between Christine's teeth, so that Kathryn could receive it, which she did whole, and Christine spoke as she had to Peter.

The same happened for Winnie, Kathleen, Allie and me, holding on to our partners.

"Now the tricky bit," Christine said. "I will receive a swig of wine, and have it in my mouth. Each of you are then to come close - keep hold of your partner - and get your mouth open and under mine. I will see that the wine goes into your mouth. Be ready for it because I'd rather you did not cough. I have been practising! Peter, you go first again. Open wide, get close and under me. Hold on to each other's flesh."

Pauline lifted the cup, and Christine drank wine to hold it in her mouth. Peter touching Kathryn again opened his mouth. Christine seemed to close her lips, as if to kiss, from which a steady stream of wine went into Peter's mouth. He did not cough, and then he swallowed. His suit was untouched.

Mainly emptied of the wine, Christine said, "You have received the blood, the holy life force."

The same process continued with the rest of us, and I took mine confidently, knowing that I did not usually gag, with my finger slightly circling up into Allie's vagina. I swallowed.

This was interesting. It was less explicit than the Body Eucharist at the Titansea Grand that I had experienced, and considerably less explicit than the Body Eucharist Allie had experienced above the casino. Also, none of the bishops wore open ritual clothing, as they had before. It was noticeable that the holy act was carried out exclusively by Christine and her bishops assisting in a non-erotic manner.

With us done, we were invited at last to sit down, and we did as respective couples.

As music played, including a choir singing the hymn Bread and Wine are of the Earth, by Peter Sampson, the Eucharist - in a rather more standard form, a smaller disc and a swig of wine - was offered for everyone else on the declared Open Table basis. Margaret, Bill, Pauline and Christine all distributed. Bishop Christine regarded Bishop Margaret as a fully accredited apostolic bishop, but in an irregular Communion, but here we had been in Christine's ministry under her Church offering.

Thus I could see people who came to the table. Each of parents did not, but my pretty white flesh sister Leila did. Professor Mitton did, and so did his two female associates. Diana did, who shook her bottom at Allie and me; Adam did; Allie's parents and relatives did, including the naked cousin; and naturist couple Jeremy Symes and Lindy Peacock did. So did Carrie, and Hattie, in their translucent gear. I was pleased that Gertrude Carter was partaking too but Georgie and Charley didn't. The Reverend Duncan Deimos received. Ah, some of the folk from the Gymnology Class were naked as they came to receive. Roger with his sister Marie and Belinda with mother Madge all partook.

Unseen until now, Andrew Walter and Laura Kingswood also consumed the host and wine. It was good to see Ann Dromeghda and Labhaoise Vlahos partake too, given their crucial support for the Bethel. And I was delighted to see Megan consume too.

The liturgical lines for what people received were the same as for the Body Eucharist.

Bishop Bill said, "God transcendent, as you have joined Peter and Kathryn, Winnie and Kathleen, and Allie and Linda, so: We have been together in your love receiving your body and blood, and we thank you for feeding us."

Bishop Pauline then said, "Christ go before us, Christ be within us, Christ shine from us."

"Now our service has one final feature. Please, the married couples stand and follow Bishop Christine over to the mikveh. And while we do this, please sing the hymn, The Human Touch by John Andrew Storey.

Weddings Mikveh

Bill, Pauline and now Margaret too went and sat to the north end of the chapel. At the other end, the mikveh end, we couples faced Christine.

What was happening here was Allie and I stood as we were, our backs to the gathering. We helped Winnie and Kathleen remove their translucent gowns. Then the four of us helped remove much more clothing from Peter and Kathryn.

As we did this, Christine addressed the congregation. "This is our mikveh, a symbolism of taking on a new direction. Often couples immerse in here before the wedding day in anticipation of the future. Here we are doing this on the wedding day, and they enter with decisions made as newly married couples, and consider the life they will now lead. The couples will go in, submerge completely, and kiss below water and then emerge to kiss above water, and then will come out of that space as couples holding hands. We are making a change from previous practice: because this is about a wedding and a new life in marriage, Winnie and Kathleen will keep their discs on, Peter and Kathryn will leave on their rings, and Linda and Allie will submerge and emerge wearing their beads. We usually insist that all such additions are removed and all orifices are open. Not today. The orifices concern the couples; jewellery is about their togetherness.

I thought Kathryn had courage; I suppose she was a model and did still do massages for customers, but here she was with a large bottom, thicker legs, her bump and darker larger nipples. Kathleen had yet to develop in this manner.

Our backs and sides were facing the congregation as we waited.

Christine said, "O God, you created the universe from a womb of water. You made us all in your image, pure and holy, according to your divine will. Each body of beauty has rhythms like the sun and moon, and the seasons, and the Holy Days. We bless God's sacred name and ask for a blessing on these couples."

"First to enter are Mr. Peter and Mrs. Kathryn Marshall."

Everyone saw them go in and down the steps, and could not see the kiss below water but did see them come up above the water line and kiss again. They emerged coming up the steps on the other side in the same direction as they'd entered with their backs to us, but then there were gasps as they turned along the side because Kathryn was indeed large breasted, dark in her nipples and areole, with her visible bump and quite hairy between her thighs. Peter was a model of being average. Christine held up towels which did then somewhat obscure the view.

"Next to enter are Mrs. Winnie Lott and Mrs. Kathleen Lott."

As Peter and Kathryn wrapped themselves in their towels, everyone could see the second couple descend, and kiss again once they had come above the water line, to then have Winnie and Kathleen emerge further up the other steps and reveal more coming around to walk out. They were fairly hairy around their pubic areas and towels were raised up.

Now it was our turn. "And now to enter are Bishop Mrs. Linda Shrimpton and Mrs. Alfia Shrimpton."

Allie went in front of me, down the six steps to the mikveh base, and we turned to submerge. Our hair floated about in the water. We held each other to kiss within the water, and then we rose up out of the water to kiss again. We then continued out and around to come up the steps on the other side in the same direction as we'd entered, to then come on the perimeter walkway to go around and give everyone a full frontal view of our dripping bodies and being hairless around our genitals.

Christine stated, "Let us give praise to God that these couples submerged and emerged into a new hope."

Then an invitation went out to anyone who wanted to submerge and some did, notably shaven Jonathan, Professor Mitton, Dr. Randall and shaven Diana.

I was surprised about Diana. What new was happening in her life? I had no idea.

When all these four were done, Christine said, "Let us give praise to God that these individuals submerged and emerged into a new hope."

Christine concluded this ritual by saying: "O worship in the beauty of the body's holiness."

Bishop Margaret finished the service by announcing a final hymn, Love Knocks and Waits for Us to Hear, by Daniel Charles Damon, with its message of love, singing and dancing for new life beginning.

Bishop Christine ended the service by saying, "The blessing of God: Creator, Christ and Spirit, be with you all, now and until the Kingdom comes."

As the exit music began, we went out, two by two, past the people in the seating area, and continued into the cloaks area for more drying and a quick wipe over dirty feet. The recently submerged were invited over too. The upshot was that Roland, Abigail and Jonathan were back in their clothes. Peter and Kathryn took a little longer but also put back on their wedding clothes.

Still naked were Jeremy, Lindy, my parents and Leila, Diana, Allie and me, and the Seragas.

Jonathan, relieved to be dressed, told us, "I went into the pool because my new life will be without Alice."

The other three 'guests' into the mikveh did not tell us why they had submerged, but Diana did say, "It was very definitely about me, and not about you two."

"Something new?" I asked her, trying to probe.

"Isn't that what that ceremony is for? I thought you encouraged its use."

"Definitely. You don't need to tell anyone. I mean, secrets abound in Serninsea, don't they Allie?"

"Fewer," she replied.

Diana added, "Nothing to concern you two."

Weddings Immediately After

I wanted to talk to my mother but the first person Allie and I saw back in the seating area - now having food placed upon tables - was Mrs. Carter, because now alongside her and unnoticed before was Colin Cromer, with Georgie Smith, Charley Darley and also Mohammad McArden.

Only Mo was open-eyed.

Getrude said, as Allie approached, "Colin: when she was a teenager I was crossing a field and there she was, driving a tractor, and not a stitch on. Linda, do you remember?"

"I might have been fifteen. Allie would have been five then, elsewhere."

"In Norfolk," Allie said, "growing up with Jonathan, who's coming over directly no longer in his birthday suit."

Gertrude addressed me some more. "You had no embarrassment then, either. It was a public footpath we were on, Edith and me. And I knew the Seraga family but not like that."

Georgie, alongside Charley, said, "I soon heard about the unchurched naturists at Buzzard Farm when I came here."

"Edith died of illness," said Colin. "I hope you don't mind me not coming up for Communion. It was too strange for me. I've come to Serninsea perhaps for the final time and have stayed an extra couple of days to take in your wedding."

"Thank you very much."

"I've learnt with you to expect the unexpected. I am going to marry, as it happens, a lady in Kendal. Standard Anglican wedding, of course."

"Congratulations," I said. "And it is very good to see you, Mo."

"I'm seeing a lot more of you."

Colin continued: "I've had a few words with the bishop. He and Louise here are a surprise."

"Yes."

"Louise joined another Church."

"We are now in the same Church."

Allie said, "This is Jonnie Jenner. The Jenners and Rogers are almost like one family."

Mo said, "I'm just taking everything in."

Diana came to us, making a nude three, and said, "Jonathan dressing has left me upholding the cause."

He said, "I've given her away so I am as I want to be."

I said, "Jeremy, Lindy, my mother and Leila, and the Seragas, are still like us, Diana."

"Yes, your father and brother are absent."

Allie answered, "Embarrassment is relative."

Mo then indicated he'd leave before the reception proper and wished us a very happy married life. I gave Mo kisses to the cheeks and Allie followed on. Mo wasn't sure how to receive nude women bending forward to him.

Colin indicated that he would stay for some food before leaving, and indeed leaving Serninsea for good.

Allie said, "Fare ye well," to Mo and the others as we four left them to mingle.

Mummy said, "We've much to sort out. Either we save this marriage or, after all this time and all I have known, we go our separate ways."

"Our lifestyle is at stake," said Leila, in one of her more sensible utterances.

As people had started eating and drinking the food put out by students, we decided to gather for speeches. Diana, Allie, (clothed) Jonathan and me joined the other couples, supporters and givers away on a kind of top table, in the dining area.

To keep things efficient, we'd decided on just one supporter's speech, and that was from Adam. He said that at this stage in his life he'd come to know a great bunch of people: the ever-talented Peter, the nieces of his one-time rival, George, and his school and intimate friend, me - Linda. Winnie was absolutely right for Kathleen, he thought, and Allie's intelligence and fiesty nature could only do well for me. Kathryn and Peter would soon be mother and father, and he had realised there was never any rivalry between the Kathys for Peter's attention. I thought it was a daft comment.

He also asked us to thank Jenny, who'd had a hard time and had been out of the way helping us recording everything.

One partner of each couple married chose to speak.

Kathryn joked that she had intended to get to Peter first, as, incredible as it might sound, and despite being identical, her sister and her had never discussed their marked difference in sexuality. They had joined Peter on a prospect of a magic career, but it turned out to be a crowded and tough field to be noticed. She'd always presented unity with her sister, but most recently they had relaxed this sameness of behaviour. "On that, given my bump, over to my now not quite so identical twin!"

We raised a toast to the couple.

Kathleen said meeting Winnie was a pure chance event, thanks to an approach to me from the Serninsea Vestal Virgins. She loved her so deeply. It was true that despite being genetically identical, and indeed enjoying their confusing everyone, her sister had a capacity for loving men that she did not have, and indeed the way was always open for Kathryn and Peter.

This implied that Kathryn might have bicuriosity, at least, and I recalled how they did a switch on me, but I could tell one female's vaginal odours from another, even if they were twins.

We toasted them. Allie stood and spoke.

"I first met Linda at a seaside theology and economics conference in Margate, and I desired her from the very beginning. I detected what seemed to be a friendship with some bishop."

Thanks, Allie, I thought.

"This bishop, though, tried it on with me at Margate, and by that incident I knew that he was not good for her. Anyway, later on when he was angling after Linda again, I threatened him, and he backed off from me at least. Originally, I knew nothing about Linda and her sexuality, and had no effective gaydar at work. I remember seeing her on the platform for our train, and wondering about her..."

"So did I about you," I interjected.

"Well, why didn't you do anything about it?"

"Because everything had become muddled. Conferences, eh? Who'd have them!"

"When Professor Roland heard from his two bishop friends in Bristol about a new church starting, and it was Linda doing it, I just had to come up to Serninsea. He said it could be a study on a new church getting started - see if it succeeds or fails. The rules for me were to kind of join in, and keep the important stuff confidential. Once here, Christine gave me extra information, but my main task was to follow Linda around more than most. It was a perfect opportunity. As well as carrying out a research ethic, I'd put out a fishing line, and I wanted a catch. And I got more and more of her on my hook, so that I could annoy her and captivate her at the same time. And now she is mine, and I am hers, and I tell you that I will defend her against all comers.

"In terms of my desire, I will never let you out of my sight. Linda, and everyone: know it that I am a jealous lover, and, whatever I may have done in the past, it does not matter, because I have arrived at a good place."

I thought about Diana, and it sounded threatening. Wiping some crumbs off her breasts, she was eating a pastry seemingly unconcerned.

"I think, also, that we have a wonderful community here. I thank my family for coming here, including Jonnie for giving me away as he did, and Linda's family pair being bravely naturist throughout. I thank my professor and ex-tutor joining in shedded of their clothes. Know that I am very happy here. Soon there will be children too with, I hope, five mothers and one father available to look after them. So, yes, I tell you now, I want to get pregnant very soon. It doesn't matter to me that Linda cannot get pregnant. I know her challenges around identity and the issues it brings. And, in response, I will happily get pregnant many times, if we want, because we two are going to be good mothers. The child or children I grow will be as much hers as mine. So we can inform the world now that we are looking for good quality sperm, and very soon."

I thought I might want to cringe.

"As the others have done, can we raise a toast to my darling wife, and please all of you toast our marriage."

All three toasts done, people were able to mingle freely.

Gloria Mabaso, Paige Tuck, Carrie Chopin, Beth Gorge, and Hattie Schepsutte, still showing more than most through their gowns, were well tucking in. Moving to their table, I thanked them for their attendance and contribution.

Hattie said they were wearing these gowns because the wedding had the status of a gathering of theirs, given Carrie's words in the ceremony. I noticed Allie stand back a little, and she kept quiet. As a result we moved on as others were getting up and strolling around.

Megan Furley enjoyed being with Annie at our event. Annie said she knew a young (yet another) transgender woman, Marie Healand, who might provide some sperm.

Allie said, "Does she ejaculate on camera?"

"She does."

Megan commented, "It's not exactly, 'Chuck in some tokens,' is it? There'd be a child involved."

"But for Linda and me," said Allie.

"I'll put it to her," said Annie. "She'll contact you if interested."

Roger Humphrey and his sister Marie Enfield approached us all together. "Overheard that," she said.

"Hello our invisible residents," I said.

Marie said, "We don't attract attention. Well, on the lines of Gertrude Carter, and donating at the clinic, Roger can provide his services."

"Not sure I know her," said Annie.

"Best not then," I said. "We were thinking of approaching Roger - or both of you."

Diana close said, "Wedding present. One of the most practical."

Marie said, "There might be a small fee. It would be like his regular donations to the clinic. There's plenty left but we monetise his spunk."

Allie said, "You wouldn't be out of pocket, if we asked you."

Megan smiled - "Not his pocket but you'd empty his balls," she said.

Roger now said, "There are no expenses involved. I just produce sperm."

Marie added, "We couldn't have anything to do with the child; let's face it; via the clinic, Roger's sperm must be father to hundreds."

Roger said, "I did do theological theory and ethics on sperm donation for my MA dissertation, so there is a giving dimension."

"I didn't know this," I said.

Roger responded. "We only talked once about theologians in general. Some say that sperm donation via masturbating involves a violation of the sixth commandment and they refer to Matthew 5:28, Colossians 3:5 and Exodus 20:14."

"Fucking hell," said Annie. "I do it for the viewers."

"And I thought wanking was wanking," said Diana. "I can't see Adam or Jenny now - have they gone?"

"You could lecture the Gymnology Meeting," I said to Roger.

Jonathan in his textiles decided to retreat, probably disconnected from the conversation.

Roger, urged by Marie, also moved away before we went intellectual. Annie and Megan decided to say bye to us. So did Patricia and company.

Then the two nude and one clothed from present-day academia approached Allie and me, and I introduced Diana. Beathag NicAmhlaigh said some words in Gaelic, corresponding, Allie said to me, to 'Well done,' although that seemed short for so many words. Beathag touched Allie's right face cheek, and Allie almost took a step back.

"I taught Allie Folkways," Abigail told me. Abigail also revealed that she and Roland shared the same coven, and Abigail like Allie was in Taunton Tantria, and thus their basis of their nudity that they would now go and cover up.

"Ah! So that's why you gave Allie a touch on her procession," I responded.

"I wasn't able to join them here," said Allie. "And now I am inactive. I'm no longer a Fighter of Concern."

I asked Abigail, "And how many of these sorts of groups are there?"

"There's a number of them now. A score? Their origin is up in Middlesbrough, I gather. It was a breakaway from a Buddhist group, but became more to do with the New Age."

The professor spoke: "But the different post-Buddhist neo-Pagan groups vary their rituals, I understand."

"Professor Roland," I said, "I bet you haven't seen Allie as a student quite like this before - nor she you!"

"Er... Actually, yes."

"Yes?"

Diana smiled.

Allie said, "I went to the coven - you know that I'm curious by nature. I like to know first hand. They were sky clad, and so was I. So I could have researched the coven; I could have researched the Taunton Tantria or even the Vestal Virgins; I researched the new church here."

Diana was smiling some more and then said, "If you'd had researched the Serninsea Vestal Virgins, you could have got off with Linda straight away."

Allie replied, "No I couldn't because there is a group interest in relationships and I, as a member, would have been one focus of attention. My relationship with Abigail, known here, would have caused complications. I had to be neutral, as a researcher, not the focus."

The professor added. "And you've chosen to finish your observations here, in this bethel, Allie, for recording purposes."

Allie said, "I decided so when Bishop Margaret came along to do a service and sermon, but there was a bit more. There is well enough of a story to tell now."

"Including your own - with your wife," said Roland. "All three of us are staying at the Titansea Grand. I notice that it gets a mention in your research."

"Background," said Allie. "Clearly the Body Eucharist Christine and Linda had there was not as restrained as this one today, and definitely not as the one I did experience above the casino."

Diana was smiling even more. "Aardse might think I'm leaving him; I'd better go. See you later."

The professor said, "I'm sure there is plenty to discuss later about all your experiences."

Abigail said, "And now, as your research comes to an end, you might consider your past in the groups."

"Yeah, I remember them," said Allie.

"I mean, activate them."

I couldn't quite follow this, but as I puzzled my still naked remaining relatives - mother and Leila - came along to meet us, to say they'd dress and go. They were still at Yojana's. Dyfed approached to greet me with a very neutral handshake with Lucinda standing back and nodding. I said nothing to her, never mind about her lack of nudity.

So Mother and Leila, and Roland and Abigail, went to dress and leave, whereas Dyfed and Lucinda left directly.

Along came Adam, obviously not missing, with Ann Dromeghda and Labhaoise Vlahos.

Ann said, "You two make a charming pair. You just suit each other. Just to say, and to check with you, that we are offering your mother and her daughter a house to rent."

I said, "She didn't even mention it."

"I thought you should know," said Ann, "but your mother really wants this to be very temporary. The possibility is a return to Dunham-on-Trent, but the two of them might return to Wales."

Ann seemed very well informed. I just nodded.

Then Labhaoise said to Allie, "I think Adam might agree that you two do show so much passionate togetherness."

"She is just what I want," said Allie.

But Adam said, "Jenny has gone for a lie down in Roger and Marie's room. I've checked on her. She'll make her own way back to ours."

Adam, Ann and Labhaoise said bye and wished us a good honeymoon.

I asked Allie if I should go and talk to my mother.

"She'd have mentioned it if she wanted a conversation. I'd wait and see what has happened after the honeymoon."

"Yeah. Give it some days."

With more going, it was time to depart ourselves. We too went over to the cloaks area to dress. Dressed in leathers, me included, Allie and I went upstairs and then back down into the Consulting Room to get our pre-packed suitcases. Allie grabbed a couple of apples as extra for the journey.

Diana had gone home in parallel with her family, temporarily, and my first stop in the SUV was at Allie's in Toulouse Road for her other suitcase and then we proceeded to Diana's.

Diana had three hefty suitcases. "It's related to the competition," she said. "You'll see."

She said goodbye to them with kisses and strong hugs to Aardse and the children.

Chapter 33 Honeymoon

Narrator: Linda Honeymoon Begins (Saturday 22nd February)

Allie suggested that Diana was missing out: "You could have had a second honeymoon."

"Aardse's too busy and The Jacobite Gap Years Seumasach story isn't his passion. Pity. I'd loved to have shared the tour with him."

The oddity of Diana being in the back, as we sped beyond Wytham in the rain, came to me when Allie tried to get her hand into my pubic mound via lowering my trouser zip.

"You cannot do that," I said. "We won't be insured if this causes an accident. Can't you wait?"

"Don't mind me," said Diana from behind. "Seriously: don't mind me. Very wet."

"I'm very wet," said Allie.

"Allie. I think I am very responsive at the moment and I am trying to drive and there is indeed rain."

Diana sniggered. "I meant this month so far."

"Me too," said Allie.

"Allie, I will pull in if you are going to do this."

"Okay. Let's compromise like married couples do. I'll leave my hand there but I won't do anything."

"You cunt, Allie. I have to reach Bowland and then Ayrshire. Meanwhile, I still don't know why I can't call you Alice. They all prefer Alice, your relatives."

Diana asked, "Why on earth would anyone name themselves after The Grateful Dead?"

I asked, "Was it from The Egyptian Book of the Dead?"

Allie gave her fullest explanation yet. "It is in there but no. The Funk and Wagnalls New Practical Standard Dictionary, Britannica World Language Edition, 1955. Maria Leach, died in 1977, right, worked for Funk and Wagnalls and made entries regarding folklore, mythology and legend, the same material that I used at Glastonbury in Abigail's class. Jerry Garcia used that dictionary and he picked up the term for the group's name, so the name came about after the 'Warlocks'. 'Grateful Dead' means a man gives his last money to pay debts or give a decent burial to a corpse to stop it being ill-treated. Afterwards a man meets the donor and gives him assistance leading towards some sort of considerable benefit and it turns out this man is the spirit of the grateful corpse."

"To be an intellectual," said Diana from behind. "No thank you."

"I see," I said. "And then you got Althea wrong," I added, to repeat a point made a number of times.

"I could say that I chose Alfia after a rhythmic gymnast winner, Alfia Bilyalovna Nazmutdinova, where the physical side of the sport needs: agility, dexterity, endurance, flexibility, hand to eye coordination, power and strength. And I can tell people this rehearsed story, because I have personal agility, dexterity, endurance, flexibility, hand-eye coordination, power and strength."

"You're such a rehearsed bullshitter," I said to Allie.

"Is that your desired reputation?" asked Diana.

"Aye."

"'Honest to the point of recklessness' are you?" Diana asked.

I said, "That joke's been made. She never got near."

So Allie asked, "What about: concealing for stability? I have been a researcher. Alfia was also a rare name."

I asked, "What's wrong with Althea? You could have corrected your mistake."

"Because I don't play tennis, I don't play golf, and I'm not black. Anyway, I was always singing it wrong so I may as well take the name of my mistake."

"More rehearsed lines," I said.

Diana had a chuckle and said, "Play it once, Linda. For old times' sake."

I said, "Of all the gin joints..."

"Those references have been made," said Allie.

So we played Althea on our way north of Wytham. No doubt that the dead were grateful for that.

Here was a drive that first took us to Bowland, and Dunnow Hall was approached from the Clitheroe direction. In The Jacobite Gap Years: An Seumasach, television version, this is the outside of the lesser laird's house, but obviously it isn't even in Scotland. Diana said that the hall is also the model for Cotes Hall in Missing Joseph by Elizabeth George. We also saw a hanging footbridge over the River Hodder - and it was dark when we returned to the SUV.

Viewing the bridge and surrounds I asked Diana to outline the story: "I didn't read on. So what is it about?"

"It's about a self-assured global charity nurse, and writer of cultural healing around the world, Mary Douglas, who holidays in back in Scotland. A speaker also of French, Spanish and German, she meets one of the lesser lairds, heroic and daring Malcolm MacKenzie or Maol Choluim MacCoinnich, leading the conflict with other clan groups, crossing boundaries from Kintail and Ross-shire. Mary Douglas has a Scottish accent, but strange to them, and her child-based ability to revert to Scots is not relevant as they are Gaelic speakers and therefore did speak good English, when they did. You might want to know that she was also of the Scottish Episcopal Church, meaning liberal Catholic, modern. It doesn't match their Protestant with bishops biblical Church."

"It wouldn't, given as it was when it came about in 1660."

"By contacts, twists and turns, geographical distance then, and mutual admiration, she ends up trapped and fascinated in equal measure, and her sense of adventure and modern sexual mores lets her get close to the laird, as mistress and then bride - because she knows she can get away - and he sees her as a vital and valuable partner. It all comes together, despite all she does not know. She's a clan asset. It's because she uses her healing folk knowledge from around the world (as well as her modern expertise) that he thinks that, as a Douglas, Màiri has useful lowland contacts. He never knows she's from the future but wonders if she's magical. The laird visits France, with her, and she translates for him as much as she can, supporting the Jacobites, but he is ambiguous about the coming conflict. He is, though, different from the Clan Chief, who supports the British-Hanoverian Government. The story about the couple divides as we see Malcolm alone for a while protecting the Bonnie Prince after Culloden. One man loses his head and his head is sent to the British government to say Charles was dead and allows him more time to escape."

"All sounds very laboured. I didn't like the writing."

"No. Critics say it's about applying feminism into a different setting. The modern and past differences come together as non-parallel parallels. The first book reaches Culloden before the end and then the story splits because as Prince Charlie gets away, the laird is imprisoned, to lose his land and assets, and our heroine Mary is elsewhere held among other women, like Lady Ogilvy, Lady Kinloch, and Lady Gordon - real historical captives, by the way. But she escapes and vanishes back through a burial chamber. When back in our time, she's been away just over a year, half the time away. She thinks the laird will be hanged, and already knew that Cumberland, Lockhart and Sackville were particularly nasty in revenge after Culloden, and so she resumes a modern life. But she is pregnant. The book ends as she tells stories to the new born child. Thus ends The Jacobite Gap Years: An Seumasach."

"Gabrijela Daffron did write a school history book for the Scottish curriculum."

"Book two The Jacobite Gap Years: An Nighean is really in two parts. Mary Douglas resumes her medical career in St. Andrews. She has child care for the infant. Having spent over two years in the past, she reads up about the period and realises that she has to write and challenge what is standard academic knowledge of sources and uses. She meets a historian called Jack Smith of the University of St. Andrews. He is impressed, and they start an affair, and he could be a good dad. But he tells her she has a problem: she cannot quote sources. So she turns to fiction, the joke being that the fiction is truer than the work of historians. Her author name is Màiri Douglas. She tells Jack she went back in time, but he regards it as daft, but what stops her demonstrating it is the time differences each side - what if she returns earlier than she left? After a while, as he doubts her story, the two break up. Her daughter Maggie Douglas does believe the truth of her mother's vivid knowledge of that past, perhaps because her mother's stories to her as an infant were of Scotland in the past. She's wired up to believe."

"Like children of religious believers versus children of practical agnostics."

"Oh, and Maggie is sure she's a lesbian. Mary doesn't want to go back. She'd had her adventure. It is the daughter who, many years on, lacking a desired and imaginative future at nineteen, yet a practical person with some plumbing and building skills, goes back in time landing years later than parallel time with her mother but not double. She has her own adventures as she finds and attaches to the new laird turning capitalist, experiencing the cultural losses - except adaptations of Gaelic symbols into the military."

"And royalty and British aristocracy in Scotland," said Allie.

"The daughter, calling herself Mairead, proves herself with practical solutions as learnt from her education and training, and raises suspicions as to her origins, and references to her mother propels her to the upper echelons of the clan. We learn how key people fathom out she is the daughter. This daughter takes emotional risks with local women. Her danger isn't just from British soldiers. The clan has stories of Maggie's mother and some clan leaders fancy Maggie. Recovery in the land takes place and the lairds manage the land and people, having first tried to keep them from leaving, but now getting rid of them off the land. The daughter fetches the mother, making her mother comparatively younger than the age she should be. So to return, they tie themselves together at Clava Cairns, and the mother not the daughter determines the time variation. Mother returns to be reunited with the clan she knew and hopes to write more from it. End of book two."

Book three?"

"Book three The Jacobite Gap Years: An Sgioba has mother and daughter working as a team. Mother soon, now said to have magical qualities, becomes attached to a new clan leader, Alasdair, as a mistress, and daughter is betrothed reluctantly to marry a brother, Diarmad. She carries on with various women, themselves in difficult male attachments. We see sheep replace people, but eventually these leading men are also superfluous. These two and their attached travel to America, where there is an adventure of settling in on available land and perversely find themselves becoming on the wrong side of history again. Thus they go to Canada and set a trend. The new location doesn't work, and so there is an adventure of the mother and pregnant daughter going the slow way across the sea back to Scotland. You see, stone circles and specific barrows are a phenomenon of the British Isles and Brittany only, so to return back in time meant returning here. The story ends with the mother, daughter and daughter's child back in modern times, with mother as Mary Douglas returning to medical work and writing more fiction under her pen name, aided now by Maggie who is project managing and building a modern house. The aspects of the past and present come together. It all ends in a flash forward where the daughter of the daughter, Julia Douglas, is seen herself to go back. Maybe there'll be another book. The time frame is 1990 to nearly 2020, and 1743 onward to 1790."

"Three books, then, and a sophisticated fantasy. I just can't read it. I should but it's not my thing."

"And made into television. You won't watch that?"

"No. Well, we don't have the extra channels."

"She's a woman in control, and has good sex, and creates spaces and adventures for herself through risky scenarios. She networked in the present and the past. The daughter is much the same and they make a great team. The blokes are forced to consider more than tradition, and are heroes in their own terms, but we women like the women applying themselves in such different settings. The television version has different angles, but gets the non-parallel parallels, is sexy and is even more female-centred. It doesn't go down the fantasy angle so popular these days."

"Well, time to go from here. I still don't know what grabs you about this fiction."

"I don't know what grabs you about your religion," said Diana in return.

The temperatures were mild enough, but this had been a very wet February, as noted, and we'd had storms Ciara in early February and Dennis in mid-February.

From there it was off to Ayrshire, and Bargrennan is where we stayed. This was north north west of Newton Stewart by the River Cree and on the A714 road to Girvan. Diana had arranged it - and when we arrived there was nothing for it but sleep and I apologised to Allie. The others married might well have been sexually active this night, but I was shagged out in a different way.

Narrator: Allie Some Honeymoon Locations (Sunday 23rd February)

In the morning I wanted sex but, in the limited duration of daylight, there was no time to waste according to Diana's planning. Indeed Diana came in to our room to tell us to breakfast and get going.

Thus in the morning we headed for the Bargrennan Cairn, a passage grave. Later on in the literature and television series, The Jacobite Gap Years's child Maggie used this location to go and fetch her mother. Diana informed us in the car that it's about genetics and the link to ancestors as the cause of disappearances. Mary Douglas's initial drop back in time to launch the whole adventure was around Inverness; with about fifty Clava type cairns in the larger area.

"I see," said Linda with detachment.

So I decided to make my point, facing the passage grave. "The serious stuff on this matter starts from the Orkneys as the origin and centre of the practice of recognising the ancestors using astronomy. This ritual observance travelled south - we're talking about 5000 years ago. Those bluestones to the dead at Waun Mawn in the Preseli Hills were allied to the sun at the winter equinox; they were moved to Stonehenge down in Wiltshire to be arranged similarly; starting at Durrington Walls. Woodhenge and Stonehenge represented the living and the dead respectively, where those glacial pathways line up with the rising sun also at winter equinox. Your big sarsen stones were added later."

"Thank you Allie for your indigestible words," Linda reacted.

"Gabrijela Daffron tells of some of this in her books," said Diana.

So I responded: "She can't have said much about this because Mike Parker Pearson has only just discovered it in the last few years."

We headed for Drumlanrig Castle, off the River Nith, about fifty miles away, where, Diana told us, a laird of the Munro clan was murdered in revenge by the clan, set much further north east. Diana said it was called Bellhurst Manor. Linda and I did at least get to see Rembrandt's Old Woman Reading there. We headed northwards to New Lanark, of the television studios, but also the nearby River Clyde for the wooded location for filming from those studios.

We headed for Beecraigs Country Park, West Lothian, which apparently featured for several outdoor locations but particularly ending up in North America. Although nearly eighty miles away, it took about the same time as our previous drive - some one and a half hours. Diana explained that it was the filming location for when they had emigrated to the North Carolina wilderness and then moved to Canada.

It all meant very little to Linda and me. Indeed much of the honeymoon would not, except it was providing a tour for Linda and me to be together. All I was learning was that in Scotland 'B' was a long way from 'A'. Distances on a map were mentally shrunk in error.

As a non-driver I asked Linda, "Do you like driving long distances?"

"If I didn't we would not be doing this. We're hardly doing the most efficient route. I tell you what, that first book - as much as I read it - must have had horses powered by rocket fuel."

"Just that I might buy some driving lessons."

"Where would you get the money from?" she asked me.

"Annie has some ideas."

"Er..."

"You could teach me."

"Not a good idea when married," she said.

We three headed beyond Falkirk to Glasgow itself along the M9 and M80. In this locality Diana had several rooms she also wanted to see. One was the Joseph Black Building, a chemistry room, where Mary did some student work as if at St. Andrews where the lecturer tells how bias and mythology easily creeps into history because of sources. Use was also made of the Melville Room in the Chaplaincy of the University of Glasgow. They sent a filming unit to St. Andrews for general location shots.

All this meant so much to the woman with books and DVDs, but for us two it was simply a tour of parts of the University of Glasgow.

But the fictional professor had made a resonating point: who writes reliably? Linda indeed wondered about Glasgow and its economic history (it had played down its part in the slave trade), as well as Glasgow and its theology (the Reformation and then division with restored Catholicism).

From there we looked at Kelvingrove Park, west-central Glasgow, close to the M8, where, we were told, a growing baby Maggie was being pushed in a pram by Mary. Pollock Park was used for a gathering in Canada. These locations were now in the tourists' imaginative world.

We had our own day and night aspect at this time of year because street lights were on when we arrived at the northern end of Dowanhill Street, west Glasgow, a one way street (northwards) towards Victoria Crescent Road. It is where, Diana said, the Smiths lived in St. Andrews - in Glasgow! These were university area properties, so it sort of suited.

"Why not film in St. Andrews itself?" I asked Diana.

"Glasgow did a good deal, it's nearer New Lanark Mills too, and they edited in the outside shots like they did for the river in Inverness."

At the Helensburgh guest house lounge, Diana put on a number of relevant DVDs to show us where we'd been, converted into televisual fictional representation. We had an evening meal and retired to our guest house bedrooms.

However, and never quite accurate about doors, I went naked into the wrong one, saying for Linda, "Too many places to visit crammed in."

"Sorry about that, Allie," said Diana.

"Oops!" Diana was in a nightie.

"What are you doing in a nightie?"

"What are you doing in my room?" she asked back.

"I thought you were a dedicated naturist."

"I am but they put the heating off overnight. I'd like an extra layer on. I think you might be neglecting your wife."

"I think you are neglecting your true love. Time to admit it."

"I think you are wrong, Mrs. Shrimpton, on a number of fronts."

"Linda has long been your true love."

"I was invited along to give you folks places to see; I'm not here for any other reason concerning either of you."

"Just be on the level with me."

"Duplicity must be your middle name."

"What's that supposed to mean?"

"You going to your next door fancy woman and her dog. Showering with Ms Sisse and all that."

"What's Linda been saying?"

"She said nothing, Allie dear. Salome Lichtbau, she's the one: she told me that they've separated and make arrangements so the dogs can still see each other. And Megan has a dog now, ready to join in."

"That's nothing to do with me. "

"Salome mentioned you: showering, hair done - I doubt that's all; and how often, eh?"

"Klärchen gives me a shower because the shower gel and shampoo she gets delivered for dogs and humans is so fucking expensive."

"You always were weird, Alfia Shrimpton. Most people shower themselves."

"She does it much better. Fight me. Fight me for her."

"Who? Klärchen or Linda? Or maybe, definitely, Annie Fenwick. You've done your bit for that wanker, Adam. Yeah?"

"What?"

"She fancies the pants off you, I'm reliably told, and I'm sure you oblige."

"You get that off and grapple me."

"You always were immature: clever but immature. You need dominant females. I'm not fighting you, hurting myself on the floor."

"I'll throw you on the bed."

"You're weird."

"You keep away from Linda."

So Diana removed her nightie. She said, "All right. Lift me if you can. One grasp, one throw of me, clean on to the bed. Bet you can't. I'm not the skinniest of women around. Do it and I'll leave Linda alone."

I walked up to her, prepared and tensed, and grabbed her firmly with my right hand on her crotch.

"Ah ha," she said.

Then I unbalanced her body over mine, so that indeed I could lift and turn her swiftly, and threw her enough on to the bed.

She asked, lying down and looking across, "Are you finished?"

"No more Caramel Club dances; no more bedtime intimacies."

"You're a fool. I've got my own focus, if you must know, and it's not Linda."

"Literary fantasising, as if you can do feminist heroics in another time. Utter codswallop. Anyway, point made: see you tomorrow," I said, and I darted across to our actual room, although Linda was not there. I got my postcard, and wrote a quick message for Annie about enjoying my honeymoon touring Scotland, and put a first class stamp on it. Linda would see it.

However, I decided to look at my tablet to see what Annie was doing. I had to do a search because she wasn't listed under 'Women' but under 'Couples' and 'Trans'. Marie Healand was with Annie Fenwick, or 'Transitory' with 'Headgirl'.

I observed Transitory finishing a fuck of Headgirl on her knees, sperm jumping on to Headgirl's back, and for the two to sit down, with Transitory's penis softening. Headgirl started telling Transitory some tales as Transitory took some sperm from Headgirl's back and offered her fingers to Headgirl's tongue.

"I get bites from midges - midges not midgets. I think these, whatever they are, must like the taste of me. I like the taste of that. My friend Gael is in Scotland, so I'll tell about midges in Scotland. I remember I got off the train at Lonely Corrou station on the West Highland Line and just enjoyed the wide open space. I found a spot and lowered my trousers and masturbated, rubbing some pulled vegetation on my fanny, and with my fingers, only to be invaded on my flesh by these midges. Mmm. I got red bites everywhere. You know Gael. She's actually on her honeymoon. She married another woman. I've missed out."

"You'll find someone," Transitory said to everyone, offering more glob on her finger ends.

Adam: There's a third woman on their honeymoon. Could be exciting. I've fucked two of them.

Adam gave a tip of 50 tokens.

RobRoy gave a tip of twenty tokens.

"You're a lucky man, Adam. Adam knows because he lives near to where we are broadcasting."

"Don't know."

"He won't have fucked Gael," said Headgirl.

Adam: Gael has wanked me off. But you're right.

At this point I put the tablet off and waited for Linda. I wondered if Marie Healand could fuck me with some of her sperm for our child.

Narrator: Linda Honeymoon Reassurance (Sunday 23rd February)

I wanted more time with Allie alone, in bed, but from taking a closer look at the garden I needed to speak to Diana to reassure her of her place in my life now that I was married.

Her door was open, so I just let myself in. As I went in further, I said, "Oh sorry," because I could see her naked in the ensuite clothesless doing her evacuation business, and hearing her defecating. "Your toilet door is open."

I looked away as she said, "I don't have a tiny hand and it isn't frozen."

"What? Oh, as in La Bohème! I'd said..."

"Face me to talk to me."

As instructed, I could see her leaning forward, bare feet flat, trying to get one out I supposed, crotch in the gloom still bare.

"In darkness all is hidden," I said.

"I hardly need to close the door against nothing or no one."

"I'm intruding."

"No you're not."

The water flushed and first she stood, twisted, attending to her arse with paper from several pulls at the toilet roll and then washing her hands in the sink.

Diana said, "Very natural."

"Sure."

She came much closer to me than usual and looked up to my eyes. I was clothed, she was naked. "Wiping my arse turns you on, Linda?"

"What? I don't think naturists do shitting together. Perhaps we should, like the Romans did."

"Allie's the expert on the past."

"The Wickenby twins, more like."

"Have you not seen Allie? She was, let's say, about."

"No, I was in the garden. They look after the grounds here with real detail and light them up really well. I came here direct."

"What do you want, Linda?"

"Actually, I'd like a hug."

"A hug? Why?"

"Because, I've got married, and I really love her, and she is my future, and we will get someone to get her pregnant, but I want to include you as my friend, a loving friend."

"Allie might be very jealous about what she now possesses."

"Well, yes, but I want to know that you will keep a look-out for me. I'm not expecting anything to happen, but just keep a look-out."

"Of course. From wherever I shall be. I'll give you a hug."

I was surprised, really, at her willingness to pull me in and squeeze. She then made a kiss to the right side of my face. When she released me, she looked at me directly.

She said, "Does that reassure you? We should all keep a look-out for each other: me for you, you for Aardse. Allie: she's a force, a whirlwind. Of course, you will always be in my thoughts. Perhaps you don't tell her you asked for this reassurance. She rightly expects to seduce you, and you should join in enthusiastically. You are going to do that, aren't you?"

"Of course. We argue from passion and the sex is like that, Diana."

"I'd go to her now. Don't tell her you talked to me. She wants you, remember."

"I asked, "From how you are talking, something else is happening, isn't it? Has Allie warned..."

"Go to Allie, and don't mother her."

"No: right. She accesses all my areas. No mothering. I'd better go now and undress. See you tomorrow."

Allie's Possession

"Where've you been?" Allie asked me as I rejoined her.

"I was looking in the garden. It's so well-presented, lit up, and neat. Something we could do in narrow strips back at the bethel. I see a postcard for Annie. You could go online and send a message from 'Gael'."

"The garden spaces were sacrificed for more space indoors. You could ask to buy some of the long sea front property back gardens."

"They don't align with our property. One back garden overlaps with your friend's property."

"Klärchen's?"

"Yes, of course."

"Strand in front of me," Allie commanded. "Get them off first."

Here came my second hug within minutes.

She asked, "Why did you marry me? You criticise me so much."

"Because you are attractive, intelligent, intellectual, artistic, and you captured something of me at Margate, and I perceive that my love for you meets your need for my love and wisdom. And I need your love too, your energy and vitality, even your protection."

Differently from Diana, Allie smacked her open mouth against mine. She grabbed my bare crotch. Before I could respond the same way, Allie pushed her fingers inwards and wide, and used them painfully to throw me on to the bed, her fingers removing themselves as I flew. Flat on my back, she resumed entry with those fingers into my restricted space, and my breathing intensified. She twisted her body around and plonked her arse on my face. Allie was nothing if not forceful.

Administering my tongue upwards, when arkness all is hidden, I was able still to wonder how she might be in ten years time. Would she fill out and become fat? She was a fit woman, walking everywhere, and a fighter after all to anyone who threatened her. She had spiritual discipline too. There was also her mystery, if less of it now. She knew what she wanted, and this future intention included me.

"I'm a jealous woman, Linda," she said, as my tongue reached up. It seemed to me that on our honeymoon Allie wanted Diana close: like an enemy is best kept close, and that wasn't right.

Here she released the hounds of her own desire, with tongue and fingers, and I generated a goo that came running out.

When I was detached finally from her, my legs were like jelly, and in the ensuite my eyes were red and my mouth had gone dry. She seemed completely confident.

She brushed past me to sit on the loo and piss away. "Mine," she said, letting out a huge fart, looking at me directly.

Nevertheless I decided to let her develop that fart in private.

Narrator: Allie More Honeymoon Locations (Monday 24th February)

The landlady of the Helensburgh guest house, Mrs. Ivy Green, which she ran with her in-and-out husband, George, said to Linda alone that she overheard we are naturists and gave us the option. Linda took an executive decision and advised that she could put towels on to the seats. We agreed.

There were two men, local workers, staying in the same guest house. Would they be bothered? We thought not. So this is how we went into the dining room to our table. The two men's eyes popped out, momentarily, and then behaved themselves as if nothing was different.

We discussed our journey for the day, and meant going well east for the next filming location of interest mainly for Diana.

Clothes on, we went well east beyond Edinburgh to Preston Mill, a watermill on the River Tyne at the eastern edge of East Linton on the B1407 Preston Road. There had been a mill on the site since the 16th century, though this one came from the 18th century and was commercial until 1959, producing oatmeal. We had a guided tour of a kiln, a mill, and the miller's house, led by a middle aged woman.

After that we had a look at Prestonpans, a victory for the Jacobites fictionalised in The Jacobite Gap Years: An Seumasach. It was while there that we had a more detailed conversation about the role of fiction in historical consciousness. I said it was Scottish to be either pro-Jacobite or pro-Hanoverian. Linda wondered out aloud just how many opposition were Episcopalian Anglican or Presbyterian. In The Jacobite Gap Years: An Seumasach, Catholicism was reduced to private observance among about two and a half per cent of the actual population.

Linda said, "Diana. Two hundred years of the Reformation in Scotland first reduced the number of observed saints and eventually rooted them out. The social and belief structures of Catholicism shrank into mainly isolated private corners and geographical extremities, and even then limited to those in the know."

Diana said, "I know all that. What about Barra?"

"Even Barra had no Catholic parishes until about ten years before legalisation."

"I'm more interested in the evocative scenes around and at Caisteal Tàirneanach. We're going there later."

I said to them, more positively, on our way back to Edinburgh itself, "The imaginative transportation of the viewer into a landscape and setting can do anthropological work. History is contestable, but the use of the imagination is important for empathy."

Linda referred to the television series Wolf Hall, adapted by Peter Straughan and based on two highly-praised novels by Hilary Mantel - Wolf Hall and Bring Up the Bodies. The series (like the books) was self-constrained in what Thomas Cromwell said and did, and showed him as watching, reflective and as silent as necessary. Not beyond scheming, he showed lingering personal loyalty towards Cardinal Wolsey both alive and dead. He let others use their own words to box themselves into their corners. He was well able to act and trap, and get results, avoiding the worst of torture (if not its threat). In a despotic setting where a fall from power could indeed be dramatic, Cromwell as imagined was able to use conversation to achieve his ends. It was character-based. The Jacobite Gap Years tried to focus on the inner mind of the principal character Mary. Then Linda referred to the more radical The Tudors, in which events were reordered and it was all made more fanciful and sexy. She distrusted such historical fiction.

So I decided to mention Ann Oakley, the feminist sociologist, who included fiction as an imaginative contribution to the deadhand of masculine established sociology. Charles Wright Mills had referred to the 'Sociological Imagination', but much had been unimagined.

"He related biography and structures, but she picked up more on his polemic style," I said. "And one of her fictional characters is Trent Lovett, who is also a sociologist. So I think fiction can offer theology and sociology and the like insight - why not theology? - but it does have to pay attention to the situation on the ground."

Into Edinburgh we had another academic encounter. We went to the historic Summerhall Building old anatomy lecture room. It became an arts venue at the Summerhall building in Edinburgh. Diana wanted to go into what was known as Whitby Close in the series. She wasn't the only one there for the same purpose, with many taking photographs (like us).

Via the M9 and before Linlithgow and Bo'ness, we diverted up to Blackness Castle. Then, doubling back before Queensferry, we went to the Hopetoun Estate used for frontage and the rear for stables. Abercorn Church was close, too. Maggie ended up being married using that location.

It wasn't too far to go north into the Kirkcaldy region and East Wemyss to impersonate Inverness. Why Inverness needed a substitute I could not understand. We stayed in the town, as according to Diana's prize, in the very bed and breakfast of the television series - and the real landlady was called Mrs. Michelle Douglas, oddly enough, who welcomed us and was sorry we were not staying the two nights of the prize. The daughter of the fictional landlady Mrs. Grade appears later in the series when Maggie has grown up.

Here was a slight problem. Diana took the single bed and we took the double bed in the same room. It was impossible for Linda and me to keep our hands off each other and we made noises. Diana was very good. She tutted and laughed aloud, and then made no further comment of any kind as I made hay with the geography between Linda's legs and Linda returned the favour.

Whether the staff heard us, like Mrs. Douglas did, was unclear, but Linda and I enjoyed that night in the small town that looks nothing like Inverness at any point in history.

We had a packed schedule for the following day, and this meant that we used only one day of the two days' prize to stay in Kirkcaldy. We would move on and shift some miles the next day.

Diana asked that two of her suitcases continued to stay in the car. Sometimes she could be mysterious like this.

Even More Honeymoon Locations (Tuesday 25th February)

From East Wemyss, Stirling was a must, seeing the Link Bridge and the Pathfoot Building at the University of Stirling.

Here Linda and I made best use of the actual university for a couple of hours as Diana wandered around with her own key to the SUV. We two looked at the library. I declared my identity and postgraduate entry rights as a student of the University of Somerset. As such I signed Linda in, and at first we looked at some limited theological material together. St. Andrews would have been better for this. I made use of the small Gaelic section and we came together for the sociological material. Something took my attention.

I said, "I haven't seen this journal before. Bernice Martin wrote a significant piece about the 1950s: about a church, a choir and its boy members and female followers. "

"You have now. Sociology is so out of date," responded Linda. "Some would say discredited by fiction too. Howard Kirk?"

"There are organisational features worth extracting even from this," I said. "I suppose this is background to what you told me about your parish church."

"How much of the parish church time is going into your thesis?" she asked me.

"It's context. Some of the involvement you've had with Christine goes back to your time in that place. Adam's marriage concerned the isolated woman in the choir there. Another angle is internal cults and dependencies on leaders."

"Are you going to liken me to a cult leader?"

"I mean the bishops of the Vanguard group."

"How much is your Ph.D about our church - our Bethel - and how much about before all that?"

"I just told you. One is background to the other. I still have a lot of reading to do - there's a literature review to produce and then I follow the arguments in the literature with your Bethel as the example. Your Bethel makes no sense without the background, and sociologically doesn't without the literature."

"From interviews, surely."

"The background I discovered in various ways."

"How else?"

"Documents."

"What documents?"

"Diocesan, informal..."

"I haven't seen them."

"You're not supposed to see them."

"Are you?"

"I have."

"Every time it's the same! I'm in the dark; you know more."

"I'm a researcher. It's what I do."

"I'm on my honeymoon. I'm not going down this road again."

"It is a cul-de-sac."

"But one thing that puzzles me," Linda said, "and has for a while. All that about Folkways, and the whole emphasis of the Glastonbury department, and you choosing Gaelic. How come you ended up researching a new and rather standard church? Was it just to pursue me?"

"But it isn't standard, is it?" I replied. "It exists because of media money and a friends' network. It is local, and can be whatever it wants. It relates to wandering bishops, as some call them - I've got loads of literature to find on that - and then you joined something that relates to a short-lived Free Catholic movement a hundred years ago. Glastonbury's school covers a broad area: someone did a whole thesis on Thomas Carlyle and Ecclefechan, simply because that was very local, and how the Church of Scotland in its more independent existences related to a changing culture."

"He had tendencies to strong man fascism, clearly racism, and these accompanied a more liberal theology! And I think the name you want is Anson because I did look up Liberal Catholicism."

"He's biased. Bishops at Large."

"I give up."

"But, yes. I am doing changing culture as well: that dialogue sermon you had was all about our cultural understandings and against the magical and the supernatural. Why do you have this world view? That's my epistemological question for this research."

"They did that sermon."

"The thinking is the same - and it was under your watch."

"It's about making sense, how to communicate what we understand, how we understand."

"Sociology of Knowledge - you know that, Linda. So, if I say, that the numerical value of procreation in Chaldean Numerology is nine and in Pythagorean Numerology is eight, you'd say this was bullshit."

"We live in interesting times," she said.

Linda left me to examine the Martin journal, and I was making some rapid notes and references. She went off, and I soon checked up on her. She had been reading about the different varieties of the postmodern in theology: of down the evangelical line (postliberal), the Anglican-Catholic line (Radical Orthodox), and the liberal line (Mystical Universalist, or Non-realist).

"We'd better go soon," I said. Nevertheless, I looked at the sociology of Church types as well, of which there were more categories. I showed Linda one of these, the newly categorised 'liberal charismatic', that had an interfaith aspect, used the dance culture, and was all about questions. As we left the library, we wondered if we could do this at the Bethel, using coloured and flashing lights, minimalist beat music that works its repetition, rituals adapted for greater visual impact, and questions offered rather than sermons made. So far, she said, we had followed almost a traditional subcultural model beyond some of the extra services and the use of the mikveh, and we hadn't broken out into something different.

Diana was at the car, having been in the town itself and, she said, making "arrival" arrangements. She wanted us to move on too and asked to keep the key.

Soon we went west to Touch House, and then on to Doune for the castle - seen as Castle Leoch in Outlander, and in Ivanhoe, in Monty Python and the Holy Grail, and in Game of Thrones. Also we invaded the wooded area near Doune, known as Hill of Row.

The next castle was at Drummond mainly for its gardens. We then went to Aberfeldy that was another small town via some tight camera angles and for its park.

We now had Linda take a long drive up the A9 for the all-important Clava Cairns. We eventually left the A9 and drove through the enlarged Culloden village.

Beyond the battlefield, where our stop was very brief, we arrived at Balnauran of Clava. Here Mary first went back in time, baffling everyone about her disappearance. This used the chambered cairn. We looked at the Bronze Age site, and in the cool evening some six others were present. But, later, Maggie used the ring cairn, so we went there, and it was very touristy.

One person among many was a broad woman waiting alone, among the stones, called Glenda McKay. We knew her name because she introduced herself, and Diana walked to her, hugged her and kissed her directly on the mouth.

These two went to the nearby car park and took possession of all of Diana's hefty luggage from Linda's SUV. Both returning, Diana gave Linda her SUV key, a letter for Aardse, and asked Linda not to try and look for her. Her husband should cope with the children. She gave me a two cheeks kiss and then Linda received a hug with a kiss on the mouth. Finally, Diana looked at me with a little aggression.

"Leave me when out of your sight," Diana said to Linda, with Glenda close behind her smiling.

Glenda and Diana shared the luggage load and walked around the far side as we saw it of the ring cairn. In some act of silliness, they lay down, as if to disappear.

This was the cue for us to leave. "Come; leave them," I said.

Instead, Linda wanted to ask what was going on, and went forward. But they had vanished. Then she realised there was a vertical fence of green and some brown, that when looked at from afar merged into the background. Apparently, even in an ancient site like this, the TV and fictional world had affected the managed display for tourists. This vertical fence had been set up for people to act out disappearing, by crawling behind it. Obviously such people re-emerged. But these two were gone. Peter Marshall would have known about walking away with it blocking the view. So we left them presumably somewhere among the stones or maybe taking a hidden route to some car.

Linda looked staggered. She couldn't believe it. She had to drive away. We realised that we weren't to know any details.

Linda said in the next guest house lounge, at Newlands, nearby, when she wanted to reflect, "Time and time and time again, she told me that she was not like me. She had a husband: a man. And now she has disappeared with this unknown Scottish woman."

"The signs were there," I said. "The novel is all about a woman who runs her own show even in a male clan society; her daughter is a lesbian after all. And Diana has always loved you."

"Well, I didn't detect any signs," Linda told me sharply.

"Signs that she loved you? They seemed pretty obvious to me."

"Signs that she'd run away. It explains all that luggage."

"Some of these readers and viewers are really obsessed. She is, and Glenda McKay will be just the same."

"This is deception and betrayal - of Aardse to be sure, and of me. And what of her children? It's not as if she's gone for the odd day! We have to go back without her and explain something."

"It's taken her over. Literature and televisual exposition can become like a cult of attachment to a fantasy life," I concluded. "Those three thick books are a whole world to the devotees. It is the literary equivalent of religion."

"No! Wwhat are the rituals?" she asked.

"We've just seen one - disappearing at Clava Cairns. There'll be set pieces to re-enact."

Narrator: Linda Other Honeymoon Locations (Wednesday 26th - Friday 28th February)

Diana's departure continued to annoy me, of course. It also upset my honeymooning sex life with Allie because I was angry.

In wintry conditions we journeyed down the B852 and B862 and the huge distance down Loch Ness, to the A82 and along Loch Lochy, then past An Gearasdan (The Garrison) or Fort William, and Ballachulish for Glencoe, and arrived at Crianlarich.

This was where Allie's ancestor Margaret Urchardan was born in 1773 for a short life of seventeen years. In those days Crianlarich people spoke Gaelic, but not today.

I asked, "How come, back then, such a young first language Gaelic speaking woman travels from Crianlarich to Walsingham?"

"So it's what we think we know. James Rogers went to Scotland for a tour in May 1788 aged twenty-one, visiting all sorts of places including Jacobite locations and met the fifteen year old Margaret where he was staying here in June 1789. He had sex with her and when he returned she knew she was pregnant, and the result was he took her back to Walsingham. Cornelius was born and she died on 17th March 1790, having only just married James. Cornelius Rogers with Lydia Hart had son Alfred in 1832 and Jennifer in 1834; Jennifer married a Jenner. And, of course, Alfred's son Brian married Alice Shrimpton who, really, loved Elizabeth Ford."

So, all wrapped up, we two walked in a forest at about Inverardran, where below a railway had been removed but nearby two railways were joined together. Soon we got to see Glenbruar Viaduct, of the railway for Fort William. I blurted out the main theme from Hamish MacCunn's Land of the Mountain and Flood.

"What's that?" Allie asked.

"I'll tell you about it later," I said.

Diana had two rooms waiting in Crianlarich at a guest house called Taigh AlltCharomain, so we lost money on one of them.

"What is this sudden liking for apples?" I asked Allie over our meal, as she chose two of them instead of cake.

"Suddenly I like their refreshing taste. Red ones."

In our bedroom, with that tune again, I recalled Sutherland's Law on television, a drama with a reference to Crianlarich although it was based in Oban as fictionalised into Glendoran. Allie said that, if this was on in the 1970s, then I did not see it, and I must have a brain full of learnt television archives. But I recalled seeing Sutherland's Law many times, because my father watched it. It was a proper, full drama for all of the BBC despite it then coming from Scotland. Iain Cuthbertson was its star actor as John Sutherland, a Procurator Fiscal. (I mentioned further my father watching him in Budgie along with co-star Adam Faith.) The best editions were ones that exploited the great outdoors. "Incidentally, John Sutherland could speak in Gaelic, Allie. I remember that, with a crofter. The theme tune Hamish MacCunn's Land of the Mountain and Flood appealed to daddy's liking for nineteenth century romantic music."

"All sounds more sensible than people disappearing into cairns and at stone circles," Allie said. "Would you like to go into my cairn?"

"Ah, but, again before my time, and just after Sutherlands' Law finished, Iain Cuthbertson popped up in a kids programme called Children of the Stones, and that was about time and astronomy too."

"It's about time you gave my circle some attention!" she insisted.

I had to do as she wanted. However, I soon returned to what was really on my mind: "I don't know what I am going to say to Aardse, when we get back."

"She's the one who's done it, not you. I'd never heard of Glenda McKay. Don't you want any more from me tonight?"

"I think this Glenda must have been an online fan. But this is a relationship: a woman to woman one too, after all that Diana has said."

"That's what's bothering you."

"Maybe she was only bicurious and now is curious for sure."

"She was more than bicurious - when it came to you at least. She had the hots for you from school onwards."

"Yeah, you have done your research."

"Time for my attention on you," she said.

I couldn't miss the sweet smell from her arse, presumably from the apples she'd eaten at every guest house.

Allie said to me, "Do you feel a third presence? I think I was being felt up and your hands were nowhere near."

"Don't be silly, Allie. You are being silly aren't you?"

"I think they were the hands of ancestors."

"Where from?"

"Stones and hills and this house could be haunted."

"You cannot be serious!"

"Don't get wound up so easily," Allie cautioned me. "Spooky sex!"

Next day, Thursday, Allie looked in the area telephone directory and found a local name of interest. She ordered me to follow her, and simply knocked on a particular door. A woman opened it from inside.

"Do I know of another Mairead or Margaret Urchardan?" asked back the middle-aged woman in this single storey long house.

"Seriously," said Allie.

"Come in out of the cold because I do have some information."

I thought that this was quite remarkable, and that Allie was ever so pushy. The best this elderly Margaret Urchardan could offer was that a number of the family and others had made long-distance moves. Some went abroad, and some did go to fertile areas in the rest of the British Isles. One or two stayed by moving around and about. But there was a teenager with her family name and a returning traveller where the suddenness of their disappearance created a local story down the generations of murder. The female 'Urchardan Ghost' subsequently haunted select locations in A' Chrion Làraich (Crianlarich) and Taigh an Droma (Tyndrum). She caused wet dreams in boys when asleep.

Allie thus satisfied, our final driving stage this day was to the snowy highest village in England with a market - Alston. Once at the end of a railway branch line, closed long after Beeching, in 1976, and replaced in small part by a narrow gauge railway from Slaggyford south, this village had some rather narrow roads for parking our SUV. I just did not fancy such a long trip from Crianlarich to the Foss east coast.

Alston had no particular interest for either of us; we thought it had no literature but the Internet said it was used for the film Jane Eyre in 1997 and for Royston Vasey in The League of Gentlemen on television. We did purchase some Cumberland Mustard and Alston Cheese before entering our last minute accommodation, West View Bed and Breakfast, welcomed in by Mrs. Francesca Ellis, who recommended a local eatery called Top Cod.

We had haddock! Allie asked me afterwards, "Why did you take away a pear from the fruit basket?"

"Because I thought I'd like to work on you directly. Your juices have sweetened and your arse has wafted sweeter farts. So this pear can be solid state rather than wait for liquid and gas."

"I see," she said. "Better make me merry as perry, then."

We set off early on Friday. As we headed south east, roughly, turning from the A689 to the A68, one thing Allie said was, "Don't keep going on about Diana. Aardse - if he wants her back - can take it up with Adam Magellan."

"But how does anyone leave their kids? Walks out on them! How can she do it?"

"Some of us doing Folkways in Somerset researched past lives societies, and some people really do live in the reimagined past. On a television report there was this Rochdale bus driver who did his job for the present, but that was it in his own time as he and his wife lived imaginatively during the Civil War as Puritans."

"But the secrecy she has used!"

"Ah," said Allie. "Secrecy."

"What?"

"It's at the core of any anthropological study. It's been at the core of me doing your group."

"That's for sure."

"It's more than that. If you go for Geertzian thick description, then the researcher of the familiar makes the familiar strange rather than strangeness familiar. Someone called de Jong has addressed this. We move from being familiar, as we are, to making sense of the situation from an outsider's perspective as a slow revelation because others do not see what they encounter within their own familiarity."

"Allie, however will you adjust to a domestic life of pregnancy and child-rearing?"

"Anthropology to work then needs its own secrecy as a method. On the other hand, remote places or strange groups like yours and the sex cult and even literary groups are secretive as a starting point. It also means that these cultures, like your group, have definite boundaries. There is a sort of sexuality like an anthropological penis going in to penetrate the truth that is hidden. Obviously you fuck it and then have to take the penis out for an exposed money shot."

"Lovely. You will ejaculate Liberal and Free Catholicism like some porn film," I said to Allie.

"Yes. Serninsea is full of secrets to be ejaculated. But, on your narrow example, against this, is the fact that Liberal and Free Catholicism are not unknown, so other people have spaffed this material before. What is interesting is the circumstances that set up such a church as yours."

"Is spaff a Norfolk word?"

"No, I think it is a toff's word meaning to waste champagne." Allie was laughing.

"Dirty girl. Meanwhile, Diana doesn't do religion, but she sure does do fantasy. I wonder what she and Gillian were doing last night?"

"It's not such a great distance between religion and fantasy. You are as committed as she is to a mental construct. It is just that - well, maybe, yours is more respectable, though both are indexical. Gabrijela Daffron may not be a cult leader but her product has created cult-like attributes. Diana de Groot showed necessary quiet and the imperative was joining the said Glenda McKay in their cult-like shared fascination."

"Are you trying to lecture me?"

"Fans of The Jacobite Gap Years shout down critics - you are either in or out. Diana was in. But what about you? You are just such a sceptic in everything. Your belief is always critical. You never jump in. I'm surprised you even married me."

"I think you are in serious danger of contradicting yourself, my intellectual girl. I gave you a list why I married you. As for your view of my stance, it seems that one minute I am committed to a mental construct and next minute I am such a sceptic. In fact you are in great danger of making the familiar incredibly strange."

"That contradiction must excite you," Allie said. "Theologians do it all the time; sociologists are accused of making the obvious technical in order to make a discipline."

"Apples and pears, eh? Oh I can't resist the sense of adventure your discipline brings to me."

"And I can't resist my need to finally attach to someone: someone who must be reliable for me. I am having our baby as a commitment of me to you, expecting your commitment to me."

"You're so frustrating, Allie. We need to get you home and get you pregnant."

"At least with our travels we managed to slow down time for us," Allie said. "Relativity. More planning time, perhaps."

"Two things.," I replied. "No we didn't slow time, despite our movement, because we went so much higher up than in Serninsea. And, secondly, any such change of speed is relative to others, not to ourselves."

"Your such a spaewife," Allie said.

"A what?"

"It's Scots English. Like a witch - you are like a witch - you see into the future. Some say a spaewife is descended from the erectors of standing stones."

"Bloody Nora," I said. "You couldn't make this up."

"Oh, I think they did," Allie replied.

One of our stops on the way was at Bever Wood, a very short diversion before heading more easterly. We met Jeremy and Lindy, about to go on their own 'as if' honeymoon in Devon. Their timing was from a growing fear that travel could very soon be restricted. Jeremy expected that his divorce would be contested by his wife.

Narrator: Linda Jenny (Friday 28th February)

While on our honeymoon, Adam Magellan had taken Jenny back to her hospital institution, and the reason was the growing sense of a pandemic virus coming our way.

"Her mental state was confused," Adam said to me in the evening, soon after our arrival back. "I wanted her to be secure among professionals ahead of any lockdown."

"What's that?"

"It's where we'd be confined to our homes except for essentials like medical and food supplies. I have been worried about reports that the government plan is a 'herd immunity' where as many as half a million Britons could get the virus. It's a crude and costly policy causing many individuals to need intensive care in hospitals and many could die. If they socially isolate then that contradicts herd immunity."

Adam advised that we needed business changes and so we arranged a late meeting of the holding company and the agency and the bethel organisations. Adam plus Ann Dromeghada and Labhaoise Vlahos joined Bishops Christine, Pauline and Bill, Peter, Kathryn, Kathleen and Winnie. Adam told us that dark economic clouds would follow the Novel Covid disease of the virus coming from the east. He told Kathryn, Kathleen and me to become employees under the bethel's economic arrangement with his company, rather than being self-employed extracting fees. The fees would go to his company. He was leaving Roger on the scheme to see what the dole did about him. Absent Allie (she had gone off to Toulouse Road) would still be a student, still with her finances. We were to act on this from Monday, but Adam would do some backdating for official records.

I suspected that Adam might benefit if there was a general economic shutdown, but I also felt it wise to follow his advice. After all, the alternative was the dole, and we might get nothing. We agreed to these suggestions, further worrying about the income of the Bethel. Ann and Labhaoise said they would see we were all right through Adam's company via their property portfolio. Christine feared for her own Church (I could not see why) but her own property portfolio would protect her.

Adam broke up the meeting saying that he had an online meeting later on with a friend and did not want to miss it.

I sent an explanatory text message to Aardse. I added that I was shocked by events with Diana but despite the amount of her luggage I had suspected nothing.

Allie messaged Annie Fenwick that she was too tired to go out. In her reply Annie said Megan feared that pubs might be closing down.

Aardse the Client (Saturday 29th February)

Aardse replied that he would meet me along with Adam Magellan and indeed he arrived. Allie and I took him into the consultation room.

Adam then arrived, announcing his fee as £302 with VAT and expenses.

"That's what you charged me to begin," I said.

"Correct. But I won't be getting any extras this time."

"What extras?" asked Aardse.

"He was being crude," I responded.

"I expect, Magellan, a considerable discount was negotiated."

"Nil," I said, "at any point."

Aardse then asked me, "What exactly has happened? Her bank accounts are dead."

"Diana King perhaps? No?" I asked.

"They'd be new accounts, if there are."

"What did you think about three suitcases?" I then asked.

"She said there were meetings and gatherings related to The Jacobite Gap Years. She also carried them so one of them was mainly to be filled. Obviously not. And this Glenda McKay. Who's she?"

Adam replied, "Initial suggestions suggest it is an online name only. I've already been looking."

I said, to give an answer, "We went the long distance up the A9 for Culloden village and the reveal of Glenda (or whatever is her name) at Clava Cairns."

"Diana didn't see her at any other location?"

"I think their first actual encounter was near Inverness. It was fading light when they met. In the story, the people disappear in the cairns or tombs, where the ancestors meet astronomy. The site has set up like a game where you can disappear for fun like in the fiction. To the side there's a vertical wall in camouflage."

People do little videos."

"Why?"

Allie said, "The nearest thing to a re-enactment of the novels and television shows at Bronze Age cairns. It desecrates the site, but virtual reality is..."

Adam then said, "Glenda McKay is online saying that the books are faultless and that the television series is a different but faithful way of telling the story. It's almost like a religion. That board for hiding behind is actually on wheels."

"Oh," said Allie. "Didn't see them. There might be a Jacobite re-enactment society or a book club for maniacs."

Aardse then said, "For your big fat fee I want to know as much as I can, and an address, and I'm going to get a lawyer. She comes back within a week or I'll have no more to do with her. Failure to find her means that's it. Plus this is a lesbian thing, isn't it? It's all the things I suspected of her regarding you," he said, looking directly at me. "I tolerated her 'looking after' you, and I know she took you out somewhere because she was emotionally affected. Some disco where you touched each other up."

I said, "This isn't relevant to finding her."

"It's an awful lot relevant to losing her."

Adam added, "It may take longer than a week to find her. However, these days people cannot just disappear. They leave trails everywhere. You can't just cancel bank accounts and cut the trail."

I asked Aardse, "Are you contacting the police?"

Adam replied, "No point, because it is not illegal to want to vanish and set up a new life. It's just difficult to do."

I asked, "What about all the council and social services aspects of everything? What about her mobile phone? And this Glenda McKay and her car?"

"I know all that," Adam said. "Aardse. Your fee is without me going to Scotland. Here I will follow some online clues, work out some locations, and seek out some records and monitoring that happens - although we do not have access to the monitoring of the State. If we get a hook and need to travel to Scotland and stay, then with my assistant it's a thousand quid minimum."

"No way," he said. "She's not worth it. You owe her, Magellan."

"I don't owe her or you anything. We do this on a business and client basis or not at all. Your debit card, please."

"All right. Here. And here are different photos of Diana. A very few people still called her 'monarch' and 'your majesty' and 'HRH' from her maiden name."

"Did they?" I asked. "News to me."

Allie said, "I thought when I heard it it should be 'HM'."

I said, "Once again! Anything else in my past I don't know about but you do?"

Aardse said, "I've also got details here of the closed bank accounts. She wasn't on medications at all. She did have contact lenses. Did you know that, Linda?"

"I did not and I slept with her. I suppose you did know, Allie."

"Actually, no."

"My God," I said. "You're kidding?"

"No."

"Her living relatives are listed here, Mr. Magellan. Perhaps she will get in touch with one or two them in due course." Then Aardse asked, "Just how often did you sleep with my wife?"

"You knew when, every time, and it was sleeping."

Adam said, "I need something like her toothbrush - DNA. Pop anything with her on it in a clean bag and put it through the agency door."

"Right, good, will do," said the new client. "Something perhaps that's been up her cunt but not yours at the same time," he said to me. "Don't want to pollute the samples."

"Steady on!" I said back at him. "You should know that, if anything, she made a distance between her and me."

Allie then said, quietly, "Don't be rude to my wife."

"What about Wednesdays?" Aardse asked me, glancing at Allie.

"We didn't have sex! We had chats. She was a naturist; it wasn't a sex thing."

"It meant she could see your body and you see hers."

"That's what happens when you remove the textiles. She was brave at the wedding - naked and stayed naked."

"Deception," said Aardse.

Adam stated, "We will have a question for the report: Where is Diana de Groot? Peter and I will contact other friends, family members, neighbours, and other old classmates, but also doctors, dentists and the like. Be assured. The one thing they have not done is gone back in time through a cairn, however old."

I said, "Your joke is too late. Peter is approaching," I added, looking through the glass in the door,

Peter arrived, saying immediately, "I did some lateral thinking, boss. Glenda McKay is an actor's name and played Rachel Hughes in Emmerdale. That got me nowhere. I asked myself, 'What about other names?' Her character's mother was Kate Hughes, later Sugden, played by Sally Knyvette. Our Glenda McKay on Facebook is, I think, Sally Kate Hughes - and I think this because Sally Hughes is one who makes a number of comments about The Jacobite Gap Years, Highlander, Outlander and even, dare I say, Game of Thrones. And let me get you to Sally Hughes's photo..."

"Yes," I said. "I remember her looking like that. Well done, Peter."

Peter said to us, "I think Diana will be changing her online name too. So think of Claire King, or Jayne Claire King, born Jayne Claire Seed."

"Or," said Allie, "they could adopt character names, like Mary Douglas, or Màiri NicCoinnich, that sort of thing."

So we split up and the investigators were to go back in pursuit, like they had been for me. Adam and Peter left the room to have a conversation in the seating area, presumably on methods, before resuming organised work on Monday.

Aardse then said to me, "I do blame you. All through our marriage she's had her memory she kept from you of a stillborn. Adam was the father; you were the emotional attachment. Want to know about it?"

"I do already."

"She didn't want to couple up with Magellan. She wanted to couple up with you, with a baby. That was long before these lesbians do this sort of thing today."

"This sort of thing?" I asked him. "Today? Allie and I will be proper mothers."

"Like that Jenny; they both ended up all confused. It's your fault. She's told me about all these blokes and women you've had. At least she didn't follow you down that particular road. And there is some dark secret in her life involving you somehow."

One day I'll get to the bottom of it."

Allie said, "This conversation is ending now."

"Well, since those dark days she's brought up a family with me. Stability. Yeah, I'm happy to leave. I would not want to stay a minute longer in present company. As I say: if she's abandoned me and the children, she's out."

Aardse left, as did Peter and Adam, from the building, the two talking as they did.

So with him gone, I fancied a night out with my wife.

"Soft drinks for me only," said Allie. "Annie bangs back the Theddle Pale Ale."

"Three of us then? I'm proud of you, Allie, I really am."

"Four, with Megan the barmaid. Marie Healand might be along as well."

So we both put on some leathers, as worn on the initial trip out on the honeymoon.

Narrator: Allie Discipline (Saturday to Sunday 1st March)

Four of us plus Megan behind the bar were out on Saturday night.

Marie Healand said she'd provide sperm for me but as part of her one-woman business. So we could pay her directly or even do it on camera with Annie present too and have viewers pay over a three hour session. It was so unappealing regarding the purpose. It would cost two hundred minimum for a fuck in the privacy of our bedroom.

It turned out that Megan had taken her new cocker spaniel called Stoke next door several times now.

We returned to our own supper and bed together, to be ready for Sunday's services. We did look at Annie and Marie online, doing a late night session. Adam was not messaging and not tipping, but many did.

'Transitory' produced over 'Headgirl', and it was the cue to switch off our anonymous viewing.

Linda said, "Have we done the right thing? She is enormous when erect and there was plenty there."

"Near the camera," I said. "Compare her hands to her head."

Next morning, Linda and I took less part in the service, it being 'after the honeymoon'; Peter led the service and gave the sermon, but Linda conducted the Eucharist with me involved in serving. In the congregation of seven was a certain Abigail Randall.

Peter's sermon discussed the difference between objective minimalism and subjective richness, and that the latter collapses into a kind of self-referential postmodernism no longer transcending in a unified form. He contrasted a creedless tradition of purity via minimalism and an institutional memory, against the retention of symbols and forms of poetic feeling. One was a religious humanism and the other was a playful content. To give his own preference he quoted Rowan Williams from a You Tube video:

"If you try you end up with a very very thin kind of Christian picture, you end up with a sort of doctrine that it's nicer to be nice than be nasty." (Williams, 2015)

He said this encouraged a kind of excess wrapping paper dishonesty, of having content for the sake of content. It brings theology into disrepute.

Narrator: Allie Discipline (Sunday 1st March)

Afterwards, with me alongside, it was Linda who asked Abigail why she was still in Serninsea.

"I met colleagues in Wytham, and have been working from Yojana Asthana's guest house. As I am now based in Bristol, I could be your external examiner, Allie. I had a look around places in some of the papers you've sent to Roland."

So I asked when she was going back to Bristol.

"When I have been your representative in sorting out your departure from Taunton Tantria."

Linda asked her to explain.

"Allie here made commitments to Taunton Tantria that she has ignored with continuity impacts among the Serninsea Vestal Virgins. She could have sought understanding from the group but ignored the gathering. Now she has to ask them if she can continue membership."

"That's easy: I'm not continuing membership."

"The group is meeting. Have the decency to attend its disciplinary procedures."

Linda said, "Hang on. The only disciplinary procedures Allie will face here are the ones within our bethel and within our marriage."

"Hey?" I asked.

"I will be your advocate," Abigail said.

Linda asked, "Shouldn't I be her advocate?"

"No. You are not a member of any of the groups. I am a member of The Milks Bristol group."

"Very droll," said Linda. "Carry on."

"You have an active membership demand that needs settling."

Carrie Chopin came into the building, and Abigail went to meet her.

Linda said to me, "I don't like this one bit."

"Oh, I'll go along with it."

Abigail returned. "Allie, wear the translucent gown brought for you; undress and put it on in the cloaks area. Bare feet as well."

Linda called over Kathleen and Winnie (as I walked away), reminding them that they were members of her Church clergy as well as in the Vestal Virgins and should treat me as a colleague.

Processing in were Paige Tuck, in charge of the eternal light, Carrie Chopin, Beth Gorge, Hattie Schepsutte, Kathleen Lott, Winnie Lott, Gloria Mabaso and then Olive Breslin - Ollie - from Taunton Tantria and indeed Abigail Randall (from Bristol Milks). Every one of them, including Abby, had hanging discs. I followed in at the end, the shutters were closed and we occupied the chapel area in private. They were sat on seats in an oval shape. Abigail came to me.

"Sit on the floor at the far end." (This was the end opposite the mikveh.)

"What's that?" I asked her, pointing between her legs.

"It was done this week, as Bristol has just taken up the practice started here, and Taunton has already added it. Now go to the far end of this chapel space and we'll bring you forward later."

"Can I say hello to Ollie?"

"No you cannot."

Carrie Chopin stood and asked Olive to introduce herself, sitting as Ollie stood up.

"I am Olive Breslin of Taunton Tantria. I bring greetings from Taunton Tantria members. I am here to deal prayerfully and with justice the matter of the lost Fighter of Concern and Member of Taunton Tantria group, Alfia Shrimpton, accused here and now of not maintaining the commitments she gave to be an active participant in my group or its associates such as yours."

Carrie took over, standing as Ollie sat down. "So this is a meeting to discuss a 'Period of Absence without Explanation'. This group passed a resolution on 22nd November expecting Allie Shrimpton to participate in our meetings, with an understanding that she might explain research requirements that prevented her activity. She continued to ignore us but now we have her here to explain her absence and if she wishes to resume. Our 'Ritual of Restoration' will have to take place if Alfia is accepted back for committed participation.

"Before we proceed to the trial, I ask for any other concerns."

Hattie Schepsutte stood. "Please consider in your prayers Bishop Linda Shrimpton's long-time friend, Diana-de-Groot, who has seemingly abandoned her family in pursuit of a passionate relationship with a woman met online in forums for the book and television show The Jacobite Gap Years. Nevertheless, we hope Allie enjoyed her honeymoon."

I wondered how she found out about this, but at Taunton Tantria they listened to gossip and personal news and had ways to then reduce the extent of the chatter to essentials. So Kathleen and Winnie must have passed this on.

Hattie now said, "Klärchen Sisse, of concern previously, has separated from Salome Lichtbau, and this has been a difficult separation. It was thought they might get back together, but they haven't. We gather that they continue to have extreme relationships with their dogs. Here Megan Furley is of particular concern, having purchased a dog she's called Stoke and made anti-man statements. They are making solid efforts to keep now three dogs in contact. We know that Allie Shrimpton here is named by Salome..."

"None of this is true," I said.

Abigail responded, "Be quiet."

Hattie continued, "Nevertheless, Allie Shrimpton here has been named by Salome Lichtbau as disturbing their partnership. Paige, can you please investigate this and return to us next time with some more detail? All of us need to pray for Klärchen Sisse, Salome Lichtbau and Megan Furley.

"Finally we pray for recent marriages, including our own Kath and Winnie, Kath's sister and Peter Marshall, and Allie to Linda."

"We move to the trial," said Carrie, stood again. First, I want to give thanks to Olive making such an effort to come here from Taunton. Hattie, with help from Abigail's extensive notes brought here, will join with Olive to compile a full report on this trial to be delivered to Taunton Tantria. Hattie will go there and represent us. They could reject our decision but would have to have good reasons.

"Kathleen, Winnie, Hattie and Ollie please carry Allie to here and lay her on her back on the ground. Abigail please also put your hand under her back for symbolic and actual support."

"I can walk."

"Be quiet," Abby said.

Thus it was I was lifted from the far end of the chapel to where they were sitting, and I looked up to the ceiling. I was, of course, visibly naked underneath the standard covering they used.

Carrie said, "I confirm that, at our feet, is the member who has been absent without notice or explanation. Who gives the charge of misconduct?"

Carrie sat as Olive rose. "I do. It is that Alfia Shrimpton has been 'Absent without Explanation' regarding this and any connected group. Indeed she has been wilful in her shunning of us. She has neglected her duty as a Fighter of Concern. We must decide what to do about her."

Olive sat and Carrie rose. "This is a clear and evident accusation. Who represents her here regarding her explanation and mitigation? Please now deliver your defence, which I understand is to be extensive."

I am Abigail Randall of Milks Bristol, formerly of Taunton Tantria. I bring greetings from Milks Bristol' members. I shall be her self-appointed counsel due to her non-participation.

"My biography and the details of me introducing Alfia to the Taunton Tantria group have been given to members earlier in the week. It tells you that we had a sexual relationship when she was an undergraduate at the University of Somerset and this continued until I left for my post at Bristol. You should also know, as privileged and confidential information, that before coming here Allie underwent all three degrees of ordination at the Creech Moorlinch Coven. This involved her professor and me as Grand Wizard and Grand Witch respectively and explains why we two were ritually naked at their wedding, as was she. Her wife is a naturist anyway. Therefore, Alfia Shrimpton became an ordained High Priest or witch able to establish her own coven. I wish to use this matter in her defence regarding matters of commitment."

Abby sat. Carrie said, "Please go into detail. Membership of other groups is important and so is their ritual performance."

Carrie sat and Abigail stood.

"I have extensive notes; in fact they are liturgical writings from the time, and I shall refer to these. This may take some time but I want to give a full picture of the ritual and therefore the powers we gave to Alfia Shrimpton. I will use Pagan names within the Coven.

"In a neighbouring room inside Grand Wizard High Priest Roland Sunbright's house, a second level priest George Swordsmith dealt with the necessity of Allie signing first initiation consent forms. For the first initiation, George Swordsmith undressed Allie and bound Allie's wrists and he attached a blindfold.

"In our room I wore an open gown displaying my body. My Pagan status and name was and is Grand Witch High Priest Abigail Bloodred. (My period can be a very deep, even dark, red.) I drew a circle using an athame around a tin bath the assembled group were filling with water to three inches. I gave a purification blessing by pouring salt into the water.

"Roland Sunbright, also in an open gown displaying his body, went to collect Allie. He sprinkled water over Allie, saying, 'I exorcise you, creature of fire, to renew our world, so that nothing may harm us.'

"George Swordsmith and Roland Sunbright brought Allie in, and I said, 'I summons the East, South, West, and North.'

"Roland Sunbright described how Alfia Shrimpton, previously known as Alice Rogers, had learnt about Wicca as an undergraduate. We in the Coven had decided that her knowledge and future adventure warranted her being ordained to the highest level for her self-development and for benefit to others, especially to run a coven.

"He described our practice in the Creech Moorlinch Coven as Eclectic Witchcraft: ordained into it, our initiate would use this. To inform you in the SVV: we approve of Kitchen Witchcraft, to use herbs and natural means for the betterment of others; we inherit forms of Gardnerian Witchcraft, so that we do maintain a coven.

"She was asked if she accepted initiations, or ordinations, of her own free will, and she agreed - just as she had joined Taunton Tantria. She affirmed and stated that she understood ritual magick as beneficial for others and herself.

"She was told - remember she was blindfolded - that there was a bath and enough water in it to seep into her yoni when sat. Everyone attending was either initiated or about to be initiated. They were invited to touch Allie's flesh in helping her get in and sit down. Members then added in herbs and oils and poured in some more water over her back and breasts. George Swordsmith lit incense and I waved a candle around Allie.

"Then everyone, except Allie, chanted, 'Blessed be your mind to learn of the ways; blessed be your eyes to see; blessed be your lips, to speak in beauty and keep secrets; blessed be your breasts, that they feed and enrich sexual pleasure; blessed be your yoni, that it is receives and gives pleasure and may be the gateway to renew the human species; blessed be your knees, to kneel at the altar; blessed be your feet, to walk the sacred way.'

"George Swordsmith and I helped Allie to get out of the bath but we asked her to kneel alongside it.

"George Swordsmith addressed her new identity: 'We have Alfia, a beautiful woman who is on the sacred road. She wishes to know the mysteries of this coven, to honour the divine. Do we have a name for her?'

"I said, 'She is to be known as Alice Moonbright, within the sacred circle. This reflects her name closest to birth and her optimism.'

"Allie repeated her name, at which point the blindfold came off and the cords were cut.

"High Priest Roland Sunbright, who was semi-erect through the gown opening and close to her mouth, told her that she would be guided on her travels through the principles and purposes of this coven. She accepted these principles, to become reborn to begin this journey.

"He said, 'Apprentice Priest Alice Moonbright, come from your knees and stand. Kiss me, High Priest Roland Sunbright; kiss High Priest Abigail Bloodred; kiss Priest George Swordsmith.'

"George Swordsmith put a robe around her and I gave her an athame to keep. Roland Sunbright told her that she had been reborn into the new life of an Apprentice Witch and invited everyone to kiss and hug her.

"With that I introduced the second degree ordination and George Swordsmith put her gown and athame to one side. He also organised the necessary paperwork of consent.

"Standing outside the circle, Alice Moonbright pointed at one of the goblets. She'd chosen one with a hot, bitter taste. She consumed it and it created a pain in her stomach and made her bend in agony.

"George Swordsmith told her to stand up straight and walk around the circle three times and face me.

"Alice Moonbright said she needed to go to the toilet.

"I said this would force her to leave the circle, so George Swordsmith gave her the other goblet asking her to stay in. It would calm the stomach. Of course it was the same, causing her to clamp her bottom cheeks together and bend over.

"She couldn't resist and ran out to the toilet and the result was all very audible. George Swordsmith took a sponge to assist Alice Moonbright in making her backside clean.

In the meantime we arranged four candles at compass points with water filled bowls alongside. The Apprentice Priest came back into the circle.

"High Priest Roland Sunbright told her that sometimes, in all practicality, one must leave the sacred circle to return later.

"I then gestured to two forward candles, that one was of the sun and one was of the moon. The other two were of the day and the night. Night is simply the shadow side - not evil - that shows the struggle. Even then, there is some light in darkness, as there is gloom in much light.

"Roland Sunbright took hold of her hands, briefly, and now we addressed the lights according to their compass positions.

"The eastern light represented learning, art and craft, poetry, song, instrumental music. He asked her to accept the blessing of the East. That's when she dipped her fingers in the water alongside.

"I took her hands briefly and said that the southern light represented life and energy, individuality, zeal, and vitality for desires, passions, and appetites. We love and hate, but we have joy. So this was the blessing of the South and she dipped her fingers in that bowl.

"George Swordsmith took her hands briefly and said that the western light is for compassion. It is for gift over contract. She should allow for failures - theirs and hers - and in the same way she accepted the blessing of the west.

"So it was back to Roland Sunbright to take her to the northern flame, which was for obedience. There are proper times when to obey, as in obeying the findings of wisdom and experience. She should identify the masters of learning and wisdom, and follow them. Once again she accepted the blessing.

"I then said, 'The world may perish but the lamps of beauty, life, compassion and obedience will continue to shine.

Apprentice Priest Alice Moonbright went on to say, 'I pledge at this circle and all it represents to be true always to the Art and its secrets, to never abuse the Art or her own powers, and to keep this pledge always in mind, body, and spirit.

"Roland Sunbright announced that she had completed the second initiation and was a Priest. She was then warned that the third level involved penetrative sexual contact and a life force deposit. She could stop now. She replied that she was on the pill and willing to proceed. So, of course, there was more paperwork to do with George.

"She said to Roland Sunbright, as she lay on her front naked within the sacred circle, 'I've always wanted this,' but he pointed out that she was wrong in attitude in that this whole ceremony was purely ritualistic.

"The first part was a whipping using three strikes from a cat o'nine tails by the High Priests. I went first. She lay down on her front with her legs widened and I struck her upwards between them. Unfortunately she swore and High Priest Roland Sunbright paused the proceeding and told her not to use such language and indeed to remain silent. I then continued. After my further two he delivered three accurate sharp whippings.

"Then he declared that he was dissatisfied with my whippings, and I had to do all three again. He'd be satisfied only by Alice Moonbright staying silent and still, which she did."

"Everyone, I told her to stand and face us as High Priests, we standing side by side.

"Roland Sunbright said that after the ritual purification, through punishment, we give love, so everyone kissed Alice Moonbright on the mouth with intensity, laying hands over her body.

"After this Roland Sunbright picked up an athame and pointed it at her vulva. He said that her vagina within is the centre of her bodily power, and the origin of all things and that we adore it. With that he dropped to his knees and kissed her on the pubic area. Then I did the same.

"At this point Priest Alice Moonbright was instructed to lie on her back with the position of the Vitruvian Man. I removed my open robe that George took away and knelt over her breasts facing her feet. I proceeded to separate her labia and licked her there.

"I said, 'Marvel beyond imagination what you see: entry to infinite space, beyond any shame, glorious in its architecture, bewildering, the container of love and giver of new life.' I then announced her penetration by the male Grand Wizard High Priest Roland Sunbright, facilitated by the female Grand Witch High Priest - myself - Abigail Bloodred.'

"I squatted over her mouth and told her to use her tongue to receive any liquid to come from my yoni. I felt her tongue make contact with my inner flesh. Roland Sunbright positioned himself opposite direction to me and went into her, penetrated her. I was able to kiss him on the mouth as he attended to the ritual.

"He said, 'By sacred seed and root, and stem and bud, and flower and fruit, do I invoke you, queen of space, dew of body, in your avenue to your holy womb.

"I said, 'By dew from my holy body, down the avenues, liquids of my life falling, do I invoke you with sacred sustenance.'

"It was a little urine, everybody, and she swallowed it.

"I went on, 'The Gods and Goddesses be praised! Let us work to make her glad and glorious, and we know she can be held in this state of ecstasy.'

"Roland Sunbright was thrusting with effort, his hands flat to the ground, when Priest George Swordsmith started kneading her breasts.

"I think the whole situation led to our Priest initiate enjoying several climaxes, but we were giving her energy, not removing it. He delivered his sperm and it went on its way within her body.

"Roland Sunbright instructed her to stand for The Ninefold Kiss from him:

around her vulva three times, each nipple once, her mouth, her stomach and on top of each foot. I then did the same, and some of his dribbling sperm was on my lips.

"Everyone came forward to hug Alice Moonbright, one by one.

"Roland Sunbright then declared that she had been changed ontologically for all time. The divine had transformed her. He declared her a High Priest.

"I, Abigail Bloodred, then stated that we should encourage her, let her blood enrich, let her light shine, for there is no part of us that is not divine. I told Alice Moonbright to walk around the circle as a sign of acceptance.

"On her arrival both of us as Grand Wizard and Grand Witch held a necklace and placed it together over her head, a token of a circle. She was to wear it as a sign of commitment to all the principles and purposes of the coven.

"We two then closed the circle, declaring together, 'The Great Rite is over. For you, Alice Moonbright, receive Magickal Amulets and Talismans for magickal enhancement.' George Swordsmith brought over these further items on a silver tray. The most important was a wand made of wood, to cast a circle. There was also a Book of Spells, more of a liturgical book. It was explained that she could now initiate others, either alone or with the direct assistance of others from the second degree Priest upwards. I told her that she now possessed a high divine power of sexual expression, and that her intimacy is not to be used lightly or irreverently.

"With the circle closed George Swordsmith blew out the candles. We all left the room and gathered for a party, suitably clothed again.

"Ladies, since coming here Alfia Shrimpton has been inactive as a witch. We did not expect her to become active immediately because of her research work. Indeed, one person in the coven, then a second level witch, and now a third level High Priest, was missing by the decision of the High Priests. This person is now resident in Serninsea. Had Alice Moonbright known this, she would have been obliged to meet and carry out a ritual of starting a coven here."

"Who is she?" I asked.

"Be quiet. I do all the talking unless you are asked specifically to respond."

"You've let a large cat out of the bag."

"I told you to be quiet and if you don't zip it you will be removed. My point is, everyone, that these rituals are very powerful and commitment forming, and yet she was expected to be - huh - quiet in this location until her research ended. And it is my defence that you treat her the same, despite her commitment to Taunton Tantria that should have transferred here."

Abby sat and Carrie stood. "Can you give a character reference?"

Carrie sat and Abigail stood, who said, "Yes. I am aware that many of you have found Allie cold, unresponsive and ignorant of reasonable demands to explain her inactivity herself to this group. In defence, I would put this down to her extreme interpretation of participant observation, a research method where the researcher tries to both blend in and not affect proceedings of the group under study to minimise her impact on activities and decisions. Indeed, her professor Roland Mitton - who has the Pagan name of Roland Dunbright - later advised her to be more relaxed in how she presented a neutral face. Her dedication to her research has therefore come at a cost to other commitments including emotional. She has both failed to attend and participate here and, as explained, has not taken up any activities as an ordained witch.

"I also ask you to be considerate of someone alone in a new town until she fixed her relationship with Bishop Linda, to whom she is now married. Do not speak, Allie. You have indeed prayed for Allie's welfare, aware of her drinking to excess and her sexual activities that were commercial and a continuation from her time in Glastonbury and Taunton.

"She has made friends with Annie Fenwick, frequently a person of concern here and also the next door neighbour, Klärchen Sisse."

"We are called always to be compassionate."

Abigail sat and Carrie rose to ask Olive to respond, and so Olive was the one standing to speak.

"This representation by Abigail Randall is not adequate. Allie could have informed us at Taunton or here. She has run away yet again. Presumably she did not simply turn up under cover at her research. She told people what she was doing and she could have attended here to describe her needs."

Abby rose as Olive sat. "But this would have required attendance and she did not want anyone to know the connection. And I should point out that our groups have failed to be sufficiently secretive. Initially they were to work unknown, but they have become more known over time. So her strategy was non-involvement. Allie is becoming more stable now. She is intending to be pregnant, if she's not already. I will sit, Olive."

Olive stood and said, "Her breasts will deliver milk in due course. Members should share in her breast milk. We have our communions. She should give us her commitment to share her milk when it comes."

Now it was Carrie standing up. "This could only be if we accept her back. Does this conclude the accusation and defence and responses? Then we need to move on to questions. Alfia Shrimpton, get off your back and sit on your bottom, staying on the floor. The questions will be answered by your counsel; she may consult you. Olive, give any questions."

Olive was the one now standing, "I see no disc. Is she pierced?"

Ollie sat; Abby rose. "No," she replied for me. "I only got my own this last week."

Olive up and Abby down, she asked, "She will be pierced, though, and accept the disc?"

Abigail asked, "I will consult the lost member."

"No," I replied, as Abby stood.

"No?"

"No!"

"You must!"

"I won't. And by the way, my breast milk would be for our baby - and Linda, if she wants some. By the way, I'm not pregnant yet."

Abby (still stood) asked, "Do you have a sperm donor as such?"

"It's being arranged among candidates."

"Who are they?"

"Mind your own business," I replied.

Kathleen rose so Abigail sat. "I think I know."

I said from the floor (and my bottom on it), "You want to keep your trap shut."

Kathleen said, "I will speak to Carrie later."

Carrie rose so Kathleen sat.

"I insist you tell us, here and now, because this member is under discipline and we need all relevant evidence."

Kathleen rose. "Roger Humphrey is a sperm donor already; he lives quietly with his sister in the bethel and he could provide sperm; Marie Healand is a trans woman with an online performing penis; the Reverend Georgie Smith - recently revealed as transgender - declined; and there is her distant cousin and one time marriage-prospect, Jonathan Jenner."

I said, quietly, "Tell-tale tit."

Abigail rose and said, "Be all that as it may, I advise that the lost member will not get a piercing through her clitoris hood. Given that this is becoming the necessary practice, I don't see how we can proceed. We have negotiations with some women in the south west."

Carrie stood as Abby sat. "Yes but this is the same attitude as before from our lost member. One of these donors will make her pregnant and she refuses to let us share in her breast milk. She won't wear the disc. She remains rebellious even if we accommodated these divergences. Therefore we may as well cease; we cannot but eject her. We must dismiss her and banish her, and she would go without honour. Does anyone dissent?"

Abigail said, rising, "As her representative, I should dissent but I do not. I note that no one else is dissenting." Abigail sat down on her seat.

"I do," said Kathleen, standing. "She did not adjust to this area well, and has developed attitudes we should meet with compassion." Kathleen sat.

"Oh, I do, same reason" said Winnie, also standing and sitting.

Carrie rising said, "Then we must vote."

Raising their hands, Abigail and Olive both voted to have me removed. Kathleen and Winnie did not vote for or against.

Carrie said, "Olive, as someone from Taunton Tantria, I ask you to remove from her body the signs and symbols of attachment to our cause. This amounts only to the covering she is wearing. We shall then cast her out, naked and lost."

So, from my sat position, Olive Breslin removed the gown made of computer wrapping. I was told to leave on all fours; they'd open the screens a little to let me go out like that.

Instead I stood up and said, "Don't bother." I opened the screens myself.

Outside, I left them open, so they were closed by two of them.

I met Linda, as if from behind me, who beckoned me to follow her to the vestry.

"I was listening," she said. "You're best out of it. But I have a whopping big bone to pick with you."

"Go on."

"You went through third degree initiation to become a witch. You've never mentioned that once to me, including when you were ordained. Once again - once again! - you have kept things from me. I'm the one who should be punishing you; in fact no one else should except me."

"Had you known, it would have influenced things. You shouldn't have listened in like a spy."

"It's my bethel and I'll spy as I choose. Oh, and your sexual power? What's that all about?"

"I have sexual power. Haven't you noticed?"

"You believe that?"

"I'd have thought it was evident."

"It has nothing to do with becoming a witch."

"That's your opinion."

"Hmm. You need a shower. You're as grubby as fuck. They obviously think you're low-life."

"Right. I'll go to the wet room."

"Before you go: when was this ordination process?"

"Friday October 18th last year. Just before I was to come to Serninsea. I came here as a newly ordained witch. That's all you need to know."

"No it is not. I am truly getting sick of this. I am your wife, ten years older than you. I am Bishop of this Church and you are my deacon. I have a right to know."

"You're pulling rank when you're supposed to be my wife?"

"What am I to do? You've reverted to being a researcher again."

"You know the difference between a chemist and an alchemist? A chemist publishes and an alchemist keeps things to themselves. The coven is like alchemy. It's not about me being a researcher, it's about me observing the secrets of the coven."

"Like Abigail Randall told them everything? I'm waiting."

"She as High Priest chose to blab it out."

"Then so can you."

"You've heard it all! There is nothing to add. I'm a high priest, equivalent to a bishop."

As I turned to go to the wet room, Abigail came over to the vestry, still with her translucent jacket or gown on.

"Alfia Shrimpton, listen to me. As a member of Milks Bristol, formerly of Taunton Tantria, and in full alliance with Serninsea Vestal Virgins, I, Abigail Randall, as your counsel, am formally announcing to you that you have been summarily dismissed from membership and all participation in the groups Taunton Tantria and Serninsea Vestal Virgins, and all allied groups. You are no longer a Fighter of Concern. You go without honour. You are not to participate in any activity of these groups. We will, of course, pray for you and your well being."

"You are still my former lover?" I asked.

"Yes. I loved you," she replied.

"Then act like it," I said, pushing past her towards the wet room.

I went past several people milling about whom I knew, pointedly saying, "Hello!" to Olive, on my way into the wet room, where I turned on a shower hose at the wall, and had a good wash.

From there I went up two flights of stairs to the bedroom, dripping all the way, and then got some towels and did start to cry. Linda arriving said she did not need to know any more.

Narrator: Linda Allie's Secret Told (Sunday 1st March)

I said, both now in bed, as if there was a chasm in between us, "I don't know what to say. I do not know the woman I have married."

"I am the same person."

"You've allowed me to ordain you deacon, and I have thought you might have to be a bishop, and it turns out you were ordained in a different faith already."

"I rejected completely the Serninsea Vestal Virgins, but I didn't have anything to do to put aside being a witch."

"Did Rhiannon Fleetwood know you are a witch? Ha! Rhiannon is a song about a witch."

"No she didn't. Some might suspect it. Andrea does have special privileges from groups: she is a Fighter of Concern. Andrea attended Taunton Tantria."

"I don't care about her. I'm more bothered about you. This, coming after our honeymoon, no less, is like a punch in the guts. I tell you what does bother me, too. Come on, you know what it is."

"That I am still in love with Abigail Randall?"

"Well, are you?"

"It's a bit 'academic' now, to use a word."

"Here you go again. Cut the deception, Allie. Are you still in love with her?"

"Are you still in love with Diana de Groot?"

"Well, it hardly matters as she's in Scotland with some woman, yet still married to a man here - and you're doing it again. Answer me!"

"I never fell out of love with her. I've had to manage my loss."

"So if she snapped her fingers you would dump me and run after her."

"But I admired you at Margate. Abigail had dumped me by then, but she and Roland knew all about Margate. That sex in the third initiation was purely ritual."

"You orgasmed."

"But it wasn't with her feeling. She sent me to be with him overnight. He could have fucked me. He didn't. It was an exercise in being close to a body."

"Be honest. I'm your second choice."

"Linda, it's not like this. I would never have come to Serninsea if I thought Abigail could be with me. I'd have found something else to research. And there is a difference, there really is."

"Oh, do tell."

"There was never a moment where I wanted a child with Abigail. It never arose. She has shown no interest, and I didn't think about it. But I want a child with you. I want you to be the mother. I want to stay with you and bring up a child with you."

"She snaps her fingers and off you go."

"But you forget I was with Beathag after Abigail dumped me."

"I'm your third choice, then."

"Definitely not. Beathag stopped me going mad. She got me to stop drinking. But I wanted Abigail all the time. Abigail was more intelligent, shared the subjects."

"You learnt Gaelic from Beathag!"

"But she wasn't an academic. She was a secretary who could speak the language as a native speaker. This filled a void; that's what it did."

"And you were on the pill. Why?"

"Something you need to know. Like a lot of students I did some pornographic modelling for money."

"Many."

"What?"

"It's 'many' not 'a lot of' - you're not a pile of cement."

"You are when you do pornography."

"Thus your friendship with Annie, here."

"Yes, she does the full range."

"Beathag kept you because she disciplined you?"

"I think so."

"Then I should do the same. But... I won't. I'm fed up with all this."

"Perhaps you should."

"Do you love me?" I asked Allie.

"Do you love me?" Allie asked back. "You have said you do. You once said I am attractive, intellectual, artistic, and your love for me sees my reciprocity from need - which is true. You see me as energetic, and vital, offering you protection."

"Here you go again. Do you love me?"

"Yes I do," she said. "Now answer me."

"You see, with passion I should find a cane and give you a whacking. But I'm fed up. I don't know what love is."

"You don't love me, like you said you do?"

"Well, I think... All I said at our honeymoon is true. I do want to be married to you; I think we have a future; I want the child from you, but I don't know about love. You'll just have to accept it. I suppose."

"You love Diana," Allie asserted. "You'd cane her if she reappeared."

"No, I wouldn't. I seem to have these violent feelings regarding you, or I did."

"Your sense of inner violence doesn't extend to Diana?"

"Well, she's been around. She became close. We shared interests. Did I love her? She must have loved me. Inner violence? It annoys me that she kept her distance and married Aardse. Yes. I'd have welcomed her if she had only said so. But I welcomed you."

"Welcomed?"

"Welcome."

"I'm an incomer," Allie said. "I know I must earn your trust. I will let you discipline me. Abby told me to fight her. I don't want to fight you but receive your punishment."

I then said, "Nah. I've lost the will. I'm going to sleep. I'd prefer it if you don't touch me tonight."

Allie started crying. I felt little sympathy - I just didn't.

I said, "It's no good crying. We'll consider things tomorrow. I need to think. I still believe what I told you."

"My life is with you," Allie said. "I gave vows when I married you, and I said them including in front of Abby. She and Roland gave me their blessing, sky-clad, and that was to marry you. They acted as high priests to another high priest."

"Do you have a secret coven?" I asked her.

"No, and that is the truth. I have done nothing. I am inactive as a witch."

"And if you were to start a coven, would you tell me first?"

"Yes."

"And, if I wanted it, if it became relevant, would you ordain me as a witch? I suppose it would need a male high priest to fuck me."

"No it doesn't. I can do it alone. There are lesbian covens. And the answer is, 'yes,' I would ordain you. Of course I would. Like to me, I'd do you one, two and three in a row. But if I did, we would then need to make a coven - and I don't want that. On my own I am a lone witch, if active, and therefore remain part of Creech Moorlinch Coven only by a sort of legacy of attachment."

"You're not going to ordain anyone else: Annie, Marie Healand... Peter is semi-Pagan."

"No. But... There's the issue of Andrea."

"You'd do Andrea Plimpton?"

"No, it's that she could be ordained a witch already in the Creech Moorlinch Coven. If she is, we ought to be active, and really form a coven here."

"Don't you know?"

"As a high priest I should be told. But they didn't tell me and she wasn't there. But I'm not stupid."

"She is an Anglican priest. She can hardly be an ordained witch as well."

"She was a member of Taunton Tantria. She is a Fighter of Concern. She's already broken that boundary."

"When we were in Glastonbury and visited your professor, did he do a ritual with you different from the one he did with me?"

"I doubt it. The simple ritual covered the meeting and didn't demand involvement in itself. It is not like the post-Buddhist Pagan groups. They expect involvement. And I've been thrown out, Linda, and they will never take me back. Abigail is involved, still, and for all I know, so will be Andrea here. If she's not active here, in the Vestal Virgins, then it's by arrangement. I wonder if Andrea's had her clitoris hood pierced."

"You're not to try and find out."

"Why not?"

"Because you're to concentrate on me as your wife. The only yoni that should now interest you, other than your own, is mine."

"I can't see how I'd get the opportunity to see hers, but you never know. She sees mine often enough."

"You won't see hers if I say you won't. Go to sleep you complete hussy," I said to her.

"Goodnight Linda. I love you, I really do. I want whatever it is you can give me back: pain or pleasure, but not nothing."

"Witch."

Chapter 34 Procreation

Narrator: Linda Letter and Intentions (Tuesday 3rd March)

Tuesday morning disappeared in bed, with Allie munching between my legs. At a pause she said, "You do have intelligence and authority. Abigail threw me away, and I don't want you to throw me away."

"I just hope there are no more secrets."

A while later there was a knock on the bedroom door, which I missed initially because my ears were being pressed by Allie's thighs. Naked as the day, Allie jumped off the bed and opened the door to Kathleen.

"Adam is here and, by the way, Bishop Linda has some post. Unitarian General Assembly, it says on the back of one of them."

I called out from the bed, "Tell him to come up; he's seen us like this before."

Kath said, "I think he wants to talk to you downstairs."

"Oh, fuck it, I'll dress and go down, and I'll look at the post."

Downstairs, holding two unopened envelopes, I alone approached Adam. (Allie was now with Kathleen and Winnie.) He said, "Discoveries! Apparently loads of people go missing from meeting at Clava Cairns. That's why they added that fence gimmick. It is a rendezvous, a bit like Gretna Green for getting married. There's a chap up there I hired and he pushed a line that some young woman was abducted there."

"That's not true."

"It enabled him to get a screen grab of the video from the car park, and we have Sally Hughes' car number plate. It was enough to get to the owner. Sally Hughes lives in Broom of Moy by the River Findhorn, in a house called Clann Na Cloiche, or Children of the Stone. She works in Forres, and is an estate agent. Broom of Moy is a very small place. I've told Aardse and he said I can tell you."

"Findhorn, that's where there is a kind of New Age place that charges fees for courses."

"Well, I know of no connection with that. There is The Jacobite Gap Years Enactment Group. Meanwhile, Aardse as my client has decided on cutting Diana off and he will have nothing to do with her any more."

"She's been my best friend."

"Do you want to be my client instead?"

"No."

"Good answer, in so far as Aardse thinks you reignited her lesbian tendencies."

"Bullshit, Adam."

"I could do you a deal, a bit of discount. Not quite like last time, but..."

"You really have no scruples, Adam. Go back to watching Annie like a good heterosexual. Oh dear, she gets online attention from Marie. Someone else's knob. Lost your interest?"

"There you go," he said, as he started leaving. "You should know that some people beg to differ."

"What, that you do have scruples?"

"No, that you did reignite her lesbian tendencies. I mean, you did, didn't you?"

"Oh, fuck off Adam."

"What about Georgie and being aroace? They're having trouble now."

"What? What's that?"

"Ask her to supply Allie with sperm. It will make no difference to her outlook. Aroace! Poor old Charley. She can't respond to his overtures despite a shock therapy of going naked, with him too, under your influence."

"You really are reprehensible."

"Byee!"

So I opened the letters, one that renewed my driving licence, one from Charley Darley, and the other from the UGA Ministry Committee. Despite my curiosity about the latter, I read Charley's first, dated 29th February.

Dear Linda

It seems that the Unitarian General Assembly Ministry Committee has responded very positively to my representations. I said you had experience of co-operative preaching with me, have arrived at a largely unitarian theology, took your bethel into a Free Catholic (creedless) Ecclesia, and that they might consider 'head hunting' you for training to go on the UGA Ministry Roll. You should be receiving a letter from them in the near future. I told them that you could be our second group minister and would bring in your church to the group. Hope I wasn't talking out of turn.

All good wishes. Charley.

*The Rev. Charley Darley, Minister Foss Group Unitarians.
Wytham, Wulfstan, Chapel Abbey near Thermaby.*

I opened the letter sent from the denomination.

*Unitarian General Assembly Ministry Committee
The Strand House
Thursday 27th February 2020*

Dear Bishop Linda Shrimpton

We have received representations from our minister of the Foss Group Unitarians, the Rev. Charley Darley, that he would like you to join him as his colleague in the Ministry in the Group, and that you have an interest in this role and would - if offered - go through suitable training to join the UGA Ministry Roll.

If you confirm this to us, we would like to act quickly because interviews are due very soon. Normally we would expect you to fill in an application form by November last year but we have a number of vacancies for training and considerable funding support available.

To help speed up matters, we only require from you a comprehensive curriculum vitae, copies of two sermons that illustrate your theology, and any relevant material outlining issues you have faced in managing a local church. We would also counsel that ministry inevitably involves your wife's involvement and we would like to know her willingness to support.

We look forward to receiving your response quickly (you can use email) and we can then get the ball rolling. The UGA Ministry Committee constitutes the UGA Interview Panel for this year.

Yours sincerely

The Rev. Dr. Laurence Soames, Lancaster.

The Rev. Andrew Fallon, Doncaster.

The Rev. Dr. Adrian Hatch, Stirling.

The Rev. Anthony Lovatt, Skipton.

The Rev. Dr. Erika Zijderveld, Rotterdam.

"Rotterdam? Haven't they got any female minister in the UK?" I asked no one out loud.

I needed a meeting of our clergy to get off a rapid reply. I fancied a positive response. Even if it was training and subsequently a part time post it might give me some income from trust funds. I showed Allie the letters first; after all, the wife was included.

Allie had showered so I had a shower and both of us had breakfast together.

I sent a message to Charley Darley, to hear that he was in Lude, so could come south to us quite rapidly.

Notifying Adam of the meeting, he said he wanted to have the business end present, so he came along with Ann and Labhaoise. I put aside our minor disagreement.

Kathryn chose to take the minutes and we had Allie, Peter, Kathleen and Winnie. Guests Bill and Pauline came in as well. Christine was busy in London. Bishop Margaret Lindbeck popped up on video link.

I began, "So this is an emergency meeting only because I need to respond rapidly to a letter." In fact I read both of them out.

Allie said, "Go for it."

"If I do this, I want another bishop made here and it's time to make the deacons priests. I'd like your involvement, Bishops Bill and Pauline, and Christine, to give them equality of status with me. No problem, Margaret?"

"We have mixtures of apostolic and otherwise, but we do treat them equally."

"On this occasion," I said, "the next one should be like me."

Charley Darley arrived, with Georgie Smith (who sat out), and so his attendance only was added to the list.

"I think we want you in," he said almost out of turn, sitting down.

"It means training, if they accepted me, and then giving the Foss Group the attention it needs."

"It would benefit you if we swapped this Sunday," said Charley. "And for you to take our funds-securing service at Chapel Alley in the evening."

"Sure," I said.

"There'll be nobody there, but it secures the pot - four a year and a big payment from the entertainers."

Adam now spoke. "This is starting to sound like money. We set up this church, this Bethel as you now call it, and it was supposed to pay its way. The only activity that seems to be with a good income stream is the massaging service done by Kathryn and Kathleen, and occasionally Winnie. What's happening to the rest?"

I said, "It is a church, Adam. So we run our kind of cafe, and it is getting increasingly popular. We do have our prices, but the fact is we check people a bit for benefits, and we do offer cut price and even no price food. People need this, Adam, and the effect is that the cafe barely breaks even, and it wouldn't at all if we didn't have the college students doing practicals here in learning to produce a really good variety of food."

"This building is a facility," he said. "Who uses it?"

"We do get some payments from the Vestal Virgins, but I made it clear they were here without charge. This remains, despite how they treated Allie."

"No issue with me," said Allie.

Winnie said, "That was done properly. We volunteered a small payment. It is a great base. I'm sure we can increase our payment, but we cannot talk out of turn, can we Kath?"

"No."

"My naturist group doing Gymnology pays a rent for meeting. But the fact is, Adam, that many of us here live basically on expenses: if we had proper wages the place would sink. I was once a paid, salaried, Anglican priest, and lived in luxury compared with now. Allie's paintings don't exactly flow off the production line either, and it's not long before her Ph.D funding she receives is finishing. We eat from our own kitchen because, frankly, it's all we can afford."

Bill replied, "We pay an access fee to secure us use of the whole place as we need. Christine is reluctant to pay for a theological or rather ecclesiastical model she disapproves of. We are Liberal even Old Catholics, and that stands for something, and this place clearly isn't."

"Of which she disapproves," I muttered. "Rabbi Neptune still pays a small amount."

Adam said, "Well, what bothers me is that the Bethel has made no attempt to generate money making schemes."

I said, "I'm trying to build a parish church, effectively."

"The old Presbyterian model," said Charley Darley.

"What?" I asked.

"You'll need to know this. The Puritans who were Presbyterians, rather than Independents, who from the James the First declaration of indulgence, and onwards - they tried to develop a parish ethos, as the Anglicans had. The Independents: they were separatists, with demands to declare your beliefs. Georgie can tell you more."

"I see you're nodding, Peter."

Georgie kept quiet.

Charley said, "Peter here is one of yours, but he's been one of ours, if online, for longer."

"Yeah yeah. Well, my point is, we have the cafe, we have the massages, and we have tried courses. Creating a theological institute is a possibility - but these are hardly money spinners. One might think of the Triatna group of Buddhists and their ethical businesses. What about a craft business or something like that? I'm just talking off the top of my head."

"The point is," Adam said, "Ann and I have to decide again to put a cash injection into this church. We need money to come from this place, not money sinking into it. The bills do not pay themselves. The place is heated all day and night, we have the lights on, there's the Internet and communications, and the maintenance, including your mikveh for that matter and its water supply."

I had to ask, "Are you threatening us with closure?"

Here Ann answered, directly, "No. Adam is being dramatic but we would like to see something. Christine makes money: she has a theological rationale, she tells me, for all that she does, and that means money comes into her Church. We ought to see the same here."

Allie said, "She's a prostitute."

Pauline said, "Steady on!"

Allie responded, "What's she doing in London now?"

"Er..."

I said, "Well, my theological rationale means it is difficult for money to come rolling into this church. And we don't get anything from Durham nor give it."

Margaret on scene intercepted: "We would like to send a bill for basic administration."

"Of course."

"We have our own financial issues: we don't have a Bethel like you do. It's just people's houses."

Adam asked, "Linda, Charley, how would your training and being a UGA minister bring in money?"

Charley answered, "Because it releases a whole load of historical trust based funds. They pay towards her training, they pay towards necessities and development projects. Obviously you cannot be like existing Presbyterian chapels like mine. We have three chapels as you know, and one of them is all but defunct, but so long as we provide four services a year there, we tap into corporate funds."

I asked, "How did you set that up? We here could ask for sponsorship."

"Do it," said Adam.

Charley did not name the entertainers paying the dosh: "The international media corporation wasn't there then, but it is now, and it has legal legacies, and we benefit. I have a salary and my salary comes from the ancestors."

Adam said, "We have a practical idea, here. Write off for sponsorship and join their mob."

"Right!" I replied.

The upshot of the meeting so far was I would accept the invitation from the UGA Ministry Committee to send in my CV, plus some sermons, and Allie would give her approval as my wife. We voted to ordain everyone up.

I said, "I further propose Peter becomes a second bishop."

He said, "It's too big a leap for me; I propose Allie instead. Keep it in the family."

I said, "But you link us to the Unitarians, and you are theologically informed."

"So is she informed, and we want someone not linked to the Unitarians - except by marriage."

The clergy agreed with Peter rather than me, their bishop, Allie staying neutral.

When the meeting was over, I went to speak to Georgie alone.

"Tell me, if you can, given what I am to do, about your relationship with Charley."

"Purely friendship."

"Not any more?"

"Spit it out, Linda. You mean you still want sexual conduct?"

"You're uncomfortable with sex?"

"Why is this relevant to your application?"

"Is it you or him, then?"

"You want to have sex with him?"

"No! Can you, without feeling, donate sperm to Allie?"

"I've told you before. I had gender dysphoria. Just before university, I took testosterone blockers and then oestrogen. I've taken these ever since. My breasts grew, such as they are - you've seen them - and I've lost body hair and have a more female shape. But I've had less sexual desire, and it suited me in ministry. Charley and I have notes to share on transitioning, we started debating religion, but he seeks another sexual partner."

"I'm sorry to have asked again."

"To put it crudely, I can ejaculate. Now you keep this to yourself: he helped me but it took a very long time and I felt nothing, and I really rather doubt there is anything to come out worth having. He is sexually responsive but his husband cannot accept the changes he has made so far. He gave me the ability to look at myself and think seriously about a vaginoplasty - I'm told they are incredibly good these days. I'd have needed perhaps a year's study leave or something to do it earlier in life when wearing a skirt was enough. I was a dedicated minister, and why I tried hard to stay close to Bernard Manning's theology."

"I'm sorry to have asked you again."

"If you keep going on I might just do it."

"Would you?"

"For goodness sake! Give it a rest, Linda."

There was enough time for me to go out, get the post office, and have my picture taken, like I did once for my driving licence.

Narrator: Allie Money Making Resisted (Saturday 14th March)

In Somerset I was awarded Ph.D funding from various institutions and education trusts - postgraduate support, sociological, theological, cultural - and so I did build an income this way. There was enough to live on. However, as an undergraduate it was loans and more loans.

Female students going into sex work were sometimes called Blunkett Babes. Given my experience with Jonathan, it didn't matter to me if someone unknown did the deed. So I found an agency and Taunton had the odd studio. Yes, I had another secret from Linda: my video name then was Jilly Rogered, near my old surname once I'd changed my surname.

Annie Fenwick, despite her intelligence, was at the serious end of the business, and no doubt was building capital. She was affording driving lessons. Her example was Bishop Christine.

Although I could live more easily and cheaply in Serninsea, top-ups to my income would be really useful. So I followed Annie to the Car Showroom, where we joined six women and about twenty men. These men were very poorly paid.

The chap at the way in wanted me to take part, and I'd get three hundred pounds.

Then someone said, "I recognise you. You're Jilly, aren't you?"

"I think you might be confusing me with someone else."

Nevertheless, Annie stared at me. I shook my head at her, and used my eyes as if he was a nutter or something.

Annie did not know my previous performing name. However, the one person in Serninsea who did know I had done sex work was Andrea Lindsey, my GP in Taunton and now here.

Inside, there were cushioned benches to lay on, with plastic sheeting laid on the floor (that meant urine and spilling semen), and this was going to be an endurance session, with Annie in the lead role.

One man, Benny Hard was joined by Roger Them, and they penetrated Annie for ten minutes before this other woman Cathy Kund went alongside starting with Stiff Willey. My first man was an unknown local.

Into the session I noted this man had stayed solid, so he said it was Viagra doing its job. Soon all six women were on their backs, and soon came a point to note our positions and have a short break.

The fact that these blokes were drinking an excessive amount of water indicated what was coming. In my case I too had several water bottles.

So we resumed where we'd left off, and rapidly the blokes started changing positions among us and we six were surrounded. The women started to relieve themselves. One woman was called Jet Force, understandably.

The sex display in all lasted above two hours, not including the break, and the end of the one and a half hours DVD part was a mayhem of an orgy and the usual ejaculations male and female, though the female ones were fake.

That done all we participants, where the badly paid males continued to grope us, and as if nothing had happened Annie headed off for webcam work to join Marie Healand.

But this was how I wasn't in debt when I became a postgraduate student and I didn't want to be in debt now. I reverted to my name Jilly Rogered in these productions.

Before A Ban (Sunday 15th March)

After Allie was unresponsive and even grumpy all night, I asked her what was the matter.

"Money. Like you were saying."

"You were with Annie. I thought you enjoyed her company."

"She has a lifestyle. She can do nothing all day and then go off to do the camera thing again."

"You're more familiar with this than you've been letting on. Suppose I want to view your Glastonbury work on DVD. Do I look for Allie Shrimpton Entertains?"

"Don't be daft. Anyway, it's Taunton."

"So how about Allie Does Taunton?"

"I wasn't Allie Shrimpton, or even Allie only."

"You changed your name as an undergraduate!"

"But not for that."

"Alice Rogers Rogers Roger."

"Not quite. Hardly."

"So was 'Gael' early then?"

"Well, I chose to learn Gaelic, so 'Gael' was always appropriate. The more men and the fewer women, the more we were paid. So there was a compromise. Lots of men and a group of women students. We had to be busy and show enthusiasm."

"Well, in your new, shining, busy, ethical life of now, we have our exchange today. So it's time to go to Wytham."

The Rev. Charley Darley travelled over to Serninsea as we went west. I took the morning service at the Unitarian chapel, assisted by my wife, receiving the pay for a reverend. I wanted my sermon to have up to the minute relevance.

"It's so good to be back with you today, but I fear this exchange will not happen again for some time. These are uncertain times indeed. A Coronavirus, the Novel Covid, has caught up with us. From tomorrow we will have self-isolation keeping us to where we live, and what is being called social distancing for essential purposes when we mix in public. The government is stopping non-essential contact with others and ending all unnecessary travel. People should work from home if they can.

"Where I live it is one place of three couples in residence, and my associate who owns the building suggests that we won't even be able to have contact with whom we associate in another part of our coastal town. Only by doing essential shopping at the same time can we not quite bump into each other.

"What of churches? A church is a place of social gathering: and yet surely this church, and our church, like all churches, will not meet. We have a kitchen and we provide food, and yet no one will be able to come for it, to sit down and chat to friends.

"The Community Kitchen we run, basically after a Sikh model, is something we must continue. We'll do breakfasts and evening dinners, distributed outside in containers. We the clergy will help with the breakfasts. As for the core, specialist activity, I think we are going to have to exploit technology. We'll have to go online: your place and ours.

"I used to be an Anglican. I see that the Archbishop of All England, the Most Reverend William Blair Rothach, sometimes called William Kantos Albion, and the Most Reverend David James Fraser, sometimes called David Eoforwic Albion, are giving a joint presentation outlining that Anglican church services will be suspended, and their churches will not be opened for private prayer despite the government allowing this possibility.

"I think we will have our doors open in Serninsea, but we are going to make sure people sit far apart, and there won't be a choice of refreshments on site. This is subject to renewal..

"For a long time your place fought for the liberty to be able to meet and to worship as it pleased. We are going to lose these liberties. This is quite a thought, isn't it, of non-contact and not meeting. What we fought for we came to take for granted, and now we are going to lose it, and we'll know what we have lost."

I was disappointed to have presented a theology-free sermon.

Allie and I also had our service time down at Chapel Alley. Charley Darley was going in person to Wulfstan, to advise the people there in that chapel. All I had to do, for him and his funding, was take a service and record the fact that this was done.

First, however, there was an Anglican service brought forward, now conducted modestly. Allie and I entered the cathedral at the back row. I was ordained there.

Lynton Plimpton was thus consecrated this Sunday, instead of waiting until 25th March, the feast day. They were desperate to shove out Derek Imperial, who vacated today. Andrea Lindsey was also Andrea Plimpton (except for the purposes of being a General Practitioner), sat on the front row.

At the end, she said, "Hello, Allie. Good to see you again. Because of what is happening, Lynton is not going to live here in Wytham, nor taking up residence at Caffenmere, but live at the vicarage with me in Serninsea. Because I am one of the GPs, Lynton is going to do a spot of vicaring again. They'll send him admin stuff from HQ, online. So you are Bishop Linda, now they call you."

"I am. That's a simple 'I am' only."

"Oh, er, John's Gospel. Ha ha. Most of my GP appointments will be by telephone and video."

"I want my thingy removing," said Allie. "The GP can't do that by telephone or video link."

"When?"

"Soon as possible."

"Come in tomorrow. I'll chat to you tomorrow. Just tell the receptionist."

I said, "Special treatment."

"I'll do an MOT of you, Allie."

I said, "You knew Allie did video work in Taunton."

"I can't discuss this, here and now, and not to you," said Andrea.

"Sorry. I'll mind my own business."

"It's no secret that Rhiannon has gone," Allie said, looking at me.

"Also less said the better. See me at, hmm, 11 am?"

Then Lynton Plimpton came among us, joining his wife.

"Thank you for coming."

I said, "We were in the area. I took a service at the Unitarian chapel. It was an exchange with their minister."

"I have to say I'm sad to hear it. How is independence?"

"Hand to mouth, but I like the flexibility. We joined a small Free Catholic group."

"What is one of those?"

"Symbols without creeds; superintendants and ministers, bishops and priests, equally."

"Hmm. I'd advise you read about Florovsky, Bulgakov, Khomiakov, Khrapovitskii, on doctrine generated from a consensus of the worshipping community without a magisterium but only a definitional role for the bishops."

"Russian Orthodox?"

"Yes. Might via the Eucharistic gift put you back on the trinitarian road."

"Good one," said Andea to her husband. "Back to Serninsea we all go!"

"No, we are going south. By taking four services a year, Chapel Alley secures corporate funds for the Foss Unitarians. I'm doing that now."

"I heard they have a place here, still."

"I might even train with them, go on their ministry roll. Could be interesting."

"We must get together, Bishop Linda. I call you bishop not out of recognition but respect. Valid but irregular, they call it."

"I don't demand you use it."

"I'm going to think about you, relevant to what Andrea is doing."

I drove south with Allie from Wytham Cathedral and opened up the chapel with the key given to me at Wytham chapel. I had a book, Orders of Worship, a curious, almost romanticist choice of liturgies from 1932, and based in parts on the National Church's The Book of Common Prayer. I chose a Martineau service and, basically, read through it. Victoriana it was - wafty theism and a strange Christocentrism of sorts. Given that no one else was there, Allie took a photo of me taking the service just like the Liberal Catholics record an event. I wrote in a book on site that I had taken the service.

I locked up and hung on to the key.

Allie and I nipped into neighbouring Thermaby for some shopping provisions before heading up back towards the coast and our own town.

In the evening we had yet another meeting. Adam, Ann and Labhaoise were with us, as were Kathryn and Peter, but they would soon be elsewhere: Adam, Kathryn and Peter would reside in their place, Ann and Labhaoise stay in theirs, and Allie and me, Kathleen and Winnie, and Roger and Marie would confine ourselves to the bethel. Thus Kathryn and Kathleen could not physically meet after today.

As for the meeting, as a taste of things to come, Charley Darley, Bill Masters, Pauline Junor and Christine Vine were all online at the same time, and then Dominic Himalia added to the online crowd.

Again, Kathryn took the minutes. Ann Dromeghda sitting with Labhaoise Vlahos assured us that we would be able to continue longer term. Their rent income was likely to drop considerably and house sales freeze for a time; so all their 'doing up' of houses was finishing. Nevertheless, like Christine confirmed for herself, they had savings and should be able to ride out the economic shutdown - so long as it did not go on and on.

The decision was therefore made to continue the food service by visits to houses, and to go online with the message of the church. Christine would arrange her own Church online service, from elsewhere, and both of us would come on live for our respective Eucharist or Mass elements of the services, with instructions about how parishioners might participate before each service began. Christine would insist on alcoholic wine plus bread, whereas I'd accept fruit juice or wine plus bread. Our own service providers would be limited to our bethel residents and contributions to be edited in by Peter remotely.

Adam had other news. He'd heard from Margaret McEnhill that the Bishop Lynton Plimpton was going to live with his wife in Serninsea and not in Caffemere. I said we knew this directly. Andrea would be mainly online. Adam added that Doctor Gujjar, the main General Practitioner in this surgery, and Sister Yvonne Curzon, the practice nurse, would be online too. I reckoned that my appointments at the gynaecologist and a coming check-up visit to the dentist would be cancelled. Allie kept quiet about her actual physical meeting to come.

Adam pointed out that tomorrow the Prime Minister would outline restrictions that would mean, for sure, Diana not returning (if she wanted to travel) and Jenny staying in her institutional setting.

Meanwhile, Allie informed us that she was reopening her research only in as much as taking note of the changes of activity - the lockdown added to the Unitarianism - although she was sure the boredom of a lockdown would facilitate her main academic task of writing up what she had already observed and using online library resources to craft this into her academic doctoral thesis.

The final part of our meeting was sad and rather telling. Peter discovered that a cousin of Gertrude Carter, Gabrielle Edwards, had been hospitalised with Novel Covid, and after oxygen and ventilating had died. I feared for Gertrude herself; after all, no one until now had been taking separation measures.

So we all went our separate ways.

Allie said she had to go out: her last chance to see Annie. "It's a busy day for me!"

Two hours later, there was someone at the double doors. It was Georgie Smith.

"Well, last chance: I've decided to come."

"Come for what?"

"Come to your weird world, come for what you want."

"Oh. Really? Allie isn't here. I could ask her to get back."

"Do it. The clock strikes midnight soon enough. It's not a curfew, is it?"

Allie. George Smith has turned up wanting to donate. Come and receive.

"This had better be worth it," said Allie, not understanding the need to be welcoming in these circumstances.

"Who'd have thought it," said Georgie, undressing in our room with the two of us.

Georgie said, "I still think we'll achieve nothing, but at least I'll do it. I know what Gertrude did, and it's about experience. So I want to experience."

I went down a floor and found Roger and Marie in. I didn't know they'd be there: they had the habit of coming in and going out the single door directly to and from the staircase. They never sat in the dining area and hardly mixed.

"Like Gertrude Carter?" Roger asked.

"Yes."

"Marie?"

"Standard donation fee," she said.

"Want to come along?" he asked. "Can she?"

"Of course," I said. "The more the merrier."

To begin, all naked, Marie sat out and three of us stroked Georgie's body.

I asked to feel Georgie's organ orally. I put my mouth to it. She was a grower but it took some doing. I could imagine that her time with Charley Darley had not gone well.

Stiff enough, I invited Georgie to enter me first, and so for this first part Allie was a supporting act.

Georgie said, "Forty years I had and did nothing other than my sacrifice to my vocation. So thank you for seeing me. I hope this is useful. I'm trying to build up desire or technique. I hardly have any. You're very tight, Linda."

"You've got some purchase now," I said. "Time to get deep into Allie."

"Funny thing is, I don't know if I'm attracted to women or men."

Roger had an idea. He asked all the women to get on their knees along the length of the bed. In order we had Marie, me, Allie and Georgie, with her testicles and penis hanging down.

First of all, without asking, he entered his sister's anus. I knew that from his position high above. Was I clean? In he went, regardless, and my anus easily absorbed his push and pull. He said, "I'll do you properly later," to Allie, as he went high in again. But the main purpose here was Georgie, who - probably for the first ever time - allowed a man to penetrate her backside. She went erect during this extended ride of increasing speed.

"Funny," Georgie said. "I quite liked that."

I invited Georgie to take her made erect penis and penetrate me. How did she feel going into someone's backside.

"Not sure. Well, I'm in. So I just do what you usually do?"

"Yes, in and out," I said, everyone looking on.

Finally, Georgie announced something was brewing so Allie went on her back and Georgie delivered sperm, and Roger wanking then followed her and pumped a great deal more into Allie.

Marie and I stroked Allie's breasts.

"You came all right," said Allie to Georgie.

The Reverend Georgie went and washed her penis in our bathroom, and then dressed. Roger and Marie simply left the room, to continue together in their own room.

"Thanks for the experience," Georgie said. "Charley was much dryer. Keep it private, please. I know I'm retired but I don't want any of this getting out."

Georgie left us, and left the building.

"Good sperm is good sperm," I said to Allie.

"Yeah, but if Georgie's gets there first - you know. Hmm."

Downstairs in the seating area I said that if the Chancellor of the Exchequer was soon going to introduce measures of financial protection towards preserving business and employment, then, I said, he would be adding money supply to a considerably reduced real economy. If this happened, inflation had to result. Once something like growth happened again the possibility was fast inflation leading to a crashable bubble. We'd already been living on borrowed time for ten years plus.

Allie said that when her student funds ended she would have to revert to Universal Benefits, joining millions more surely doing the same.

"The chances of her making a lot of money quickly, like at the Car Showroom, are over," Allie said. "It shouldn't concern you," I replied. "But I curse the day Labour took away student grants."

"I'm seeing Dr. Lindsey tomorrow - I'll walk."

"Hang on - that IUD will still be in."

"She's removing it."

"You won't get pregnant at all!"

"Well, Georgie wanted experience. I wasn't going to deny it. I missed out being a guest of Annie and Marie Healand to do what we did."

Narrator: Allie Seeing Doctor Lindsey (Monday 16th March)

"Linda," I said, "I'll walk to have the IUD out; Doctor Lindsey is giving me an MOT at 11 am."

"Do you want me to come with you?"

"No. I can go on my own. And don't forget, she was my doctor in Taunton."

"Ah, yes, I suppose you still have secrets."

"I had health issues."

So I went along by foot to the clinic, which now had chairs used to keep the public back from the reception, and there were many fewer seats to sit on. There was no automatic check-in any more.

"Allie Shrimpton to see Dr. Lindsey at eleven."

"Yeah."

After a short pause, Andrea called me in. I'd hoped by now that my Uncle Paul might have given me some useful genealogical information on Dr. Lindsey, but instead she was going to get some gynaecological information about me.

"Hello Allie!"

I said, straight out, "I want the IUD removing. Even Linda probably couldn't get it out."

"On the bench. Shoes off, knickers off, legs apart, and I'll use the metal speculum. I have cleaned it with disinfectant."

"I'm not wearing knickers. My wife prefers that I don't. And Abigail Randall said to stop wearing knickers. Abigail... Bloodred?"

After I'd widened my legs and she parted me she said, "Oh Allie, what have you been doing? I can guess. Is this like when you had alcohol problems and going with Himari Ishino in Taunton?"

"Er, probably."

"How many videos or DVDs did you make going with her?"

"Oh, about three."

"Really? Come on! I thought it was more like ten. You've come here to the east coast, like me. Has anyone seen you in them? What was your name in them?"

"You know what it was. Jilly Rogered. Here they call me Gael."

"I told you then it was no good for you. Well, it's no good for anyone. And now you could get this Novel Covid spreading like wildfire."

"Shutting the pubs means I won't see Annie. Oops. I'd better not give her surname. I went to what should have been the car showroom and now I can't get any more dosh."

"Allie, you're worth more than doing this. You're an intelligent woman. Hopefully the lockdown will prevent these."

"Annie is to retreat behind a camera. Marie - she's the trans - is moving in with her."

"I know them both. I'll prescribe you some cream. So why is the IUD going into my disposal bin?"

"Because Linda and I will have a baby via me."

"And the man, for your baby: is it your cousin back in Norfolk?"

"Too complicated, that."

"Not the trans sex worker, please."

"Not yet. There is a trans minister, retired minister."

"I was there: at her fireside naturist reveal, remember."

"Oh, yeah. You were in the buff too. There's a chap resident with us, with his partner. He's a donor at the clinic here."

"It has just closed today. Yes, I think I know who you mean."

"His partner is his..."

"I'm not discussing other people."

"But the relevance is he doesn't get her pregnant. Now you are here, and she isn't, tell me about Rhiannon Fleetwood. She didn't oppose you like she did me and others. Why was that?"

"I'm doing medical matters today. Out it comes. I'll leave the speculum in for now. Take your top off so I can examine your breasts."

"When else do I get to talk to you and remove the rumours?"

She was feeling my breasts, and I raised my right arm and left arm to her hand gestures.

"What rumours? I'm glad she's gone. If she hadn't, living here would have been difficult. This is a place of need, where I can make a difference as a GP. There is much demand for sexual health monitoring. Your breasts are fine. You don't do that kind of pornography where they get slapped?"

"Did you ever do that sort of thing, Andrea? I mean when Rhiannon and you..."

"Mind your own business, Allie Shrimpton. Remember, these breasts will have to function if you have a baby and I do recommend breast feeding."

"She treated you differently. And, on the level, how can you be an Anglican priest and join the Taunton Tantria?"

"I was invited. Lynton has his positions and so both groups, there and here, have taken this into consideration. Yes, I am a Fighter of Concern. You're a fool for not negotiating. You should still be the same. I am going to open this speculum further to really look inside. I need an extra light. You can put your top on when you want."

I wanted to talk instead. "So here is the really important one, Andrea. Did you ever get seriously involved in a certain coven? If you did you've an obligation to tell me."

"Rhiannon would have blabbed if she knew I went to anything like that. Me joining a coven would be a step too far for her. So that's your answer. Would you object if I photograph this and add it to your record?"

"That's not an answer, Andrea. I am a third degree high priest - a witch - of the Creech Moorlinch Coven. You know what that means. Photograph it - everyone else has."

"Sounds to me like you could be saying things you would want to keep secret. I'll use this mobile phone and transfer it across. This is a simple photograph, not a video."

"You are evading. You do know, or you should, that a high priest of a coven on finding a high priest of the same coven nearby must declare themselves to each other."

"I have enough depth in the Christian position to be the priest-in-charge here. People adjust; people accommodate. That's your difficulty, Allie: your inability to nip and tuck, to compromise. Everybody loves you, Allie, but you're too headstrong. Lynton is helping out in the parish. But I think he wants to talk to your wife. He, and I, for that matter, don't think she did anything wrong. Here we go. Yep, that's a good image so I'll just transfer it. Your cervix is too red. Let me show you. On screen... now."

"Looks all right to me. You can only delay your answer to me to get corroborating information about me. You can't refuse."

"I think my husband, the bishop, could talk to Linda. Anyway, I'll unscrew this and relieve the pressure."

"You're too late. We are married and you don't accept same-sex marriages."

"Well, I think we might pioneer something different - yeah, accommodating. Would you object if she was Anglican again?"

"No, but she won't give up her new church."

"She could make that place Anglican - a slave church to the parish."

"No chance. We do things differently there, and it suits Liberal and Free Catholics. And she is a bishop."

"I'll put that to Lynton, doing things differently there, to require one more creative solution perhaps. Something has been up your bottom. Mind if I look?"

"To be honest, I don't think she is a Christian any more. She is still a theist, I think. She has been invited to have training with the Unitarians - to eventually go on to their Ministry Roll or whatever it is called."

"So I heard. One speculum out... and I'll just get another. Metal. Roll back a bit. In we go. Yep, widening now. What happened?"

"How many?"

"Twenty and then one later on."

"Allie! Oh well, it will restore itself. I'm afraid your time is up, Allie. Top and bottoms on now. Shoes on too."

I dressed to leave as she faced the computer, typing.

"Bit of cream will do your vagina and stop putting things up your bottom."

"You haven't spoken to me properly about your status as a witch."

"But I am not deaf. Speed up dressing as my next patient is due."

"If you looked behind you you'd see I have. I had a physical fight with Rhiannon, both of us naked in the vicarage garden."

"Not surprised. Now..."

"You're not playing fair, Andrea - the nature of your 'accommodation' with Rhiannon."

"Look. You are a very beautiful woman, Allie Shrimpton, and I am trying to keep you that way. I'm making an appointment for you to see the nurse - actually see her here - for the full MOT I promised including blood sample, urine and blood pressure. In a week. The nurse will compare that image and your vagina when she sees you. We need to know if you get pregnant. Now that device is out, you can get pregnant straight away. And the nurse will ask about your ongoing tendency to release gas from your backside. I'll open the window."

"Thank you. I've taken to eating more apples."

"Bye, Allie. Thanks for the chat."

"So what do I tell Linda: that the bishop will be in touch?"

"You can do, or wait until he does. Are you including it in your Ph.D.?"

"If it changes the bethel then yes."

"Then, perhaps as a researcher, you should wait for Lynton to contact her. If he decides not to, it would disturb matters if you create an expectation that he will contact her when he won't."

"That would be par for the course, Andrea, for you: creating expectations in Rhiannon regarding you. Everyone else gets her shit, except you."

"Goodbye Allie!"

"Well it's not fair."

"Goodbye Allie!"

Back at base, I showed Linda the cream from the chemist, and I said the device was in the Doctor's bin.

"Bit red?"

"It's because she used to see similar back in Taunton. I'm seeing the nurse in a week. We'd better delay having Roger inside me."

"Well, let me carefully apply the cream, starting now," said Linda.

Food and Procreation (Friday 20th March)

Adam had been right. Schools were closing except for key workers' and vulnerable children. People were staying at home to prevent the spread of infection. Restaurants and bars were being suspended.

It looked like Kathryn, Winnie and Kathleen did not qualify for the Chancellor's new Furlough scheme. Linda did, and we weren't sure why - probably being a bishop and minister had some sort of continuity. The scheme seemed open to corruption and administrative error. Adam and Peter were furloughed too.

Marie Enfield now worked for the Foss Upper Coast College from the bethel, in the sense of 'working from home' and Roger's scheme was ended but still received no dole because of Marie's pay; Roger's CV began a gap of inactivity. Well, he could be active with me.

Simply speaking we'd see them more; instead of doing everything outside and just coming through the private door and going up and downstairs.

Kathleen and Winnie and Roger and Marie joined Linda and me in delivering food; we had students coming into cook, deemed as an essential activity.

The primary school suggested some extra names of houses to visit and supply; the secondary school canteen was also providing a further service of reaching people. The Sikhs went outward too, as people wouldn't come inward to them. The kitchen we had thus combined with elements of being a food bank, so that some people received tins and packets of food to cook for themselves whilst others received ready-cooked meals. So tins were piling up in the kitchen.

When doors opened we stood back with bags of food left on the doorsteps to be retrieved. We often used hand sanitiser before and after picking them up.

Out in the streets we encountered some surprises, such as at one household with a provided address.

"Mr. Hal Ley? I'm Allie, this is Linda; this is some cooked breakfast."

This older man said, "Goodness me. I remember you, Linda Bode, at Saxiclite Club. Yes? Your family came from Syerston."

"Before I was born," she said. "And so you must have moved over here as well, Hal. Our family moved into a farm with a shop and have since left."

"I knew your mum, your dad. You had an elder brother. You and your elder sister looked so alike - and your younger sister was in your mum's arms. I never married and now I'm here alone."

"It's remarkable and odd to see you again after all this time. Do you still practice naturism?"

"Yes. Oh yes. I go to Saxiclite occasionally - they've closed it now. You stopped going."

"When I became a curate, I moved from Saxiclite to Bever Wood."

"You are a curate?"

"I was." She told him that she was a minister of religion, actually a bishop, and I said I was a researcher and Ph.D student, having completed participant observation in Linda's church and now monitoring it during the crisis. Kathleen and Winnie came over, so we introduced them.

We had to move on.

Indeed, a number of unknown people remembered Linda. Ursula Major on our list remembered her as a kind of wild child in the farm shop.

The delivery over, we returned to the Bethel and washed our hands. It looked like most hours of the day would be spent indoors. We had a whole meeting area to sit in, and the various rooms around. The kitchen was ours at these unused times.

It was there that Roger with Marie told Linda and me that the clinic for donating was now closed. He explained that it wasn't entirely anonymous giving sperm because it carried the risk that years later some of the offspring would track him down as the biological father.

We confessed that when Georgie Smith called my IUD was still inside me. But it had gone. We'd pay a further fee for his services.

Marie said, "Roger can always help."

"I'm ovulating now, that's the point," I pointed out.

Linda said, "You realise that, like with Mrs. Carter, we were ministering to Georgie's personal need. If it wasn't for the pandemic it might have been several visits. What about you being forty-five, Roger? If you were a genetic woman, you'd be approaching menopausal."

"The clinic does think I am right at the top end of the age range. I'm not sure they'll continue with me when it comes to re-opening. But I do still produce good sperm. Marie is forty-nine, and there are hints..."

"Just starting," she said. "I look forward to when I can't get pregnant by mistake."

"Given Allie's timetable, can we do it very soon?" Linda asked further.

Marie said, "Why not?"

"Yeah," said Roger.

I then said, "Let's make it more loving for Linda. Do you know about the Vestal Virgins? They have a rule for lesbians. If the donor is present for natural donation, the woman partner should sit with legs out behind the woman receiving when the one to be pregnant is penetrated. So when Roger is ready, you get behind me, Linda, and you'll feel this thrusts."

"Allie! You rejected the Vestal Virgins."

"Still a good method," I said.

We all decided upon five o'clock.

At three o'clock we were showering and Linda asked me to inspect her rectum and vagina, unchecked but okay with Georgie and them. We began naked initial lovemaking.

At five, Roger Humphrey and Marie Enfield entered our bedroom. They'd discovered us naked on the bed, and in the process of much kissing. However, we paused.

Linda decided upon a literary quotation for us all. "Evelyn Waugh had once said about procreation, apparently in 1954 to Nancy Mitford: 'The pleasure is 'momentary', the posture is 'ridiculous', and the expense 'damnable.'' I want our encounter or encounters to be pleasurable, to last above a moment."

They undressed. Marie this time had shiny red toenails as well as new shiny red fingernails.

Linda said to them. "Roger, this is a bit different, knowing that you donate sperm to the world in more sanitised and remote conditions."

Roger said, "Just to repeat, I have no interest in being father."

"No but I want Marie involved too. This is to be a loving act," Linda said. "Get him ready."

So far I'd said nothing!

Marie started masturbating her brother. We resumed kissing and making me feel sexy.

Linda said Roger should begin with her.

Marie said, "Fine. I get it."

"Help Allie, Marie. Stroke her pubic area; fondle her breasts. Don't leave her alone."

So Roger transferred his effort to Linda, who widened her backside, and Marie engaged in some same sex contact.

"Okay," said Roger. "Once again we go. The unusualness of this turns me on."

She said, "Going with you two opens up these experiences."

At the right moment, Roger transferred to me, out of Linda's arse, and Linda got behind me, and he pumped away into my vagina for his rich mixture to begin his journey, aided by Linda and Marie pulling my legs back and raising my backside.

Marie went one further, pushing her fingers into me to push sperm to my cervix.

Marie said to Linda, both still holding me to employ gravity, "We weren't stopped by the taboo that keeps brother from sister, and now we're doing this."

"So what happened?" I asked them, legs still up.

"Like you, I changed my name. I'm supposed to have taken on the name of my mother's family. You see, we start by telling people nothing, as if we are unrelated, but then news travels and so we say we're half-brother and half-sister. But our father contacts people and says the half-sibling story isn't true and we move on. Linda and Allie, you seem to accept us as we are."

Allie said, legs returning downwards, "I'd like to thump the shit out of your father."

"Our father?" asked Roger.

"No, Linda's."

"Oh, why?"

Linda spoke. "Because, and this will shock you, and you should keep quiet, I have had incestuous contact from my father, as has my older sister. The cuddle time she received involved sexual intercourse. I didn't have that, at least."

Allie then said, "I suspect something happened with your brother."

"Do you indeed? Well, you might be overstretching what you know and don't know."

"That's like one of my own non-denials, according to you."

"That's for you to wonder and me to know."

Roger said, "It has to be consensual."

"Or happen at all," I said.

Marie said, "So your sympathy for us is empathy based on your own experience."

"Yes," Linda said "But today was a happy time, when we behaved helping each other. We were all fully involved in the experience."

Marie responded, "At the clinic, they say he delivers. Or they did. Well, he has today. I'd like to carry on: can we?"

I said, "Yeah."

So Marie used her mouth on Roger, to taste the remains on his penis, and where it had been, to revive Roger.

Linda and I alongside, on the same body, started stroking each other's bodies and then she went down on me.

Roger under suction still asked me a question. "Those paintings of yours on the walls downstairs, do they have wider significance? I touched on theology and art in my MA - to the extent of the depiction of an erect penis and ejaculating as religious."

Linda paused her actions. "Well, you're the artist - dear."

"Then you'll know the answer is no," I replied, as Linda resumed licking. "It's like Georges Bataille and Michael Foucault on Édouard Manet. Whereas previous art had employed devices to take you outside the painting, Édouard Manet was drawing attention to the painting itself. Olympia, starring a prostitute, undermines the pretence of greater things, and so it's all about the painted canvas."

"Don't you ever stop?" asked Linda with a wet tongue flapping.

"I see," said Roger.

"And yes, Linda, I have painted Annie with these ideas in mind."

"I haven't seen that."

"Because she's got it. She hasn't posed because she gets behind the camera, but I did drawings."

With that Marie completed her task, and Roger pointed his penis so that Linda moved her mouth to him, and she can swallow.

All resting, I said, "My period is due, so if it doesn't come then bingo!"

Roger and Marie then proceeded to leave us, with us thanking each other.

Narrator: Linda Service Moves Online (Sunday 22nd March)

The website was updated and fully adapted for lockdown for the first Sunday.

Sunday 22 March 2020 - Coronavirus Mothering Sunday

There are no public services in the bethel until further notice. And we will miss coming together. However, we are still here and have a presence online.

There will be a service each Sunday from 11 am by live and partly prepared video and then this will exist as a recorded video from about 1 pm.

We hope to set up an online Prayer Room on Wednesdays from 1 pm. Please email requests for mentions.

covidcontact@freeliberalbethel.org.uk

bishoplinda@freeliberalbethel.org.uk

You can come in the building as separate individuals limited to ten people within on spaced out seating. Please observe all government instructions. There will be sanitisers available. We encourage face masks.

You can make food donations. We have special kitchen cooking and delivery arrangements using our limited number of volunteers.

Financial donations must come via the website and we will ask for donations during online services.

The bethel is also a residence. The bishop (Linda Shrimpton) and three clergy are resident at home observing lockdown. We pick up posted messages. Use the double doors letterbox.

Do not come for conversation. Bishop Linda can give pastoral support via the telephone and video on social media.

The Free Liberal Ecclesia has concentrations in eastern Foss and in the north east of England. It is a creedless Church that observes Christian and some other faith symbolic practices.

Keep in touch.

Luke 12:4 (Christian New Testament: New Revised Standard Version) 'And I say to you, My friends, do not be afraid of those who kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do.' (You may not want to read on!)

Bhagavad Gita: The Lord [Krishna] said: 'Whence could such faintheartedness have come upon you at this time of trial? This is not proper for a civilised man, it does not lead to heaven and it will bring dishonour upon you. Do not give up your manhood in this way, Partha! Such a mood ill becomes you. Giving up this pathetic weakness of heart, arise, O destroyer of the foe.'

(The Bhagavad Gita teaches confidence to tackle the necessary battle ahead and to do it with intent without expecting and being attached to a particular outcome.)

Today: Many will have hoped to visit their mothers today, and many mothers will have expected a visit. Contact has had to move online. We are fortunate and thankful that we have these means of communication while the virus strikes. Take comfort that by not visiting the virus is less able to jump between people.

In the morning my prepared and edited service (including Peter's technology work) went out, and I went out live with Allie, using Kathleen and Winnie for the Eucharist element. Who would pour themselves wine or fruit juice and have bread? We did not know.

The sermon had to introduce us.

"We are initially individualist regarding belief, but in ritual were are more collective, more consensual. We Free Liberal Ecclesia bishops lead clergy teams, but we are not a magisterium. We bubble-up tradition from below.

"We can learn from the Eastern Orthodox. There's Ivan Vasilievich Kireevskii, alive between 1806 and 1856. He stresses continuity with adjustments driven by the whole community. Everyone animates each other with the reasoning of the heart. Alexsei Stepanovich Khomiakov lived from 1804 to 1860. He's more Slavonic and ethnic; and 'Catholic' he translates as Sobornost as a gathering to determine the mind and heart pursuing sense and sensibility; Kath'olon means in Greek 'the whole' and for him relates to the functioning of each local church. Not everyone agreed with this, notably a priest theologian Georges Florovsky of 1893 to 1979. Florovsky considers the whole Church within the active parish, after Metropolitan Filaret, or Vasily Mikhaylovich Drozdof, of 1782 to 1867, that the content of faith derives from the charism as then active in the local community.

"Nevertheless, this all reminds us of our distinctive place as a congregation in the Free Liberal Ecclesia. Theology comes from the spiritual life. Nevertheless, we don't think that everything stays continuous when the culture makes new demands on us: we don't keep one tradition to one scripture.

"Antonij Khrapovitskii, alive between 1863 and 1936, added a moral stress into the doctrines, and both upheld the individual absorbed into the communion and that such involvement upheld beliefs rather than coming from rule-makers among the bishops. With Vladimir Sergeevich Solv'ev, of 1853 to 1900, the Holy spirit is active so that the individual dissolves (we could say) into the community as part of personal transformation. It's not about Slavonic society but a finite individual drawing upon the infinite contemplation in God from the activity of God. Sergei Nikolaevich Bulgakov, of 1871 to 1944, was more ecumenical and even sociological with his living memory of the Church, with Scripture within and interpreted by the community. He seems to split historical work on such texts from their theological interpretation within the worshipping community, but doctrines still come from internal, conciliatory, debate. Tradition and scripture come together. Florovsky agreed with Bulgakov, that universality follows on from whole faith, and is about charisma not history.

"I have to add that for us, historical research must affect theological conclusions and text affects tradition.

Of course they refer to very traditional and continuous Churches, with a lot here about seeing Christ in the other person, about the eros of love reaching into the non-finite active Trinity via the logos of Christ.

We, however, have flexible and unbounded texts of all kinds. We can read Hindu, Buddhist, humanist material, as well as a critical view of Christian and Jewish scriptures, and we can interpret worship on more anthropological (give and take, gift and exchange) general bases, and so our consensus is less certain.

So worship with us, and let yourself be transformed, and do it on the food and drink that reflects what was done as an Easter faith about Christ. You see how, with us, it all broadens out.

So it was thanks to Lynton Plimpton who put me on to some Russian thinkers in recent times about the very old. I could see this was not Unitarian - Kantian religion and all that, but might result in a Unitarian consensus from below. This sermon was quite a development for me, as I continued down the candle.

We received six emails, but we were pretty sure that more people had watched and listened. Later the web counter suggested 64 viewers, but some might have been very brief.

Christine had recommended very short sermons and her service went out at 9 a.m. live. Christine's service came from her home. The recorded version was her against a flat wall. We had the advantage of a chapel appearance.

News was that Charley Darley had not moved in with Georgie Smith either in Wytham or Serninsea.

Thanks for seeing me the other day. For forty years I've avoided 'mechanical Anglicanism' and slides to liberalism. But I watched you grow up and mature, recently as well as from my arrival in the 1980s. I followed a lonely path, doing what I was meant to do. I gave a plain, personal presentation, as in that robust Congregationalist theology and ecclesiology. By this path I lost out on the company of sympathetic persons, whether Charley or yourself. The lockdown forced me to make a decision, and why you saw me before it became impossible. But I haven't coupled with Charley, as if like two sad opposite transgenders. Your latest sermon drawing on Eastern Orthodoxy is worthy of a lot of thought.

Confirmation of Online Interviews

Later in the day I received an email to view a video. Gosh, I was going to be interviewed regarding training next week!

The video was a tour of the Steuart Campbell Warrington Academy building in York. The video explained that the origin of the Academy was at Warrington, one of the Presbyterian colleges that arose to teach people excluded from Oxford and Cambridge. The academy moved from Warrington to Manchester and then to York. Forty years ago Steuart Campbell as a Scottish textile manufacturer came south and donated much of his wealth to keep it viable. Yet, with numerical decline and changes towards competence based training, the actual ministry training college moved out, leaving the academy building as an arts and sciences adult learning college alone, although the college building kept its donated historical library of resources of General Baptists and Unitarian Methodists. Nowadays, said the narrator, students are based around the country and meet up near Bakewell at a hotel with conference facilities owned by the UGA. There is a second hotel in Wales - and not so far from our disrupted family farm. These were on the Roll of Accommodation, just as there was a Roll of Students, a Roll of Apprentice Ministers, a Roll of Ministers.

I contacted Peter and, of course, he knew about these places: they are all on the UGA Website.

Then I received another email.

Dear Bishop Linda Shrimpton,

We confirm interviewing you for training, for you to be placed on the Roll of Ministry Students if successful by selection. Rather than asking you to visit the Steuart Campbell Warrington Academy, it has to be via video links on Wednesday 25th March at 9 am where you will meet others online being interviewed. Your spouse can join in for all but the Core Interview. Please arrange a private space.

This is short notice. We can interview in December, but this timing allows you to be added to the Roll of Ministry Students this year in September.

The Interviewers have decided that, in your case, any provisional decision to train will then require, deposited with the College, an essay on your faith journey to academic standard with references and bibliography of not under 4000 words and not over 6000 words. This is because you did not supply us with such an essay ahead of a decision to interview. The essay will help us to ascertain the most relevant training for you if you should proceed to the Roll of Probationary Ministers.

Yours sincerely, Roll of Interviewers:

The Rev. Dr. Laurence Soames, Lancaster.

The Rev. Andrew Fallon, Doncaster.

The Rev. Dr. Adrian Hatch, Stirling.

The Rev. Anthony Lovatt, Skipton.

The Rev. Dr. Erika Zijderveld, Rotterdam.

Dr. Mina Jones, Chief Executive on the Roll of Officers

min@ugaunitarians.co.uk

Also, The Rev. Principal Aled Bolt, MA, Warrington Academy.

Charley Darley must have known because he sent me an email.

Well, they obviously think you're worth a try. Welcome to the tribe. Include Alfia. You know, they rejected three of the four last applicants back in December, and they don't just want lay preachers. Focus hard on your own academic ideas and not just in some preliminary essay. Why? Because they need a theologian course leader, and it could be you. You could be a big fish in a small pond. I'm staying in Wytham. Georgie is staying in Serninsea. Look out for her. Charley.

Narrator: Linda Seeing the Nurse (Monday 23rd March)

The clinic came after distributing meals, Allie having arranged to see the nurse. I went in with her, as first of all she removed her trousers to spread her legs. The nurse had a mask on, but we did not.

I said, "I recognise you."

"I'm Nurse Mabel Thorp; I used to work for Christine Vine as well as part time for the NHS. So, you, Linda Shrimpton, married Allie Shrimpton here."

"Yes," I said.

The nurse brought up Allie's record on the computer and then produced a full screen image of Allie's inner vulva taken previously by Dr. Lindsey.

"Let's look at you, Allie," said the nurse, putting on medical gloves. "Let's hope with the lockdown that all these sex events come to an end. I'd do a sexual health check but it will have to wait."

I looked over to Allie. "What sex events?"

She seemed to be rolling her eyes while the nurse pulled at Allie's vulva's outer and inner lips.

"I'll pop a speculum in as your cervix was a little red."

"It wasn't much and it's gone."

"And lights, camera, action eh? But, oh, I think you need a tampon. You use them?"

"Yes. If it's started; pop one in."

At this point, Dr. Lindsey herself came in. She produced her own small torch to add to the light level. "Let's have a look. Oh, quite beautiful. Period started."

Nurse Mabel Thorp asked, "Did you bring a sample?"

"Yes." Allie gave it to the nurse from a screwed tight plastic container from her bag.

The nurse asked, "Were you at the recent event in the car showroom?"

"I see," I said.

"We've had a few problems from there," said Andrea Lindsey.

"Taking part makes my vagina redder than it is."

"Quite."

Nurse Thorp asked, "Linda, why are you looking down?"

"Do I believe her?"

Andrea said, "She is correct."

"Three hundred quid that was worth if I took it. The webcam can be a tenth of that."

"Oh," said the nurse. "I think we know the performer."

"There are two of them now," said Allie.

"Blood pressure now, Allie," said the nurse, enquiring no further.

"Take a photo record of in there," said the doctor. "Have you examined her breasts?"

"No, doctor."

Andrea said, "Just lift your top. Thank you."

The doctor performed the feel and when done lowered the top herself.

"They're looking good. That's it. Goodbye Allie," and the doctor promptly left the room.

I was offered the same basic MOT and accepted, and indeed left the surgery for the toilet to piss into a plastic container.

Back in the consulting room, Allie had already had a photo transferred to the computer records and blood extracted, and so I handed in my pot for the nurse to write on it and then experienced her stick a needle in my arm to take some blood and label it.

"I won't do your breasts or vulva," the nurse told me. "Anyway, CAIS women like you rarely suffer from breast cancer. Your gonads cancer risk is rising, though." (I groaned.) Instead she approached the issue of Allie's backside. "How is your gas production?"

"It's better. I'm trying to make it sweeter smelling, when it happens."

"There's not a lot we can do about it. You have no trouble defecating?"

"None."

"I'm going to look. On your knees, love."

A bar speculum opened up my wife's back passage. Lit by a torch, like Andrea's, nothing was untoward, though some paper administered by the nurse produced some shit.

The nurse said, "Linda, have you considered having the Vecchietti procedure?"

"Which is?"

"In an operation lasting under an hour, a small, plastic sphere is threaded against your vaginal area. These threads are drawn through the vaginal skin, up through the abdomen and then the navel. That's where they meet a traction device, and you pull them so that the sphere is pulled inwards and stretches the vagina, by as much as a centimetre each time."

"No thanks, Sister Mabel. Dilating works and slowly."

"An alternative is very regular deepening sexual intercourse."

"That sounds a lot more welcome."

Allie stared at me.

When we were ready to go the nurse said, "Now then, you two. In case I've spoken out of turn I remind you Linda that you have also been involved in collective sexual events. Is it biblical about not throwing stones in glasshouses?"

"Hardly," I said to her.

"The woman taken in adultery, then: let he without sin cast the first stone."

"It is a made-up story. It does not appear in any of the earliest manuscripts. It's an iconic story so stays in but it should be removed. A bit like that IUD was."

We left the surgery building.

"Be honest. Did you join in? Annie is your Devil, your temptation."

"In Taunton I knew Himari Ishino and she was like Annie is here. They must have leather vaginas."

"Rawhide."

We walked silently with each other back to the bethel. I told her to follow me up to the bedroom.

"Drop your trousers, bend over and touch your toes, Allie Shrimpton. After deceiving me about being a witch, this is just the latest."

"I haven't lied!"

"Well, I'm covering all possibilities."

She did bend over and show me her bare arse.

I touched her bottom with the flat of my hand, and only lightly, and stopped.

"What was that?" she asked.

"Nothing. You bent over - that was good enough for me. I'm so pleased that you accepted my authority. We still have to get you pregnant. Roger gave you a rich sample, too. We need more sperm."

Chapter 35 Interviews Online

Narrator: Linda Online Interviews Begin (Wednesday 25th March)

Despite the need to be on time for the Unitarian days of interviewing and evaluating, we were able to join Roger, Marie, Kathleen and Winnie and some students to do the morning food deliveries.

Nevertheless, we had an appointment to keep and, indeed, at noon, from the seating and dining area we were looking at the big screen. We already had the software to have the online interactions. The microphones picked us up and cameras were directed our way, with one dominant. Allie and I just had to view the screen and respond.

I said to Allie, "I met Peter, an online Unitarian, and then each time encountered all the strangely different kinds of Unitarians, like as if one arc of a message was coming to me. So here we are, and I am applying to go into actual ministry training. So I shall treat this seriously, as if I have been called. Perhaps I was not to be an Anglican, but a Unitarian."

"Perhaps so," said Allie.

The first images of actual people were not of the interviewers or tutors but candidates.

"Have you let off?" I whispered to her.

"They can't smell it," Allie replied. "I'm nervous for you."

"Nurse Mabel should have given you a cork."

One person was on the central screen, with three others across the top (including Allie and me) and six greyed-out squares across the bottom.

"I'm Jason Goole. I have an Architecture degree. I am candidating for ministry today. I am not from Goole, but from Norwich."

"Ooh," said Allie, causing us to occupy the central screen very briefly.

"The Gooles come from Rochdale, originally - Unitarian Methodist country. My provided woody and panely background is fake, or virtual - it is from inside Warrington Academy. I wanted to be at Winster, virtually, you know, everyone."

"No I don't know!" I called out, showing on the screen. "What's at Winster?"

"Oh," he said. "Well, Heathcote Milk House. It's two extended farmhouses opposite on the main road. They function as hotels and conference centres."

Allie said, "Sounds a bit like where I came from, with two farmhouses down this road near Walsingham."

"Well, if you don't know, these two are opposite, and they have accommodation and facilities added plus grounds, but the road is a problem. There's talk of a footbridge: talking to the council. They added big street lights during the renovation last year."

"Why Heathcote Milk?" I asked, and people seemed to be looking at each other. Of course they weren't as they were separate.

Jason Goole said, "I'll tell her. Local milkman," he said. "The history is that one farmhouse was derelict and in 1948 the denomination bought it for opening up holidays for the urban poor. When the one opposite became available in the late 1970s, they bought that as well and then gave both the one new name."

Allie whispered to me. "Careful. You're showing your ignorance."

"So my background is the Martineau Hall. I'm unemployed at present. Remember, everyone, that the interviews start from now. They won't mind me saying they're looking in - those grey squares across the bottom."

One of them lit up and popped up. "I am Larry Soames, on the UGA Roll of Ministers, as we are, and on the Roll of Tutors. Your age?"

Jason said, "Dr Laurence Soames is a denominational historian. Fifty-three - me, not him. He's er..."

The tutor came back, "You're not introducing me or the staff: you're introducing yourselves. Next we have a bishop! I'll vanish and you introduce yourselves."

It was back to six greyed-out squares.

"Oh it's us already," I said. "Umm: I'm Linda Shrimpton, forty, and this is my wife Allie Shrimpton, ten years younger. I'm the candidate, asked to candidate. So I am a bishop in the Free Liberal Ecclesia, which shares some history with the Unitarians, I think, and I also do some exchanges here in Foss with the Reverend Charley Darley. Allie, my wife, is a deacon of this Church and she is also a Pagan High Priest, Alice Moonbright, able to start her own coven if she wanted."

Some man said, "Matthew Hopkins might have something to say about that."

Allie asked, "Who?"

"The Witchfinder General."

I said, "He wasn't Unitarian. Who are you?"

"Terence Chicken. There is an unfortunate property line from him to Unitarianism. Presbyterian Puritans were quite vicious towards anything resembling Paganism or atheism. Death was too good for them. Matthew Hopkins was just the most notorious, down in Suffolk, and as soon as the rates went up to fund his killing spree, the various towns and village folk stopped picking on the old women who were seen as nuisances in their villages."

Dr. Soames came on again. "Very good but we are only supposed to be introducing ourselves. I see you didn't select a background, so is that your church?"

"Yes, the Serninsea Free Liberal Bethel," I answered. "I didn't know we were supposed to choose a background."

"Allie, the wife, tell us more. I may as well not grey-out my square. Do we need to be hidden?"

"I was ordained into the Moorlinch Creech Coven. Moorlinch and Creech St. Michael are both in Somerset - Glastonbury area."

Jason asked, "Do you do spells?"

"No. I'm mainly an academic anthropologist."

I kept a smile going, while thinking that I was the candidate here. So I spoke. "I became bishop from an Independent Sacramental Ministry group, after I had been Anglican here in Serninsea. I was ordained," I said, "first as a deacon, and then as a priest. But I became a bishop in this group because, well, I and the team have built a congregation. I left that ISM group in my travel down the candle as they went up the candle, and now we are in a group that has superintendent bishops as well as apostolic, and we operate according to the Presbyterian principle of clergy voting equally, not just bishops."

Then a minister of a rugged and weathered face appeared, the Rev. Andrew Fallon, Doncaster, announcing his name and status. He said, "The Free Liberal Ecclesia is well known to us for claiming Unitarian roots when it is well outside the denomination. It causes confusion and they have made claims in the past for ministry in our chapels. They get invited in, and then make a big fuss about it on the website. We know where Linda is coming from, but the advice is keep them out."

"I didn't see this. I have read every page. I've added our own congregational material. I've always been quite happy with them."

"Any relevant qualifications?" asked Andrew Fallon. "That's what you're supposed to tell us."

"BA (Hons.) Social Science and Religious Studies at East Midlands University; successful Anglican ministry training at Bishop Querceto."

Off the screen again, Allie leaned over and whispered, "This is going well."

"Isn't it just," I answered her quietly.

"I'm Terence Chicken, sixty. Preston I'm from but based in York, attending the York Cross Chapel. The background is our Warrington Academy at York General Baptist and Unitarian Methodist Library. Oh," he said, "there was that whole media hoo-hah there, in Serninsea, with that very dodgy Anglican suffragan bishop. Sex parties, bogus archaeology..."

Andrew Fallon appeared. "Well, we do have transfer candidates. I'm a tutor too - Unitarian Theology, if there is such a thing. I read Linda's most recent sermon on consensual doctrine. I'd like to tackle that."

The picture returned to Terence Chicken, announcing his wife, Julia, fifty-seven. She was well-rounded, very busty, and seemed to wear completely ill-fitting clothes, too small for her.

"Yes I am Yogini Shraddhadhi, or Julia Chicken, from York, with a Diploma in Western Buddhism. A Yogini can practice within a family life, and my other partner, both spiritual and in a relationship with me, is Yogini Lilasiddhi, or Celia Hindley, also from York, fifty, who should arrive later today. Shraddhadhi means 'she who has wisdom with faith' and Lilasiddhi means 'accomplishment through play' - which is what she does, but I don't claim wisdom, especially. She's a Western Buddhist, not a Unitarian - not yet."

Terence said, "We two have been knocking around Unitarianism for about four decades, haven't we my love? We had a son, and Celia moved in. We're all three secondary school teachers. I should say I have a new partner as well, Alison Martin, thirty-six, who is a primary school teacher."

Julia said, "I met her first time last week, and she is moving in."

Larry Soames appeared, "Yes, I know Alison very well. She grew up in Selby. So Alison is younger than your son."

"I know James very well!" a blonde woman appearing said. "But it's his biological dad I've partnered."

Terence added, "Yes, James we count as son of all four of us, despite being older than Alison. You two are the same age, Lisa."

"I do know that. I know most Unitarians."

"He was named after the man whose name was given to the other virtual room. He's still in the Youth Fellowship Roll, as they all get older - at forty!"

"I'm still in that," she said.

"I suppose you must be," said Julia.

I thought there's proof that they're committed to the cause! And, of course, he knew this Lisa among us and I missed saying he was my age.

Another grey square went live and its image also centred. "I'm Anthony Lovatt, minister at Skipton. So I know everyone here well except Bishop Shrimpton, isn't it?"

"It's not important," I said.

"No no," he said. "Don't hide it under a bushel: proclaim it! You could be the first Unitarian bishop since Herford!"

"He wasn't Unitarian," said Larry Soames, replacing Anthony Lovatt at the centre. "You stick to the theology side of things!"

"A whole family of Unitarian ministers," responded Anthony Lovatt, returning. "I give you Robert Travers Herford, who died in 1950, the brother of Professor C. H. Herford, of Manchester University. He started to learn Hebrew when he was thirteen years old, and later called himself a 'Jewnitarian', with a strong scholarly interest in first century Judaism and the Talmud influencing the New Testament and against anti-semitism.

"But Ulric Vernon Herford left. He went to India and created this Catholic Evangelical Church or some such," said Larry.

"Never lost his Unitarian theology," said Anthony.

"He never told anyone he had it!" said Larry back.

"Such accidents make history," said Anthony. "It is one of our noble, eccentric, Christian traditions. But as for apostolic succession, you know that the Hungarians reject it."

I came in. "Yes, I do know that. I know a Rumanian Unitarian, and she is still married to an ex-partner of mine."

"Another Mrs and Mrs?" assumed Julia Chicken.

"No, he was a man. He was married to this Rumanian Unitarian; by sheer chance she came to Serninsea, with her grown-up daughter. I knew her daughter long before my ministry. She was a worker on the adjacent farm to ours. But I didn't know of her mother's and indeed her own religion then, only later."

Jason said, "He was your partner but married to a Rumanian."

"Er, yeah," I said. "But I've just married Allie here."

"Complicated," said Anthony.

"Not more complicated than what Terence was describing."

"But they've been around a long time, and James their son," said Lisa.

Although that was a silly comment, I realised that I was doing myself no favours among those who knew each other.

One more candidate introduced herself.

"Hello everyone! As you all know, I'm Lisa Revie, single for my sins, Unitarian for twenty years, aged forty-one, done a bit of everything, thought I'd give this a go. I've done the preaching course. From the north, went north to Durham, known as a sensible chappess administrator but I do risk my neck down caves."

Far from having few candidates, this seemed to me to be more than a reasonable number for a very small denomination, if not as utterly tiny as my own.

Then Dr. Mina Jones appeared from the grey, saying, "So we have a panel but the Reverend Aled Bolt, Principal of Warrington Academy, as it now is constituted in its dispersed fashion, may join us later. Don't forget that late last year we selected one candidate to go forward, Ms Klara Merkel, of our Colchester chapel, who is forty-nine, with a Masters of Business Administration - more than me! Klara tells us that after our most regrettable Brexit she has acquired British citizenship.

Hello Klara!"

Klara, a woman with a blonde bob, appeared. She gave us a wave in the enlarged centre, and said, "I'm an antiques shop owner and auctioneer who's featured on television. I'm taking no part in this so goodbye!" Even the small square of her disappeared.

The small displays across the top changed to members of staff, and the retained display of students went to the bottom of the screen.

Adrian Hatch was the first to come to the central display. He explained that he had selected a virtual background of the Channing room at York - and the staff all shared it despite being in different places. Sat behind a desk, there was a chalice in front of him, and he lit it with a match. He said, "First of all the interviewers are going to introduce ourselves by title, full name, age, location, and highest qualification. So I am one: the Reverend Adrian Hatch, seventy-two, currently in Stirling but soon to retire, and I have an MA in Scottish History."

In a Dutch accent a beautiful woman stated, "I am the Reverend Doctor Erika Zijderveld, from Rotterdam, thirty-three, and I have a doctorate in European Protestant Development. I come from the Remonstrant tradition. I am an interviewer oversheer, sho I look at the integrity of the interviewing process as it goes along."

"I am the Reverend Doctor Laurence Soames, sixty-two, ministering at Lancaster, and I have a doctorate in Presbyterian and Unitarian History. I am an interviewer."

"I am the Reverend Andrew Fallon, fifty-seven, at Doncaster, with an honours degree in Theology, and I am interviewing."

"I am Dr. Mina Jones, thirty-nine. I'm Chief Executive on the Roll of Officers and I have an honorary doctorate in Administration, also interviewing."

"And I am the Reverend Anthony Lovatt, from Skipton, sixty-five, rides a motorbike, with an MA in Theology. I'm interviewing and I chair this part of the process, which is becoming informal discussion."

"Before we go on," said Mina Jones, "We have here four candidates plus one, and I have bad news. Unless we can stretch the budgets and find more trust grant money, and perhaps home chapels can pitch in, we have the budget for just over two successes in this process. People think we have an endless supply of trust funds. We don't. Unless regional funds and chapel funds chip in, we are limited to two candidates going foward."

"Surely," said Andrew Fallon, looking even redder, "we are free to select and the budgets should be found. We in this denomination lack people, not money. Money can be found."

Mina Jones replied, "Money is tied up, and unevenly distributed. There are jobs for all of them, somewhere, assuming all expected retirements happen. What there isn't is money to train, and either we believe in training or we don't."

Andrew Fallon replied, "Then we should take into account training that has happened. Lay courses and the like. Anyway..."

Anthony Lovatt interrupted, "This is a discussion for another time and place, though considerations for selection are relevant for the candidates. Right. Erika."

The Reverend Dr. Erika Zijderveld, told us: "Some interviewers may appear not to participate, and shay nothing, but in fact everyone is going to make notes, and all of us are all making evaluations and assesshments. I want to shtate now: anything that happens here in our virtual Steuart Campbell Warrington Academy stays here."

Conversations are confidential. Yesh, theology is leaky but let's keep this to ourselves, our notes and our deshishions."

Two Candidate Discussions

The Skipton minister, the Rev. Anthony Lovatt, now took central stage. "I want us to have two short discussions. The first is a controversial area. We're not Anglicans, so we don't get the wider publicity like you folks did over in Serninsea. However, we did have a bad press moment last year when one person on our Roll of Students had an extended sixteen week pastorate in our Darlington chapel. By the eighth week he'd managed to have an affair with the daughter of a congregation member, causing the congregation member herself great tension within her family, partly because this student minister was married. Contributions are wanted from candidates and spouses: what went wrong?"

Lisa Revie was first to speak, making the main screen of screens. "If he had the consent of the daughter, then it's nothing to do with her mother."

"What about his own wife?" asked Terence Chicken. "You see, we have a polyamorous marriage. Julia here is my wife, but she does have a relationship with Celia. I've met Alison, and Julia and Celia have given their consent, and so I divide my sexual time between Julia and Alison, and Julia also spends intimate time with her Buddhist partner Celia."

"Where's the consent in Darlington?" asked Julia.

Terence continued: "Here, it is all above board. Alison has moved in."

I said, "It doesn't work like that." There we were: centre-screen. "Even if both gave consent, the problem is both are in a client relationship, the daughter by virtue of the interest of the mother. By 'interest' I mean the mother's concern in that position, what is important to her, and she is in a pastoral situation. I know it happens, but plucking partners from a congregation even legitimately upsets the dynamic, for example the suspicion of favouritism."

Terence asked, central to our big screen, "So your wife is completely outside the church you operate as a bishop?"

"Er, no."

Allie said, quickly, "It was different. I was a researcher and still am for significant developments."

"Doesn't that still affect things?" he asked.

I responded: "Allie was outside, came in among us. Her blending in was on the surface, only trying to 'go along' with things so as not to affect decisions. So she was an outsider. I did not cross these lines. I knew and know that these lines exist. As a parish curate, I observed these lines, but then I was married to Keith, from before my curacy, and then had a relationship with Adam, who was not part of the worshipping community. I crossed no lines. However, as I said, it does happen in places, and often the minister does their best to handle the situation in a proper way as possible. It is especially awkward for a female minister, but we get traditional congregational hierarchical and patriarchal dynamics still when it is a man. The wife of a minister, and girlfriend, acquires a privileged position from what had been an equal one among her congregational friends. She is plucked out and it's almost, suddenly, as if she has privileges, and she becomes separated out from her friends."

Lisa Revie asked, "Isn't this a bit traditional, a bit out of date?"

Terence said, "Sadly no. And if you're gay, or trans, it can cause additional revelatory gossip, and gossip is destructive. We are supposed to be more advanced, but are we?"

Allie said, "Linda was my chief informant and so I was around her anyway. Aren't we talking about this student at Darlington?"

Jason Goole contributed: "But that's not the situation in the example, is it? The daughter was not in the congregation."

I said in response: "I addressed that. Ministers can be friendly but they are not friends, for example. But everyone in our church is clergy, inheriting some Liberal Catholic practices."

"No laity?" asked Lisa of me.

"They come in and they receive and give ministry, but it's a very loose arrangement. We don't have members beyond clergy."

Jason said, "We're all off the point anyway. We are talking in general terms. In the press, the wife posed topless and forgave him for the affair. So he had received consent, even if after the event."

Terence said, "Hardly. She meant to embarrass him and it worked."

"She said she forgave him," said Jason.

Terence maintained: "It was embarrassing for Darlington, and the denomination, and he was gone."

Jason said, "He was wronged. Scandal got the better of them; something like in Serninsea. We had our own Serninsea over there, just that it was noticed less."

Lisa corrected him. "In fact she set out to embarrass him. She took the risk of appearing topless and that's because she knew it would reflect negatively on him. It I'm up here and it is an often-told story."

Jason came in. "Against my own position, I'd say he could not keep his hands off the daughter he met via knowing the mother. He should have concentrated on his work. He was gone within a flash of that topless pose appearing in the press. She made him an embarrassment."

"Because she showed her breasts?" asked Lisa Revie? "It's ridiculous. Don't blame her!"

I said, "I think that."

Jason said, "But I continue to maintain that although she intentionally stitched him up, he had consent. There was a lot of gossip but he did nothing wrong. You, Bishop Linda, said before that you had a partner who was married to a Rumanian Unitarian. How did that work?"

"But I met Mary, his wife, and she wished me the best in the relationship. They remained friends; they simply hadn't got divorced. I divorced my husband because, as in the public record, he constantly worked against me. He co-operated towards a fast divorce - I'll give him that."

Now Julia said, "There is a power issue in Darlington, where the minister has privileges and standing, and issues of favouritism can arise."

I said, "My point before. It's the principle regardless of consent."

Lisa said, "Let's name him, as it's no secret: Nathan Thames, and Nathan means 'giver' in the Bible but he is as much a taker, arguably."

Jason Goole said, "His wife, by the way, found a chap almost instantly."

The Rev. Anthony Lovatt appeared again. "That will do for that. Now I sometimes help out Andrew Fallon tutor theology. So, Hans Küng is a very elderly theologian these days, a marginalised Roman Catholic with an ecumenical and interfaith ethics reputation. He writes On Being a Christian, published here in English in 1977, later than our own On Being a Unitarian, 1968, by Phillip Hewett, and Küng's has an interesting section on page 414. I'll read it, degendered:

"On the other hand, myths, legends, images and symbols may not be criticised merely because they are myths, legends, images and symbols. Was this not a danger for Protestant theology, Church and proclamation, especially in the German-speaking countries, which frequently practised demythologization too thoughtlessly, hastily and arbitrarily? To a large extent pictorial, mythical, symbolical and sacramental elements were simply excluded from the Church. As if people had only ears and not eyes. As if the appeal had to be made to intellect and critical-rational discourse and not also to fantasy, imaginative power, emotions, to spontaneity, creativity, innovation. As if Christian faith were merely a matter of intellect and did not have to stir the whole person. As if being stirred could ever be replaced by intellectual comprehension, images by concepts, stories by abstract ideas, narrating by proclaiming and appealing. ...Thus, even when the mythical element is simply eliminated - as became evident in the theology of the Enlightenment and of liberalism - it is at the expense of the Christian message, which is then thrown out together with the myth. Faith then hardens into a rational religion.

"Now, have we hardened into rational religion?" Anthony Lovatt then asked. "Any agreement with him? Please discuss. Once again, no interviewers to join in, despite the temptation Andrew, and Laurence - our tutor in History and Ethos - and Remonstrant Erika!"

Jason Goole kicked off, making the main display. "The Puritans were pre-Enlightenment and they were, what's the word?"

Allie said, "Iconoclastic."

"That might be it: took away graven images."

Terence, appearing large, said, "But it is right. I think our Free Catholic should declare her hand."

"Happily," I said. "The Free Catholic or High Protestant approach is to have symbols without creeds. We have a regular Eucharistic celebration. Recently I invoked practice as a source of theological consensus."

"We do not," Julia asserted. "Hello, Yogini Lilasiddhi." There were three together now on the screen.

"Hello Yogini Shraddhadhi!" Celia Hindley said, "We don't want to be excluded by narrow practices. Meditation is open to everyone."

"So is eating and drinking," I said. "We operate an open table, especially with no lay membership."

Lisa Revie said, "We have coffee afterwards with buns and biscuits - I make many of them - and we have fellowship."

"It's not the same," I responded. "We ritualise it, observe the spiritual exchange involved. I know Derrida criticised the whole notion of gift, but it was never only gift."

"Aye," said Allie.

Terence Chicken said, "We have poetry in services, and we sing hymns."

"It is minimalist," I said. "We want to enchant and enrich."

"Do you do this when you go to Wytham?" he asked, the two women looking at him alongside him.

"No, I minister a service that they have. I don't impose."

Julia asked, "What about Charley at your end?"

"We haven't gone to lay presidency, so we have a Sunday off or others do it when Charley preaches. Our practice remains that a bishop or priest presides."

Jason Goole asked, "So you bend but we stay rigid?"

I said, "Let me tell you about a colleague. She's a follower of the theology and ecclesiology of the late Congregationalist Bernard Manning. He and she had simplicity in the delivery of what he and she called 'Word and Sacrament'. But she wasn't liberal, and we are - but we are with a performative ritual. We do have theatre, art and symbol."

Terence Chicken said, "But you are very clerical. It just shows we were right to reject Free Catholicism."

"We are no longer strict on Apostolic Succession. Obviously."

Allie then said, "The minister Unitarian Lloyd Thomas never got priested at Mayfair; W. E. Orchard did but he was a Congregationalist and went Roman Catholic."

"But he rejected the denomination," said Terence, "and I think you do too," he added.

"Not sure about that," said Jason Goole. "I mean, Lloyd Thomas was still Unitarian on a broad definition used at the time. Anyhow, you, Allie, said you're a Pagan doing spells and your wife is a Catholic."

"Wrong on both counts," said Allie. "I am inactive as a witch: there is no coven here, or not one I know about; and Linda is not a Catholic."

"A form of Catholic," Jason said. "Our man Martineau was about the limit. And from Martineau you get Francis Newman's broad theistic humanism. Now, our friend, Klara Merkel, already selected, wrote last year in our newspaper Challenger that our ministry should be for minorities and we could create something like an English Commonwealth Society. She clearly believes in a radical, equalitarian society and quoted the priesthood of all believers. Sorry, Linda, but you clearly are a hierarchical bishop. What do we think?"

I said, "Look, having bishops does not negate a priesthood of all believers," I said, "and in fact we have a priesthood of all by making them priests."

"You haven't. They're deacons," said Jason.

"I'm too slow since Liberal Catholicism. They will all be priested. We don't use the terminology because our stress is not on belief. It is on practice."

Terence Chicken said, "Nevertheless, our attending bishop's notion of equality is not from Enlightenment religion or liberalism."

Allie said, "No it isn't, and Küng locates it in Protestantism and is probably thinking of Ernst Troeltsch, and the category Mysticism, which is seen in the New Testament but owes more to the Enlightenment and indeed individualist liberalism - subjective faith."

Jason Goole said, "We perhaps need some objective-like standards, some identity, so we are not anything and nothing. Keeping some myths, some practices, might be useful, especially in our postmodern chaos."

"But that would be the wrong approach," I said. "It is an evangelical strand to have definition derived from tradition, the line going from Karl Barth's cultureless transcendence to Hans Frei and George Lindbeck, those standards of role performance generating beliefs and identity."

"If that's what you do," said Jason.

"No it is not," I said. "We are open. We have a kitchen learning from the Sikhs and a pool for a future new life-orientation from Judaism. Our symbols are entirely open to wide meaning. But I do have some sympathy for what K ung states. It seems so do you, and in a more concrete way."

Lisa said, "I just keep it simple. Simple expressions clearly meant. Like this joker Bernard Manning, apparently."

Anthony Lovatt appeared. "So I think we have enough. Thanks to all contributors. Had we met we would have had more of a get together. But the interviewers will now chat online and we'll all convene tomorrow at two in the afternoon."

And that was that! The screen went blank, and indeed we did not converse among the candidates.

I asked Allie, "What do you think?"

"Definitely we are outsiders."

"Yeah. It's supposed to be all-inclusive and welcoming."

"But it has its own way of making boundaries, and does."

"Hang on. I have a message," I said. "Dr. Mina Jones is asking for worship ready for 2 pm tomorrow and it will be evaluated for competence and engagement. Quarter of an hour only."

Allie said, "Right. Let's be really innovatory. Do some Buddhist, Pagan stuff and surprise them with what we use. Your High Priest is activated! Let's get to work!"

"You are activating being a High Priest?" I asked.

"Sort of."

Worship and Discussion (Thursday 26th March)

It was 2 p.m. and the Reverend Dr. Erika Zijderveld introduced the fact that we were having fifteen minute maximum online worship.

The camera was directed at Allie, Kathleen Lott, Winnie Lott, and me in the chapel, behind our altar table. We had closed robes on (and nothing else). I introduced the resident colleagues in religion.

"What we suggest," I said, "was that you get some yoghurt, or some bread, or a biscuit, or piece of chocolate; and then some milk, or a drink of wine, fruit juice, water, coffee, as you want. The preference is for something that transforms, but we're not dogmatic, and also we wanted to include the Yoginis and something Buddhist. We are going to use yoghurt and milk."

Celia Hindley spoke, coming on to the screen we could see. "You are referring to us. Julia came to the Western Buddhist Sangha I was in. We were also in the York Yonis, a post-Buddhist group, which we still attend, and we know about you Allie Shrimpton because what happened at Serninsea has been reported. Julia was in the Unitarians, with Terence, and..."

Erika reappeared. "The time for discussion is later. Please enter a state of calm for our short worship led by Bishop Linda Shrimpton, the Reverend Deacon Allie Shrimpton, and the other deacons."

I said, "We begin with a moment of silence."

Kathleen now said, "Let's start by loosening our bodies: Tantra is about moving energy through the body, so we unblock our systems first. Now, on ourselves, let's try light feathery touches, and gentle stroking. This is to heighten the senses in a slow way. Do this on your faces, and on your arms and hands, and, if bare, legs and feet."

Thus the four of us leading worship stroked revealed arms and legs accordingly.

Winnie continued, "Now we focus on breathing. Inhale and exhale mindfully; relax your tummy, and take slow deep breaths into your stomach. The need is to enhance the sense of intimacy."

Allie took over, reading what she had written: "All of creation is a play between Shiva (consciousness) and Shakti (the energy or power of consciousness). This distinction is a device to comprehend the incomprehensible. The Divine Mother is transcendent, ineffable, and immutable. Come, Divine Mother, our souls inspire, and lighten with celestial fire, with earth, air and water guide. Anoint and cheer our longing face with the abundance of your grace; keep far our foes, give peace at home; where you do guide, no ill can come. Teach us to know you the divine mother, and praise be to you. Using the Mahayana Shraddhotpada Shastra, we can say: Adoration to our Great Compassionate Saviour, Omnipresent, Omniscient, Omnipotent! Adoration to her potentiality and unmanifested universality! Adoration to activity, perfectly balanced and accommodating! Adoration to the pure essence of mind, wide and deep as the sea!"

It was my turn. "As we gather at the Mother's table we must recall the promises and warnings given to us, such as in the various Scriptures and traditions, and so examine ourselves. In the Christian Gospels, Matthew 11.28 states: Come to me, all who labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Allie spoke: "Yuthok Yonten Gonpo, a great lama who established the route of Tibetan medicine, said: 'If you take seven steps to help one patient, it is the same as circling all the Buddhas. If you give medicine once to one patient, it is the same as making charity for all sentient beings. When you fulfill the needs of one patient, it is equal to offerings to all the worthwhile. Refrain from: harming living things, taking what is not given, sexual misconduct, lying or gossip, and taking intoxicating substances.'"

It was me now: "The Beatitudes of Jesus: Blessed are the poor, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are those who mourn, for they shall be comforted. Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth. Blessed are those who hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be satisfied. Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy. Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God. Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called children of God. Blessed are those who suffer persecution for righteousness' sake, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."

"Divine Mother, giver of light and grace, we have upset you and our neighbour, in what we have thought, said and done, through ignorance, through weakness, and deliberately. We are sorry and ashamed and shall take steps to be more aware and more respectful. Amen."

Allie called the Peace: "Let us greet each other under the Holy Name in resolve to pursue greater awareness and compassion. Offer one another a sign of peace."

We did this with each other

"In silence," stated Kathleen in a strong voice, "be aware of your centres of energy; in particular, recall that Krishna, after worshipping Rada's yoni, became God Krishna. Sri Rama Janaki Nath worshipped Sita's yoni. Vishnu, Brahma, the saints, and all of us were born from a yoni.

I said, "Divine Mother, our hearts are open, you know our desires known, and we cannot keep our intimacies from you: Cleanse and Inspire us to become who we can be.

"We give glory to you, and we keep peace and harmony on earth; we worship and give thanks and praise. Hear us, and give us the means for wisdom in action.

"Now from Philippians 2:1-3 I read: ...make my joy complete by being like-minded, having the same love, being one in spirit and of one mind. Do nothing out of selfish ambition or vain conceit. Rather, in humility, value others above yourselves."

I read: "From Matthew 9:35-38: Jesus went through all the towns and villages, teaching in their synagogues, proclaiming the good news of the kingdom and healing every disease and sickness. When he saw the crowds, he had compassion on them, because they were harassed and helpless, like sheep without a shepherd. Then he said to his disciples, 'The harvest is plentiful but the workers are few. Ask the God of the harvest, therefore, to send out workers into the harvest field.'

"This is our read witness: Praise to the Divine!" Some people repeated the last four words.

Allie said: "We have our intercessions. Before the symbolic yoni ask the Cosmic Mother to grant wishes. Wishes may be of any kind - especially cures and needs. The highest wish, however, is to realise the truth in the essence of creation, in the 'womb' that is the mystery of Shakti, going back to the Source."

Allie said, "We pray for the the Roll of Churches of the Unitarian General Assembly, for better politics and governance of our continent and across the world. Consider those who suffer, especially in the lockdown, and those who have died, and for them we reflect in silence."

After a slight pause Winnie added: "Grant compassion for all, starting with yourself, for those you love, for those you do not ordinarily love, and expand that compassion to the whole universe."

I said, "Let us pause and anticipate the divine elements. These will come in a few minutes. We must wait in holiness for the divine action."

Kathleen and Winnie walked off to behind the camera. Kathleen returned with a bowl of yoghurt and four tablespoons. Winnie returned with a bowl of milk, four teaspoons and an athame. They placed these on the table cloth. The spoon handles faced me, the teaspoons near the yoghurt to my right and the tablespoons near the milk to my left as I looked out. The athame was placed in between them.

Allie stated: "We die, and are gone; we are born, and are here; we emerge through the yoni. This is our story. Hosanna in the highest! The honour is yours, Mother, for ever and ever, in the cycle of bringing birth."

I then picked up the athame, and placed it into the yoghurt. I said, "With the air of the north, and the water of the west, and the heat of the south, and the dryness of the east: conceive and reproduce."

I then raised the athame again, and placed it into the milk. "With the air of the north, and the water of the west, and the heat of the south, and the dryness of the east: feed and nourish."

Allie said: "The Dharma: make progress with the Dharma."

I said, "Draw near with faith. Receive the elements that conceive and reproduce, feed and nourish. God's holy gifts are for God's holy people: they are for all of us, all of us worthy of receiving and giving compassion."

"We do not receive these trusting in our own righteousness, but in your manifold and great mercies. You are the mother of grace and mercy. Grant us therefore the way of wisdom ahead as we consume these symbolic elements. Draw near with faith, first to the yoghurt and then to the milk. Or, first to your food and then to your drink."

With the teaspoons, I gave each of my colleagues a sample of yoghurt. Then with the tablespoons I gave each a sample of milk.

When it was done, I said, "Divine Mother. We thank you for feeding us with your body. Through you we offered our souls and bodies and received your divine power. Send us out in your Spirit to live and work to grant compassionate service to all."

"The peace of God, which passes all understanding, keep your hearts and minds in the knowledge and love of God, and blessing you all, may the Spirit, be among you and remain with you always."

"Go in peace to love and serve the people. Amen."

After a pause the Reverend Dr. Erika Zijderveld came to the centre of the screen by saying, "Thank you for that worship from the Free Liberal Bethel in Serninsea, thanks to all four of you. Please introduce your colleagues."

So I did, and Kathleen and Winnie left the stage.

"Thus we have made another liturgy," I said. "I'm sure we'll adapt it and use it again. I can think on my feet liturgically, so I have these texts in my head, and I write creatively, with my friends. That's what we have been doing ever since I and we went independent."

Anthony Lovatt appeared, saying, "I have done communion services based on early Christian and pre-trinitarian liturgies, much as we know them. This was definitely post-Christian."

"Stripped of dogmatic and doctrinal content," I said. "You don't approve?"

"Well, you extended the boundaries. And Alfia added her Paganism to the Hindu/ Buddhist content."

Allie said, "I'd have added more using the Black Madonna, but time was short."

Lisa Revie asked, "Who's that?"

I answered, "She has a mysterious presence at secretive spots in old churches, especially in France and Spain."

"Is she black as in diversity and inclusion?" Terence asked.

"Nope. The blackness is as of the fecund, soil waiting before new crops make the land green. The origins of such churches can be on Pagan Goddesses."

"You believe this, Linda?" asked Terence. "You strike me other times as rational."

"It is not history, it is not science; it is the art of creative story telling that relates at a deep level. So in Glastonbury there is a kind of pseudo-science to our modern ears in the ancient ruined abbey dedicated to her name, especially in her chapel supposedly designed using the sacred geometry of the vesica piscis: these are two intersecting circles demonstrating the sacred marriage of spirit and matter and produce a womb-shaped opening for the birth of the Divine Child of Light. Venn diagrams, Terence, with your maths degree. The overlap is a vulva shape."

"Gosh," said Lisa. "Beyond me."

Anthony Lovatt now said, "The other feature of this, beyond the flesh, was the spoons and the replacement elements. They all took these elements on spoons held by you, Linda. You were definitely the bishop then."

"I specifically said that they could pick up the spoons themselves."

"What exactly was that milk?" Anthony asked.

"Cow's milk. Breast milk will come later, perhaps."

Andrew Fallon said, "Not in content but in flow and presentation, I'd say it was pretty faultless: nevertheless, the Eucharist is not a common practice now within Unitarianism and we rely on the chalice as our symbol of unity."

"Highly innovatory," said Laurence Soames. "Good. Now this time here is for free discussion, to go where it will. So we have two strong Buddhists with us and what is your support for Terence and his Unitarianism?"

Terence, Julia and Celia appeared in the centre of the screen. Allie and I moved into the seating and dining area where we had the bigger screen.

Julia said, "The Western Buddhists had strains and stresses with its separate sex structure. As a couple, we felt we were breaking what was an arrangement to separate people from erotic relationships. The York Yonis had Tantric activity. So I chatted with Terence here, and we took more services together in York, that doesn't have a minister, and the services became more and more meditative and multifaith in character."

Terence said, "We virtually guide it now, the three of us. I take most services, Julia does a lot of administration. I've taken on more and more pastoral duties. So to become a minister would be an extension of what I do. Both Yoghinis are ordained."

Lisa asked, "Who ordained you?"

Julia said, "The Western Buddhist Sangha. We wanted to talk to Alfia - your full name? - about Taunton Tantria."

"Would that be relevant?" asked Jason Goole.

Julia answered, "Probably not."

Allie asked, "You wear hanging discs?"

"Of course we do, and you do not," she said. "We happen to know this."

The Rev. Anthony Lovatt appeared, asking, "Go on, Jason, how do you make this more relevant?"

"Well, simply: must we go down this New Age route just demonstrated?"

I responded, "It wasn't New Age. It was texts from traditions, texts with communal memories."

"Divine Mother and yonis. Yonis?"

"Why not? We have them!" I said. "Do some worship based on the penis," I suggested.

He said, "So last night I looked online about the Serninsea scandal, and it says about you being intersex and you can't have children. So what was all that about?"

"Because, Kathleen happens to be pregnant; Allie is trying to get pregnant."

"Who's the father or fathers?"

Allie said, "Donors."

Julia said, "Alison wants a baby from Terence."

Jason said, "I want to discuss the worship. Take for example the old-school ministers who preached without microphones. They spoke from their diaphragms. Everyone heard them, even at the back of a large Victorian pile, and in those days folk did not have hearing aids. Nowadays people have microphones and they mutter. We taught ministers to project their voices, to have clear diction."

"You're going back a bit there," said the Rev. Dr. Adrian Hatch. "Are you criticising our training before you've even been selected?"

"Maybe I am from observations up and down the country. But those ministers of old who went through formal training did the job. They delivered a clear, rationalising, simple, tradition. That wasn't."

"And what is 'the tradition' these days?" Adrian Hatch asked. "I suggest that the institutional memory at best has become confused: the rise in secular language and secular understanding has undermined even the liberal view of Christianity."

Jason Goole was returning to his view of postmodernism: "There was that attempt at a theological symposium some months back. And, yes, there was an interesting call to become postliberal in the Yale sense, now the world has opened out."

"Oh no," I answered rapidly, "that is no road to travel."

"It's about being recognisable, understood, defining who you are," Jason insisted.

"No, it is freezing culture, as if one can no longer take on experience, in favour of some imposition of what it is to be a Church. Culture keeps shifting, we keep absorbing, language keeps changing. This would be a sea-change for Unitarianism, surely, which is about subjective thought, and individualism among a crowd."

The Rev. Dr. Adrian Hatch then said, "Your sermon quoted the likes of Kireevskii, Khomiakov, Florovsky, Drozdof, Khrapovitskii, Solv'ev and Bulgakov. These are all collective and conservative, theologians of fairly recent times wanting to be continuous with patristic times."

"But I also spoke about using historical research, text affecting tradition when our texts are flexible and unbounded, and being more anthropological. Thus our consensus is less certain."

Celia said, the three appearing central screen, "Jason, You would exclude us with our far Eastern outlook."

"Yes I think I might as a central stance, but still contributing."

Terence said, "Second class citizens."

I suggested that this postliberal identity road was the way to adopting creeds and boundary statements and that it lacked courage.

Lisa now spoke (at last!): "Keep it direct, simple, efficient. I'm all for efficiency of speech. I didn't get much from the yoghurt and the milk. You'd have used breast milk if available?"

Allie said, "Definitely. You had any kids, Lisa?"

"No. No relationships either. Never really wanted them. I preach, do a lot of admin for the church, and keep the show on the road. I'll go to Findhorn, but I'm not into wacky stuff."

"Nor me," said Larry Soames. "There's a lot to be said for going straight down the middle."

Erika said, "Today the perspective to is to evolve boundaries to include like our two yoghinis here."

Anthony said, "Laurence definitely agrees with me."

"He's a historian," Erika responded. "But you cannot live as living in the past. Do that and you really are a religious museum."

"Jethro Tull," I joked to Allie.

"What?" asked Lisa.

"Agricultural advancement," Allie said.

"Hey?" asked a puzzled Lisa.

Terence stated his view that beliefs would evolve, but he didn't seem to want to offer me any support. Jason clearly wanted inherited definition, and Lisa apparently wanted simplicity.

So I asked her. "What is your position on all this, Lisa. You mentioned Findhorn."

"When Unitarians go there; I wouldn't go alone. There might be some ideas and practices, that's all. Yours seemed to be even farther outside."

I muttered, "Further outside."

"What?" asked Lisa.

"Hobbies? Activities?" I asked.

"Speleology. Can't think it has any relevance."

"Can affect your outlook. Do you dig deeper, look below the surface?"

"Ha ha," said Lisa.

The Reverend Dr. Erika Zijderveld declared the discussion over, that she and her colleagues had heard enough. She seemed to hint that it wasn't the best of discussions, by saying that Klara Merkel last year had offered a clear line towards political and social relevance. I could see that we had discussed religion in a very cultic manner.

Meanwhile, we should prepare for our actual interviews, said Erika.

Off screen Allie and I admitted that we started to get a bit fast and loose with references to agriculture and hobbies, evidence of frustration.

First One-to-One Interview

My first interview was on a one to one video link with Dr. Mina Jones, Chief Executive on the Roll of Officers. She said that the video was being recorded at her end, and the Rev. Dr. Erika Zijderveld in Rotterdam would review it. Normally the interview would be with the candidate alone, but due to the video link it would include anyone else in hearing range and Allie was welcome.

"What I want to ask about is your motivation for being a Unitarian minister. Let's face it, when you were a National Church priest you had a secure employment and you didn't fret over the size of a congregation. Now you might be going by the seat of your pants."

I said, "We are already. We've started building a church up. It has no trust funds, no endowments, no national funds. The Free Liberal Ecclesia does not send us any money. In fact we are due to send it a very small amount of money towards administration."

"Do you get a wage or salary now?"

"The pandemic has altered things, some of which I'd rather not discuss. Adam Magellan - who owns this place - tells me that the company is now a social enterprise. I live on expenses and subsistence. What we enjoy is the facilities, meaning the food and of course we have our accommodation."

"I sell paintings," said Allie, "and have done some other ad hoc work with a friend. I think I want to produce a book called Painting Bisexuals."

"Ah yes. Interesting. Let's move on. Arguably the Unitarian ethos likes to be progressive and inclusive, but it inhabits a Puritan legacy. It doesn't go for a lot of symbolism, like you do. I'll admit that some do meditative walks and dance."

"We would try and add some variety. This bethel would stretch into Unitarianism; I'd like the bethel to keep good relations with the Free Liberal Ecclesia."

"That might be a problem. We have already mentioned that they make claims of a connection that do not exist. One thing we have not discussed is that its Puritan shadow is not always tolerant about naturists like yourselves. Can you see why?"

"I've clashed with Christians before. But Christians are often naturists."

"True for Unitarians too. Do you know the Reverend Aled Bolt? He's just become the new Training Principal, still calling it Warrington Academy, and he is a naturist. He wasn't to do any of the interviewing, in order to overview procedures, but we might ask him to interview you. So I'll leave the discussion on that to you and him. If he doesn't consider it right to interview, someone else will ask about naturism. So let's move on. Charley Darley. You've found a colleague in our transgender minister, and is that personal struggle of his important to you?"

"I don't think it's made any difference to our co-operation."

"No, but any shared experience?"

"I'm not transgender. I'm a C-A-I-S intersex. It's not the same."

"Given that difference, do you not naturally empathise?"

"It is not naturally so."

"Not natural?"

"There are all sorts of cultural considerations: you're trying to make an equivalence of experience that is not there."

"Is there not a similarity of oppression, say?"

"In my case, no, because I look completely female. I just had to keep a secret. I've decided not to have it as a secret any longer. Charley had a fashion for tight trousers, did he not, which rather gave the game away."

"You looked at his crotch."

"My colleague and I could hardly miss it. But here is something interesting. Another trans of the opposite direction made friends with him despite her pursuing a simple Word and Sacrament free and full faith approach."

"We've heard of a new friendship with the UPCC retired minister; Charley has become distanced from her... his husband. And for some, the Puritan ethos about ministers and propriety kicked in. He's had to cope with that. So describe your intersex condition."

"I am genetically male, phenotypically female, gender female, sexually bisexual. My wife is the one who'd have all the children."

"Your wife is happy with the situation?"

"Very," Allie said.

"So he would be genetically female, becoming phenotypically male or mixed, gender male, sexually bisexual?"

"I'm beginning to think this interview is out of order," I said to the Chief Executive.

"I'm testing your responses, and I do approve of your reactions here."

"It is not ethical to use him to test my responses."

"Another general matter then is your partner. You made her a Reverend Deacon. What will happen if you are a Unitarian minister?"

"She will be a bishop. She will manage this place. I will be here and travelling around Foss doing Unitarian things."

"How are you regarding death?"

"I have an ongoing funeral ministry. Allie takes some too. We get paid and provide a service."

"That's not what I asked. How do you respond to death?"

"There was the suicide of my Anglican counsellor, and I was surprised how little it affected me."

"Nothing among your family?"

"No. Deaths haven't affected me."

"Then tell me about your family."

"My elder sister is intersex on the same basis as me. My brother is awkward: he has male genes and is male, so thinks he came out right. My youngest sister is female throughout."

"How about your marriage now?"

"Allie has met my parents. I have a passionate relationship with Allie. She energises me. I have a desperate love for her; that's how it is."

"And me back," said Allie. "I get a freedom to be me with Linda. I nearly got it with a woman called Abigail, but what's good about Linda is how quickly she can accept a new situation."

(Her answer slightly puzzled me. It sounded sort of true.)

"Allie: do your parents accept Linda?"

"They wanted me to marry my cousin Jonnie, but they like Linda. And we are cousins too."

"Really?"

"Jonnie is fourth cousin one removed, and Linda is sixth cousin one removed."

"But Jonnie and you could have had a biological child."

"We've been avoiding that outcome for years," Allie said, making me squirm.

"Oh I see."

"No you don't. We were bathed together as babies. We were at school together throughout. About fifteen we became sexual but I didn't fancy him. He fancied me, and everyone wanted us to marry, because the two families would intertwine yet again. But I fancy women. I didn't mind him in bed with me, I warmed to his care, inside my body too, but just him you see. But I could not make even an exception for him. I wanted desire, and I got desire."

"Oh. I see." Mina Jones now said, "Er, we have a number of lesbian relationship ministers. Their children do cause gossip especially among older congregants. That Puritan legacy again? Em, it is about discretion, I'm afraid. Don't flaunt the lifelong boy relationship. Allie, I know you are this High Priest Witch, but I would like you to consider your own application to our ministry. I don't myself think that the cold Protestant inheritance is sufficient now for us. We need that input from outside, I say, where the God isn't cold and distant and sky high, but located deep."

Allie said, "The God should be located in the vulva. Not conceptual, not distant, but in between our legs."

"I'm not sure that is my expression," said Mina.

"It is mine," said Allie.

"Mine somewhat," I said to support my wife, and getting rather fed up with the whole direction of this interview. "Aren't you going to ask about doing administration? I've done that. You have a doctorate, after all."

"It was honorary. Well our time allocated is short. We the interviewers are going to chat about our first interviews. I'm going to ask that we ask Aled Bolt to come along. Presumably your family is naturist?"

"Yes."

"We'll message you. Bye bye."

The screen went blank.

I said, "Allie. In any secular business, that would have been out of order."

"I think both of us have legacies that are problematic - and yet she wants me to apply."

"Maybe you should and I'll manage this place. It's a bit like my ex-husband intending ministry and me getting it instead."

A message received an hour later said that Aled Bolt would, in the interest of fairness, interview everyone in the form of a brief impression-gaining chat.

Second One-to-One Interview

The Rev. Dr. Laurence Soames, came on screen from Lancaster. "So it's hello for my interview with our candidate and I see your wife is with you. I tutor in History and Ethos. Here we go then. One of you. Name me a famous Scottish liberal and fairly mainstream source Protestant from the nineteenth century.

Allie said, "You'd better do it."

"Not Unitarian?" I asked.

"No."

"Er.. Thomas Carlyle? He was a Seceder in origin and had the doubt of the nineteenth century."

"Phew," said Allie.

"Good good. So what more can you tell me about him?"

"Born in Ecclefechan, and I know of him only because I think he came to believe in the fallibility of Christ. He didn't like orthodox theologians and didn't like railways, I think."

"Excellent. Question two in my non-pub quiz. What do you know about Dom Gregory Dix?"

"He wrote The Shape of the Liturgy and he was an Anglican Benedictine at Nashdom: 1945, so it followed on from Gabriel Herbert's, Liturgy and Society in 1935. I know because liturgy interests me - thus our worship. The main contribution everyone remembers was the four-fold view of the Eucharist: he took, he gave thanks, he broke, he gave."

Allie cut in, "In other words, ritual becomes more than what's said."

"Dead on," I said, "but it meant joining in with the eternal act of Christ, a huge influence on liturgical reform and... Hang on, I see where this is going."

"Do you?" he asked. Question three. Linda, name me a nineteenth century Unitarian reformer based in the Midlands."

"Theological reformer?" I asked.

"It's up to you. Quiet, Allie."

"I can't think of one. From the Midlands? West Midlands?"

"Yeah. He's a very well-known figure, the one I'm thinking of - but perhaps you have a different person in mind."

"The problem is I don't have anyone in mind."

"So, if I said, you know: municipal housing, sewers, imperialist, Unionist regarding Ireland."

"Political?" I asked.

"The one I'm thinking of. Well, you make my point for me, I'm afraid. I thought you'd get one out of three. I didn't think you would come up with a Scottish religious reformer. Mention Dix, and I knew you'd fly away, and you did. I hoped you might come up with the big name of Liberal and Tory politics who was Unitarian. Tell me more about Dix."

"Why?"

"Well, what were his main lines of influence?"

"India," I said, "1947. United Church of South India, that combined episcopal and non-episcopal Churches. I had a thought about that with our tiny Free Liberal Ecclesia, which has different kinds of bishops in it. Humm. Well, who were you thinking of, Dr. Soames?"

"This room is named after him. You might have seen the label above the door. Chamberlain Room. Joseph? See, my next question is, how many Unitarian chapels have you visited?"

"Two, but I met a number of different Unitarians and heard about others."

"Chapel Abbey and Wytham do not cut it. You knew nothing about Heathcote Milk House. One point I'd recommend in any training is that you should spend a year doing nothing but visiting different Unitarian chapels. You might preach in some, but in others just learn about them. You see, I think you are very well informed but when it comes to our little band of brothers and sisters, you are largely clueless."

"I'm offering diversity from outside."

"I have no problem with diversity. But I'd expect some affinity. Your contact, and it's a very good contact, is basically with one new minister. I'd have you travel around, but you want to build your church further... Make it Unitarian by joining it to the UGA Roll of Churches. I should expect no less."

"My colleagues have indicated a willingness to do this. Peter Marshall, one of our deacons, is Unitarian."

"Yes, he is a member of a UGA recognised online body. But you'll want to make him a priest and we don't have priests. And the manner of your Bethel, as you call it, joining the Unitarian denomination leads to a problem."

"Oh?"

"As you propose it, it gives a back door for the Free Liberal Ecclesia people. Some of us regard them as a bunch of misfits with a history of trying to hitch a ride on the Unitarian name, making claims to ministries on our reputation. Will you give us the assurance, when you apply to make your Bethel a chapel on the UGA Roll, that you will leave the FLE, the Free Liberal Ecclesia?"

"No, I can't."

"Why not?"

"I'm happy with the FLE as a form of High Protestantism. What I will say is that it will make it clear that it is not part of the Unitarian denomination even if the Bethel spans both. I do argue for a clear distinction."

"Clearly not."

"You misunderstand, and this might be my fault," I said. "The Bethel is already independent. It can leave the FLE. On denominational matters, we vote with the FLE. But it can only recommend policies to us. We vote on all our things."

"And you have a personal veto anyway," said Allie, perhaps not helpfully.

"Oh," said Dr. Laurence Soames. "Tell me about your veto. On everything?"

"If I wanted."

"So you are a dictator?"

"No, more like a trustee - in the sense of Unitarian governance."

"But you are not a charity. You are a social enterprise inside an enterprise."

"We weren't a social enterprise originally. I do have a veto on everything religious, but I don't use it."

"I think you like Independent Sacramental Ministry."

"We moved away from Liberal Catholic. My argument would be that it is a good thing that Unitarianism can extend to High Protestantism again."

"And my argument is to the contrary. It confuses."

Allie asked, "Does anyone outside the insiders know any difference?"

Laurence answered, "But we do, and it is about not having groups claiming an association that they do not have. I have spoken about this already with colleagues. But let's move on. You get on well with Charley Darley. They like you at Wytham."

"Do they?"

"I know they do. Do you know why this might be so?"

"Do I preach well?"

"You might. No. This is a man with a vagina."

"Oh come on," I said, "you're not stooping to this. Not you personally..."

"Don't come with all this expectation that we are uniformly progressive. Set against him, you're all woman. Liberalism is for many a licence to be obnoxious, very right wing. She, some of them say, cut off her breasts. Basic stuff, this."

"I've told them I'm intersex."

"You look the part."

"I look like a woman but I've got gonads high up and I ought to have been a bloke."

"You come from a Church that won't even recognise that you two are married."

"It does recognise we are legally married. It would not have us in its ministry. We married after I left. Allie, after all, came along because I was starting off a new church and at the seaside."

"As a researcher. Yes. That does raise the issue we covered of a minister starting a relationship with a member of the congregation."

"She was not a member of the congregation."

"I wasn't," said Allie.

"But, Bishop Linda, you felt a pastoral responsibility."

"I felt more than that," I said. "There was a concern that in doing her task she was deliberately isolating herself. It was too much of a burden for a single woman in an unknown town, in a bit of a backwater with peculiar characteristics."

"Anyway, the fact is that many in Wytham wish you would swap permanently. I don't think his friendship with the Reverend Georgie Smith has helped. They know, even if the UPCC in your town didn't, that she is trans. And, here is another thing: Unitarian chapels see ministers come and go. The trustees or board - there are variations of governance - hire and fire ministers. But your relationship in Serninsea is fixed."

"I think if I moved away I'd talk to Adam about removing that veto."

"I think we have covered everything. The man I was thinking of was Joseph Chamberlain. Worship provided by others at 11 am tomorrow. Goodbye!"

The screen went blank.

Allie said to me, "Well that was shit. I knew about Dix because you once told me. I didn't know about Thomas Carlyle."

"That guy Francis Newman, all about the fallibility of Christ. A vegetarian chap. His brother ended up in the West Midlands when Roman Catholic."

"Too late."

At 6 pm Roger, Marie, Kathleen, Winnie, Allie and I stood outside our double doors and did a clap for the National Health Service - although I thought we ought not to do it slavishly by government approval.

Group Worship and Comments (Friday 27th March)

I was in Wales, at the farm. Allie had abandoned me due to her heavy period. I was there on my own. My naked father approached my naked self, and said Lucinda's death was very sad, and he wanted cuddle time with me in the attic room.

So I went with him, and he locked the door behind us. There was an A frames contraption in there. He wanted to paint my toenails black in recognition of Lucinda's death, and he would paint his own green. To paint mine meant me hanging from an A frame with its plank of wood raised against my crotch.

As he painted my nails he said, "Forget about Allie; you are Bode and that is all you will ever be. You will stay on this frame forever. Lucinda is dead and you must be dead to the world. Diana was on here for years, at my command. No more Allie, no more religion, no more anything. You will have me for 'cuddle time' forever, and that's it."

I shuddered, and Allie was alongside me. I reminded myself that Lucinda was alive and well, even if the family was fractured.

I did not want to lose Allie. I wanted to be with her all my life.

Suddenly Allie's eyes opened. "We have to be at online worship at 11 am so we should have breakfast first; let the others do the deliveries."

"Is your period heavy still?"

"Still going some."

"Your arse seems active, as is my nose."

"Sorry about that."

Roger, Marie, Kathleen and Winnie were joined by a few students to do the food deliveries, and we'd had our breakfast when they all returned with supplies for the fridge and freezer.

The worship was an unremarkable three hymns and two prayers, the prayers from Terence Chicken using 'thee' and 'thou' throughout. So it involved an odd online singalong - we had the books! Allie and I only joined in the 'amen's that happened at the end of these rather short prayers.

The sermon by Jason Goole had some interest. He said this, among other statements: "If you take the chapel we have at Chapel Abbey, in the county of Foss, you may as well end a sermon with something like, 'That's All Folks!' and perhaps have a big picture of Roadrunner or some other creature by the side of the pulpit.

"Four services a year and then a big fat entertainment corporate cheque is signed. But go back in time. The Wytham Church itself, now in a ministry with Wulfstan and Chapel Abbey, had as its founding trustees: a linen draper, two malsters and a chandlera mercer, a saddler, a tallow chandler and an ironmonger. Some of these were fabulously wealthy merchants: people who made money on commercial privilege, doing one specialised job; later in the days of capitalism the industrialists spread their concerns and became even wealthier, one capitalist trustee generation appointing the next. Norfolk followed the same pattern.

"No wonder the trade unions tried to form Labour Churches: they did not trust us. Yet we claim affinity with the radicals of the Reformation, as in the Anabaptists, and revolutionary types. By and large we supported the French revolution: ex-Anglican Lindsey did."

I recalled the Anglican Lindsey and the Feathers Tavern demand for relaxation.

"Originally we were tough Calvinists, but tough theologies don't go together with a next generation in wealth, and the academies let in the more radical theologies, and chapel trustees often appointed liberal ministers against the majority of the congregation. Congregants themselves paid their pew rents and did no more.

"So how do we shift a gear now, when those days are gone, when many trustees are elected? Yes, we came good on diversity and inclusion, but social connections are lost. This year's one successful candidate, Klara Merkel, is good on politics. How does it compare even with the Oxford traditionalist Catholic movement, that saw a socialist religion in slums and rural places alike? Think of Thaxsted and the Red Priest. Can we not now join with Klara and proclaim something of a new commonwealth, a radical redistributive society and not just some washy statement about liberty in society?"

We had to give evaluations straight away. So I did. "I might make a number of points," I said from our seats in the Chapel. "First, why have these thees and thous?"

Terence Chicken said, "The language retains a sense of mystery."

"No it doesn't," I said. "You are confusing mystery with mystification. Mystery should come from the meaning; mystification just obscures. Secondly, Jason's got this Anglo-Catholicism all wrong. It was not about the industrial workers, but looked back to a pre-industrial artisan age. The workers it praised were of a different time, a time indeed when they scraped a living and these merchants built their piles of wealth. Merrie England, whether in the slums or the countryside, was a fantasy. And they were very patriarchial."

"You should know," said Lisa Revie.

"And, anyway, what would a contemporary commonwealth look like?" I asked.

Jason Goole said, "The worship was, basically, a straight bat. I don't myself object to thees and thous, but I avoid them myself."

Julie Chicken said, "I like responsive readings and there weren't any. I would say we took part more in the worship yesterday, even if it was way over the top."

Lisa then asked, "What is going on with Anne Wise? Has anyone heard about this? She has given up her academic work during training. Third year, isn't she?"

At his point, the Rev. Aled Bolt MA appeared. "Yes, this is correct and somewhat concerning. There ought to be a sanction for it. I am Aled, if you don't know, Principal of Training, fifty-nine years old."

Lisa said, "Well, with Callum Wise being her dad and a minister, she can get away with it."

I thought, this is somewhat forthright from a candidate.

Aled Bolt said, "I don't think we should comment on this here. One of the actual issues, however, is our liberal structure. The Warrington Academy is now reconstructed outside of its building in York, but it stays as detached as it was, as are most UGA institutions - including the UGA itself. So the UGA can only recommend, because the Academy makes up its own mind, and then it is up to the UGA to do what it wants with those leaving the Roll of Students after training. In all likelihood, the Academy will take on who is chosen here, but they may not. We don't interlock like Anglicans do, with checks and balances. You discussed the Darlington scandal: one issue was the time it took for the Academy Committee to finally dismiss him. The student pastorate was ended instantly, once his wife had appeared in the press, but at first he returned to the Academy. The UGA decided he was off the Roll of Students, but the Academy removed him by a majority of one only. Had he continued, some chapels would have had him candidate for ministry. Arguably we have enough incompetent and unsuitable ministers, in my opinion. With him, they'd have had to lock up their daughters. Ah, grub's up. Sometimes have a late breakfast. I'll talk to Linda and Allie first, soon. Try two pm for them I think. Yes?"

"Yes," I said.

"We are now using a competencies framework to assess those completing their training to go on the Roll of Ministers, Apprentice level. This new system integrates with both Worship Studies and Denomination Studies, which we oversee, the first taken by those going on to the Roll of Preachers, and both taken by those going on to the Roll of Leaders. If you have done these, you're excluded from doing them again, but if you haven't you must do them within ministry training. Goodbye!"

I pressed mute, just in case, as the screen went blank. "I bet they've all done them," I said to Allie. "What he meant was, I'd have to do more."

"Will he talk naturism?" asked Allie. "Apparently he is one."

Third One-to-One Interview

Next up to interview me (with Allie alongside) was the someone else, the Rev. Anthony Lovatt of Skipton. "Hello. We were fortunate to get Aled Bolt on board as Principal of the Academy but we have to think of the next one. It's no longer like with Principals of old, sat in the office, overseeing a standard training curriculum, and organising and monitoring local university education, doing some teaching, and also joining university colleagues and doing research. It's so much more a flexible task. But we still need academic ballast, people who know the tradition and some others. And I do consider you two as some very capable academics. You've been asked this but why not candidate yourself, Alfia?"

"My research has given me insight, but Linda actually runs the church. These days contextual is everything, which is very within."

"We might be discovering this," I said.

"I see what you're getting at, contextual as 'inner knowledge'. But it usually means applied theology. We learn when in ministry, thus practical training and theology on site. But whatever happened to formation, education for education's sake, and someone's potential to hold and express the inheritance that we have? Everything these days has to have economic value, measured, practical, applicable. Why then are so many candidates thrown up by this new system so incompetent?"

I said, "We wouldn't know. We've just had a specialist in incompetence as an Anglican vicar locally and she didn't last five minutes."

Allie said, "We now have a replacement who'd rather be a General Practitioner only."

"We still want professional ministers," said Anthony Lovatt.

"Ah," said Allie, "the whole sociological function of professions is to exclude and restrict entry. It isn't just about training for an office, but regulating entry to uphold status. I notice more and more lay training, and therefore must mean less 'professionalism'. My status as High Priest is entirely cultic, and it has no professional barrier. There is no application process worth its name, no residential formation or anything like that, but you should have Wiccan understanding and absorption. ISMs like Linda have some training, but again they're cultic. I was also a member of Taunton Tantria, and that is pure rituals on a sort of New Age basis, again not professional, but a bit secretive and obviously of some Tantric content."

Then there was a surprise all right. "I'm sorry," said Anthony Lovatt. "It seems we staff have to meet unexpectedly and right now. Please stick around because we think this will be followed by a general meeting of staff and students."

So the screen went blank. The post came and Kathleen walked over with letters for me. One was from the new diocesan bishop, which I decided to look at later on once this sudden pause was explained.

Criminals

Dr. Mina Jones occupied the central display. "It's fallen to me to make an announcement.

"Terence Chicken has withdrawn from being a candidate. Julia Chicken is Yogini Lilasiddhi but the person we knew as Celia Jenkins, also known as Yogini Shraddhadi, is not Yogini Shraddhadi at all, and she does not have a diploma in Western Buddhism.

In fact it's come to our attention that Celia Jenkins is a convicted criminal, under the real name of Carol Handley. She, surely assisted by Julia Chicken, used York Cross Chapel as a means to respectability. Ms Handley has past convictions for fraud. We at least knew that Allie had changed her name."

Allie said, "Surely there was a police identity and criminal record check. Linda insists on it for everyone."

"We relied upon the York Cross congregation trustees to tell us they had carried out the PI and CRC. But they didn't. This happens all too often, unfortunately."

Going white in my face, I looked at Allie.

Lisa Revie asked, "When and why did you change your name, Allie?"

"When a university undergraduate, to escape a relationship and redefine myself."

"Alfia had a within six months PI and CRC," said Mina.

Allie said to me, "I sent mine in separately. You sent yours?"

"Yes." I looked at her with anger - as much angry with myself.

Mina Jones continued: "The York trustees are going to strip them all of duties, if they want to still attend there. We have informed the police. It is sad to lose Terence, but this is the consequence because he wouldn't answer direct and simple questions following on. I'm afraid this is all we are prepared to say. Interviews will continue with Jason, Lisa and Linda."

The screen went blank. "I never saw your PI and CRC," I said to Allie.

"Professor Mitton said I should get one and also it doubled in usefulness when I became a High Priest. So if you'd asked, I'd have shown you."

"And did it say you'd changed your name? That would have saved me a lot of grief."

"No. It confirms that I am Alfia Shrimpton and that I have no criminal convictions. It doesn't give information like changing my name, but I did give this information in getting one. And who else's haven't you seen?"

"Christine's. Nobody's. Hell. Why don't you tell me anything?"

"What? You didn't ask; I can show you it if you want."

"Don't bother," I told Allie.

"I noticed they mentioned my name change as if it's dodgy, and it's not."

"Yeah, I do have one but I don't know about others."

"So you are up against Jason Goole and Lisa Revie only. What about replying to the diocesan bishop? Have you opened his letter?"

"Nope. I can guess what's in it. Let's give it rapid attention, saying thanks but no thanks. What's this text from Adam?"

I looked at the list of candidates. Focussed on Terence Chicken, because of his wife and lover and his wife's lover. Carol Handley is the new real name of a fraud convicted Celia Hindley, a fake Buddhist, using Yoghini Shraddhadi Celia Jenkins, who's been helping Yoghini Julia Chicken to recycle income their way from a Buddhist ethical shop when, also, Julia is getting State benefits and not declaring this income. I passed the info anonymously to your Roll of Interviewers. Terence Chicken has withdrawn, and you should have a better chance of selection with access to all those legit historical funds. Nothing on Jason Goole or Lisa Revie, but Aled Bolt seems dodgy. Go for it! Adam.

"What a bastard," I said. "He's fucking interfering, and I don't want this."

Narrator: Allie An Additional Chat (Friday 27th March)

Before Linda and I were due to hear from Aled Bolt, I took to the telephone and made a private call to the High Priest of the Creech Moorlinch Coven, Professor Roland Mitton.

"I'm just checking on the rules. We can conceal the Coven and our membership from outsiders, but not from ourselves."

"Yes."

"But if a High Priest of the Coven meets another, they should declare themselves."

"Yes."

"The thing is, I have declared myself to Andrea Lindsey, also known as Andrea Plimpton, but she has not responded."

"Andrea Lindsey is Andrea Moonglow, High Priest of this Coven. There are only four of us: Abigail, me, Andrea and you, and, of course, two live outside the area here. George will soon join us and make five. But the rule also states that where two priests are in reasonable travel contact of each other, they should carry out rituals with each other, and in fact you should really begin your own Coven, with our informed blessing as you transition."

"So by moving here she is really required to engage in rituals with me."

"Yes, of course. 'Two witches gang together.' As you say, we are not in secret from each other."

"Thank you. I thought she was a witch, but I wasn't a hundred per cent sure."

"You are now. She is in a difficult position, being a Christian priest, and an Anglican one to boot, but she knew that when we ordained her. She was in Taunton Tantria and now is in Serninsea Vestal Virgins. She should declare her public persona with you, and you two can inform us as you form a coven of your own and leave us."

After pleasantries, I put the phone down (in the vestry) and went out to Linda in the seating and dining area, waiting for action on the big screen. I did not tell him about the Unitarian interviews or any counter offers.

Linda said, "Togs off, eh, to talk naturism with Aled Bolt?"

I agreed and we stripped naked, in front of the main seating area camera, the screen above.

Linda said, looking at that screen, at a man in a tartan wrap, "Oh shit. You're not Aled Bolt to talk to me about naturism."

We both folded our arms across our breasts.

"No I am not," said this man in a soft west Scotland accent. "I see that you are prepared for gymnology. I'll join you."

The man stood, his head above screen height (like some webcam sexworkers) and it was just one garment to unwrap: Diana had said something to us about older, longer kilts (in The Jacobite Gap Years, before Culloden). He seemed to be semi-erect to me. We unfolded our arms, looking at each other.

He continued, sitting, "Aled did not want to interview everyone or you only. There are one or two issues arising with him: he might have put money into Julia Chicken's ethical shop, innocently I hope. I'm definitely second choice but they think I suit you two for an engaging conversation. I'm here in Scotland. I'm surprised no one is involved from the Non-subscribers in Ireland; usually they invite themselves into the Warrington Academy in York or meeting at Heathcote Milk House. I'd be looking to see if we in SUGA can take anyone chosen off to a suitable church in Scotland, just as the Non-Subscribers poach for Ireland."

Linda said, "Adrian Hatch is from Stirling."

"But he is so British, you see, an incomer, and he isn't into poaching whereas I am. I suppose you've heard about the Prime Minister."

"No."

"He has Novel Covid."

I said, "That's a rummun'. But on matters here, the only woman minister is from abroad."

"Yes it is embarrassing, when you want to be seen as progressive. So I am yet another man, the Reverend Seumas Caimbeul at your service. You see, I am not at the centre of things. I once proposed myself to be the new Bràthair Dùbhghlas, the only Unitarian monk. I think they all regarded it with as much contempt as your Free Liberal Ecclesia, as it now calls itself."

"Glè thoilichte coinneachadh riut," said Allie.

"Is that a party trick greeting or do you speak Gaelic?"

"I have a basic grasp."

"Ah. Tha feum againn ort."

"What?" Linda asked.

"He says they need me."

"I'm beginning to wonder who is the candidate here. Are you based at Inverness?" Linda asked him.

"No no, they have their own minister at Inbhir-Nis and she is a woman: Sine NicCoinnich. I'm in a little retreat near Ceann Loch Raineach. On the Roll of Churches, yes, but not really a church and a bit left-field. It and I didn't start out as Unitarian and I see their beady eyes are on Serninsea. Similar, eh? I sort of achieved ministry recognition, did some wee training after my wife died, learnt the denomination, and gave them a little gem into their Roll of Churches - a retreat. Tigh na h' lobairte. It's a sort of spiritual bed and breakfast and grounds. And we do... naturism. Do you?"

I said, "Well I go to the foot of our stairs."

Linda described the actual Gymnology group, and the use of the mikveh, and that it involves naturism because the Jewish practice is for single sex private parties when we mix them. "The point is the theology of the body, and here yesterday we invoked the Divine Mother as an extension of the body."

"So you don't do - or you do do, explicitly nude whole worship?" he asked.

"Our own wedding part was nude, and we did a Christmas mission to the Bever Wood Naturist Centre."

He asked us, "Do you not recall a television programme some years ago, Gardening with Nothing To Go On?"

"I do remember that. It was a short series," Linda commented.

"There were two lay preachers on one programme. They were living in York. Before Terence Chicken's time. It created one hell of a stink there, and this in a supposedly progressive denomination. Think about that."

"It must be over ten years since that was on," she said.

"They moved to Hull. That's how bad it was. York Cross Chapel is very different now, you know, the academy and church that you as candidates would have visited without this virus."

"And your place, in the Highlands?" Linda asked.

He said, "This place becomes a naturist centre at times. It sometimes needs a roaring fire. Indeed, we recently had a visit from a naturist from your county along with her girlfriend Sally. She was called Diana, attracted to the nearby Clach na h'lobairte or Stone of the Offering."

I said, "Cor blarst me!"

Linda, her eyes widening, said, "Tell me more, because there's a novel series, The Jacobite Gap Years..."

"Stone of the Offering features in The Jacobite Gap Years," said Seumas, interrupting her. "This couple were indeed also visiting Loch Dhùn Alastair or Dunalastair Water, which is by the filming site for..."

Linda did her own interrupting: "Diana? Diana what?"

"Monarch or something."

"King? She is calling herself King then."

"Monarch. Bheil am biadh deiseil?" Seumas Caimbeul asked, looking to the side.

I asked this time: "Someone cooking for you?"

"It's a simple salad," he said. "A fiesty local woman is here; brought my shopping over from Pit Cloich Aire."

Off screen we could hear, "Dùin do chab!"

"What?" asked Linda.

I said, "He asked if the food was ready and she called back 'Shut your gob!'"

"Caer dy geag," Linda said, not wanting to miss out. "Dyfed used it once - told me."

Seumas was back looking at his camera. "Did you know that author Charles MacKay was born today in 1814? He covered Gaelic and lowland Scots, claiming that thousands of English words go back to Scottish Gaelic. Nonsense, of course."

So I asked, "Are you a native speaker?"

"I was born in Tyndrum, and my parents soon moved to Caol Loch Ailse and there I went to Gaelic medium schools where I met my childhood sweetheart. Then we moved to Pit Cloich Aire and out to Ceann Loch Raineach. We tried to teach it to locals, to re-seed it if we could. She's since died, twelve years back, so I have her grave here. I still try and teach locals."

I liked this guy. I said, "I'm so sorry to hear this. Tyndrum? We went past that to arrive at Crianlarich. I have an ancestor there. Margaret Urchardan."

"Urchardan, eh? There is a tale of the missing teenager, that some say she was murdered by an English traveller and that her body was never found."

I said, to inform him, that in fact she had died in childbirth in Walsingham. "James Rogers went to Scotland for a tour in May 1788 and met the fifteen year old Margaret in June 1789. He had sex with her and she did not get her next period. Anyway, he returned to her and, and the result was he took her back to Walsingham."

Cornelius was born and she died."

"Ah but the folk tale is that she haunted the area as a spirit. But tell me about you and naturism, especially our actual candidate Linda!"

Linda gave me one of her looks, surely inferring that I was lolloping too much on her ground. She recovered her status by saying we could visit two clubs, Bever Wood of her current membership and Saxiclite: that both have swimming pools, sports facilities, games rooms, meeting rooms and rooms to stay in. Both are compulsory for nudity, changing to naked as you go in and dressing when leaving.

"They want me to ask you Linda if you know about naturism's background."

(I smelt a trap but kept quiet.)

"Of course I do. It is from Germany, predominantly, of the Free Body Culture or Freikörperkultur. But 'naturisme' was so described in 1778 by the Belgian, Jean Baptiste Luc Planchon, and the first club was actually in British India in 1891 by Charles Crawford, a judge for the Bombay Civil Service. But Germany had the ideas, and a journal, and Nacktkultur at the turn of the twentieth century. Fitness, sunshine and fresh air on the flesh assisted mental and psychological fitness - something we are all aware of presently with the lockdown. German naturism was also part of a youth movement. The big promoters were Adolf Koch and Hans Suren, mixing the sexes and being open about sex itself. Free-Light Park or Freilichtpark was opened near Hamburg in 1903 by Paul Zimmerman."

I thought: hook, line and sinker, she jumped into the the trap.

"Goodness me, such detail!" he responded.

She had more, too. "The French also had a wide philosophy, and the whole movement grew. We usually say naturism in France was connected with the ancient Greeks and tackling tuberculosis. Marcel Kienné de Mongeot started the magazine Vivre and the first French naturist club, establishing in law naturism so long as it was discreet. François Fougerat de David de Lastours wrote a thesis on heliotherapy in 1925 and also then opened the Club Gymnique de France."

"How do you know all this?" he asked in his lilting accent.

"Because we started the Gymnology group here and I revised the origins - I refreshed my memory. I am a dedicated naturist. Yes, it discusses other things but it also looks into naturism as a tradition and community."

"What about the British Isles?"

On she went. "Moonbright - no, Moonella, sorry, was the first club in Britain, in Essex, from 1924, where people had naturist specific names for anonymity. It attracted in members of the New Gymnosophy Society that came out of the English Gymnosophy Society. Didn't last long. It sort of shifted to St. Albans. I've never been involved in high up British naturism."

"Does anything connect naturism with Unitarianism?" the minister asked.

"That's an interesting question," Linda said, stalling. (She was caught in the trap).

I rescued her. "I read that there was a connection with American Transcendentalism, itself linked with radical forms of Unitarianism, so that Walt Whitman and Henry David Thoreau connected nudity and nature. I like the French concept of joie de vivre, of physically felt sensations and direct experience and a spontaneity. Think of André Gide, Henri Matisse and the Fauve movement. Be nude, be vegetarian, if you will, don't drink and don't smoke. I'm all of those but for eating some meat. Some of the German idealism went to a body perfect fascist right wing, and some went anti-authority left wing. Koch was left wing, attacking parental authority, Church, media, law and order. Seventy thousand were in Koch's Körperschulen schools. I learnt this and the Gaelic at the University of Somerset."

"My God," said Linda.

Seumas responded, "Where else but Somerset? I think you should indeed candidate."

"I'm a Pagan," I replied.

"That's just who we need," he said. "Let me suggest it myself," said Seumas Caimbeul. "Does this suggestion cut into your plans? I'm talking to you through Unitarian channels here, limited in what I can say and propose."

Linda burst out her reaction: "She's a witch! Do you really want a witch?"

"Definitely! Excellent! Neo-Paganism is all part of the Unitarian new mix; left-field we may be but it's the future. I want her in Scotland. They don't burn witches any more but they might get out the ducking stool given the expanses of Loch Dhùn Alastair, Loch Raineach and Loch Teimheil."

So I had to say, "I'm afraid my future is here. I want to have a baby. I'm trying to get pregnant. Did you have children?"

"No. I'm like a monk, now. Well, a different kind of monk. Look," said the minister, "I've enjoyed my Unitarian chat, and we've demonstrated our naturism haven't we!"

Linda said, "It's been a remarkably useful chat."

But like Columbo he said, "Just one more thing. Have you heard about our minister in London who's joined the African Charismatic Church as one of its bishops, and still intends to be one of our ministers?"

Linda had gone quiet.

So I said, "Definitely rum."

"Our very own the Reverend Joseph Woking. Minister of long standing. He thinks it's a great honour to join this group and give it guidance in its outreach into the British Isles. They're not just charismatic, they are positively magical and superstitious. You've not heard of it, our Pagan High Priest?"

"Er, I didn't say I was a Pagan High Priest," I responded. "It's not the sort of thing..."

"But you are and tell him so," said Linda, probably trying to queer my pitch.

I replied more generally to his point: "Anyhow, I know there are charismatic African groups that veer into heresy as other charismatics see it. Charismatic religion alone is not stable. Moved by the Spirit, these are not guarantors of orthodoxy."

Linda looked at me again with dagger eyes, as she so often did.

He said, "All the best to you two. I'll pass on my impressions to the others. I hope one day we meet physically, even naked as the day. Plenty of wood on the fire and not to burn any witches! You know, if you do get to be selected, and I hope you do, you can always come up to Tigh na h' Iobairte for some of your practical training - in a retreat! Bring Allie; she'll be perfectly safe. Bye bye. Sláinte."

The screen went blank.

Linda said to me, "Great! I'm on the outside and everyone is telling my wife she should be the candidate. Perhaps you should, Allie. Stone of the Offering? How tempting that must be for you. You're going to run away again, aren't you?"

"No I won't."

"They don't want me but they want you, and then they'll train you and you'll settle in Scotland. Crianlarich or his place, with a name close-by like that."

"I think you are confusing me with Diana," I replied firmly, causing Linda to get off her seat, look at me with her big breasts hanging and sit down again. I made the point, "You're always mobbun about suffun."

She asked me, "Are we going to dress?"

"Why? I'm not."

Narrator: Linda Final One-to-One Interview (Friday 27th March)

After about an hour the Rev. Andrew Fallon came on screen and said, "Adrian Hatch and I are sharing the concluding interviews. He's doing Lisa now and I'm doing Jason after this. Aled Bolt has agreed to be investigated for connections to Julia Chicken's ethical business. Hello?"

Running from behind the main camera, each of us held a camera off button on the portable control as we slipped on our blouses.

"We're here," I said. "Picture in a second..."

He explained that when they met physically at York or Heathcote Milk House they announced the result before the candidates went home. The equivalent online was next day, Saturday. We had to be ready for 1 pm for the recommendations of the interviewers to the UGA Roll of Officers.

"Our final interviews are based on what the team think we ought to ask each candidate, based on what the candidates have shown as strengths and weaknesses. As you are now the only candidate with a spouse involved in the process, we thought about asking Allie to absent herself but decided against."

Allie said, "I can leave."

"I'd rather you didn't," he advised.

No, and I could think why. They wanted her, not me.

So our interviewer began. "I was thinking about some of your approaches. What do you know about Carol P. Christ and Judith Plaskow?"

It wasn't that long ago that I was reading them! I said, "One is post-Christian and one remains within Judaism. Both think that divinity is found within our lives and shared experiences."

"Do you know about these theologians, Alfia?"

"Oh, I think so," she said. "Linda recommended them, after dealing with a Reformist rabbi, but I knew of them. They did Womanspirit Rising a long time ago."

"Yes they did. Tell me more, Linda." (There was an emphasis on 'Linda'.)

"You are obviously thinking about the body, Andrew. Do I call you Andrew?"

"I'm not sure what else. Go on."

"It's panentheism, world and body, not simply pantheism. Theology is experiential, then, within this world and our bodies. Theology should make sense and promote the good life. They've done dialogical theology."

"So faith is from God, religion is from humans?"

"That's dialectical. Easy mistake."

"It wasn't a mistake; I was being deliberate."

"They dialogue with each other, the emergent feminist theology being pluralist."

Andrew Fallon asked, "Do you think Plaskow's God is more personal or impersonal?"

"Impersonal. As Allie indicated, I've had a number of dealings with a rabbi called Maurice Neptune in Wytham. So I did read up on some progressive Jewish writers. She's become a sort of ground of Being person, but her God is active in supporting all that is."

Allie said, "All I know about Carol Christ is that she sees the world as the body of the Goddess."

I said, "She promotes the Goddess as love and intelligence and sort of consciousness. That's a more recent development in her thinking. I am interested in post-Christian thinking, obviously. Plaskow tackles evil, something itself to be tackled in experience, with the God as ground and being and becoming: not gendered, not personal, creative. Carol Christ does gender her Goddess, and it is about caring and being personal and striving for love and the good in the world."

"Very full answers - as we have discovered - and clearly something Allie and you can discuss together. As we suspected, you Linda have a highly developed theological outlook. And this example raises the question: what can we do with you?"

Oh dear. It looked like Allie and I had over-cooked the pudding (again), though the focus was on me.

He went on: "You could do a Ph.D in some suitable theology, but this may be an indulgence. I'm asked to ask you about Don Cupitt: he has been fashionable among some radical Anglicans. What do you think of his writings? He has said that his writings are his autobiography."

"Not fashionable with me," I said. "This everyday language stuff isn't theology any more. It's a survey of uses. He still goes on about language and its closure around everything. I don't believe that. The embryo and foetus to be in Allie's body won't be about language."

"Are you pregnant?" he asked of Allie.

"Not yet."

"Linda, you were saying."

"Language is programmed into us, but it isn't the be all and end all. And yet he does have some insight into biology and culture. He also has much on outpouring solar light. By the way, I am not an Anglican. I was more by accident than by design, and I have moved away."

"You do know, Linda, about the one-time West Midlands theologian, minister, practitioner, J. M. Lloyd-Thomas?"

"Yes, the Free Catholic and thus, what I call High Protestant."

"Offer me some proof that you know something about him."

"He worked with W. E. Orchard, the Congregationalist, at the Mayfair church where the first female trinitarian minister emerged, who was a Congregationalist with a theology including the Virgin Mary, for her sins. Constance... I forget. Too many names."

Andrew Fallon said, "Coltman. Was Todd. A little after our own first female minister, who was called?"

"Don't know."

"Gertrude von Petzold," he stated. I took it that Allie did not know or remember either. "Would it be fair to conclude," asked Andrew, "that in training and education you need grounding in Unitarian theological movements? There's too much history about but we do need to know what we are. I do have a suggestion for a project."

Now Allie spoke up saying, "Hervieu-Léger is the one who considers the chain of memory within a religious institution."

"Allie! Let's hear what the minister has in mind. I'm all ears," I said to Andrew on screen.

Allie said, "You'd look odd if you were."

He said, "You've hinted at this already. James Martineau is the polar opposite of Karl Barth. For one, revelation is in the general of which the particular is one example, but for the other revelation is in the particular for which the general could even be misleading."

"The latter would be Barth," I said.

"It has been said that Karl Barth saved the Protestant Churches of the Continent of Europe from Unitarianism. A Unitarian chap called Spencer wrote that, just after the war. But there is a view, of a kind of thought experiment, by Linzey the Anglican not Lindsey the Unitarian, that had Barth done his dialectical approach on the Holy Spirit he would have come to a much more open and dynamic position on revelation. That's about immanence and the creative Spirit."

I said, "It's an eat cake and have it position. You either embrace liberality or you just hang on to the doctrinal rope."

"You make my point for me," said Andrew. "Being dialectical is to never get away from something with its opposites. It's not necessarily Hegelian, going up each time with a synthesis. But the dryness, the rationality of Calvinism, often leads to a transfer to a simpler Unitarian road."

"What's the project?"

"So without wanting to get too denominational - there's no point in that - the issue we are tackling here (if we accepted you) is methodology for claiming a legitimate theological development. You can do such a project without being a minister. As for your connection with Unitarianism, I should say that Adrian Hatch thinks that High Protestantism or Free Catholicism is, really, a fantasy and a cul-de-sac. It is too close to Independent Sacramental Ministry. It is not us. It is reinventing, glorifying, puffing up tradition. Neo-Paganism is fantasy. How do we avoid fantasy?"

Allie cut in, saying, "Ride with it. So what if neo-Paganism involves an invention of a past for legitimacy purposes. Take Gerald Brosseau Gardner, for example. Also, more relevant here, there's Iolo Morgannwg, you know, the Unitarian fantasist with stuff that led to the Gorsedd in the Eisteddfod in Wales. I know about him because of the Druids thing."

"Very good," Andrew said of Allie's contribution, as I looked at her with more dagger eyes. "Tell me about being this Pagan High Priestess."

"My coven, although I can't attend it as it is in Somerset, uses the neuter term 'priest' alone. So I am a 'High Priest', meaning I have been through all three levels of initiation."

"Who was known as the Witchfinder General and what is his connection with this denomination?"

Allie answered, "Matthew Hopkins."

"Very good. Was he fictional or real in that film?"

"We did chat about him earlier," I stated.

Allie continued: "The film's placings and timings are all wrong and some details are skewed. He was from Suffolk, and a Puritan Presbyterian on whose original land the chapel that became Unitarian stands."

"Suffolk Unitarians. Impressive. And the connection with Pagans is pretty obvious."

"Aye, he went after women who were village nuisances, and basically killed some of them by supposed judicial means. He be a torturer."

"His activities didn't last too long," said the minister. "Why not?"

"He wrote about his distasteful activities, and drew attention to himself, but he put his expenses on the rates and that wouldn't do. He didn't have the sticky end given to him in the film."

"Linda. Who was Richard Baxter?"

"Crumbs."

He said, "Anglicans tend to forget him. He was the supposed moderate Presbyterian, who gets this label because he did stress Christian essentials."

"I know about the Restoration restoring the bishops in 1660 and producing the foundational Prayer Book of my former Church in 1662."

"Yes. But did the Presbyterians rule the roost for at least a time?"

"No. Cromwell was an Independent."

"His kind were the more tolerant," said Andrew Fallon. He even tolerated John Biddle. The Presbyterians wanted to dominate via Parliament and use Scottish power - the politics not the electricity company! Cromwell fought the Scottish off directly. But later the Independents narrowed and the Presbyterians broadened - and, arguably, Baxter inspired that."

"But surely the Presbyterians are the origins of Whig toleration," I suggested. "Charley Darley told me about 1844 and all that: trust funds and all that secured on the basis of a liberal reunderstanding of Open Trusts. And the social scientist in me knows about Eric Hobsbawm and invented tradition - as does Allie about Hervieu-Léger."

"Which is?"

"As we said: it is the fake end of institutional memory for purposes of legitimacy. The fact is that Merrie England and all that, from Oxford Anglo-Catholicism, is a myth of legitimisation. Then there was Lux Mundi, a sort of Hegelian Anglo-Catholic compromise."

Allie said to me, "You're not helping yourself."

"Tell me more about Lux Mundi."

"It won out in recent times, especially after ordaining women. But the Liberal Catholicism I later encountered was the Old Catholicism breakaway, that became associated with Theosophy and had its own liturgical developments. So I moved on to Free Catholicism that I have been developing with colleagues."

"And I think," said Andrew, "that you are seeking financial resources for your church. The retreat near Kinloch Rannoch has become relevant and partly why we asked Seumas Caimbeul to report back to us. It gets UGA development money, and has become eligible for Scottish trust monies. You are in Foss, and I think your church into our movement would make it eligible for trust offerings for development, and you might get Foss Group corporate money. Clever man, our Charley Darley. You see, we think you are here because of suggestions from him about money. He has probably told you about extra financial backing for Seminsea. But it actually means a kind of growth of his empire."

"I don't think he is like that; he has never been like that."

"Plus the fact he has marital troubles, and he has a congregation that took him on but would rather have a change. See, he can see how your place is somewhere he can go."

"He can come here now, with our pleasure."

"But if Serninsea were to go on the Roll of Churches, then he could change base within the Foss Group - and so could you."

"This is far too cynical. Don't you like him? I do."

"He sees just how Serninsea could bring in the money. But it can't, can it, because you won't cut ties. I for one would insist that you cut all ties with the Free Liberal Ecclesia. Furthermore, this ethos of ordaining everyone is not our ethos at all."

"Then we have come to a full stop," I declared.

"Really?" he asked.

"Yes. The more I think about it, the more I think this place is precious."

"Well, there is your place and there is your person," he responded.

"May I ask something? How much do you include Allie's contribution to my selection or do you want her alone?"

"We would see her as essential backing. But clearly she has a religious faith and a stance; she is knowledgeable and could contribute to our movement. We shall no doubt consider all such matters and be in touch tomorrow."

And with that I had endured my final interview.

"You apply for next year," I said to Allie, and I decided to take myself off up the stairs to lie on the bed. Being a minister of religion was supposed to be my field, my speciality, and Allie had outshone me. Allie took the hint and stayed downstairs.

Decision

Allie had just wiped clean the letterbox and both doorbells with disinfectant. This was to assist those having to push mail items through to the property. She came and sat next to me, waiting for the screen to come on.

On screen on time appeared the Rev. Dr. Erika Zijderveld. "Hello from Rotterdam again! I have the deshishion of the Roll of Ministry Interviewers, to be pashed as a recommendation to the UGA Executive and the Steuart Campbell Warrington Academy in York Board. Either of those two could reject the recommendation; then we would have to see in what manner it is rejected, but it would likely mean nothing happens. Are you both hearing me? Are you both well?"

"We are," said Linda. "The Health Secretary has got it, though, as well as the boss."

"So Klara Merkel was selected in the actual Academy after breakfast. All the interviewers met and each candidate heard from them all together. But now we are online and it falls to me to tell you two the verdict of the interviewers. Are you ready?"

"We are," said Linda.

"We are not prepared to accept you for training at this time. However, we would like both of you to apply next time, Alfia as well as Linda. But there is a condition: that your chapel, your bethel as you call it, if it is to come into the denomination, should cut all ties with the Free Liberal Ecclesia, otherwise to be an applicant you will have to cut ties with the Bethel.

"In the meantime we encourage observation and some training. As you continue to exchange with Charley Darley, and remove from the Free Liberal Ecclesia, we will support observing and in some cases preaching at nationwide Unitarian chapels outside of the Foss Group, once the Novel Covid regulations permit this. A round figure would be six to view and two more to preach, per person. You can have one paid for bed and breakfast accommodation for each visit. We also want you each to attend the expenses paid Unitarian History Course at Heathcote Milk House, near Winstar, which is the Unitarian Conference Centre across two extended farmhouses. This course may now have to be done online but we do want the visits and preaching to be real and not virtual. We also propose at least one eight week pastorate for both of you together somewhere in England, Scotland or Wales. We exclude Tigh na h' Iobairte for a pastorate or visit at this time."

Allie said, "That's a shame; I'd like to have gone there."

"You can go to places separately or together, one might preach and one might observe. Because of the pandemic we realise that the physical aspect of visiting and preaching may mean applying in two years time and not next year. We realise that you might travel, learn and do a pastorate and then one or both decide not to apply, but this is at our risk. We think this is a positive and generous offer, but these visits, the pastorate and the education must take place before we will give strong consideration at another set of interviews for going on to the Roll of Ministry Students."

I said, "We will discuss this together with urgency."

"This decision will come to you on paper in the mail. Your decision to us whether or not to proceed - and how you cut links with the Free Liberal Ecclesia - can come to us by email with some form of signature."

Allie said, "This makes sense."

"We will monitor your experience-gaining progress. You pay up front and record all expenses. You won't be out of pocket for very long. Course fees and physical accommodation with meals at Heathcote Milk Houses are waived.

"Is all this clear?" the Rev. Dr. Erika Zijderveld asked.

"Yes," I said.

"Yes," said Allie. "Tell Seumas, Beannachd leibh."

"I doubt I could reproduce that," said the reverend. "I would ask you not to give this decision to others at least until you have received the decision on paper, and the other two will not tell you their outcomes until then. Before, we have asked candidates to leave the buildings rapidly. We have known the decisions to leak. Terence Chicken will, of course, receive a different communication. You should know that Aled Bolt invested in Julia Chicken's business in all innocence and above board. The interviewers thank you for your virtual attendance. They and I wish you goodbye."

I asked Allie what she thought about the offer and conditions.

"Go for the experiences: we can always say no and scrap it."

"I don't agree," Linda said. "I'm not accepting the conditions, or appearing to accept the conditions."

"I was hoping to go to Tigh na h' Iobairte," she said.

"Yes, I suppose you were," I responded. "But they've excluded it."

Allie said, "It's like a club. That's what keeps them together. Clearly you get these semi-Christians who think they're Christians, along with the history boys, and then there are others like Pagans and Easterns and Erika is a bit humanist - in this case those Easterns were corrupt. But we are from the outside. The insiders predominate. They talk inclusivity but it isn't just an absence of an ethnic mix but all about being in a club. You weren't in the club."

"I'm trying to get you in the club. Ha ha. Let's leave it and discuss it in a few days' time."

"Have you opened the bishop's letter yet?" she asked.

"I will now."

Chapter 36 Easter Garden

Narrator: Linda Anglican Correspondence (Saturday 28th March)

I opened the letter I had kept to one side. I did know what to expect, and it was no surprise.

Dear Bishop Linda Shrimpton.

You resigned as curate in the Diocese of Wytham on 30th September last year. My review of those events since coming into office has concluded that this was unnecessary on your part. From the standpoint of the National Church, you remain a priest in good standing.

You may be aware that my wife Andrea would prefer to become a full time GP and only have a small pastoral ministry as a priest. The Novel Covid pandemic has added to her medical workload.

I would like to invite you to apply to become Vicar of the Parish of Serninsea. I cannot guarantee success, but I have made it clear to the Parochial Church Council (PCC) that you would have my full support and many in the Parish and on the PCC are keen that you should apply. As you may know, the parish of Serninsea has been expanded south to include Inglemire and Caffenmere. I have no reason to change this. I will attempt to find the Serninsea Marshes' eleven churches a new Priest in Charge.

If you were successfully appointed, three things would follow.

1) Without questioning the validity of your consecration as bishop, the National Church cannot recognise it and, in office, would only refer to you as a Reverend and as a priest.

2) Parishioners are aware of the brave and pioneering work you have done with others in building a new church. We would wish to treat this as a Fresh Expression and slave church of the St. Sernin parish church. St. Sernin would be the hub church of the parish.

3) Whilst you may wish to make other arrangements for this independent church of yours, as a National Church priest you cannot also be the minister of another denomination except under strictly approved arrangements in a Local Ecumenical Partnership - and we do not recognise the Free Liberal Ecclesia as sufficiently sound regarding the doctrine of the Trinity and the uniqueness of Christ for there to be a Local Ecumenical Partnership (even on a unique basis).

Please respond as quickly as your work allows. My predecessor, Bishop Derek Imperial, valued your theological insights and your experience of parish life under pressure. I now see that you have built a local church from scratch. This only adds to my admiration of your skills and therefore my support.

Yours in Christ.

++Lynton Wytham.

"No chance," I said.

"Don't just dismiss it," Allie said.

"Well, I've moved on and it does not mention my marriage. Why doesn't it mention my marriage? This marriage includes sex. It's posted as well, when it could have been hand-delivered."

"I'd consider it. Kewter and all that."

"Not a motive."

"Liar. That's why you were doing the Unitarian thing - accessing funds."

"Allie, I cannot fit back into the Anglican box."

However, Allie said, "I'd give an open-ended reply to this diocesan bishop. Include the possibility that I can run this place, if you want, and you can be the parish priest."

"No way! Let's write something," I said, and I decided what to put, not Allie.

Dear Bishop Lynton Plimpton.

Thank you for your recent letter, which I have read carefully.

I need to point out that I am married to Alfia Shrimpton. She is my wife and I love her deeply. I could not fit in within the Anglican ethos and rules that limit relationships to Civil Partnerships, especially as they are becoming redefined among heterosexual couples as more associative. This is not my relationship with Alfia. Please understand that we are sexually active. Anyway, married couples cannot transfer to Civil Partnerships.

As for the Bethel, it has been a team effort in Serninsea. It is not mine to turn into a 'slave church' or 'Fresh Expressions' or any other subordinate status of the Anglican parish, and I am sure that my colleagues want a liberal and independent future for it. My wife is a Reverend Deacon of this Church, and she will be priested at some point soon and I am minded to make her a bishop.

Yours sincerely, Bishop Linda Shrimpton, Serninsea Liberal Bethel, of the Free Liberal Ecclesia.

"That should end it," I said. "We'll hand deliver it today, where Andrea and him live - and let her continue to live and function there, where Colin Cromer lived."

Narrator: Allie The Bishop and Wife Walk In (Monday 30th March)

With Adam's agreement, Margaret McEnhill sent a message to Linda.

Lynton Plimpton's letter was because he knew you were being interviewed by Unitarians.

I said, "Kathleen and Winnie are duty-bound to inform the Serninsea Vestal Virgins anything of significance that is going on. group. Andrea Lindsey is then bound to pass things on."

"Does her husband know she is breaking Anglican exclusivity rules?"

"Good question."

I was thus prompted to go to the consultation room and use a laptop to talk to my Uncle Paul.

Linda came to me, given so few people were in the building. "What are you doing?" she asked.

"I'm contacting my Uncle Paul via social media. Can I have a private conversation? It's about genealogy, his favourite pastime."

"Sure. Sorry."

"He's on now. Hello Uncle Paul! Linda is sending her best wishes."

She called out, "Hello Paul!"

"Hello Linda. You want some information, Alice, but it's a bit unusual," he said immediately, causing Linda to pause - and then she left the room.

"What have you found out about Andrea Lindsey? I used to know her as my GP in Somerset, and now she's moved up to be my GP here."

"I made some notes so far. First of all Lindsey relates to the Brythonic name for a lake and especially around your neck of the woods. Somerset isn't its base. It also became a male first name in the nineteenth century and for females since. Think of Lindsey Buckingham, male singer, and Lindsey Davis, female author, and female 'Lindy' relates to 'Lindsey' in a way that Linda does not."

"Yeah yeah."

"We need the general before we can get to the specific."

"Apologies, Uncle Paul."

"Lindsey the Unitarian founder was Anglican when he located at Puddletown in Dorset in 1755, then called Piddletown, and your Andrea Lindsey was born in nearby Piddlehinton. But he was born in Middlewich, Cheshire. In 1760 Theophilus married Hannah Elsworth, born 1740, in Yorkshire's Richmond parish church. In 1763 they went from Piddletown to the Church of St Anne, Catterick in North Yorkshire thanks to the ongoing influence of an aristocrat again.

"Present day Andrea was a medical researcher before becoming a priest, unpaid, and a doctor. Her maiden name can't be from the Theophilus line, because he had no children with Hannah Elsworth. Local Anglican histories tend to ignore him. Hannah went with him from Catterick to London and the Unitarians, hoping but failing to start an Anglican route to that heretical denomination."

"So there is no local connection there from Lindsey to Lindsey," I said.

"Perhaps someone way back when took on the surname in tribute and she connects with that. So far I'm not there."

"I've another job for you, Uncle Paul. The Reverend Seumas Caimbeul, who is fifty, lives now at Tigh na h' Iobairte at Kinloch Rannoch. Because of the spellings I'll send it in text but he's on the Unitarian General Assembly Roll of Ministers and his church is a retreat. Hang on. Talk of the devil! Guess who has just come into this building?"

"This Scottish minister?"

"No, the Anglican bishop and his wife, the very same Andrea. Quickly: the Scottish minister was born in Tyndrum or the family was there. Is there any connection with our ancestor Margaret Urchardan, of Crianlarich? These are small interweaving communities. Linda is keeping her social distance from them."

"It's a big distance in space and time."

"Not them! Must go."

I came out of the room and approached Linda.

Andrea said, "We are allowed to visit for private prayer."

"I thought Anglicans have to do it Anglican," I suggested, thinking that this could be a slogan for the back of a car.

"I have with me our own current prayer book," said Lynton Plimpton. "Private prayer can take place anywhere - in a bus, at a bus shelter, in here."

Andrea said, "We are also on our exercise walk today."

Linda said, "However, you've come to talk to me, haven't you, and we'd better sit down keeping some distance between us. Perhaps we ought to wear masks: there's quite some debate about their usefulness. We hear we might have a new garden soon, extracted from part of a seafront house back garden. Ann Dromeghda and Labhaoise Vlahos are involved."

"Not the other bishop originally from our stable, Christine Vine?"

"She organised Allie's other house."

I said, sitting near Linda, "She's going to take it back, soon. The lockdown has paused things."

Lynton and Andrea were themselves sat close together, and Lynton kicked off.

He said, "This is a fine, compact, place. I have imagined this as a slave church or Fresh Expressions, if it was Anglican."

"But it is not," Linda said.

"No. Andrea sees the need now to concentrate on being a local general practitioner. Apparently Rhiannon Fleetwood is still in and out of town. She was an immediate disaster. Hmm."

"Actually, I have had an offer from the Unitarians."

He asked how that had come about, and so I decided to cut into this unconvincing performance of ignorance.

"You already know," I said, "that Linda, and I for that matter, have been interviewed by their Roll of Ministry Interviewers."

"How am I supposed to know that?" asked Lynton.

"Because Andrea was informed."

Linda looked at me, as if I'd said something new.

Andrea asked, "How would I know, and if I did from chatter during a medical examination, would I pass that information on? As a GP I maintain confidentiality; as a bishop my husband maintains confidentiality. We do this regarding each other."

I asked, "What about, er, various groups of people round here who like to know what is going on?"

"Ah," said Andrea. "Nothing to do with me. And given you were removed from all such groups, how would you know this?"

"There are routes of information into the Anglican bureaucracy at Wytham."

Lynton said, "This may or may not be so."

"We need some honesty about this," I said.

"Of course you do," said Andrea. "Your wife, who we ordained priest, also knows the importance of confidentiality."

"Whom," said Linda.

"What?" asked Andrea.

I commented, "We could end up hearing all sorts of only innocuous stuff, like: 'The moon was glowing last night and bright.' That should offend no one."

"Was it?" asked Linda.

"Waxing at about a third exposed," Andrea said, pausing. "It's Waxing Gibbous until April 8th, its brightest and most glowing day."

"What are you two on about?" Lynton asked.

"I ask that question a lot of Allie," Linda said.

The bishop said, "Yes, I do know that the Unitarians had interviewed you, and I'd rather not say how I know. I'd like to make my own better offer - in person."

Linda said, "We haven't responded yet, so what would be your better offer?"

"May I know what theirs is?" Lynton asked.

"So you don't know if yours is better," Linda responded.

"I bet it is. What is their offer?"

"Paid observation and training for both of us, and then they want me to reapply and Allie to apply."

"I'm offering instant employment, and to release Andrea from most priestly demands."

Andrea said, "Sooner the better."

"But your terms and conditions are too harsh," Linda responded.

(Actually, they were of the same impact - cutting off from the Free Liberal Ecclesia.)

"Making this a slave church or fresh expressions? If not, you could cut your formal ties and this place would carry on as before."

"Have to be the latter," she said, "as too many others are involved. And what if I'd make Allie a bishop?"

"It's your own formal connections that matter," he said. "When push is shoved."

I then said, "Andrea knows, and it's no secret this, that I am trying to get pregnant."

Lynton responded, "Well, it can't be from Linda's efforts."

"But it includes Linda's efforts," I said. "I'm having or wanting a natural conception from a trusted friend in the context of my sexual relationship with Linda. I'm telling you; I'd tell anyone."

Linda said, "But the GP must keep confidentiality."

Andrea said, "Correct, including from Lynton."

Linda said, "My secrets are probably too exposed now to be an Anglican priest again. I'm intersex, bisexual, and married to a woman; what's more, I am an independent bishop and this is actually a proper bishop, bishop."

"But here's the thing," the male bishop said: "the fundamentalists would have to be consistent. You see, if they regard you, Linda, as a god-given male, then they cannot object to a marriage with a female."

"But they can from having the seed from a third party," I said.

Andrea said, "Some discretion is needed, one way or the other."

"It's the honesty question," Linda said. "You don't realise how refreshing it is outside of the Anglicans."

Andrea said, "I think I do. But they're not exclusive when it comes to maintaining secrets."

"You like it both ways," I said to Andrea. "But maybe not."

"I think you do too," she said back to me. "I did not tell Lynton, right?"

Lynton said, "Before we go - and thanks for the chat, better than only sending writing - there is surely no harm in you being interviewed, as in each side testing out the other."

"Online," I take it, "Linda said.

"I think if it's the whole PCC, I cannot see any other option. But I might suggest exploratory one to one chats in the church hall?"

Linda then said, "You realise Rhiannon was in post for five minutes and this with Andrea looks like two minutes."

"No problem for me," said Andrea. "I might keep my hand in, as a possibility."

"I know the sensation," I responded.

Andrea said, "Ah, the old gynaecology joke. I do use equipment."

Lynton said, "Yes, Andrea is adding already to the sense of instability. But I'd hope you'd calm the ship. You could represent continuity and stability."

I then had a further question. I asked Andrea if she'd ever looked into the origin of her surname in the area of her birth. She hadn't but was aware of the Lindsey name as a former vicar of her birth parish.

"I'm not happy," said Linda. "I want to know, Bishop Lynton, your view of sexuality and me being ordained, presiding over Holy Communion, for example, when she is clearly my wife."

He said, in response, "It is perfectly fine surely that two people form a pact or covenant to assist a stable life together. The validity and efficacy of the sacraments does not depend upon the moral standing of the celebrant."

Andrea said, "A covenant like marriage should help avoid a promiscuous and unsafe lifestyle, Allie."

I stared back at Andrea but kept quiet as Linda looked at me.

He went on. "There might be a sexual component to fade out over time. Marriage of itself - as I try to argue - isn't sin because it can be approached from different angles."

"It's supposed to be good," said Linda.

Lynton replied, "For St. Paul, better done as a container for fornicating. It's about intention. Holy Communion assumes good and proper intentions, an examination of conscience and sincerity, but does not depend upon them. Priesthood should be the same. But we don't allow marriage to be initiated when a priest..."

"Same-sex," said Linda.

"The question here is what if you already have it? But if you were to stand up and say, 'I am married to a same sex partner, I think this is right and I'm conducting Communion,' then you are taking on and misrepresenting Church teaching on marriage and human sexuality. There is no revision of Church teaching on marriage and sexuality. The guide is Stop judging and you will not be judged. Stop condemning and you will not be condemned, as in Luke 6:37."

Linda said, "Oh come on! You've come pretty close. The fundamentalists can think I'm a man marrying a woman, and that allows the others to consider we have progress. Now you're saying there is no progress. You are judging! The issue of wrongness of intention didn't arise with the Unitarians; the marriage was just accepted. Indeed, they pretty much accepted a polyamorous arrangement with one candidate - and so would I."

"But you cannot use it as a platform. That's all. People can think but cannot both do and advocate. Until policy changes, and the bishops as a whole accept the change, there can be no platforming from same sex married individuals who happen to be married when it is prevented among others. I am saying about transferring-in. I'm saying we should accept this if it is not platformed. If it is platformed then expect a Clergy Discipline Measure."

"Ridiculous. I'm a campaigner for change!"

"You can campaign, but you cannot platform."

"Eh?"

"I'm being flexible - with you, Linda, and with Jeremy. I want you and Jeremy to be neighbouring colleagues."

"Jeremy Symes - to come back?"

"Yes. And I want a suffragan bishop too, and it would make your title ours too. Let people think it is progress - I am saying, in a round-about way, not to platform it, not to take on Church teaching. Do it quietly."

I said, "Hey, Linda? They want the suffragan to come back."

"It's not good enough."

I said further, "You'll agree with not to platform, Andrea! So you would be staying on as priest in case Linda becomes suffragan bishop?"

"Lynton can find someone else," said Andrea.

Lynton said, "No platforming but you must disconnect absolutely from both the Free Liberal Ecclesia and the Unitarian General Assembly. We're not interviewing the two of you like how those heretics did it. We'd be bringing a priest back into the fold. You know us; you are trained; you know the locality. Look, we must go. I don't know if you know, but the Archbishop of All England was going to tour all England. He was due in the diocese in May. It's all off now, such travelling, but he has asked if we can do an online equivalent."

"I liked him. We both did, didn't we Allie. She used her Gaelic."

This bishop said, "It is his first language. One of, what, forty thousand now?"

Linda said, "Half a million speak Welsh in Wales."

"We must go."

"Many more have learnt Welsh," I responded.

"See you dreckly, Allie," said Andrea. "We'll have a one-to-one chat, perhaps on a fair stank together, using my professional name. Bye, naughty girl and Linda."

With them gone, Linda asked me, "Why would I want to go back to all that, to the Anglicans and all the duplicity? I haven't said a creed never mind the creed for well over a year."

"Oh you could just mouth it," I said. "Who cares? If you're the parish priest, you can create your own latitude."

"But you wouldn't join the National Church."

"Absolutely not."

"By the way, what is 'dreckly' and a 'stank'?"

"English in Cornwall. 'Dreckly' is soon, but any time, so might not be soon, and a 'stank' is a determined walk, like the exercise we can do. D'you fancy being suffragan bishop, no less, Linda?"

"Ironic, isn't it, Mrs. Shrimpton."

Narrator: Linda Unitarian Correspondence (Monday 6th April)

We'd done a fairly standard and online service on the Sunday, but beyond these messages we were quite bored. Monday's post brought a first class stamped letter.

Dr. Mina Jones, Chief Executive, Executive Board, and for the Roll of Ministry

*Interviewers, Unitarian General Assembly
For Bishop Linda Shrimpton and the Rev. Alfia Shrimpton*

We confirm here in writing the offer made orally after your attendance at the Unitarian Ministry Interviews after candidating to go on to the Roll of Unitarian Ministry Students.

We would like either or both of you to apply again next year or the year after (given what may be possible regarding restrictions with Novel Covid) as follows:

Applying to go on to the Roll of Unitarian Ministry Students will depend on you having carried out eight unpaid observations by whoever reapplies in different Unitarian chapels and each of you preach once each unpaid in two of these. The offer includes overnight expenses-paid bed and breakfast accommodation for each visit but travel expenses should be negotiated with each chapel. Each applicant to be considered must also attend the Unitarian History Course online or at the Unitarian Conference Centre, Heathcote Milk Houses, near Winster. Fees and accommodation but not travel will be paid for the course.

The oral offer of an eight week pastorate for both of you was made in error - we cannot fund this. Sincere apologies.

Observations and preaching exclude Tigh na h' Iobairte near Kinloch Rannoch and Heathcote Milk Houses chapel. Also necessary is that either or both to be a candidate must cut professional ties with the Free Liberal Ecclesia; and your bethel, should it come into the denomination, must itself cut all connections with the Free Liberal Ecclesia.

Please respond. You may now inform others of this decision and your response.

Lisa Revie sent a message: she'd been accepted for college entry and she added that Jason Goole had been rejected. There didn't seem to be any logic to this, but then we didn't know. We told them about our training offer before reapplying, and that we had decided we would reject the whole offer. Then a message came through from Klara Merkel of congratulations to me, so we corrected that. Klara must have heard via a different, leaky route.

Allie went to her house and brought over some of her painting stuff, and with the doors closed to the public I laid myself out for her artistic prowess.

While we were doing this, Roger and Marie came by and my gaping nudity must have reminded them of the next attempt at our procreation. We'd try mid-month.

News was the council announcing that the Novel Covid had already finished off the dock as a going concern. It was to be left to silt up and then at some point would be filled in.

Later on I got dressed and we two walked along the beach towards the south that was short in length, after which was the beachless approach to Titansea. So we looked at the failed dock. We denied ourselves the wider beach at Ingle Barrow because of the possibility of bumping into Stephen and Helen McPhail, whose large house had access on to the beach and where the sight lines were long. Nevertheless the drain there proved very enticing, and we had a skinny dip together using the high banking for some privacy.

Nevertheless, when we stopped swimming, Ann Dromeghda called us and suggested we meet back on the promenade. Allie and I waited together, and along came Ann and Labhaoise to stand at a distance from us. They pointed at a house with a disused shop front.

"This is the shop we had bought a while ago," said Ann. "Half its garden width backs on to your bethel, on the other side of the tenfoot of course. So behind the fence we have already divided the garden into half, and sold that half to Adam - for a quid. Next we'll insert a gate at the side of the garden opposite the bethel property."

"Great," I said.

It was more than great because it was a vote of support in the place in the context of rejecting the Unitarians' conditional offer.

Labhaoise said, "We thought, and we still think, that the seafront property could become Caroline's base. If so, the gardens could have a gate between them. Otherwise we'll seal their separation."

"Could be a seaside cafe church, here," Allie said.

Ann said to her, "Haven't you been following the news lately? There is no future in cafes."

"She could design the social distancing from the off. She doesn't have a congregation and not likely to get one or much of one."

Ann said it was Adam's idea to divide the long garden behind the promenade road property. She said he and they continued to give their support to my bethel project. In this garden we'd be able to sunbathe naked with no interference.

In fact there and then a message came from Caroline that she was not interested and so the property would be sold on with its halved garden.

For our response to the Unitarian denomination, Allie wanted a low-key rejection as possible. Given that she was regarded as a stronger candidate than me, I simply agreed. She wanted to use the lockdown as an excuse.

"You write it then," I told my wife.

For Dr. Mina Jones, Chief Executive on the Roll of Officers, Unitarian General Assembly

We thank you for your written confirmation of a potential observation and training schedule for ourselves, Linda and Allie Shrimpton, with some expenses paid.

We have considered your offer carefully. Entering into enforced lockdown makes the immediate future unknown. We want to retain and develop what we have in place now, in the Serninsea Liberal Bethel, and this includes friendly relations with the Reverend Charley Darley and Wytham Unitarians in particular and the occasional exchange of pulpits. We wish to retain our denominational identities here.

Therefore we have decided that it is unlikely that either of us would reapply or apply for professional ministry training next year or after with the Unitarians and it would be wrong to take up your offer of observation and education without such an intention.

Bishop Linda Shrimpton, Serninsea Liberal Bethel, Free Liberal Ecclesia.

The Reverend Deacon Allie Shrimpton, Serninsea Liberal Bethel, Free Liberal Ecclesia, and High Priest of Creech Moorlinch Coven.

I said to Allie, "That's rather to the point. I expected something academic and long-winded. What's amazing is that so much led up to these interviews. I met all these different and sometimes strange people with puzzling Unitarian denominational identities. I ended up applying myself. And yet, in the end, they were too clubby, too internal, for either of us to take up their offer. I've had to say 'no' to them."

"Too tribal," said Allie. "All institutions - even small ones - have their characteristics, but it depends how you are formed into or away from them. I'm Pagan, post-Buddhist, feminist, humanist, ritualist, anthropologist, and I don't really fit into that, or not easily."

"And it turns out I fit into it even less."

Narrator: Allie Garden Available (Thursday 9th April)

The workers had lowered the fence to 6 foot and added a gate opposite the door from the Consulting Room or Library. If we wanted to jump across the tenfoot naked it would be out of that room door and through the gate. Klärchen Sisse might see us but I doubted she was the shockable type. The garden width took it opposite Klärchen's house but it did not extend to the northern end of our double property including not as far as the kitchen door into the tenfoot.

An idea to use the space to park Linda's SUV would have been a change of use and wasn't considered for more than a minute.

We were back from food deliveries and the workers had gone to lunch. Turf had been laid to produce instant grass with a few rolls left.

Also added was a decorative abstract stone carving. It was a sort of oval with two curves jutting out above, thinning to the sides. It was little like a Barbara Hepworth.

In fact when the workers returned their task was to clear up and no more. Given the temperatures were well above average, Linda went back indoors for a couple of blankets and we took off our clothes indoors, jumped across with the blankets and lay down in the new garden.

Linda said how she missed going to Patricia's to lie naked with Diana, but now we had our own outdoor spot. She told me that Labhaoise had made the sculpture herself, and it was just over twenty years old.

For a moment I thought its shape was like Linda, but that seemed a little far fetched.

Roger and Marie came through the gateway and found us in our sun-responding state. They also thought it great that we now had this garden.

Linda said to them, "We want to resume trying to get Allie pregnant soon, if we can all start earlier than last month. Her period is once every four weeks. It's bit like Ramadan, it can go backwards through the solar calendar."

"Ramadam?" asked Marie, with a wrong 'm'.

"Ramadan isn't perhaps the best comparison; try a Hindu month that always starts with the new moon."

I said, "Full moon was yesterday. So today it is waning gibbous at ninety-five per cent brightness."

"Moonbright," said Linda. "Mmm. There was some reference to this, wasn't there, when the bishop and his wife called."

I said, "Keep it to yourself - everyone."

The rest of the household, Kathleen and Winnie joined us. But Winnie said, "We are seriously thinking of moving to my mother's. She is alone and is feeling isolated."

Linda asked them, "Do you want your room reserving then?"

"No, I think after the pandemic we want to try and get a house, from either Ann or Christine."

I said, "I could give you - or rather Christine could offer you - 135 Toulouse Road."

"Except we'd move in with mum first," said Winnie.

"Well, I've had the house and lived here; why can't you live with your mother and have that house? Ask Christine."

But then Winnie said, "I thought you, Linda, were not sun worshippers."

I replied, "It's ten degrees above normal today, and what's not to like?"

Winnie and Kathleen decided to go for a walk and would talk at her mother's front door.

With nothing else to do, Roger and Marie decided to strip off and join us. The gate was closed, giving us privacy.

Some ten minutes later there was a knock on the gate.

I asked, "Is that Klärchen? I haven't seen her for ages since the lockdown."

"And since I said stop seeing her," added Linda, who would have been heard.

"Linda!" I snapped.

"It's not Klärchen Sisse but Andrea Lindsey. I want to talk to Allie."

I called out, "Don't talk into the gate! Open the gate - we're naked but legally you're not supposed to meet me, even in a private garden."

"Well, where can we talk?"

"Online."

"No, it's too insecure."

She watched as I just about jumped across the tenfoot to get my clothes on inside. I told her to go into the street and I'd stay within the tenfoot entrance area. She was probably five metres or more away from me.

With no one else near she said, "I had a chat online, of course, with Abigail Bloodred."

"Ah," I said, "At last."

"You are Alice Moonbright. I think it is safe, now, to declare myself. So I declare I am Andrea Moonglow."

"I don't know how you do it. You were a member of Taunton Tantria, and you are a witch, and yet you are an Anglican priest. How does that work?"

"It works because I'm terrified someone will tell Lynton about me being a witch. You've told Linda. He knows about Taunton Tantria and forced me to have extensive opt outs with the Vestal Virgins."

"I told her about me only after we were married."

"Abigail says you and I have to do a ceremony together: all that is stopping us is the pandemic. We should have done it when it was possible and didn't. You are not to tell anyone; witches keep a code of secrecy when secrecy is necessary."

"I'm not going to tell anyone," I said. "I realise there was Rhiannon Fleetwood sniffing around."

"You mustn't even tell Linda."

"Our moon bright and moon glow conversation made her suspicious."

"You were trying to extract my declaration."

"Because you should have given it."

"Not with Lynton. I told you I am a Fighter of Concern."

"Not quite the same thing. A witch in my Coven is rather different."

"Online I can be more involved with the Vestal Virgins and have been already."

The connection is supposed to be secure, but Lynton knows I have obligations to them. I think someone monitors the vicarage computers."

"Colin Cromer, your predecessor but one, told Linda to keep away from the Vestal Virgins."

"I married Lynton already involved. I joined the coven nearly a month after you. Then you were isolated and inactive. But me coming here means we have two Eclectic Witchcraft High Priests in the same location. We are obliged to work together, even if no one else joins us. We can do it in secret."

"Did Roland Sunbright have ritualistic sex with you?"

"Of course he did, and Abigail Bloodred. It was the same as you. Lynton didn't know I became a first degree witch. I had two initiations in a row. I could have watched your initiations, but they accepted that once being your GP and a priest married to Lynton was a good excuse to absent myself."

"Well, perhaps when the pandemic is over, we'd better have a sky clad ritual."

"No. There's more. I told Roland I have a plan."

"Go on."

"Linda becomes the parish priest. You and her move into the vicarage. I'll have a bedroom in the vicarage, but also Lynton will take up residence in Wytham - for me to join him. One will have to be a 'bubble' or something like that; we could be in the same household. That will allow you and me to hold ceremonies, and of course as a witch I'd like to sleep with you, if Linda allows it."

"You know, I've been asking questions about you for some time. You have wanted to have sex with me?"

"Yes. I fancy you like hell."

"Why didn't you just ask me?"

"I was your GP and I've been in positions of responsibility."

"Almost my gynaecologist. Anyway, your household plans are fanciful."

"You're beautiful."

"We are also supposed to be ritualists, and not personal with it. My sex with Roland was purely ritualistic, as with the later sexual contact with Abby. Fancying me is not a good idea, and I am married."

"I think Paganism and Christianity should join, like the Saxons merged the two for a time. I want to fuck you, Allie, and I don't care if I am a Christian priest."

"Andrea. I live here and part of this household is brother and sister Roger Humphrey and Marie Enfield, and Roger is trying to make me pregnant. He can only do that in the same household. Linda and I are not moving out, they are not moving out, though we've just heard Kathleen and Winnie are moving out. So if you want their room, well here it is above the Serninsea Liberal Bethel, part of the Free Liberal Ecclesia. I don't think Lynton will be able to approve that. Problems, eh?"

"We can do it online."

"Yeah, but we can't sexually engage."

"I'm sure I told you Annie and Marie Healand are patients of mine. They do."

"They've moved in together. The online bit is their work."

"You do services online. So do we. So can you and me. Someone is coming."

"We could sky clad, yes. Different locations."

"Shut up!"

Andrea moved backwards into the road. The person passed, and Andrea moved back again. (There were many fewer people either walking or driving.)

"You'll do it?" she asked.

"We'll work out a convenient time," I said.

"Linda is some distance behind you," said Andrea. "She's got nothing on. She's pretty. You're so fortunate."

"Yeah. I am going to rejoin my wife and enjoy this sunshine. Bye."

"Oh Allie. Bye."

So turned and joined my bare wife.

"What did she want?"

"Well, I am sworn to secrecy, but let's say they might have marital problems."

"Already?" Linda asked. "Anything I can do?"

"Yeah. Stop being exposed to the road. By the way, there was a side hint that if you were to be invited to be priest of the parish, you'd be expected to live in the vicarage."

"I suppose so," Linda said, as if it was an unsurprising matter of fact.

"Well," I said, "I rather like it here."

"So do I; it's why I've said a hundred times I'm not going to be a parish priest. It's you who's said, 'Oh go and do it,' or words to that effect. But in your world of secrets I take it that you've now changed your mind."

"I hadn't thought about changing accommodation. But now I have, I think we are better off as we are."

"You usually think of everything," Linda said.

Back in the new garden, I stripped off again.

Then I said, "We can be seen from some upstairs windows."

"Ah," Linda said, "they are commercial properties."

Roger asked if he and Marie should absent themselves in case we had issues to discuss, but I said no and Linda agreed.

Then Linda said, "Allie's been tracking Andrea for a while, and she's discovered something significant. You have, haven't you?"

"Yup."

"And you're not telling."

"Nope."

"I can guess," said Linda. "I can wait until Allie removes all doubt."

Narrator: Linda Allie's Easter Message (Sunday April 12th)

We'd put out simple posters advertising our service for 11 am, and it was on the website. How many took the live video we could not easily tell.

I didn't follow the lectionary or the liturgical year quite like I did when with the Anglicans. We were more like the Free Churches, in the sense of only observing the key festivals. So we did Good Friday, Holy Saturday and of course Easter itself - the Day of Resurrection. I'd given the tasks of writing and delivering the sermon to Allie. This was also Kathleen and Winnie's final contribution from this base. Peter Marshall appeared at a desk in his father's house with Kathryn not in view. (They had moved from the investigations agency accommodation.) Peter was able to use his remote position to advise others viewing to act like him with water and bread, that my ritual blessings went through space and time to his participation with elements and to anyone else so responding.

Allie's message somewhat qualified the day:

"What our ancestors did, perhaps better than the Neanderthals they met, was symbolise and communicate. They might have been nomadic animists, but from the off they symbolised and enchanted what was around them. They recognised animation in life. They and their cultural, settled, agricultural successors developed myths, and the most significant was that of death and renewal, that winter involved real and actual death and yet more light returned and the spirits were active again in pushing up the crops and feeding the animals.

"We can't escape the fact that Easter follows a mythological structure, and let's not be deceived that history somehow randomly replicated the mythological structure. The myth is part of the writing. Easter is written, constructed, produced, and the people who saw that they had a new Gospel also thought in terms of some of the oldest renewal myths of homosapiens.

"What of Easter and the structure of the story? Some think if you go back to Sumerian legend of Damuzi (or Tammuz) and his wife Inanna (or Ishtar), you get an epic myth called 'The Descent of Inanna' that far back. It was found inscribed on cuneiform clay tablets and, well, that far back was 2100 BCE. Damuzi dies and so a grieving Inanna takes herself to the underworld. She goes through seven gates, and becomes naked; she is judged, killed, and then hung up to be seen. Her loss means the earth can't produce crops and animals don't reproduce. The crisis lasts three days when her assistant looks to other gods to help, and then Enki does help by creating two creatures who take the plant of life and water of life down to the Underworld, and sprinkle them on Inanna and Damuzi. This resurrects them and are able to become back on earth as bathing in the light of the sun - but for six months. Then Damuzi returns to the underworld of the dead for six months, and Inanna pursues him, which prompts the water god to rescue them. Therefore the story has the winter death and the return of spring life, but winter will come again.

"The structure of this story, indeed the story itself, spread, and this story structure had other origins, with different names. In the 4th century, Christians identified where the empty tomb of Jesus had been - where a temple of Aphrodite, therefore Inanna, had stood. The temple was razed to the ground and the Holy Sepulchre was built.

"Another strand is Easter being from a celebration of Eostre, or Ostara, Austra, and Eastre, goddess of Spring. She is all about renewal. Light now equals darkness and it will grow - in the northern hemisphere above the equator. Ostara gets pictured with a hare, and we know that hares breed like rabbits. Dawn is radiant, light is growing, and joy results.

"At this time the bunny or hare breeds and the bird lays its eggs. And some Germans reckoned that Ostara healed a wounded bird in the woods by changing it into a hare. Because it had been a bird it laid eggs as gifts. The egg connects with other mythologies of civilisations.

"So, today, spring comes and people decorate actual eggs and eat chocolate Easter eggs with extras inside. This ceremony comes after Yule, when there was the end to darker nights as a celebrated turning point, and then weeks on we have rebirth and renewal, as it has been celebrated for thousands of years.

"These rituals will continue all the time they are meaningful. They must be meaningful to us, because we are here recognising it and that's despite our online restriction! Our celebration and ritual is both past and future: bread and wine looking forward to a harvest of what we see emerging in the light and warmth.

"Incidentally, Welsh has Pasg; Cornish and Breton use Pask. In Irish Gaelic it's An Cáisc, Scottish Gaelic A' Chàisg and Manx Yn Chaisht, all Greek in origin. Scots has Pace, from Pasch.

"Rather as modern art suggests flatness and the process of painting itself, and loses a single view from which going to transcendence is assumed, so that we have developed multiple viewpoints within only the painting itself, so we are more self-aware that ritual is ritual.

"Ruth Weiss is an artist in Judaism who, I think, still wants it both ways. She recognises that Judaism gives her a key to ways of thinking, about remembering, levels of interpretation, that everything is open to question. But she paints, such as Separating the Waters II, from which she can make transcendent points: this naked woman is submerged, rather as in the mikveh, but she rises up with arms forward, eyes closed, so the water or fluid and woman go together, like when she is born; and her mother's water breaks, when she cries, when she menstruates, produces liquid upon arousal and gives birth herself through this medium. But do we all agree with such an interpretation? Is it a dream - is the Jungian perception really so certain - or is it a purpose rather than dreamlike? There's brown red, and green, and blue - much colour, form, and it's not entirely realistic. Why does she want it both ways?

"Because, she has a painting and we know it is a painting; like in the Passover Seder meal, there is a story to be told and we know it is a story: 'And on that day you shall tell your child, for this God has taken me out of the Land of Egypt.' What is the tale to be told? What is this day? Perhaps, most of all, and that it is a story for this day. What is the character and purpose of the story to be told? It becomes an act in itself, the story told: and to not to want to hear it, and not to want to tell it, devastates continuity. Yet that is all it is - the act of telling a story, a story that is a story. This is Easter now - lots of origins, lots of perspectives, some sort of pattern. Such has been considerably weakened, but it continues to be repeated."

As bishop, I thought that, at Easter, we could try to express the nearest thing to a creed. So we had something revised and informally agreed amongst us, that we said together:

*So much of life is chaotic and yet interacts into stability:
Thus many features can be represented through simple equations;
So the suggestion is simplicity, beauty and transcendence.
Everyone has dignity: so practice love,
Look after the animals,
Seek justice;
Find truths through searching:*

*Come together like now to search;
Draw on experience,
Read prophetic books,
Learn from insightful individuals,
Discover with science, social science and the arts;
Be sensitive to natural rhythms,
And always act with compassion.*

Thus was the core of our Easter service. Allie did well.

Narrator: Allie Procreation Two (Monday 13th April)

Linda was in the vestry while I was watching soul-destroying afternoon television in the seating area. With the double doors open for individual visitors, we had a middle-aged woman with medium white hair and in a long dull coat walk in and look around. I put the screen off.

I called across. "We have to keep our distance. Please take a seat and we'll clean it afterwards."

"Hello. I'm Allie or Alison. I moved into Serninsea at the time of the scandal, locally, and joined the parish church when Rhiannon Fleetwood was briefly priest-in-charge."

I went to fetch Linda.

This Allie explained without any context that in the last few months a number of changes had happened to the Parochial Church Council via resignations, and that she had been elevated to it on the basis of being new and not sceptical about the previous minister in office. "In fact I'd been on other PCCs, otherwise I wouldn't have considered it. She was wrong about me: I was one of those who said she had to go."

"Well, this is all very interesting but why are you here?" Linda asked.

"We have Andrea now but she needs support as she is very busy with Novel Covid and local health issues."

"I can't help you," Linda said. "My ministry as it stands is not recognised by Anglicans."

"The bishop suggested an informal chat."

I asked for her surname, and it was Dare-Baron. I then (if off the immediate point) asked about the origins of her name. Dare was Saxon and Baron was Norman. I suggested that we call her 'Al' as I was Allie.

Linda ignored my suggestion. "Mrs. Dare-Baron, have you been told that we were interviewed for ministry by the Unitarians?"

"No."

"They made us an offer, which we have refused. However, this does not mean we would take up any offer from you. It would involve too many compromises, too many losses, not enough honesty."

This Anglican Al Dare-Baron commented, "It might seem an odd thing to say but individualistic honesty and religious institutions often don't go together. Individuals do have to compromise. In fact, as was in Lent, it's not about honesty but personal sacrifice, and the PCC has been considering investigating your willingness to undergo personal sacrifice for the good of the Church."

Linda said, "What you call 'The Church' is also here, so involves the good of this church."

At this point I could see a police constable looking through the double doors, and she then wore a mask and decided to come in.

PC Layla Jenkins reminded us that whilst individuals could enter a church for private prayer, this looked like having a meeting. She said she would advise us on this occasion and not issue a fine, but Al Dare-Baron had to leave immediately. If there was someone to meet, then we should do it online, or at the very worst stand outside and be very distanced within hearing range, probably on the sea front.

"Is this a Police State?" Linda asked her.

"It's a Health State," she replied. "And we have the powers to enforce it."

With that we decided that after the food was prepared and distributed each day, no one else would come inside other than the residents.

Fortunately, Roger and Marie were residents, and rather than be bored again we went to them and suggested we have another procreation attempt. Roger said he'd be with me alone, and aim to make me more receptive.

We gave ourselves an hour to prepare. Linda and I shared a shower and did some sugary strips afterwards."

Meeting up, Linda took Marie off to our room for some experimenting, from Marie's point of view. I lay on my back on their bed, my feet on the carpet. Roger was undressed too, and knelt on a cushion on the floor at the foot of the bed.

"Very good. So this time being more receptive requires rules of the game. You can choose from these seven words only: 'nearer', 'further', 'faster', 'slower', 'harder', 'softer', 'away'. If I'm on it, another 'nearer' won't count. 'Away' means a reset or finished. Got them? They're in binary pairs."

"Nearer, further, faster, slower, harder, softer, away."

"I've got my bottle of water, though hopefully I won't need it after a short while. When you're receptive you can either do me something in return or I'm going in to give the donation. Off we go."

Contact was made.

"Er: further, slower. Softer, softer, slower, nearer, faster. You're moving about."

"One word only. Speak more slowly - give me a chance."

"Yeah. Nearer, then. Harder, harder, slower. Further. Are you doing letters of the alphabet?"

"Shush."

"Faster. No, slower. Further, softer... Hmm. Further still. Go around!"

"I'll decide that."

"Nearer, a bit. Harder, harder, slower. Further. You are doing letters of the alphabet!"

"One word only!"

"No, closer, harder, faster. Er, further, softer... Hmm. Further still. Nearer, faster, faster, nearer, harder, slower, further. No, faster, nearer, faster. Here we go."

"Allie!"

"Harder, er slower, harder, faster, now nearer, nearer. Faster, nearer. Yep, ah, not yet: slower, softer, softer, further, slow down!"

"Slower?"

"Sorry. Nearer, faster now, harder, harder, faster, woow! Away!"
I shook about somewhat. Roger raised himself and came to the side of the bed.

He said, "Deeper, lick, suck, shallower, lick, lick, deeper, enough! In I go below."

In he went and it wasn't long before he made his donation, and once done he lay by my side, my legs up and feet pointing towards the ceiling.

We soon decided to go one floor up to our room and join in with his sister and my wife.

More Than Observing (Wednesday 15th April)

After food deliveries I was using a laptop, and Professor Roland Mitton had clicked on to see me before he had an online seminar.

He was telling me, "I've told Andrea to trust Linda. Linda understands all about confidentiality, as Andrea surely knows. However, we don't invite visitors into Coven activity. Andrea will be online this afternoon. Online ceremonies are valid; the intention is the same, and time and space is relative to the situation. You'll need four positions, earth, fire, water and air, in each transmission, these positioned around your cast circles, and best be sky clad because you are both High Priests in a ceremony involving no one else."

A message came through from Andrea that she would go online at 3 pm. So I asked Linda if I could use the chapel alone.

"Well, you can but no one has private rights to it. Can't I take part?"

"It's Andrea Lindsey."

"Anglican?"

"She and I must keep this confidential, including from her husband - especially from her husband."

Linda said, "She's a witch as well. Moonglow, Moonbright - yes? She's Moonbright and you're Moonglow."

"No, she is Moonglow and I am Moonbright. We're doing a simple ceremony that makes our connection explicit. We start a new Coven but we'll be pretty inactive."

"How can it be explicit when private?"

"Well, we'll have made a mark. Someone could record it, I suppose."

Linda said she'd like to observe, but I said the Creech Moorlinch Coven did not admit visitors and we start with its rules. Everyone who took part in my initiation and in hers was initiated to the first or higher levels, I explained - including, then, absent Andrea.

"But people have to be there uninitiated in order to be initiated."

"But they are initiated there and then. Are you trying to find a philosophical conundrum?"

"Just trying to find a way in. Okay. Have it your way," Linda said. "I'll go in the new garden."

There was an exchange of messages with Andrea, at 3 pm, who said she understood that Roland trusted Linda to keep confidences.

"But," I said, "dem rules are dem rules. We could make our own rules but we start with dem rules."

"In that case we have to set up a Coven. We'll just have to observe some rituals from time to time, and the Serninsea Coven will accept guests."

"No," I said. "If we accept guests we give potential access to people we don't know and don't want. Rhiannon Fleetwood is one. We'll initiate instead."

So we made some rapid arrangements by me emailing liturgical documents to Andrea and me receiving her liturgical materials. Andrea would stand stark naked like me so that my robe could be presented to Linda. All the screens were on, and cameras were activated by movement. Andrea could see what we did and we would be able to see her.

I went to the garden. "We will initiate you to the first level but only after we've set up the Coven. Then you can observe whatever else we do. It will involve a ritual cleaning by touching the mikveh water with your thighs and then initiation time in the cast circle. Interested?"

"Great," she said.

"Put my robe on and leave it open. Wait just outside the chapel," I instructed.

So in our chapel, and without even a gown on, I put a cloth with a chalk circle drawn on it before the altar table, and then placed a rock to the east, a lit candle to the south, a bowl of water to the west, and some incense burning sticks to the north. In the centre was a goblet of red wine and a shiny but blunt athame to its side.

Andrea spoke. "Can you see me throughout? We've had new High Definition cameras installed everywhere and they go to the vicarage computer suite and I'm in charge of that."

"Yep. You're not in the church."

"I thought about using the church but remember what happened before with Linda as curate. So I'm near the computer suite and have just made a circle on the ground. The Circle is connected in both locations, here in the vicarage and there in the Serninsea Liberal Bethel. I'll start.

"Hubble bubble: we begin, the circles made. O wind from the north, refresh us; O earth from the east, nourish our growth; O flame from the south, warm us and give us energy; O water from the west, give us renewed life."

She then picked up the knife in her right hand, and the goblet of wine in her left hand. I did the same.

She said, "O Goddess come down, and bless this spiritual union between the High Priest Witch Alice Moonbright and the High Priest Witch Andrea Moonglow. We are one."

I said, "O Goddess come down, and bless this spiritual union between the Witch Andrea Moonglow and the Witch Alice Moonbright. Though two, we are one."

We both placed each goblet down, and stabbed each knife into each goblet of wine. We then raised each knife up, blades up, lowered them, widened our legs, and in an act of unity said, together, carrying out the insertion of the blades upwards, "Circling inside our vaginas, three times first against the clock, and then three times with the clock, we affirm our togetherness as ordained witches in this town."

With these actions completed we entered each blade into the wine again, removed the athames and drank the wine in one act. I further wiped the athame for its later use.

I said, first, "The Goddess has blessed us to our very core, and we are empowered to give good magick to this our town. Thus is born the Serninsea Eclectic Coven."

She then said the same.

Linda came into the chapel, wearing my open robe.

I spoke. "We use the mikveh. Linda was blindfolded and gave me back the robe. I guided her to descend the steps carefully only as far as the water touched her yoni. Bending her knees a little, I told her that she would become ritually cleansed outside and inside through her yoni and anus. I spread some water around her body, including wetting her hair, and Andrea mimicked this.

I said, "I won't use herbs and oils in our mikveh."

"No, don't," said our blindfolded initiate. But incense was being lit by Andrea only.

Then Andrea and I chanted, nearly together, using (in my case) laminated notes, "Blessed be your mind to learn of the ways; blessed be your eyes to see; blessed be your lips, to speak in beauty and keep secrets; blessed be your breasts, that they enrich sexual pleasure; blessed be your yoni, that it is receives and gives pleasure; blessed be your knees, to kneel during sacrifice; blessed be your feet, to walk the sacred way."

I assisted Linda to turn about and leave the mikveh. Still blindfolded I put a towel to her and dabbed her skin. The open robe went back on her. I then tied cords to connect her wrists.

I said, "We come to the First Initiation." I walked Linda, holding her hand, into the sacred circle by the altar table. "Who do we have at our sacred space?"

Andrea said, from afar, "We have Linda, a beautiful intersex woman who is on the sacred road. She wishes to know the mysteries of this Coven, to honour the divine. Do we have a name for her?"

I said. "She is to be known as Linda Bodleian, within the sacred gathering. This reflects her name closest to birth and her learning. Candidate for ordination: say your name."

She said, "Linda Bodleian."

Andrea said, "Remove her blindfold; cut those cords. I ran my finger up from between her legs, and there was a little bit of light reflecting from my fingertip.

I said, "In joining this coven, you become part of our greater spiritual family. You become one with our kinship and mutual hospitality. Kneel." My yoni was close to Linda's nose and mouth, but she was to kneel passively. "You cannot learn everything immediately, and neither can we. Each of us is on a journey. Be guided on your travels. Will you uphold the principles and purposes of the Serninsea Eclectic Coven?"

"I will."

"Will you be reborn into this journey?"

"I will."

"When you deal and relate to people, will you embody the principles and purposes of this Coven into your daily life?"

"I will."

"Linda Bodleian, stand. Come from your knees and kiss. Kiss me, Alice Moonbright, kiss into the ether Andrea Moonglow. She kissed me on the lips, and blew a kiss for Andrea.

I gave her my recently used athame to borrow.

I said, "You have been reborn into the new life of an Apprentice Witch in the Serninsea Eclectic Coven. When you physically meet Andrea, kiss her. We never decline basic sexual contact," I said. "We are bodies of expression and we use them."

Finally Andrea and I said, together, "So mote it be! The circle is closed."

After a pause I said, "That was good, Andrea. Pity we couldn't do it together, me into your vagina and you into mine. But that's the government for you."

Linda smiled. "You could have put it into mine."

"Not into a first degree witch," I said.

"Have you two made love?" Linda asked us suddenly.

Andrea replied, on screen, "No, because circumstances, professional and distance, and Abigail, and Beathag, have each prevented it, but I've wanted to make love with Allie for years."

"And now I am preventing it," said Linda. "Just to be clear."

"Would you rather I was dishonest?" asked Andrea.

"She is mine and she is having our baby. And, yes, I will keep this ritual a secret, and your expressions of desire about my wife."

"I suppose you will be interviewing for a couple to have your spare room once Kathleen and Winnie move out. I know about this."

I answered, "Obviously. It won't be easy. We can ask the students who do the cooking, who still do come in here, if any two would like to share a bed and enter our household."

"Bye then. I'm going to wipe the recordings."

"You'd better," said Linda.

With Andrea gone I asked how Linda felt being a witch.

"I only wanted to observe you two starting a Coven. But I like 'Bodleian' as a name. It's a much better choice than 'Reticulum'. Thank you, Allie. So, you realise the consequence here?"

"No?"

"I'm your bishop and you my deacon; you're my High Priest, and I'm your first level initiate. But, when I make you bishop, you will have greater authority."

"Then Andrea and I could make you a High Priest."

A Different Suggestion (Thursday 16th April)

Allie and I had joined the others in again distributing food for selected residents in Serninsea. We were back to see a (this time) hand delivered letter. Once we'd washed our hands I started to open the envelope, wondering if I should have to wash my hands again.

From the Bishop of Wytham, Lynton Plimpton.

Dear Bishop Linda,

Thank you for such a prompt reply. Anticipating that you might reply as you did, I have suggestions ready. Matters are more complex (and therefore positive) regarding marriage than your reply allows.

No doubt that the extension of Civil Partnerships to heterosexual couples is part of this, but we need to evaluate the options open to us in The National Church.

It is true that we do not allow clergy in office to initiate marriage if in a same sex arrangement. We prefer Civil Partnership and a solemn declaration of non-sexual relations. However, we recognise that, if rarely, some transferring clergy will already be married to a same sex partner and in this case the bishops would seek that they move into a sacrificial relationship, that is not to engage in sexual relations with their partner. Divorce is not encouraged as a means to move to a Civil Partnership.

However, your case could be even more fluid and this needs putting in writing. Given your own writings that you are genetically male, then phenotypically female, being gender female and in sexuality bisexual, many of our biblicist colleagues would regard you as a God-given male. If they claim this, they then cannot object to your marriage on any exclusive behavioural level.

At the same time, other colleagues, with a different interpretation of the Bible, would be excited that a marriage between two females could have our recognition as an ongoing marriage. Nevertheless, we (holding this view) would therefore still ask for a solemn declaration of ceasing sexual relations. How you proceed on this is a matter of conscience for both persons in the marriage.

You might like to know that I have written to the Rev. Jeremy Symes, resident at the Bever Wood Naturist Centre, to undertake interviews to become Priest-in-Charge at Serninsea Marshes. In his case the discussion is that he does marry Lindy Peacock, his partner, with flexibility shown on all sides (including his former wife).

You two would make excellent colleagues. With care and discretion, you two could examine any theological parallels between orthodox Christianity and naturism.

Yours sincerely

++ Lynton Wytham

I said to Allie, "He says, 'With care and discretion'? What the fuck is that about? The whole thing is absurd! I mean, when it comes to Jeremy, what he means is that the Church will overlook his affair with Lindy, via some flexible formula of words."

"You know why this section is in the letter?"

"Do you?"

"Because it wouldn't be in there unless Jeremy Symes is going to agree."

"I think you might be right. I thought he and Lindy were so happy working at Bever Wood."

"As for us, he hasn't stated that we should have separate beds."

"Come on Allie. These words embody the worst kinds of duplicity. Am I going to declare that I won't have sex with you? I'll sit on your face while I sign such a paper declaration on top of your stomach."

"Elegantly put," she said.

"Maybe not - it could cause you to fart. Look, my move into independence has been about honesty - and are you suggesting I go into full reverse gear?"

"If you've got a reverse gear then you can use it to get into position," suggested the clever clogs. "What I'd like to do," said Allie, "is test out his own duplicity. See where the institution operates for real. I'm doing a whole Ph.D on informal and actual decision taking. For example, you could be the Anglican parish priest but decide things for the independent bethel in our bed. Come on, aren't you tempted?"

"Get thee behind me, Satan."

Narrator: Linda Procreation Three (Friday 17th March)

I spoke to Roger and Marie downstairs, when Allie had nipped to the loo. A film was paused on the big screen. Winnie and Kathleen were up and down the stairs taking items to a van outside.

"I think things are still too complicated. The main thing is to get sperm into her. Approach her any time you want to ejaculate."

"If you put it like that," said Roger.

"What have you been saying?" Allie asked, returning.

"Just let him deposit sperm as and when he can."

"Have we got any stables for me?"

Marie said, "Keep it to recognised sessions."

"Okay," I said. "We'll have another session now and have more until you miss your period, until we test you positive for pregnancy."

"And to keep away from Coronavirus," she said.

"He can't both social distance and fuck you."

In their bedroom again, I sat with Marie Enfield, as Allie exposed her inner vulva to Roger, who simply wanked himself to her exposure and put himself into her, spurting within. We assisted with her legs back.

I said to him, "Any time you are going to ejaculate then come to our bed and just get into her."

"So I come to a climax with Marie, and then rush up the stairs?"

"Absolutely. Don't knock. Just jump into our bed and pump it into her."

While this was going on, Kathleen and Winnie were moving out. By the night we thus had a largely furnished room to be occupied. Now we could offer the use of a garden.

Yes, Allie and I were in bed kissing. The door flew open and our duvet cover came off. I moved to the side, he pushed into her and spurted more sperm.

Marie was at the door, looking, also with nothing on. She had bright blue toenails and fingernails, luminous in the dark.

I said, as Roger left the bed, "We've got to keep doing this as sure as eggs is eggs."

"To fertilise her eggs," Roger said, as Marie told hold of his emptied todger and balls.

Back on our own in bed I passed Allie a book about Michael Foucault commenting on modern art. Mine was a book by John P. Plummer on the Independent Sacramental Movement in all its varieties.

"Those athames in your vaginas," I said. "I rather fancied that."

"At a higher level, you'd understand it better," Allie replied. "Are you really so Pagan? First degree ordination is a basic commitment but to be third degree needs knowledge and direction."

"And Andrea doing it. When her brother is Barthian, into dialectical theology. Hah!"

"They both married to advantage. Their father was the late Reverend Ronald - Ronald - Lindsey, who bigwiggled it with leading clergy including bishops. Their mother is still active and had numerous affairs with clergy including some bishops, the very people her father visited and shared writing Church reports. The big rumour around Taunton was that he encouraged his wife's affairs. If this is true, she was a prize for working with him. He died of a hushed-up heart attack spending a night with the Bishop of Devon's wife."

"Gosh. But Andrea, as she is... Was she after you in Somerset, to express sexual power with you?"

"That's too early to use Coven language. The relationship she conceals is the one with Rhiannon Fleetwood."

"You're sure about that?"

"She traded sex for peace. Andrea married for position but spreads out everything else."

"The Bishop of Wytham is a likely House of Lords position. That's a pretty good marriage. Would she offer herself to assist him?"

"Exactly," said Allie. "She adopts and adapts her mother's behaviour."

"But what of me and any favours to become parish priest?"

"I wonder if Rhiannon Fleetwood approached Andrea to keep her position."

"And what did Andrea do?"

"In this case, nothing - I'm sure of it: Rhiannon was too chaotic."

"But she might offer her facilities to me?"

"Dunno," Allie said. "You're in bed with me."

"But Lynton is filling appointments, scrambling around trying to put Humpty Dumpty back together again. She may have a role."

"The difference is he's not into it. Her father was. And not with Jeremy Symes, I don't think. And she's far more likely to approach me, not you."

"I miss Diana." (I couldn't let Allie have all this focus.) "I wonder how she is getting on?"

"How long does it take for a fantasy - the attraction of the cult as exotic and different - to wear off?"

"You can be perceptive, Allie. Good question."

"Thanks."

"I hope that you are I are more than an exotic fantasy. It's why it's really important that we get you pregnant and we have a real child to raise. We've got to develop this place. We need someone, two people, in that room below. Two strangers may have to learn to share a bed."

Narrator: Linda Andrea in Distress (Monday 20th April)

Andrea was at the double doors, ringing to be let in.

I went to the doors, and opened the letterbox, and moved to the side. "You wishing her a happy birthday?" Then I noticed through the glass that Andrea had two heavy suitcases.

"I need somewhere to stay. Where can I go?"

"Well, you can't come here. Why do you think you can come here?"

"The guest houses and hotels aren't taking anyone," she said.

At this point, thirty-one year old Allie came along, having come downstairs. She opened the double doors. "Andrea? What's going on?"

"The service I did, with you; I did wipe it but I didn't know it still went to Caffemere. The people who rent it found it on their computer, and they sent it to Wytham and Lynton has done his nut."

I made the obvious response: "I got caught with the CCTV in the church; you weren't in the church."

"He says he has to act; staff have seen it."

I said, "You inserted a blade into your vagina!"

She replied, "It wasn't sharp."

"Hardly the point," I replied. "Or no point..."

Allie said, "We can't leave her out there, Linda, and we have a room."

"A room to rent - we need the income."

"I'm still a GP. I can pay whatever rent you require."

"Linda. Let her in."

"She can go to your place, 135 Toulouse Road."

"Christine wants it back. She should have had it back by now."

I relented. Andrea came in, and Allie took her to what I hoped would be a very temporary room. Allie soon was back, saying, "We are supposed to look after lost sheep and she is a known sheep."

I replied, "Don't come that one with me."

The thought passed me, all right: Andrea knew full well she'd be seen naked, inserting objects, and she'd want to get away from her husband and get close to my wife.

Allie said, "Look, she's helped me on alcoholism, sexual health, and negotiating awkward people. She's not planning on staying."

Later on Andrea came down the stairs to the seating area to thank us, and said she would approach Ann and Labhaoise and also Christine for places to stay. "Even in lockdown people move house."

I said, "You've only been married five minutes. Things don't seem to last very long round here. I hope this isn't a bad omen for Allie and me."

Allie asked her, "Why can't he sweep it under the carpet?"

"Because he thinks it is 'objectively disgusting', he said to me, and of course he did not know I am a High Priest. He didn't know that you and I have a connection. Also, he does not know who else knows - does the signal go beyond Caffemere to Tamworth even and is the previous suffragan keeping a record of what is going on?"

"Oh what a web they weave," I reacted.

We sat and made a rent agreement, short term and with a week's notice to quit.

It was while doing this with Allie that we received an actual landline telephone call. I dashed to the vestry.

"Bishop Lynton Plimpton here, and just checking - is my wife there?"

I signalled to Allie and Andrea to come over.

"Yes, she is; it is difficult for her to find a place to go at the moment. Do you want to speak to her?" I covered the mouthpiece. "Do you want to speak to him?"

Andrea shook her head.

"She's with my wife."

"Doing what?"

"Talking through the situation."

"I tolerated that Taunton Tantria and Serninsea Vestal Virgins rubbish. Now I find she's some weirdo witch as well. And they've adopted you, sort of."

"It was so I could observe; they don't have outsiders observing. It's rather difficult living here and not seeing what's going on."

Allie looked up to the ceiling, and Andrea looked at Allie.

"Well, she can't take services until the PCC has had an enquiry. You see, the people renting Caffernmere, who saw everything - everything - contacted Alison Dare-Baron, the one who as a local official rents out the house. She told me. I told Andrea exactly what I thought, what embarrassment she has caused. She is undermining my ministry. She is introducing gross moral turpitude."

Let me put this to you, Lynton: if you say she cannot work as priest there for gross moral turpitude, then neither can I, because I acted with others at the altar table in the actual church; Andrea avoided the actual church and erased the recording. She told us."

"I think your crime at the altar table, offensive as it was to Colin Cromer and his oversight at the parish, is nothing compared to someone standing naked, carrying out lurid sexual acts with a knife, and speaking mumbo-jumbo that has nothing to do with the Christian faith. And in Easter week? I married someone who never told me she was a member of a Coven."

"Well, so did I," I replied. "Allie didn't tell me, because they have a secretive side, and she was inactive until Andrea came along. Andrea was inactive too, and indeed was obliged to inform Allie and did not. Allie suspected she was a witch, made the necessary enquiries and forced Andrea to reveal herself."

Andrea put her thumb up to me in approval, and Allie nodded.

I continued: "Allie has been full of secrets ever since I've known her, but we learn to live with the nature of our professions. Andrea was careful."

"I'm her husband! She is supposed to stay within the Anglican fold, but instead denies her affirmations and doesn't tell me."

"You knew she was in Taunton Tantria," I said, speculating.

"Is that what she told you? Are they there, those two?"

"I've answered that."

"Well, here is the thing. I discovered she was in Taunton Tantria, and ended up in bed with her!"

Andrea smiled.

"I don't need the details," I said.

"What is it about those two?" he asked.

"Sorry, what do you mean about my wife?"

"I mean her brother. He married Bishop Vivienne Space, the Suffragan Bishop of Morchard, and she went all quiet when I asked her. And she's slept with Serninsea Ings Rural Dean, the Reverend Grant Trapp."

Andrea said, "No I haven't. I heard that."

"She is there," he called out. "This has more consequences, especially married to me."

Allie said, "Tell him everyone knew she was neo-Pagan in sympathy. She is not like her brother at all."

Lynton said, "I heard that. Tell her that the Parochial Church Council is going to hold an emergency online meeting among themselves and she will be informed of their decisions, but meanwhile she is not to lead any services for the time being - and that is my doing along with informing them. I only hope her brother is more honest with Vivienne Space."

I replied, "Well, he is as straight and narrow as a modernist of sorts can be, and she is as broad a brush as a modernist bishop is likely to be."

"You think? I think I'm going to have to do with Jeremy Symes what was done with Rhiannon Fleetwood: for the time being, put him in charge of the whole area."

"Well, if you can forgive him, and forgive me, you can forgive your wife. There is more at stake, after all."

"Oh I don't know about that. I'm all of a sudden hearing terrible rumours I have never heard before, and I'd better keep any more of them from you."

"Bastard," said Andrea. "And what he expects of me? Ugh."

"I heard that," he said. "She opens her mouth about me and her in private - where marriage is supposed to be - and I'll take her to pieces in public. In fact she is good enough at taking herself to pieces. Suddenly people think she is a slut."

I said, "I don't like that sort of language. No one around here is a slut."

"It's what people think, and it's all coming out. And you weren't shocked at what you saw?"

"Surprised: only surprised. I think, Lynton, you should find ways to smooth this over and learn your wife's actual religious stance."

"You think? Well, let her practice such stuff there, amongst your lot, but she's not doing it amongst our lot."

"I'll pass that dismissive message on."

"Obviously she can hear me. I've said enough. I suspect I'm taking a risk over you too, Linda."

"I told you that myself."

"You know that clergy are avoiding this diocese? People won't come. And now this adds to the mess. If we appoint you, Linda, you have to accept corporate responsibility and toe the collective line. You understand that? It seems that my wife - if she is to stay as my wife - doesn't."

"Like Brian Glover said, 'I know the rules.'"

"Who?"

"When he was wrestling; he did acting like in Kes."

Allie's eyes widened and her mouth opened.

"Well, so long as you do," Lynton said, and told me that was the end of his call. He would announce the result of the PCC enquiry, to be in touch for that, and regarding my interviewing.

"I don't get it," I said, "how I am suitable and she is not?"

"Well, ask your friend Brian Glover," said the Anglican bishop.

"He's not my friend; he's dead."

"But learn from him. Goodbye."

"Who?" asked Allie.

"My father got excited - jumped out of his chair - when the wrestling was on. He told me about Brian Glover and his antics."

"Naked?" asked Allie.

"They wore leotards - five o'clock in the afternoon!"

"Your father, you Nellie."

"Oh yes. His knob was flying all over the place when these wrestlers were on. Brian Glover was a teacher and actor and writer. I know about him because he stopped wrestling when I was a baby but I noticed him in Porridge and elsewhere. Some I saw and were told about were Big Daddy and Giant Haystacks, Jackie Pallo, Kendo Nagasaki with his mask, Masambula and Johnny Kwango - racist, really, Mick McManus, Catweazle, Mike Marino..."

"News to me, all this," said Allie.

Andrea told us she was going to her room, and would stay there until the morning.

I said to Allie, once she'd gone, "Don't go in her room."

"I won't, I won't. I've kept away from her approaches, right? Anyway, I'm pleased you called it 'her room.'"

"Only for now," I replied.

"And thank you for my actual present."

Her actual present was a book by John Tosh on The Pursuit of History and by Anna Green and Kathleen Troup on The Houses of History.

Allie looked further at these in bed.

"Just something for now," Allie said. "There's more to this than meets the eye."

"What?"

"Hold you hard and see," Allie said.

"On which point, I have a little something extra to unwrap, under the bed." It was a plastic and rubber vibrating fist, with rechargeable batteries. "Not for wrestling," I said.

"Oh you do think of me," said Allie.

So we had a go with it, and Allie's yelping added to Andrea's crying and Marie's own high pitched sounds below the floor.

Chapter 37 Secret Mission

Narrator: Allie A Secret Mission? (Tuesday 21st April)

The new garden was a windbreak with its fence and also a suntrap. Andrea called it, 'a really useful little parrick,' a Doret word I understood for a fenced-off parcel of land. Indeed, it was great for getting togs off and lying in the sun, even on the east coast with the sea so close. All of us were there, naked as the day: Roger, Marie, Andrea, Linda and me. And Andrea was wearing a silver disc from two metal loops, one through her clitoris hood. So I looked at it and then everyone did. One side had on it, SVV and the other A A Lindsey.

"You weren't wearing that at our online ritual."

"No, well I take it off for other, specific, rituals. I did for Lynton, too. But I like wearing it as decoration."

"What's the other 'A' for?"

"Aurora. Aurora was the Roman Goddess of the Dawn. Alan has a second name Eberhard, like a wild boar."

"Larry Grayson's friend," said Linda.

My phone buzzed, in my clothing, so I picked it up and squinted to see the display. Adam Magellan had called.

Allie. Come to opposite the parish church in an hour to chat with someone? There have been developments that would benefit from your optional involvement.

Linda asked, "What's that about?"

"Someone wants to talk to me outside the Anglican church."

Andrea Aurora asked, "Is this about me?"

"I don't know."

"Can I see your phone? Linda asked.

"Yeah: I'm not getting involved in a conspiracy."

So Linda looked. "From Adam. Well, what is the real reason?"

"I have no idea. He has sent that message, and I'm presumably to agree."

"Why would Adam Magellan be involved if it's about your husband, Andrea?"

"I don't know. Maybe it's about who received the video. It's not a secret. Oh, fucking hell," said Andrea. "Time passes quickly naked in a garden. I'd better get dressed and prepare for my shift at the surgery. I'm supposed to be off the next two days and do some parish work but I can't see it."

I said, "And I'd better get dressed to go and see what this is all about. I'll let you all know, too."

We both hopped over the tenfoot and dressed indoors. I'd thus had a chance to view Andrea naked. Her crotch area was as smooth as Linda's, and presented itself as no more than a letter box for thin letters. She had Goldilock's breasts. Her bottom was so inviting.

Fortunately, Andrea's route took her a different way than the church.

I asked Adam, on meeting him, why we were meeting in this location.

"Because it suggests something other than what it is."

"Which is?"

"Well, it seems that quite a few relationships are breaking up no sooner have they got started. And one of them is in Scotland. The fantasy has been broken already, and Diana doesn't particularly like the person who shared her fantasy. How many times does an ideal person online turn out to be different in reality? She discovered some re-enactment obligations too, that she disliked intensely."

"Of events in The Jacobite Gap Years?"

"Indeed, of characters. She was given the role of Lady Gordon, a captive after Culloden, which meant being the wife of Lord Gordon."

"But we're confined to our houses and a daily exercise each day."

"Quite. Very odd. Fancy an illegal car journey? It's a lot further than to Durham and Barnard Castle and you can't claim it's for an eye test."

"I'm the wrong person. You should be asking Linda."

"Ah. Diana doesn't want to involve Linda; in fact, she wants to slip back into Serninsea unnoticed. I've arranged for Yojana Asthana to take her in at her unused Maa Skelter Guest House."

"Into a cant of the Serninsea area. Hmm. You have something with Yojana."

"Why is Yojana a cunt?"

"'Cant' means it cuts off a corner, that's all, or forms a corner."

"If you say so. It's strictly business with Yojana."

"Then why do I need to go? If you need a woman, take Yojana."

"To offer reassurance. You've got the 'intel' on Linda. She can make it clear to you that she wants to slip into this, er, cunt of Serninsea and know that Linda is unaware."

"It's not 'cunt!'"

"Your accent."

"This compromises me."

"Your accent?"

"No, Linda'll square me up again."

"Diana thinks you keep secrets from Linda."

"Is that what you said?"

"Nope, but here's what to do. Make an excuse to get out of food deliveries tomorrow. Pack enough for three nights. Come with me; maintain radio silence. No one else will know."

"Tempting, but no."

"Go on! Mrs. Doyle and all that."

"Where would we stay?"

"This Sally Hughes lives in Broom of Moy by the River Findhorn, in a house called Clann Na Cloiche, or Children of the Stone. She works in Forres. However, Diana has travelled a long way to a compassionate minister near Ceann Loch Raineach. Those two visited there. Apparently this minister of religion knows you and so is another reason why she wants you there. We two can stay in an out-house one night only, other nights in the car when journeying."

"I'm coming," I said to him. "Tomorrow, outside your place, and have some breakfast in bread ready for me. Fried eggs in bread, because I won't be sharing breakfast tomorrow at the bethel."

"Great! I will pick you up outside the Titansea Grand. You'll have to walk there."

"A thought, Adam, for part of the deception: what if Andrea Lindsey comes lolloping along?"

"Hadn't thought of that. Devious c...ant, aren't you? In the out-house I could sleep in one single bed and look at you two getting nice and close in the other one. I'm told they have a roaring fire to keep you warm."

"You're such a perv, Adam. I'll bring an unused double airbed from the wetroom - suitable for one person."

"As you wish."

When I got back to the bethel, I said Adam was all hush hush but basically (for the purposes of misdirection) I said then it would be useful if Andrea joined the food distribution and I didn't. I could not say more, I told them, in that I was also in the dark.

Somehow Linda didn't quite believe me, as she'd grown not to believe me. "Here we go again," she said.

"I thought you were tolerating secrets, so long as they come out at some timely point."

Later on I suggested to Andrea that in fact she make it alone to the Titansea Grand and have enough for three nights away.

"One day ring in sick," she said. "Bugger them, why not?"

"We will be travelling illegally."

"Don't get caught, then," she said. "Adam'd better be a dabster at this sort of thing. Are you joppety about this?"

"No! I think it'll be good fun."

Meanwhile it was a little early to be sure but my period hadn't come. I knew that Linda wanted me to receive sperm, but this wouldn't now happen anyway.

In fact she reminded me and Roger. "Despite your secret world, more sperm for you tomorrow. Is your period due now?"

"Yes it is. There may be no need."

"Oh that's good," said Roger.

"Best to be sure. You can still give me another dose and then we'll run a test."

Meanwhile I contacted Uncle Paul via my laptop as to what he knew about the fifty year old Reverend Seumas Caimbeul living at Tigh na h' Iobairte near Ceann Loch Raineach.

"I'll send you details in writing in an email. Things do join up, but boy do they zig zag and the genes are quite diluted. Also, they all do favour the Gaelic in the records I found. So the Reverend Seumas Caimbeul was born on 5th January 1970 at Taigh an Droma or Tyndrum. His father was Dòmhnall Caimbeul, born on 15th of May 1946 at Crieff. Up and around it goes: in fact there are three routes connecting you. For now you only need to know that Dùghall Dùbhghlas Caimbeul is the 9 times great uncle of yourself."

"That is thin."

"He was born on 2nd January 1760 at A' Chrìon Làraich, whose sister was Fionnghal Caimbeul, born 3rd May 1758 at Taigh an Droma, and she was the mother of Mairead Urchardan (who married our all-important James Rogers). Mairead, whom we know as Margaret Urchardan, is the 7 times great grandmother of you; and the Reverend Seumas Caimbeul is therefore your 7th cousin twice removed."

"Brilliant! Well done Uncle Paul."

I did not tell Paul that I hoped to meet the Reverend Seumus; indeed I didn't even contact the Reverend himself.

Travel to Scotland (Wednesday 22nd April)

Once they'd gone delivering food I did a rush job at packing a small suitcase, to then go into Andrea's room and grab her filled bag. Finally I took a folded airbed from a box and then struggled out via the private door to go down to Titansea and stand outside its main hotel. Adam had three sleeping bags: I knew that.

Andrea had run off from the distributing party, causing Linda to call out. She'd run the wrong way and took several streets round. She was a bit warm from her running and fast walking.

Adam drove up in his Vauxhall Astra and our bags and airbed went into his boot. We were off for what was an illegal trip in terms of length and crossing into Scotland. I sat in the front seat and Andrea at the back. He had a box of face masks in the car, as there was a debate over their effectiveness. He also had a paper map, for unusual ways over the border.

There was a long way to go first. After eating his supplied fried egg butties - Andrea had some cereal bars too, I told him about the new addition to the family tree based on this minister and the connections to the Urchardan family. There was Mairead (whom we knew as Margaret) Urchardan and she was my seven times great grandmother and that the Reverend Seumas Caimbeul was my seventh cousin twice removed.

He said, "The genetic material you share is minimal. It's a long way back and the generations don't keep together."

"My cousin Jonnie is one removed but that's because his father is so old. I find family trees so baffling because what looks to me like some great great uncle is in fact some cousin. I think my Uncle Paul does it by finding likely stages of convergence and matches them up."

"But as you go backwards, just as you go forwards, the choices multiply."

"But as you go backwards, especially in rural areas, you keep overlapping the same people."

Andrea said, "My name Lindsey is local to my birth area but not from the infamous rector."

I said, "I've already looked at this."

"Have you? That's interesting, Allie, that you should take such an interest."

"It gives my uncle something to do. He's actually my cousin."

Later on I asked Adam who was his client, because Aardse had promised to cut Diana out of everything.

He said, "It is Diana, but I am being generous. She doesn't like me, and thinks I have wronged her, so this is something that I can do to change her opinion."

"Are you a big softy all of a sudden?"

"Well, think how much money I've put Annie's way."

"Yeah, but she's providing a service. She stimulates you into wanking. You may as well admit it."

"Why would I deny it to you?"

"Andrea's here."

"Headgirl is less fun now. She used to face the camera and laugh and giggle with her stories while getting her hand working. Now it's all about being rogered every night by Marie's penis."

"It's sad," said Andrea. "Annie's doing herself no good at all."

Our route took us beyond Wytham to the A1, but Adam decided we would rest away from service stations as they contained police asking people about their journeys.

Our route involved taking the bypass around the west of Newcastle, and then going up the A697. After Wooller and Millfield I did the map reading to take us down the B6396. On a minor road via the Bowmont Forest we kept south of Kelso and joined the A698 and left it again to go through Nisbet and Ancrum and pause for the night near the village of Lilliesleaf.

Adam decided he'd watch on his tablet a film, All About Anna from 2005. Did I want to look? "It's a Danish film, erotic one, and I fancy a wank, girls."

No I didn't. I got in the back with Andrea, and we sort of leaned on each other.

"No, I can't sit idly by," I said to Andrea. "Oy, Adam, would you like me to do it?"

So I got in the front. He watched the film, I took over his toddler and I played with it. I felt it was by way of reward for his driving and involving us.

Adam said, "It's about a woman who wants an active sex life while staying clear of emotional involvement. I wholly approve but I don't think she's successful because the old flame still has his pull."

"Not my approach," said Andrea from the back. "I didn't know that Lynton was a sexual pervert, but there you go. Who would know? But a wife has her duties."

I said, "Interesting."

"What?" asked Adam. "This film or Andrea?"

"Your knob and Andrea."

The film he was watching has penetration sex, fellatio with ejaculation and cunnilingus. He asked me, as I manipulated him, "Have you had any messages from Linda?"

"Yes, and by looking she knows I've seen them. I've not answered. So it's not 'total radio silence', but my phone doesn't have a tracker application on - we don't share locations."

Andrea said, "Obviously she noticed I'd run off. She doesn't know my number."

Adam said, "If she remembers our time in Wales, she might ask Peter to get information on your location. I have already told Peter not to seek it or give it by saying the chap who did it before isn't able to do it during lockdown."

"Is that true?"

"Of course it isn't," Adam replied.

Then I asked, at the film's cunnilingus, "Are you near? I usually have an idea but you're a bit slow."

"I like how you do it. Oh, Linda is messaging me now. First one."

Peter won't give me your location. I assume by his response that you, Allie and Andrea are together, somewhere. Andrea and Allie haven't done a simple run-away together. I don't believe that.

Adam said, "I'll ignore it."

"No," I responded. "Say something like, 'I'm on a job here, so I can't help you.' To make it more realistic, add in something like, 'I have thought about re-employing Peter, but I can manage alone.' Don't worry - I can keep up the wanking."

"I'm not going to tell her I'm wanking."

"No, that's me talking to you."

"Oh. I'll get my soft pen out."

"You already have: what is the matter with you?"

"It's not Annie," said Andrea from the back. "I bet if Annie was here and not on screen he'd be just as flacid."

Linda, I cannot give you details. I'm on a job here, so I can't help you. I thought about re-employing Peter, but I can manage alone.

I said, "Adam. This film must bore you and my hand is not effective."

"A reply has come."

At least answer me this: are you with Allie and Andrea?

"Come on, brainbox, what shall I answer?"

Andrea said, "Tell her 'yes' and it will put her mind at ease."

Yes I am. They are both informed and useful. That's the most I can say, to reassure you.

Adam commented: "You see, she'll want to ask more. I want to tell her less. Here we go."

So you are not working for Lynton Plimpton, but against him.

I said, "Now you don't answer."

Adam now declared that he was bored with the film, and would look in via Goosechat for Headgirl and Transitory.

Mikey gave a tip of 10 tokens.

"Hello Helen, hello Adam!" called out Headgirl, as she turned to Transitory on the viewers' right and Marie popped her large erect penis into Annie's mouth.

Adam said to us, "She can't do that and tell stories."

Querceto gave a tip of 20 tokens.

Querceto: I've located Gael. Thank you for responding earlier. She's with a friend or two.

Annie emptied her mouth and said, "Thank you Querceto. Gael is welcome to come here. Your tip means we've reached our target, and now Marie can do me rotten."

Querceto has left the room.

I said to Adam, "You've gone harder. I suppose you wish you were her."

"Annie?"

"No, Marie."

"How do her tits look so natural?"

Andrea said, "They're from long term hormones."

"I suppose you've seen them in the flesh," Adam said.

"Ah, no, I'm not commenting on that."

"I mean who'd have thought it with the Reverend Georgie Smith, eh? A lifetime of a skirt and no knickers, of everyone assuming. She had to sit on that dress correctly every time without fail."

Adam's sperm went into a couple of pieces of kitchen roll kept in his car. I cleaned him up and folded the pieces for later disposal. He left Annie and Marie to their performance.

As the night went on, we had drinks, and Andrea and I went outside to find a place to piss at a reasonable distance from each other. I could see Andrea holding up her silver coloured disc. In fact she had a shit too, and so I walked over to her with the kitchen roll.

"It is a basic, necessary function," she said. "Some of the Vestal Virgins say that they can pee without the disc getting wet, but I can't and have to hold it up. And I can't shit without pissing. Does my dirty talk bother you?"

"Not at all. I'll have mine in due course, and he will have his."

"Lynton likes dirty. You liked wanking Adam, didn't you? You're not really a lesbian."

"Let's not fall out," I said to her. "It reminds me of when I was with Jonnie. Anyway, he's putting the seat back, and I will, and you can have the back seat laying down."

"My knees will be up and need some room."

"We'll adjust."

I consulted the map before sleeping. Adam got in his sleeping bag, and I got in mine, but Andrea used hers like a cover.

Lilliesleaf was about ten miles from Selkirk. The idea was not to go into Selkirk at all, but we would need a garage or shop for some more food and drink.

Narrator: Linda Where's Allie? (Wednesday 22nd April)

During our food distribution Andrea did a runner, going north, leaving us to carry her food-containing bags.

After being back an hour from food distribution, with Allie not in our room or in the garden, or anywhere else for that matter, and Andrea not back, I decided to ask if anyone knew of their whereabouts.

No one did, of course, so I went for a walk all the way to 135 Toulouse Road. Neither Allie nor Andrea were there, or they weren't answering.

Once back I sent out messages directly to Allie's phone and via social media; she wasn't replying.

Next, I rang Professor Roland Mitton.

"I am teaching but I'll listen if you're quick, Linda."

"It's just whether you are expecting to see Allie and Andrea today or very soon. I know this new Coven stuff is very secretive but they've both done a runner."

"I do not expect to see them, and there is no arrangement to see them. I've heard that the online ceremony was controversial."

"Yes it was. I'm sorry to have disturbed you."

"Not at all. If they should turn up, I will let you know and tell them I've let you know."

They were not knowingly travelling to Columns Farm or Selions Farm either, but if they arrived they would let me know too. However, Paul Jenner told me that she'd been in touch to hear the family trees connecting her (and me) to the Reverend Seumas Caimbeul. The notion that she'd gone off to Scotland to pursue a family tree connection was preposterous, so I discounted that.

As night fell there was still no Allie. No one responded to my messaging.

I messaged Adam asking if he'd seen Allie but received no reply. Interesting. I contacted Peter Marshall by telephone as to whether he could locate Allie and Adam via their mobile phones as he'd done once before with Adam. I knew this was via a third party but Peter said he, meaning Peter, was on Furlough and staying at his father's with Kathryn his wife. He was still on Adam's books, of course. He rather assumed that the person who could find out the location of a phone was on Furlough too.

"Roger had been ready to donate more sperm this evening. He's making love with his sister instead - what a waste."

"It won't be a waste for Marie."

Ah, there was the other Marie. So I reinvented myself as Querceto.

Querceto has joined.

Querceto gave a tip of 200 tokens.

Querceto: Gael isn't with you, is she? Has she visited, perhaps with a friend?

Headgirl said, "Querceto! Thank you, thank you. We'd love to see Gael and she could join in the party. Transitory would love to burrow elsewhere any night. But there's only my rabbit hole here tonight."

Marie said, "I want my rock hard to get right into her softy."

Well, I escaped the prostitutes. I said to myself, "She just buggers off when she feels like it. Time to make some assumptions and see if he responds." I messaged Adam

Peter won't give me your location. I assume by his response that you, Allie and Andrea are together, somewhere. Andrea and Allie haven't done a simple run away together. I don't believe that.

"Ooh, he's replying this time."

Linda, I cannot give you details. I'm on a job here, so I can't help you. I thought about re-employing Peter, but I can manage without him.

This was some progress, at least.

At least answer me this: are you with Allie and Andrea?

I had to ask the direct question. This meant that an absence of answer might be as good as a yes. However, he answered in the affirmative:

Yes I am. They are both informed and useful. That's the most I can say, to reassure you.

So this meant that Lynton Plimpton had not employed Adam, but Adam must have had something on the new diocesan.

So you are not working for Lynton Plimpton, but against him.

I said to no one, "Now you don't answer!"
I went back to Goosechat.

HelenMC has joined.

Mikey gave a tip of 10 tokens.

Adam has joined.

Querceto has joined.

"Hello Helen, hello Adam!" called out Headgirl. She turned her head and what looked like a huge penis close to the camera was stuffed into Annie's mouth.

Querceto gave a tip of 20 tokens.

Querceto: I've located Gael. Thank you for responding earlier. She's with a friend or two.

Annie released herself of Marie's weapon and said, "Thank you Querceto. Gael is welcome to come here. It's when we like to say you can get stuffed. Your tip means we've reached our target, and now Marie can do me rotten."

Querceto has left the room.

I wanted Allie to keep away from Annie, and lockdown will have helped but I was pretty sure anyway that Allie had not met Annie recently.

Then I wondered about Rhiannon Fleetwood. So she wasn't entirely gone from the area. Was Lynton going to re-employ her? Allie might break her legs and arms. I decided my thoughts had become fanciful. Most likely Adam had a job monitoring the diocesan bishop, and he had Allie and Andrea on the case. If Rhiannon was involved, it might be some sort of sexual liaison, especially with Andrea cast out.

I first wrote this text message for Allie.

Goodnight wherever you are. Shall I drive around the streets to see if I spot you?

I wanted to involve Andrea:

I don't know why a stakeout has to go on all night. I suppose Andrea might be wearing a secret listening device attached to that hanging disc.

Narrator: Allie Travel in Scotland (Thursday 23rd April)

It was back to map reading again. I suggested that we bunged the sleeping bags into the boot in case the Scottish police should stop us on the main roads. First we dodged about some narrow hilly roads to get to the A708 west of Selkirk and then took the B709 all the way to the A7, which we made our road to get breakfast of sorts and petrol and put on masks. We got on to the Edinburgh bypass.

I had more messages to ignore when I switched on the phone to look.

Goodnight, wherever you are. Shall I drive around the streets to see if I spot you?

Another one was:

I don't know why a stakeout has to go on all night. I suppose Andrea might be wearing a secret listening device attached to that hanging disc.

I suggested to Andrea that we might have some fun here. I gave her Linda's number and details, and she could send a text message.

I know you contacted Allie. What you don't understand, with respect, is that Rhiannon never quite left the area, and the question is what she is doing now? What plans, if any, is Lynton cooking up? Is there some kind of negotiation happening?

Andrea asked me if I normally lie to my wife.

I said it wasn't lying, and it had come from her phone for Linda and not mine. "Anyway, if that had come from me, she would have detected that it hadn't directly answered anything. Oh, you have a reply."

Good job you paid the rent for the room otherwise I'd be looking for students or others to occupy it now. Bring some shopping in after your stakeout. Does that hanging disc release a supermarket trolley when you go shopping?

I said, "Well that's not very nice. I'll have words with her over that. Later, of course."

So the masked male driver and the masked female passengers crossed the Firth of Forth using the Queensferry Crossing, but Adam was keen to get off the motorway and so we took the slow road.

The A985 took us to a right turn and Kings Road to Queensferry Road, going on the A823 north of Dunfermline. We stayed on this road, on and on until it became the A822 and ended up at Craoibh (Crieff), the birthplace of some of the Caimbeuls or Campbells. The A822 and A826 took us all the way to Obar Pheallaidh (Aberfeldy).

With a check on the time we paused there and we burks of Serninsea looked at the Birks of Aberfeldy. We found a supermarket for some essential immediate supplies. Adam sent a text to our host to be. The route on was the A846 to take us up into the hills and Loch Kinardochy. Then we used the Schiehallion Road past the loch on its western side. There was a spur after Crossmount to Ceann Loch Raineach. The B846 got us to Clach na h' Iobairt and indeed Tigh na h' Iobairte.

The rather bearded minister came out to greet us wearing a dressing gown and sandals. "Diana Monarch's indoors here: made her way by public transport and walking," said the Reverend Seumas Caimbeul.

"Oh it's you," was her less than enthusiastic greeting, as I walked in after Seumas but before Adam and Andrea. She was in a dressing gown as well. "I had a shower, earlier. Who's this?" The fire was raging.

"Adam..."

"I know it's Adam, you twit, but the woman."

"Andrea Lindsey, my General Practitioner."

"I don't need a doctor."

"I didn't say you did. I knew her in Somerset and she now lives in Serninsea."

I noticed Diana's hair wasn't wet, and what I assumed turned out to be the case. They'd been doing the naturist thing in this retreat location.

Their two gowns came off as they sat naked either side of the roaring fire and we were directed to three chairs facing the fire.

"Adam?" I asked.

"I like to dissent," he said, as I did a masturbation motion to his face. "Oh, all right."

Two of us were undressing: I detected slowness in Andrea's actions. I wanted enthusiasm. I turned my attention to Diana. "Are you normally as rude as this to three people who've come a long way?"

"Ah," said Seumas instead. "I'd say grumpy. She's had a difficult time. Being asked to re-enact Lady Gordon in a three night meeting wasn't a good idea. They get very realistic, these historical literary cults. And Sally appealed online..."

"And different in reality," said Diana, taking over. "Okay. I appreciate that it is a long way here. Hello Adam, Allie and... Andrea. Thanks for coming. I'm trying not to be rude, but as Sally would say in re-enactment, 'Why are you here?'"

"Me?" asked Andrea.

"Yes. You."

"I'm a sort of decoy to put Linda off the scent."

"And why have you got a dog disc off your fanny?"

"Serninsea Vestal Virgins."

"Oh, them."

Seumas said, "One of those post-Buddhist New Age type groups?"

"Yes," Andrea replied. "I know. I'm an Anglican priest and a yet member of that and even a High Priest Witch. At some stage I'll come under a Clergy Discipline Measure - sooner rather than later, probably."

"Ah," he said. "Yeah."

"I'm Pagan and Free Catholic," I said. "And you, the Reverend Seumas, as my wife Bishop Linda insists?"

"Yes, the full works. Naturist, Pagan third-level ordained and a Unitarian minister too. This here is a Naturist retreat and a Unitarian retreat, but there are Pagan stones."

A woman, Màiri Camshron, with a pinny on over her flesh, came in, introduced herself and said there was cooked food and drink available in the kitchen next room along. Her flesh was the brownest and she had quite a considerable bare bottom for her small height.

We went through.

"So what does Linda think... think about me?" Diana asked in the kitchen, as we sat around its large table on pre-laid towels.

I said, "She misses you. But she thinks that we are on a job after Andrea fell out with her husband. Her husband is Lynton Plimpton, the diocesan bishop."

Diana knew that Aardse had cut off all contact. So what she wanted to do was slip into Serninsea and make quiet approaches to her husband, if possible, but after a time of waiting and thinking. At first others might let him know that she was no longer with Sally, and it turned out to be a disaster living at Forres and travelling to Inverness for re-enactments of The Jacobite Gap Years story.

Seumas asked Adam, "How was your illegal journey?"

"Back roads as well as main roads."

"Needs must," said Seumas.

Soon Seumas reminded me that the last time we spoke was online, and he knew that we had rejected the Unitarians' offer regarding training, observation and re-applying.

"It's not good enough," he said. "I want you in Scotland. Look how we match up! Perhaps before you take Diana to her real homeland, we could try some Pagan religious content together."

Diana was still on about herself: "Online is different. Oh, Sally and I shared plenty. We started passionately, but she just was not my type nor me hers. Participating in re-enactments in a new single life up here wasn't on. And I miss my kids. I miss Linda too; these are deep roots and he's right: my real homeland is eastern Foss.

"Linda scares me because of what she brings out in me. The stories plus Sally seemed different. Clach na h' Iobairt was exciting to see. And when it all went wrong this place was somewhere to come, because Seumas knows of Linda and you, of course, since those interviews were arranged."

Seumas said, "I'm so pleased to see you for real. Surely you could have taken up the training offer the interviewers made: you should be the candidate."

"Nah."

Diana had her own room in the main house. Adam went to the outhouse, where we three would stay. But Seumas asked me to accompany him for a pastoral chat and he agreed that Andrea should come along as well.

But before we did Adam said Mary Ann Magellan had received a message from Linda, and he had replied to Mary deceptively.

I'd had a job in Serninsea. It's a simple as that.

So our task was to produce more fake trails. Andrea went first:

I know you're making enquiries. What you don't understand, with respect, is that Rhiannon never quite left the area, and the question is what she is doing now? What plans, if any, is he cooking up? Is there some kind of negotiation happening?

Then I had another idea, to mention something I'd surely never said previously:

Here's a thing. Linda Woodhead, the sociologist, studied theology at Cambridge, located to Lancaster and did a sociology study of Kendal (including its Unitarians), was born in Taunton, and grew up in a village nearby. Her rather was a farm labourer. It's something I found out.

Narrator: Linda The Art of Misdirection (Thursday 23rd April)

After waking up alone, a local business had solar lights to poke into the garden, and a firepit to add warmth in the night. Another business turned up with two long garden seats.

Roger and Marie looked on and suggested revised positions. The firepit should be near the garden's long seats so positioned to allow chat.

Later on, I asked them in the said garden, "Have you any idea where Allie, and I suppose Andrea for that matter, went?"

"Barnard Castle?" suggested Roger.

"The obvious place is outside the vicarage or the suffragan's old place at Caffenmere. My chances of spreading Novel Covid sat in my SUV alone are nil, so I am going for a drive around."

In fact I went to various other places as well, such as the Titansea Grand and Yojana Asthana's guest house. There wasn't a sign of anyone. No one was in at Adam's place.

I tried a long shot. I had contact numbers for Mary Ann Magellan, the one-time Mirela Annabella György. Yootha Ann Aysher was another. I sent the same message to both.

Hope lockdown isn't too restrictive. Adam has gone absent without leave. He's not with either of you, is he? He should be in Serninsea. Perhaps you could contact him.

I received a reply from Mary Ann. I started to smell a rat, because she was smelling a rat.

Adam replied he'd had a job in Serninsea. And he is using the past tense. Adam once told me how to make it seem you've answered one question when you answered another, for the purposes of misdirection. The magician does the same.

He could be anywhere, but he isn't here and isn't with Yootha Ann. Stay safe.

I thought, yes, Allie is just the same. Answer something else, and misdirect. They must have gone on an illegal roadtrip. That group (Rhiannon Fleetwood was both part of it and avoided it to suit) had relocated to Tamworth. I never quite knew why Tamworth and perhaps we might find out. Perhaps desperate Lynton Plimpton was fishing in those waters, to bring some of them back into the fold.

There was a message from Andrea that had the sniff of more misdirection.

I know you're making enquiries. What you don't understand, with respect, is that Rhiannon never quite left the area, and the question is what she is doing now? What plans, if any, is he cooking up? Is there some kind of negotiation happening?

Ah, that was volunteered information out of the blue. I smelt Allie and Adam all over that message. Allie sent a message of her own.

Here's a thing. Linda Woodhead, the sociologist, studied theology at Cambridge, located to Lancaster and did a sociology study of Kendal (including its Unitarians), was born in Taunton, and grew up in a village nearby. Her rather was a farm labourer. It's something I found out.

Very clever. Then I had a most basic idea. Had Allie taken the laptop she had been using? No, she hadn't. Time to investigate. It was in the vestry.

There was an email from her Uncle Paul, not exactly her uncle but another distant cousin. It was all about the ancestors of the Reverend Seumas Caimbeul, born on 5th January 1970 at Taigh an Droma or Tyndrum. Ah. I saw a Marsaili Urcharden and Anna Urcharden and others. Places included Ceann a' Ghiùthsaid (Kingussie) and Baile Chloichridh (Pitlochry). I read the detail going back to 1793 and an Ealasaid Urchardan born 1770 at A' Chrìon Làraich, and her sister Mairead or Margaret Urchardan born 4th March 1773. She was the one who married James Rogers and was taken off to Walsingham. There was a Caimbeul or Campbell line connecting up at the mother of Mairead (Margaret) Urchardan. Then there was the Urcharden route itself. Three routes!

I spoke into the air. "So she is related to this Unitarian minister and naturist. What was preposterous isn't, after all, but Adam would have to do something illegal - at risk to himself - and give her a roadtrip to see Seumas. And Andrea? What does Paul conclude? Yeah... Ooh!"

At the very bottom of the email was this:

It follows therefore that Seumas Caimbeul is also the 7th cousin 3 times removed of Linda Shrimpton.

"Fuck me! So why haven't I gone? Why has she taken Andrea - assuming they have gone there?"

It was time to do an Internet search on the minister. The UGA had him on a list of active ministers.

The Revd. Seumas Caimbeul describes himself as a 'neo-Pagan Unitarian' and promotes the 'Earth Spirit' inside the Unitarians. He offers a retreat for Unitarians at Tigh na h' Iobairte near Ceann Loch Raineach (Kinloch Rannoch) base. We should advise that it is also a Naturist retreat.

I knew about that, of course, but the search also produced an oppositional website, and this one had been visited by Allie as well. It was in her Internet history. Uncovering Witches, it was called.

Seumas Caimbeul, from Caol Loch Ailse or Kyle of Lochalsh, is a notorious libertine, Pagan and flagrant naturist, said to believe in the unity of the Goddess. The Unitarian General Assembly, a sort of overseer of a driftwood Church, took him on as a recognised minister so long as he stays at the retreat they gained from him. He rarely preaches. He appeals to the weirder members who attend individual and small group visits at Tigh na h' Iobairte near Ceann Loch Raineach (Kinloch Rannoch).

He tries to get visitors naked, and many do try it for the first time. Years back he toyed with the idea of becoming Bràthair Dùbhghlas (he prefers the Gaelic - he teaches it to locals) of the Unitarians, walking the rural roads in a habit and bare-footed, but Scottish ministers sat on that notion. (There was once a Free Catholic habit and sandals-wearing Brother Douglas!)

But this weirdo enjoys the fruits of his nudity and ritual. Some selected visitors have reported having had sex with him as part of their visit. So far it this seems consensual. He tries to keep his wilder witch activities secretive but his Coven will be the one at Caol Loch Ailse and I invite him to deny this and take me to court.

It's the rituals that do it. These Pagan crazies share semen, urine and menstrual blood. These nutters could be from some Dennis Wheatley novel. He is nothing less than a High Priest of the Craft, from an initiation usually involving sexual intercourse with at least one existing Pagan Witch. He had two. The two lovely ladies whom he penetrated and mixed juices were Ealasaid Rothach and Beathag Urchardan, the latter at least a distant cousin - if not both are related in a display of incest.

I spoke into the air again. "This must have been so attractive for Allie. The motivation is there. So Andrea has gone because, also - if not the same Coven - he is one of her lot. Glastonbury - Serninsea - Kinloch Rannoch. Mmm. But Andrea can drive, so why is Adam involved? Or he's involved in some wopping deception. He won't risk his neck getting an eye test in Ceann Loch Raineach..."

"Who are you talking to?" asked Marie Enfield, appearing at the vestry door with a smile.

"Me. Working out where Allie and her witch pal have gone."

"Have you worked it out?"

"Yeah. Other than Adam's involvement. Actually, I have worked out his involvement. He is providing cover; he is a willing decoy. It's the sort of thing he'd do. Perhaps he's staying with Peter and others."

"Andrea's car is up the road," said Marie. "I suppose they could have got a bus and a train to... It'd be Pitlochry. But people aren't supposed to travel. Very expensive."

"Yeah. The message Allie was so happy to show me when in the garden was pre-arranged. She's tried to put me off the scent but I am smarter than my little intellectual so-and-so thinks."

"If my brother did that to me, I'd cut his balls off and hang them up - during sex."

"No, don't do that. You'd lose quite a bit of income. Allie has a shiny but blunt athame and already puts it where I'd shove it. They are so filthy, those two."

"Your old friend Diana is in Scotland."

"Diana. Of course. Yes! She and her new love visited Clach na h' Iobairt and Crossmount. Yes, Allie must have been as envious as hell. So they've gone and left me behind. Cunts, utter cunts."

"Snip snip," said Marie. "Stop that now and get your togs off and come over into the garden. Roger has his testicles still attached and has got the firepit going, and we can sit and chat about something else."

"I hope he hasn't toasted his testicles."

"Mmm! Yum yum! said Marie. "Testicles roasted on long forks."

"Your brother looks after you, doesn't he?"

"Wonderful. I want no one else, ever. I love licking his balls, sucking him off."

"She's missed out on his really globby sperm. I'm so annoyed with her."

A Ritual in Scotland

"Again I want to persuade you, Allie, to take up the offer. You. We think Linda has her own valid legacy and attachments, but you're free to take up an exciting ministry by preparing for it."

"I'm probably too Pagan."

"We are a minority within the Unitarian fold. You could make that vital impact. I am High Priest Seumas Tursachan."

"I'm a Pagan High Priest Alice Moonbright."

"I'm High Priest Andrea Moonglow. We were both of the Creech Moorlinch Coven, based in Somerset. We've done nothing locally but technically we have now started Serninsea Eclectic Coven."

He said, "The difficulty is Linda's attachment to the Free Liberal Ecclesia. She's found something there, but we have such difficulty with them."

"Too late because she is my wife, and I'm pretty sure I'm pregnant now."

"You are?" Andrea asked. "You'll need to come in, get into the system."

"Tell me about the name you were given, Seumas, and how you received it."

"Tursachan' means Standing Stones - plural. So, yes, I am a Coven leader, but the Coven is located elsewhere, at Caol Loch Aillse and goes into An t-Eilean Sgitheanach."

"Then we must have a ritual," I concluded.

"I would like to give you a blessing for becoming pregnant. What about my sperm?"

"A blessing should have a physical component."

He said, "It's a bit late to get pregnant from a third party."

"Pity it isn't you," I said. "But it will work as a ritual. Andrea can smear it on her yoni as well as an offering to the Goddess."

She asked me to remove the disc, and this was done by removing the top ring and leaving a neat hole through her clitoris hood.

So we got to it there are then, beginning by casting a circle. However, I pointed out that in travelling to Ceann Loch Raineach neither of us had brought our athames with us. So we would use wands.

The circle had the usual four winds positions with air and incest to the north, a rock to the east, fire to the south and water to the west but placed for human body dimensions.

Seumas it was who lay on the circle, rather like Da Vinci's Vitruvian Man, but holding a wand in each hand. I stood above him, legs apart, and Andrea kneeled in between his wide apart feet.

I nodded, so Andrea picked up his penis and started masturbating him.

She stated, "O wind from the north, refresh us; O earth from the east, nourish our growth; O flame from the south, warm us and give us energy; O water from the west, give us renewed life."

He placed one wand into my vagina above him, and then Andrea lifted her legs on her knees to receive the other one into hers.

"Let the magic happen in the fruitful places," he said. The wands were removed and laid to either side of him.

I said, "Rise up lingam and do your task."

Andrea repeated those words, continuing her actions.

"Pass me your sterilised waters as a blessing," said Seumas Tursachan.

So above him I directed a careful flow of water from my urethra into the high priest's mouth.

He said, when he could, "The Goddess in her life force will come to you, Alice Moonbright, through the very sperm I will pass to you as assisted by Andrea Moonglow. The male gives to the female, so that the female gives to all."

I moved closer to Andrea and dropped on to his erect penis and started to use some of my own skill. Andrea rose up on her legs, picked up the wands, and inserted them deep to her cervix in the manner of the athame at our online ritual.

I felt his liquid come into me.

"Come Holy Goddess and bless this woman with your fertile abundance!"

I rose up from him and Andrea bent forward, and pressed her tongue to my few thin red pubic hairs.

She paused and said, "Let the land and the people fertilise across the whole world."

She licked all around my pubic area, spreading her spit and his semen. She also stuck two fingers into my vagina and scooped out some of the mix in there to spread on her labia and above.

We'd done enough. Seumas brought his arms and feet together and pronounced a closing of the circle. "So mote it be! The circle is closed."

Andrea and I said the same together: "So mote it be! The circle is closed."

Then we noticed Diana leaning against the door frame. I smiled at naturist Diana.

"My God," she blurted. "You being married to the diocesan bishop!"

"Yeah," said Andrea, licking her lips. "That's become a problem."

"I bet it has."

I then helped Andrea reattach her Vestal Virgins disc, to hang with the 'SVV' facing forwards. Diana said, "Well, that beats having a nose ring."

Seumas said that our ritual was really one of mutual recognition. It used old, magical, maybe alchemical language because it is all we have, but we had connected intimately and this is what mattered.

I agreed. I said (as I have before) that there was greater awareness of the ritual itself rather than pointing to anything beyond. The mystery was in the act itself.

He said, "The more agnostic we get, the more physical and real it must be."

"Same with paintings," I said. "The focus has shifted."

But Andrea dissented: "No, I think we are drawing on real powers; otherwise I wouldn't risk everything to do it. I also agree with those who say the divine is best revealed through the orgasm but do it through appropriate groups rather than within, say, an Anglican cult."

Diana said, "That's why they'll chuck you out: you've gone to do your shopping elsewhere."

Andrea and I wished the best to Seumas and to Diana, as we went over to the outhouse, carrying our retrieved clothes.

So Adam, in there, looking at his tablet, asked me, "Are you in with me, or with Andrea?"

"Andrea, you clot."

(I know I had an airbed but I wanted to be tight to this woman.)

It wasn't long before Andrea and I were very close together in the single bed and went to sleep. I had a tendency to flick her silver coloured disc on its rings, and there was a lot of out of focus staring eyes to eyes, either seen open or shut.

Journey Back (Friday 24th April)

"Why are you kissing me?" I asked Andrea, her body pressed against mine.

"Because I want to spread the love."

(I was playing with her disc.)

"Very nice too," said Adam, from the other single bed. "But we do have a long journey, and eight hours means another overnight stop, I'm afraid."

Andrea then said, "I am insured to drive your car."

"Well, why the fuck didn't you say so before?"

"You never asked, Adam. A GP needs to be able to drive. I can leave it at the surgery but, as it happens, it's just down the road from the bethel. The double mini-roundabout hardly helps."

Adam said, "Anyway, Diana drives and she probably has third party insurance driving mine."

We two females went starkers to the kitchen in the house, finding Màiri and the reverend dressed. They assumed we'd have dressed to go home, as indeed Diana had. Oops! We returned to the outhouse and put on our textiles for travel.

Back in the kitchen, and joined by Adam, Diana confirmed her insurance status if she drove another car.

I said, "This place has some opposition online."

"Oh the fundies have a field day," said Seumas. "It's what keeps us alive. The Unitarians alone are otherwise ignored."

After breakfast, being a solid meal in itself provided by Màiri, I said to the Reverend Seumas that we three must keep in touch.

Seumas said he would see if terms and conditions could be changed for me if I applied alone through the Unitarian General Assembly; indeed the Scottish Group might take me on according to their own terms. "In liberalism, you see," he said, "we do our own things."

"I am pregnant," I said. "My duties lie elsewhere. And thank you for your lifeforce ritual."

"It wasn't mine and we all contributed."

Andrea and I gave Seumas full-mouthed kisses. We used our Pagan names in saying goodbye. Diana was very grateful too that he had given her sanctuary. Seumas ran his hands up and down her clothed body. He insisted that Sally had not known where Diana had been these recent days.

"You're not the first," he told her. "We do important missionary work here freeing people from The Jacobite Years literary cult. As I speak, no doubt, another online obsessive is coming her way to Forres."

In the car, with masks on, Diana sat at the front. Diana spilled the beans that at the end of the last week she had contacted Adam for a lift, but only to be from Rasa Market. Her plan was to go by train from Raineach station and pay the rail fare and then pay Adam for his own time and short journey, as well as organising Yojana herself to accommodate her. However, Adam offered to take the railway fare himself and do the journeying, and he organised it with Yojana, partly to give him something different and exciting to do.

He said, "You make me sound ungenerous." We were going past the Birks again at Obar Pheallaidh (Aberfeldy),.

"Hah!"

"What does that mean?"

Diana declined further comment. Seumas, however, had refused payment from Diana. What a difference!

I said, "We didn't pay him either."

Adam responded, "He didn't want anything but I gave him the hundred quid donation towards his project. Diana has already paid into my account."

I said, "Adam. I wanked you for free. Should I send you an invoice?"

"Hah!" said Diana a second time.

Diana took up the map reading this time. After Obar Pheallaidh, we went south to Craoibh (Crieff) via the A826 and A822, and then to the A823 to turn off on a minor road before Dunfermline (C69 and C493) for the B9097, to get us to the necessary motorway and the M90 for the Queensferry Crossing. If the police stopped us there then we would have to simply say we were going home. They didn't, so Adam continued to drive this time for the A68 from the Edinburgh bypass. We did not go on to the A697, but continued, and then turned off to find the A6105 and the B6397 to Kelso and after there to find the B6352 going north in a kind of 'detouring' road over the border into England. Via the A6351 we joined the A697.

Diana said we were daft taking these routes, but she took over driving and was determined to travel directly down the A1.

I went to the front seat for map reading. Adam was in the back seat next to Andrea and he soon dozed off. The journey was light with traffic, even around Newcastle. She joined the long motorway south, as it had become, and although we passed several police cars none of them stopped us.

I asked Diana what she wanted to do longer term.

"I don't know; it's all a mess now."

"It's just that things might be changing in a way I didn't expect. I am pregnant but I'm not sure I'm really cut out to be a mother."

"You are kidding," Diana said.

"That's different," said Andrea.

"I'd be a surrogate."

"You've only just got married to Linda," Diana added.

"Yeah, but that could be flexible."

Diana went on, "Allie. I'm not having this conversation. You are unreliable. Linda deserves better so start meeting your responsibilities. Don't follow my example."

"She's right," said Andrea.

"Fair enough. I thought I was being practical."

"Don't complicate things any further than they have become," Diana commented while looking in her mirror, and I wondered if that was for the traffic or if Adam showed any movement behind us.

Diana then said, "I hate him; I'll never, ever, get over what he did to me. That's why I paid him because I want no gifts from him. Carry on wanking him because that way his sperm is being wasted."

The motorway part ended, and we found a pause off the dual carriageway at Darrington itself. Here Adam woke up (I suspect he'd been awake more than he was letting on) and, after a short walkabout, and urinating openly, he offered to take over driving.

However, Andrea took up the wheel and Diana ended up in the back seat next to her hate figure of Adam.

We went on to the A1(M) again past Doncaster. Of course Diana commented that we could have spent time at the Bever Wood Naturist Centre.

Funnily enough it was after Wytham that the Foss Police in the person of Constable Sky decided to stop us, asking where we were going. It was here that Andrea displayed her GP identity document, and said that we'd picked up ill Adam on his necessary rail journey from Scotland and we were heading for Serninsea. The risk was that the police could have checked cameras for data down the A1 and its motorways, but they let us go and we weren't fined.

We arrived at the coastal guest house to be greeted by Yojana Asthana. Diana told Andrea and me in particular that in no way should we tell Linda that she had come back. She would reveal it herself in her own time and in her own way.

"Do you want some money, you two?"

"No," I said.

"Definitely not," said the GP. "Make sure you come and see me for health checks."

I introduced Andrea to Yojana. Yojana was in a simple top and knickers and her nipples were so obvious.

The sun had gone down and it was getting gloomy. Adam dropped us off north of the Bethel and so we walked to face the music, and to conceal that Diana had been collected.

Andrea tried to suggest I could ask to rejoin the Fighters of Concern, in the Serninsea Vestal Virgins. She'd argue for me to join.

"Once bitten infinitely shy," I answered, approaching the bethel.

Back in Eastern England

So we wandered in using the two main doors to see Linda watching television on the big screen above.

"The prodigal daughter returns with her sidekick," she said. "Trouble is, the prodigal son returned just the once and this one keeps running off."

"We've done what we did. Andrea is happier now. Any grub about?"

"Get your own stuff. I thought you might have gone shopping."

"We couldn't because Andrea couldn't get her leg over the shopping trolley handle, to use her disc."

"You could have taken it off for her. Perhaps it would have jammed in the trolley."

"You know, Linda, sometimes you're not exactly a model of religious toleration."

I microwaved chicken curries in four prepared packs. It was enough - plus a couple of apples. It was as if Linda didn't want to talk. Andrea kept a kind of diplomatic silence despite the offensive comments she'd heard.

Then Linda said, "You must think I am a fucking idiot."

"What about?" I asked.

"What you claim to have been doing. You weren't."

"So what do you think we were doing?"

"That's for me to know and you to speculate."

"It's you who are speculating. Perhaps later on you can go through a list, Linda, and I can say, 'Not necessarily,' to each suggestion."

"You'll be in your own bed tonight. I believe there is one at Toulouse Road. You can take her with you."

Andrea asked, "Is she always like this?"

"Getting worse," I replied.

Linda said, "I've heard of absentee landlords but here we have an absentee renter."

"There was a task to do," Andrea said.

"Allie's an absentee fucker, as it happens, in that she didn't get her latest installment from Roger."

"I don't need it. I'm pregnant."

"You are?"

"Yes. Definitely."

"Oh."

"Oh what?" I asked.

"Well, you pick your moments."

"I think we did with Roger and Marie. His stuff went in and it's done its job."

"What a moment to tell me."

"It's as good as any."

"Huh."

"Aren't you at least happy about this?"

Linda did smile, but she was busy displaying silent anger. Then two came downstairs and walked towards us. "Oh, here's Marie and Roger. Want to say anything truthful about your adventure, either of you?"

"Hello, Allie and Andrea," Marie said for both of them.

Andrea said, "I thought marrying Lynton was the thing to do. Like my brother is admittedly doing the same sort of thing."

Linda said, "That's not talking about your adventure, Andrea Lindsey, Andrea Plimpton."

Marie said, "Linda knows."

Andrea said, "She's not telling."

"Are you telling?" Marie asked.

Linda said, "Leave it. I don't want to particularly speak or hear from either of you two travellers."

I asked Linda where I was supposed to sleep.

"I don't know. Where do pregnant women go? Did you sleep with Andrea?"

Roger said, "This isn't for us, Marie. Let's go back upstairs."

Marie said, "I did say to Linda that if you behaved like this I'd cut your bollocks off."

"But this is for them. Come on."

So I said, "Regarding your question, Linda, Andrea was on the back seat of Adam's car and I was in the front seat next to Adam."

"Keeping watch on this and that, I suppose."

"Actually, didn't he, at that point in the car he was looking at Annie and Marie - the other Marie. Sorry Marie." (On hearing 'Marie' they had paused going up the stairs.)

"He did," said Andrea. "Anybody could have come along."

"I suppose by that answer you wanked him off, Allie, being next to him, having done this before."

"Er, I did; I think Andrea was surprised."

Linda said, "You mean she discovered that you are a filthy slut."

"Adam is a sad man," said Andrea. "He is addicted to seeing Annie online. If she stood in front of him, physically, he probably wouldn't respond."

"The thing is," Linda said, "I don't believe a word of it."

Allie said, "That is the absolute truth. In the car, before he had a piss and went to sleep, he was looking at Annie Fenwick and Marie Healand online. His seat went back, my seat went back, and Marie was just about under them laid out on the back seat."

"Adam was with you."

"Yes. All the time."

"Oh."

"You think he wasn't?"

"What does it matter what I think?"

"Someone tell you he was somewhere else? It was his gig."

"Shut up Allie. Right, well, you can come up when I've got into bed, about an hour after I've gone up. And don't bullshit me. I still don't think you were on a job looking at Lynton Plimpton or Rhiannon Fleetwood. That's just falling chaff. I only want you alongside me so you might get sleepy and let out the truth."

Andrea went wide eyed, facing directly at Linda.

"And don't you get your hanging disc in a twist. I've already said I worked out what you were doing."

Andrea replied, "If you think Adam wasn't there then you haven't."

I said, "We know you contacted Mary Ann and Yootha Ann, Linda."

"I know. I did a lot more than that."

"Adam was in charge. He does this sort of thing."

"Save your breath Allie. You'll find your room is still there, Andrea, unfortunately. I'm going up. I don't care what you two do - oh leave it a couple of hours, Allie. You two could do some sort of fanny-licking ritual together, that sort of thing."

Andrea said, "She is impossible."

"But I love her," I added, causing Linda to stomp off to and up the stairs. "I'm having her fucking baby!" I shouted out.

In bed Linda said we had a lot to talk about; saying that I didn't trust her, and she didn't trust me, and we had to get this sorted out to be mothers of this child. I said nothing in response because, as of this moment, I had a wife and could end up with a mistress living under the same roof.

I took it that Linda's subsequent silence meant that she didn't know where we'd been. I turned and looked at her face a few times and she looked back at me, and no further words were expressed.

Chapter 38 Return

Narrator: Linda Allie Tested Positive (Saturday 25th April)

Food deliveries were combined with with a trip to the chemist, open on Saturday morning as an essential shop. We bought a pregnancy test kit.

After breakfast Allie and I went to our room and she squatted above the toilet, peeing in front of me over the test device.

She was indeed pregnant.

Allie asked me to stand with her and with Andrea in the seating area. She asked, then, "Can we at least be civilised with each other?"

"Sure," I said. "We'll carry on and see where it gets us. But it can't be normal because you are lying to me and you keep doing it. Correction: perhaps it is normal."

Allie and I decided therefore to use the mikveh, for being future mothers. After all, if we didn't use it, no one else would during lockdown.

Andrea said, "I'll read some blessings and prayers."

"What, Anglican ones?"

"Er, I do others - as I think you've discovered."

I agreed on the basis of being civilised and improving crippled relationships.

She said, "I don't have to wear my disc if it offends you."

"But you can," I said, "because you're not going in the water, unless you want to mark your own future as a single woman again."

"I won't for now, to see what Lynton does at first."

So Andrea said some words while we two were submerged.

"It must have been some ceremony," I said afterwards, as we dried ourselves with towels. "What you did."

"Ah," Andrea said. "You mean Scotland."

"Scotland?" asked Allie.

"Pack it in, Allie," I said.

Andrea then said, "Allie, witches may be secretive but we are committed to the truth. So are Fighters of Concern. So she is right. We went to Scotland."

"And Adam was there?" I asked, facing Andrea.

"Yes. Adam was there all the time."

Allie said, "Those two shared the driving."

"Two nights?"

"Yes," Allie said.

"And you met Seumas Caimbeul, the minister. He's a High Priest. There's a lovely website trashing all he does."

Andrea said, "Yes he is."

Allie said, "Adam likes a sense of danger, to get one over the authorities."

"He's a chicken," I answered. "All right. You've said enough. I still don't get why you slept in the car, though, when that minister runs a retreat."

"Well, we did," Allie said. "It's a long way."

"Ah," I said, thinking of one night only in the car, but then two directions. I believed them that they had slept in the car, but surely beds were available at the retreat. (Maybe the accommodation was too expensive?)

Marie and Roger were pleased that matters had slightly improved.

It was during a coffee with all five of us in the garden at the firepit, and naked, that Ann and Labhaoise arrived and said they had a van outside at the front. Ann said, "We're taking half of your seats."

"Don't we need them?" I asked Ann.

"Not when you've socially distanced. Spread them out."

"We could store... I mean, we already risk a real sense of kenopsia."

"What?" she asked. "And just a cotton-pickin' minute. With no extra charge, right, we've just given you this new garden. So I think we can take these seats to put in our houses for rent."

"Of course," I said.

"And we've brought you some small communion glasses," said Labhaoise. "You ungenerous... Only kidding."

"Where from?"

"We bought a Methodist chapel. It is shutting - killed by the virus."

"I don't like communion by individual glasses," I said.

Allie said, "We won't have much choice when people come back."

"I'll take a common cup and pour into the glasses. Put the glasses on plates and pieces of bread."

Labhaoise said, "Good job you only have a tiny congregation."

I said, "It has some advantages."

So these two took seats to a van, another example of people coming in and out who perhaps should not.

Later on Peter made contact from his father's house. "Your viewing figures are quite high and seem to be growing. Do some videos: one on the Ecclesia, one on naturism - make them interesting. Do a podcast and people can imagine you are naked on that."

I said to Allie and Andrea. "I suppose you won't do any videos or podcasts on your Coven adventures."

Allie said, "No. It's a different ethos. That's been my point all through."

As for the next day's service, I decided that I would preside and do the sermon, but decided against 'secret messages' for Allie about honesty and deception. I went in and grabbed the laptop.

Before I worked, still naked, I did an internet search. I found the website I'd missed reading:

During the lockdown I regret to announce that Tigh na h' Iobairte cannot take in visitors. What follows will, we hope, become the situation again. The Reverend Seumas Caimbeul.

Come to the retreat at Tigh na h' Iobairte near the stones of Clach na h' Iobairt. View Loch Dhùn Alastair (Dunalastair Water), Loch Raineach (Loch Rannoch) and Loch Teimheil (Loch Tummel) nearby and visit the village of Ceann Loch Raineach (Kinloch Rannoch).

This is a Scottish Unitarian (SUGA) Retreat House and a centre for naturist visits with the Scottish Undressed Group (SUG). We have other religious links with Caol Loch Aillse (Kyle of Lochalsh) and An t-Eilean Sgitheanach (Isle of Skye) that you may wish to discuss if you have ritualistic inclinations.

You can of course just rest and we don't ask you to leave during the day. Of course you may want to go out and walk, or view.

Accommodation at Tigh na h' Iobairte is very limited. We have a couple of bedrooms in the main house and a three singles bed dormitory in an outhouse (two beds in it). We can be very busy but if you get a place we offer hearty breakfasts and evening meals. We can anyway - just call and ask. You can view across the water and down to the mountains. There is more accommodation in the village of Ceann Loch Raineach, of course.

We teach courses on Unitarianism, Paganism, and Gaelic, for all levels. We particularly welcome local people learning Gaelic. We want to reseed the language.

We are on the road between north of Baile Chloichridh (Pitlochry) and Raineach railway station. There is also a road up from Obar Pheallaidh (Aberfeldy).

Crossmount near Loch Dhùn Alastair can be reached from here, but seek permission to enter. You won't find any standing stones there, but Clach na h' Iobairt is real as well as fictional.

So it followed that he wasn't taking in visitors. This explained why they stayed in the car - presumably each way. Other hotels and guest houses would have been shut as well. On the other hand, they did a ritual together of presumably intimate contact - unless they substituted some actions. I gave up at this point. For some reason Adam had gone there: the only explanation being that he was a second driver.

As for us having no visitors, at the double doors outside was the known face of Bishop Lynton Plimpton.

I called Andrea, who stood naked as the day at the inside of the closed double doors, opening the letterbox.

He didn't stay near long. After he'd gone, she came to me.

"All he said to me was, 'Typical!' He was referring to my nudity. He said, 'I'll divorce you. I have public sympathy and the people are behind me on this; local Anglicans and others think you are worse than Rhiannon Fleetwood, and that's saying something.' Thanks to Novel Covid we didn't have to let him in. But there is more..."

"Be honest with me. You didn't monitor him and Rhiannon Fleetwood at all?"

"No. The rumour is that she is in and out of town. No, we went to Scotland. We met Seumas Caimbeul. Yes, we did a Pagan ritual."

"The website says there are other religious links with Caol Loch Aillse."

"That's the location of his Coven. Like with our origins, his Coven is far away. We did not create a new Coven because we don't live there."

"Thanks, Andrea."

"Lynton actually came for you, but told me to pass the message on. The PCC wants to get on with it. Can you do a service at the parish church for online? Mo McArden will see that the cameras are working and that it goes out online. Tomorrow?"

"I'm working on tomorrow, here, now, for here."

"He doesn't negotiate - he expects."

"I can do this?"

"He's authorised it."

"Neither of you called me over!"

"No, he instructed from afar. So very busy, ha ha. Come to the garden when you're done; the fire is lovely."

Narrator: Linda Parish Church Service and a Daughter (Sunday 26th April)

So it was, with the permission of the diocesan bishop, and the expectation of the Parochial Church Council, that I was back in the parish church.

The service from the newish Common Prayers felt really dogmatic to me. I wasn't sure I could digest it. Nevertheless I'd agreed to take a service and preside.

It came to the sermon, and the fact is that the one I was about to give was more orthodox and directed than I had intended. I had written it out on Saturday so that I didn't go all heterodox on them. The significant Bible text had been Luke 24:13-35.

"The biblical stories at this time, the given forty days - an important number - are the theologised appearances of Jesus to his disciples.

"This is when Jesus is shown to be who he was - the new messiah - and gives authority to his disciples, after which the resurrection period is ended and explains why he no longer appears this way to anyone.

"We see the theological purpose of food, fellowship and the body. It is not about ideas but presence. It is about hospitality.

"It's also about giving hope to the disciples who have heard about the crucifixion. After that, well Jesus is either finished or will return as the Messiah to bring in the last days, as indeed he gave them the expectation that God was about to bring in the last days.

"The Emmaus story is so theological, because what it shows is that Jesus the Christ is not recognised. He walks with them and shares hospitality. But when he is recognised, when their eyes are opened, he is gone.

"Last week the message was about Thomas believing better what he didn't see, but Thomas wanting the evidence - as people do.

"We are not told so much about the apparent conversation between the two disciples joined by the resurrected Christ. But one must look to scripture - the Hebrew Bible - and its forming of tradition. In fact the text suggests probably that God kept the disciples in the dark, not the disciples themselves. ...'their eyes were kept from recognising him.' The resurrection story is a shape, a realisation, not just a surprise. In a way it should not be a surprise. Still, it takes the risen Jesus to explain the meaning of the text. It is now the Christian Easter faith.

"Then we have it: 'their eyes were opened, and they recognised him.' This does seem a little manipulative to me. It's better if they are blind and come to see it themselves. There is a moral or ethical problem if God does everything - as the Enlightenment realised.

"Clearly there is a reference here to the feeding of the four or five thousand males plus women and children. The fellowship works via the miraculous getting its part in the story. The miraculous suggests revelation, does it not? It's not just a meal, it wasn't just a walk. The walk and the gathering had another presence.

"Later the guiding presence will specifically be the Holy Spirit. That's how it's organised. The resurrection does not carry on and on: but time isn't everything, and just as we participate in the one crucifixion at the Eucharist so we also come into that one resurrection. These are eternal things inside time and break out of time.

"The lockdown and a virus is a matter of time. The fact is that this virus will go on and on, but it will merge into the complexity of things. We got rid of Smallpox but this seems likely to go on. But it isn't eternal. That's a different dimension.

"We celebrate Easter each year to tap into that dimension. And eating, drinking, fellowship - what's important - signals transcendence. Signal transcendence and you touch eternity."

The Creed followed, which was like swallowing concrete.

Whether it was legal or not I wasn't sure, but there was a young female churchwarden in the building. She was medium height, a dark blonde, long hair, a good build. She had opened it, she had switched everything on, and told me that Mo McArden was in the vicarage making sure the service went out on to the World Wide Web. For the Eucharist, I had with me some of my own recently given glasses, so that the common cup of wine was poured into two glasses before we consumed it, and the bread she took for herself from a pack - though I blessed it. I consumed a half goblet of horrible wine as part of the procedure - one I had kept in the bethel, by the way. We didn't 'chuck it away' afterwards, observing Anglican procedure.

When the service was over she introduced herself.

I am Janet Mueller, daughter of Lucy Mueller, and you will have known Lucy at school as she was then known as Lucy Coggan."

"I recall Lucy at school, but she wasn't a close friend."

"She went out with Keith Jupitas; he became your husband. He was her first true boyfriend, but it was very quick. I know that she lost her virginity to him.

"I don't think any girl in my year was safe from him, and I don't know about those in his own year either."

"You were the one to marry him," Janet told me. "My mother lost her virginity and lost her innocence. Your husband..."

"Ex-husband, please."

"...is my biological father. I hear there were boys of his."

"So I've discovered. My goodness me. I didn't know, honestly, about any of his offspring."

Lucy said, "He wrecked her life. He carried on being this Anglican of good standing. How did he do that?"

"We were all fooled," I said.

"Mum gave up on any churchgoing but I'd decided otherwise, and when you left I came here."

"Sorry I was a blockage."

"It was before your time, but I am a real person, living a real life, and if I ever see him it will be once too often."

"Do you want to meet your half brothers?"

"Not really. I haven't known them."

"Well, thanks for helping me here and I'm very pleased to have met you."

"I kept quiet and you didn't know. So is that sermon what you think, then?"

"Well, a combination of what is expected and what I think."

"It sounded to me like you were hedging your bets."

"I was."

"Well, I can't see the PCC wanting you. The bishop has pressed us several times to interview you, so we will. Jeremy Symes is going to Serninsea Marshes and I don't think he should be going there either. It's a neighbouring parish to his old one. So Emily will be furious. What's clear is the bishop wants a suffragan, and I think he wants you."

"And you think I'm unsuitable."

"I think you are doing your own things down the road. I've heard yours and others' sermons from there, online, and I think they are, well, enlightening - to use a word - but you couldn't and shouldn't say them here and I don't agree with you."

"We did allow people to come into the Serninsea Liberal Bethel on the pretext of private prayer, but the police came. We could talk outside, if ever you want."

"Might do that. It would be yet another mistake if you came here."

"Oh."

"The new diocesan bishop is a mistake. His wife is a nutcase."

"She's not a nutcase."

"She does lurid sexual acts and calls them rituals. This, after all the scandal here, in which you were a victim."

"Yes, well we've taken her in at the bethel; she has our protection."

"One wonders what their marriage was like. He must have known she was this crazy witch. She's a GP as well, so how does that work out?"

"The health service might have more religious toleration than Anglicanism; in fact when it comes to employment it certainly does. Pleased to have met you."

I disrobed and wanted to get out. When I left the church Mo McArden was outside, and he kept his distance.

"You should know. Reactions have been anything from disappointed to furious."

"Right."

"That wasn't proclaiming Easter. It just wasn't. It was all stories and possibilities and meanings."

"Well, if the PCC interviews me then you can move on and look for someone else."

"Trouble is, no one will come here. We have escaped the crazy witch. They'll accept anyone now for the eleven churches of Serninsea Marshes and beyond, and they have. Those two had an affair. We know you met him and both of you were naked, and Emily told you to go. Today we had no one to preach, and we got you thanks to the bishop."

"So is he accepted at Serninsea Marshes?"

"He works as some sort of manager-caretaker at a nudist club. I mean, desperate or what?"

"I wonder if he's avoiding me because he knows I cannot understand why he'd come back from that. I thought he'd found a really happy niche there."

"Because you're all nude and stuff, like him. Whatever happened to modesty? What is it about this part of the world?"

"His views shifted as well, so I don't know how he is going to fit back into the glove."

I went back to the bethel, where Andrea indicated to me almost straight away that she'd like to be ordained into the Free Liberal Ecclesia.

"Yes, I think we need to shuffle the pack a bit."

"How was it?" she asked, with Allie coming near.

"Bloody awful and a woman announced herself as one of Keith's offspring. Three and counting."

Narrator: Linda PCC Interview (Wednesday 29th April)

We were all clothed. I said, "It's ad hoc and it's informal, this online PCC meeting in ten minutes, Allie and Andrea. Now, like the Unitarians, the bishop would like to get his hands on this place; if you listen in, stay out of view of the camera."

They decided to sit near the double doors.

Andrea said, "The bee in my bonnet over that is when they do the Forest Church, a sort of Pagan thing, attracting Pagans; they put the Christian Trinity in there and a Christian enough Eucharist. It's manipulative."

I said, "When they do these Fresh Expressions or Forest Church, as a way of attracting the young, they put the clergy into them, to impose order and gradually pull them in according to Anglican conformity. So my veto, which I've never had to use, would be used so that they are not getting their hands on this place. And if I went you should get the veto."

"Would I be a bishop?" Allie asked.

"I'd like Christine to do it."

"I'd have to join her Church."

"Yes, probably, if temporarily. I know the FLE is relaxed on this but I just want the same level of recognition I get now. Look at the Anglicans: they have to recognise I am a legitimate bishop and that gives them a problem."

"Someone at the doors," said Allie. "We know them!"

It was Lindy Peacock and Jeremy Symes.

"Open the letterbox, Allie."

"We won't come in. We are diverting to say hello before going up to Serninsea Marshes."

"What's happened to Bever Wood? I'm surprised you've shifted and so easily."

"Bever Wood is shut. Even if it opens, we will have difficulties socially distancing the naked. Ministry is what I wanted to do, and all I've ever wanted to do. I told Lynton Plimpton that Lindy must come with me, must be accepted, and my beliefs had changed."

She said, "They've accepted everything. You're in a very strong position, Linda."

Jeremy said, "I know you are being interviewed any minute. Press the point: you are married, you are a naturist, you have your liberal beliefs, and they're not getting their hands on this place. And become my colleague because we'll work together in this deanery. Oh, and, just a small detail: you are a bishop, legitimately. They are bound to make you suffragan bishop almost immediately."

"You're kidding," I said.

"He certainly needs one suffragan, even in a parish. Wytham is too big a diocese without at least one suffragan."

"Surely there is enough ambition within the National Church to overcome the bad reputation of a diocese?"

"Maybe. But it is unusual - not unknown - to have a bishop who isn't a bishop in post. We can work together."

"When is your first service, Jeremy?"

"Not until 17th May. It will all be online."

"Love you," called Lindy through the letterbox.

Off they went. And very soon across the screen there were some twelve people in different locations with one of them centre-screen.

"I'm Harold Crosland at home and you must be indeed Bishop Linda Shrimpton."

"I am. I'm not an Anglican bishop."

"Bishop Lynton advises that you are a bishop if not in a recognised role. If you are a bishop, you are a bishop, if only to be respectful."

A smaller, more rounded man, came centre-screen. "I'm Andrew Bibby. So, I'm a church warden as is young Lucy Mueller, whom you met on Sunday. I think we may need to refer to the service. So let me introduce, or let them introduce themselves one-by-one to come centrally on-screen each..."

"Janet Mueller at home. Lucy, sit here."

"Mo McArden doing some maintenance in the vicarage, actually."

"Jim Sayle at home."

"Elaine Thorp at home. My sister is Mabel Thorp, the nurse you know."

"Catherine Mould. Of course you know my daughter."

"Sheila Gillespie."

"Evie Waite."

"Beatrice Kerr."

"Clodagh Grant. You met me before at an Electronics Conference."

"Alfred Burger. Titansea Grand is where I live, where you met me."

Harold Crosland resumed, "This may be an informal webcams PCC meeting gathered at such very short notice, but can we stand where we are please for the passing of Gertrude Carter yesterday. She was taken rapidly into hospital with Novel Covid and has died in Christ."

"Oh dear," I said. "I didn't know." I saw many trousers and skirts. I stood. Andrea stood but Allie didn't.

Harold continued, sitting, "I did not know her that much. Mo, tell us more."

"She was such a personality, a stalwart of the church and served on the PCC before all the changes and new influences. She had the measure of people. She always supported Colin Cromer. She did not like Jim Wilson and saw through Rhiannon Fleetwood immediately. She is the second Covid death in her family."

I said, "I knew her very well."

Mo said, "She liked you, and that counted for something."

Harold Crossland said, "Flòraidh MacLean is in hospital, having tested positive."

Andrew Bibby said, "Mention has just been made of Jim Wilson. I'm fairly new to this church but I was at Serninsea Marshes. I wasn't involved in appointing Jeremy Symes. I would have opposed that. I did like Jim Wilson's firm convictions."

"Nasty individual," I said. "I should know."

Harold said, "I became more involved six months back and we've all had to pick up from the hope and disappointment in Rhiannon and now even the bishop's new wife. We did take an evangelical turn after Colin Cromer, and goodness knows what Andrea was thinking, creating yet another scandal here, and you are not, Bishop Linda."

"I am not what?"

"Evangelical."

"I'm at the liberal end of the spectrum. And I am married to a woman. You might find me so unsuitable because, like Jim Wilson, I stick to my principles but rather different ones from him."

"You say it yourself," said Harold Crossland, centre-screen.

Andrew Bibby replaced him and said, "I gather that some people loved you despite some notably incomprehensible sermons."

Allie started giggling.

Andrew Bibby asked, "Who's laughing?"

"My wife, Allie."

Harold said, "So the diocesan bishop informed us of your potential availability and obviously you have shown firm interest by taking up this interview, under the circumstances. He is impressed that since you left you have built up your own new church."

"That's a team of us," I said.

"Even better," he replied. "So we are very pleased to see you, and, er, hear your wife. May we see her?"

"Yeah. My wife. Allie, come and sit by me."

"The bishop tells us - though I don't quite understand - that the extension of Civil Partnerships to heterosexual couples makes all marriage complex. Although we would not accept new ordinands who are married to their same sex partner and certainly no one in ministry can marry, we can apparently accept gay-married transfers under certain conditions."

"We are not gay-married," I said, with Allie now sat at the next available (reduced number) seat. "We are simply married."

Jim Sayle said, "Isn't it like the Roman Catholics accept married Anglican priests transferring over but not their own? Hello Reverend Linda! We clashed a bit at a magic show discussion."

"Well, that was me trying out liberal theology. Look, I was married to Keith, and that means I am bisexual."

Sheila Gillespie said, "Then I wonder why you couldn't marry a man again?"

"Because, able to marry her, and wanting to, I did. We have... a partnership, her and me. Relationships are about trust. You should all be reminded that I am an intersex female, something I did not declare at the time of being a curate."

Harold said, "The bishop adds that relationships and sexuality are more varied and complicated than we once thought."

I said, "I hope you have views of your own. Don't be so subservient!"

Allie said, "It's quite simple really. You fall in love and you have a fulfilling and sexual relationship."

Mo McArden said, "This town!"

Harold said, "All of this does bring me, as chairing this meeting, to three areas the bishop has highlighted as necessary for this appointment to take place. In this informal meeting, I'll go through them. The first - especially running a place called the Serninsea Liberal Bethel - is the issue of your orthodoxy. This is tackled easily, in that you tell the Archdeacon of your orthodoxy and good character, and in the first day's services as appointee you declare again your consent for the creeds and sympathy with the Articles of Religion."

"I assume so. Assent."

"And consent. The second issue is the bethel itself. The bishop says that it can be incorporated as a slave church, a Fresh Expressions church, but we can't recognise its clergy. On the other hand, if it carries on under its present and definitely unrecognised denomination, you, as Vicar of Serninsea, as an exclusive Anglican, can have to have nothing to do with running it, or even serving it."

"Allie or someone else would lead it," I said. "I'll make her a bishop, just like me."

"Well, we'd rather have hoped that your, er, wife would have supported your ministry."

Allie said, "There are responsibilities to the bethel, although there are other clergy available."

I said, to muddy some waters, "She is also a Pagan High Priest and can run her own Coven of witches. How about that?"

"You mean, the same as what we were told about the supposed Reverend Andrea Plimpton? She was the very person Andrea Plimpton performed with?"

"Absolutely," I said, looking over to Andrea. "You've not seen the video?"

"No. Too lurid, apparently. The bishop has it; the Caffenmere residents erased it. Is she there?" asked Harold.

"Yup."

"Oh dear. How far does the bishop want us to stretch?" he asked openly. Then he said, "Can I just have some time out to consult the others on the PCC?"

A minute in of this silence and someone was at the double doors again.

"It's Aardse."

Allie went over and opened the letterbox.

"Just tell my wife all contact is via solicitors and if she comes near the children again I'll get a restraining order."

I was startled. He'd gone.

"What's going on? Is Diana in town?"

"Must be," Allie said.

"Hang on," I said, as Harold Crossland and the rest came back on screen.

He asked, "Are you definitely keeping the bethel going as independent, then? Your wife would be the bishop."

"Or someone else," I said. "I would not run it."

Allie looked at me.

I said, "They would be ordained under Liberal Catholic ordinances, that is Liberal Catholic in the whole Church sense, not the Anglican party sense. Same basis as my own consecration. I have to find out about ordaining partly online - about space and time, presence and technology. I would not be the main person ordaining, but Bishop Christine Vine - I think. Trouble is, we might have to wait until lockdown is over."

"The bishop wants you in post sooner rather than later."

"I haven't said 'yes' yet, assuming I do."

Allie whispered, "Diana did not want you to know, when we collected her."

"You're fortunate other people are watching me. See those crows out there?"

They're called a murder."

Andrew Bibby wanted to speak. Centre-screen, he said, "I don't know what you are saying there but this is a good point to mention a couple of incidentals. One is your naturism, and another is indeed your gender and future behaviour. It's a question of potential embarrassment."

Harold said, "We're concerned about your own association with ritual nudity. There's a mikveh in that place, and you mix men and women, and witches do outrageous things naked."

"We do," said Allie. I wanted to kick her.

"Look, is this the best we can do?" Harold asked. "Excuse us."

The screen went blank again.

"What happened?"

"Tell her," said Andrea from far off.

"She wanted to slip into Serninsea unnoticed. Obviously she has tried to reach her children and he's come here. He's blown her cover."

"So that's why Adam went, to pick her up."

"Yes. Nurse, the screen!"

"And your gender?" Andrew suddenly asked. "Some of us think you are male, in fact."

"Think what you like," I said. "My one insistence is that mothers breastfeed their children openly and without pressure. If Allie is breastfeeding our child, in nine months time or so, then she does so, and that goes for any other mothers."

Andrew said, "You get this now in surgeries and people just do it."

Sheila Gillespie asked, "I read that you cannot have children. How then is a baby your child?"

"Because the baby will have two mothers."

Andrew said further, "So you appear to be a woman. Is that it? Have you fathered the child?"

Mo McArden then said, "She is definitely a woman. I confess that I've seen all her parts."

"I am a woman, I can assure you, and the Anglican Church married me quite happily to a man. I have male genes and when they are not recognised you form as a woman. I have all the parts of a woman, as I wrote, without the reproductive areas because I have undescended testicles. Is this clear enough?"

"Very," said Andrew. "You didn't take sperm from them to make a baby?"

Sheila Gillespie immediately asked, back large, "As an intersex woman, can you provide sperm?"

"No. My testes don't function other than providing oestrogen."

"There must be a father somewhere!"

"Yes. He gave us his seed in a kind of ministry to us. We know who he is and he'll play no part in the baby's upbringing. Sexuality is far more complex than the silly rules of Anglicanism, so..."

"If you don't like them..." Andrew said, quickly.

"We are still allowed to criticise, even if we conform."

"I suppose so," he replied to me. "By the way, Harold Crosland has gone offline. So you are trans... something."

"Genetically male, I am phenotype female, and gender female - I am not transgender - and I am bisexual. That's the list."

"And I am female, female, female and a lesbian," said Allie, with irrelevance.

"The point being," said Andrew, "whether you will sign a declaration to the bishop that you and your wife will cease having sexual relations."

Evie Waite said, "She's going to have a baby!"

"Yes," said Andrew, "but that does not involve Bishop Linda, does it?"

"I was there at most donations. It was done naturally and in the context of a loving relationship."

Jim Sayle now said, "She means they had a threesome. This is not defining living your life in the likeness of Christ and ordering your household in a wholesome fashion and welcoming in your neighbour!"

Allie said, "I did welcome in our neighbour. He provided the sperm."

"My God," said Jim Bill Sayle.

I said, "It wasn't any threesome because there were four involved because the donor has a partner."

Jim asked, "Can we know who they are?"

"No. He takes no part in the baby's life, so it is nothing to do with the public."

Andrew said, "We're done on this. We've done as the bishop asked and last week put out an agenda for a formal meeting for early next Tuesday. But it helps Bishop Linda and her wife know where we stand and we can inform the diocesan bishop ahead of that meeting. Oh, one more thing. The bishop wants you to consider becoming, immediately, Rural Dean of Serninsea Towns and Country."

"I'm not so sure about that," I said.

"Not to say," said Mo McArden, "that there is still no suffragan bishop for Bolingbroke."

"That is well off my radar," I said. "I would likely turn that down."

Andrew said, "I want to remind everyone that the bishop thinks your title of bishop is valid but irregular. On that basis, we want to address you as bishop. Best if you take up the office, if offered."

"I've said I was consecrated under Liberal Catholic ordinances, recognised in law. They even gave me a bishop's name and you would not want to use that."

"What is it?" Mo asked.

"Mar Reticulum."

Catherine Mould, probably hard of hearing, even from her speakers, asked, "My Reticulum Um?"

"Precisely," I said, as Allie started sniggering. "Mar - with an 'r' - Ret - i - cu - lum. It is a horrible name. It's why my dear wife is laughing. I do not use it."

Andrew said, "We would call you: 'Bishop Linda Shrimpton, Vicar of Serninsea.' It's under common tenure, by the way. Colin Cromer was under the old more secure freehold system. By the way, your new neighbour, and another liberal naturalist, Jeremy Symes, is also getting common tenure. He told the bishop that he would not come back without it. Jim Wilson was Priest-in-Charge there, but common tenure gives better security of position and terms and conditions."

I said, "Yes, freehold has gone. It was last offered in the Wytham diocese, up at the north end."

"So, folks, scattered around: to return to the main matter, given what Bishop Linda has said: do we informally want her? We are going offline from you, Bishop Linda, Allie, and I suppose the Reverend Witch Andrea, to discuss and vote prior to a proper, regular, meeting. I see that Harold Crosland has resigned with immediate effect."

Everyone said the grace across cyberspace and our screen then went blank.

"Where is she?" I asked Allie.

"Where is who?"

"Diana, you fool. Where is she staying?"

"The point is, I'm not allowed to say."

"Get out of my sight," I told her.

"That was the idea," she replied, and went to the stairs with Andrea in pursuit.

I felt utterly betrayed. I shouted at her, "You're not my wife! Why don't you take her as your lover? You two have the baby. I'll go to the vicarage and sod the lot of you! Diana too. She's fucking here and you couldn't tell me. You bastards, all of you."

Perhaps Aardse knew where she was staying. I had his number. I sent a text asking if he knew where she was staying. I soon received a reply.

She turned up at the school. I was furious when they told me. She didn't stay long with them; she didn't say where she was staying. I assumed she'd be staying with you. I don't even know where she was in Scotland and how she came back here. I don't know if she is returning to Scotland. But she can stay away from the kids and from me.

I needed to reply:

The woman's real name was Sally Hughes. She lived in Forres, near Inverness. All I know is that Adam Magellan, Alfia Shrimpton and Andrea Plimpton travelled to see a minister called Seumas Caimbeul, a Pagan priest like these two women. He has a retreat at Kinloch Rannoch. I did not know they brought Diana back, but Allie has just told me. They made out they were on a stakeout in Serninsea, but I worked out they'd gone to Scotland. I had no reason to think that Diana's relationship with Sally Hughes has ended - if it has. She was calling herself Diana King or Diana Monarch, something like that. I am quite upset about the deception everyone has employed.

Consulting Bishops (Friday 1st May)

Christine on screen thought we could make the argument that an ordination service of eternity can be across space and time in which we were nevertheless in direct communication, and that if others did not agree we could later on, after lockdown, do ordinations sub conditione to make sure they were accepted.

Nevertheless, Christine said someone must be present physically. This ruled out making Peter the bishop because he could not come into the building. Allie and Andrea were residents, and my hands would be on one of those heads. Andrea would need incardinating as well, I suggested.

Christine added, "Even Allie has to be ordained in a Catholic manner into a bona fide Catholic Church: I'd therefore incardinate Allie into the Albion Church and then, if you must, send her back into your Free Liberal Ecclesia. It sounds like you don't want to consecrate Allie?"

"She is not trustworthy. She is more interested in being a witch and being sexually ritualistic with Andrea."

"Interesting, that. And you are going to be an Anglican again? Really?"

"It's not interesting: it is betrayal and so close after our wedding. Like Andrea and Lynton Plimpton, it's gone wrong. These two must be actively destroying marriages - and Allie is pregnant."

"I don't buy it. Allie loves you. So you weren't attracted to the Unitarians after all. The Anglicans must pay better too. But at least the Anglicans are nowadays apostolically sound."

"The Unitarians were too clubby. I understand the Anglican club; I'm still partly and culturally Anglican. Yes, it is about having an income. I will be cut off from the Serninsea Liberal Ecclesia but I could donate some of my salary to keep it going. I suppose I'd have to move into the vicarage too."

"It takes self-sacrifice to a new level! I must say, I do agree with you moving back into a properly apostolic Church. But you surprise me even considering such a move back. You don't do self-discipline enough."

"You do, of course."

"I do self-sacrifice."

"Talking of money, and property: have you housed Diana King, Diana de Groot?"

"No. Is she back in town?"

"Yes, but Allie won't tell me where. She, Andrea and Adam brought her back."

"Then it's more likely Ann and Labhaoise have found her somewhere to live."

"Yes, of course: Ann will have told him to go and get her. That is why he went all that way."

"Isn't that sort of roadtrip illegal?"

"Indeed," I replied.

I arranged a time we could do an ordination service. It would have to be with Allie. I went outside Andrea's room.

"You two in here? What are you doing?"

Allie opened the door, a small amount, with nothing on.

"Are you two having an affair?"

"No. We are avoiding you."

Allie opened the door wide and a nude Andrea was sat on her double bed in front of a Coppit board game, where they were using all six colours.

"My God, they've got the toy box out."

Andrea said, "Got it out of the toy box."

Christine online, and me next to you, are going to ordain you as bishop, Allie. I don't know if I can trust you."

"Adam went to collect Diana. She wanted me to go as well because she can't stand him. When he said she had sanctuary at Tigh na h' Iobairte, Andrea and I jumped at the chance to go. She and I did a Covens ritual with him. We brought Diana back."

"Is she in one of Ann's properties?"

"Diana arranged it - or, rather, she was intending to get the train from Rannoch Moor to Rasa Market, and Adam pick her up from there. Fancying a sense of adventure, Adam took her hefty rail fare and gave her a lift all the way instead. Diana did not want you to know she was back in town, but obviously having approached her kids Aardse came here to warn her off."

"I am involved so where is she?"

"I will ask her permission to tell you."

"I'll swing for you one day."

"Seal of the confessional."

"You're not a priest, not yet. Go back to your lover."

"Andrea is not my lover. Look, we've been avoiding you daytime; nights with you are terrible. So fuck off and leave us alone. "

"Don't you dare tell me to fuck off."

"Just fuck off Linda and start to behave yourself."

"How dare you! I took you in off the streets. I built this place, and you just stuck your snout in."

"Fuck off. Try and punch me Linda and you'll be on your back and kicked in the crotch."

Andrea then said, "Allie! Leave it."

I stormed off back down the stairs and sort of circled the seating area with its many fewer chairs. Now there was a message from Lynton Plimpton.

Visit the empty vicarage and see how you'd fancy living there. There is a limited budget for redecorating, so consider that. The door will be unlocked this afternoon. Just go in.

Arriving there, I was so conflicted. Who would not be the Vicar of Serninsea?

I did love Allie, but I could not handle her. I did not know what to do with her. She seemed to do just what she liked when she liked. Andrea, being separated after five minutes in her own marriage, seemed like the happiest woman in the world. Allie seemed to be the same as she ever was. I was the mug. Even Diana did not trust me. Ann had not housed her, apparently.

It seemed to me the vicarage was in good order. Then there was a ring on the doorbell. This could be my first action as vicar before even becoming the vicar, if I'd become the vicar. I opened the door to find Bishop Lynton Plimpton.

"I'd like to come in."

"You're not supposed to come in."

"I do live here, on and off. Let's keep our distance, then."

He walked backwards. So I let him in, walked backwards myself, and he shut the door. Then he wiped the handle.

He said, "I, er, viewed the PCC meeting but didn't have a camera. Harold Crosland resigned and I had to tell them to continue. I'll sort all that out."

"They don't want me. I can't go against mass opposition."

"It's not as simple as what they want. We're not a democracy. Your pal Christine Vine knows that."

"I'm not sure she is my pal."

"The fact is I need to sort out this corner of the Wytham diocese. Jeremy was easier to install, but then Serninsea Marshes and its many hardly used churches is very weak. Many of its people came here but, frankly, Serninsea isn't much stronger. I want to get back to Wytham city. You two can run this area pretty much like you want. You two would get on well, have more of a unity of purpose. You'd be the rural dean from the off. What do you want? How long do you need before you take your first service?"

"I don't know."

"Run around naked, go to bed here with your wife. I don't care if you and her run both places from your bed. Just don't quote me. As for Harold Crosland, I think I can get him back on to the PCC."

"You make a tempting offer, but then so did Satan."

"Thanks for that comparison. Do you actually like Allie? I don't even like Andrea. I wonder what she has said about me?"

"Andrea gave no details and I don't want to know. I actually love Allie for her faults. I can't handle her, but she is exciting."

"Marriage does involve exposure to personal habits. It suited both of us, the marriage, and yet it was soon impossible. While it happened she did her wifely duties and chose not to complain. She will have an affair with Allie."

"They're not. Not so far."

"She did with Rhiannon. It's how Andrea bought her off. I discovered Andrea's past too late. She'll calculate when it's best to get her sexual kicks from Allie. I'm best shot of her. It was my mistake to think that her ambition and public role as a doctor would suit a public marriage."

I said I'd look at the bedrooms and he'd better leave well in front of me.

He said, "I'd have married you! We'd make a good team. Do you fancy being Bishop of Bolingbroke? Imagine what John Barman would make of that. You'd have one over him."

"You keep tempting me. Go away, Lynton."

"I need decisions, Linda, not your prevaricating."

He went and I toured the house. Colin Cromer had a fine house for such a long time, before he retired to the Lake District and found love. He could have married the Rumanian, until he was userped by Adam.

Seeking Diana

I walked to the Titansea Grand but had to ring on the doorbell and speak into a grille.

"You do have some residents staying here?"

"Yes we do."

"Do you have a woman who came recently and took up residence called Diana Monarch, Diana King or possibly Diana de Groot?"

"No one has come recently. We have a handful of residents, all of whom have been here for some time."

"Like Alfred Burger, for example."

"Yes, I know the man."

"No one called Diana?"

"No one called Diana."

Walking back towards the bethel, it dawned on me that Adam and Yojana Asthana had a client relationship. I'd get my SUV and try her parents' guest house, Maa Skelter.

At the car I saw our neighbour in the tenfoot with her dog, coming round the back from the north.

"Hello Klärchen," I said.

"And Dieter?"

"Hello Dieter."

"Can I see your new garden?"

"Yes, but not with the dog. The turf is new."

"Dieter is not going to foul your garden, and if he did I would do the 'poop scoop' as you call it. You know, Mrs. Shrimpton, you can be horrible to Dieter."

"Oh, go on." They followed me in. "So we have benches, and a big firepit. Makes a difference. You can keep really warm, even at night."

"Thank you. Come on Dieter."

Dieter then pissed against the high fence and Klärchen looked at me.

"Territory," she said.

"Yes, I know."

I got into the SUV and drove north for the coast road that took me to the coastal guest house. I could see Diana on the beach, wearing a top and shorts, and it wasn't a private beach so I walked towards her.

"Oy. You could have told me."

"Who told you I was here?"

"No one. I worked it out for myself. Sally Hughes, wasn't it?"

"The fantasy didn't last very long. I contacted Adam. Later I told him to bring Allie. You had to be out of it. Aardse blames you for turning my head."

"Like a lesbian?"

"Yeah. I'm not a lesbian."

"I live in a mad world with a wife who says she is a lesbian when she's had more knob in her fanny than I've seen naturist willies, and a woman who says she isn't a lesbian when she desires sex with women. I mean, come on!"

"How did Allie try to keep my trip back unknown?"

"With cock and bull stories including about a stakeout with Andrea over her separated husband and Rhiannon Fleetwood."

"You saw through these?"

"None added up."

"Those two are disgusting. They did a kind of sperm-smearing ritual with that Unitarian minister. I recovered my naturism with him."

"Sperm-smearing? He's a Pagan High Priest. I doubt there's much call for it in Unitarianism."

"She was already pregnant so his sperm wasn't exactly needed. Congratulations, by the way."

"Maybe."

"Allie was near to heaven, there. It sounds to me like she is very reliable too, keeping my secret at potential cost to your relationship. She keeps her word. You should treasure her."

She explained that she was not surprised that Aardse was rough mannered towards her. She said Yojana wasn't charging a commercial rate to stay; Diana was the only person outside the family staying there.

I asked, "Do you have any plans?"

"I have no plans at all. I'm exposed as a fool. I'll have to find a place to live, and arrange some sort of access. If I'd have waited I could have had the college job online and the job at the casino furloughed. I'm going to try and see if anything is possible next week."

"What possessed you to just run off with this woman?"

"I don't know. I was fed up, things were sterile, nothing was going anywhere. I was part of a group of people who were crackers about The Jacobite Gap Years. More and more I chatted to one woman and, well, all my self-discipline regarding you went out of the window with her. But she was nothing like the person I imagined online. Yes we visited places and so on, but she was unreal or opposite of me. They expected us to do re-enactments. That was seriously weird."

"What did you do?"

"I was Lady Gordon."

"What did she do?"

"Look it up. I wish to unremember it, if I can. Oh Sally will move on: the more the merrier."

"Come and live at the bethel, though I might not be there much longer. The new diocesan bishop lives in Serninsea but with Andrea out he wants me to be Vicar of Serninsea. And Bishop of Bolingbroke."

"I'd do it," Diana said. "If they want you, you can call the shots."

"If you come to the bethel, you may have to share a room with Andrea Lindsey - for a while. Do you know her at all?"

"She's become my GP. She's already sent me a prescription for tablets. When it comes to accommodation, beggars can't be choosers," said Diana.

I pointed out that she wasn't begging and she'd be welcome. The bethel functioned as a household and she could join it. She said Yojana had told her she was in their household, a resident - but only for the time being.

I told Diana that I would come up until she came down to move in.

Narrator: Linda Apologies (Friday 1st May)

In the sitting and dining area, I said to the two Pagans, "I've got a problem and it needs both of you to listen."

Andrea said, "I will need to shower quickly and soon, because I've got surgery this evening."

"I've found Diana and chatted with her, at the beach behind Yojana's place. It was an obvious place to visit. Anyway, she said you, Allie, are reliable, keeping her secrets. Puts a different perspective on things."

"Yeah, well, there you go. I couldn't win; I knew that," said Allie. "Andrea supported me. Anyway, read what Derrida says about a secret. A secret allows a promise to be made. We promised Diana."

"Not Derrida at this point, surely!"

Andrea said, "He does change the definition of 'secret', Allie. A secret is something that lies beyond systematic rationalising or intuition. It's not something I know and keep to myself. This secret always escapes anyone's possession."

"I know this," said Allie.

"And I don't and I don't care," I stated.

"It allows for creativity," said Allie. "And faith."

"Derrida is totally overrated," I added.

"Even if there is no secret, it remains paradoxical," said Allie. "But, yes, I prefer the concept of the secret in anthropology: it defines identity, and both group belonging and exclusion."

"Hmm. Meanwhile, on planet Earth, Diana needs somewhere to stay, and there is your half of a double bed, Andrea."

"It's not the most obvious arrangement, is it?" said Allie.

"What of our marriage if I sleep with Diana and you sleep with Andrea?"

"We've managed to keep hands off. Rituals only," Allie said.

"It's no secret that I really must be having this shower," said Andrea.

"Andrea: don't take her from me."

"I'm not."

"She hasn't - but you've come bloody close," said Allie.

"Yes, yes. I'm sorry."

"Look, Diana slept with you when you needed it, so now you can sleep with her. I'll sleep alongside Andrea."

Andrea herself said, "I'm in the same room regardless? I'm going upstairs."

"We do have showers in the wet room."

"Change of clothes as well."

"Do you need a lift?"

"My car is but a short distance away."

"Let me take you."

As I drove her to her surgery, Andrea said, "You don't want to lose Allie and she will have this baby. Allie thinks you've lost your sense of daring."

"Hmm."

"Diana is probably very fragile and alone. Be her friend and support. She'll welcome the comfort."

"Here you are."

"I shouldn't tell you this, but one of my patients this evening is Annie Fenwick. I have to see her physically. I'm going to try and read her the riot act. I'm pleased that Allie has not had contact with her recently. Allie did pornographic performances in Somerset. She could be going the way of Annie now. So the strong ritualistic sex has been all there is between us. I've kept my hands off her otherwise. I've enjoyed being naked with her, but we haven't even showered together."

"But if Diana comes, you might."

"Just be realistic, Linda. I must go." She got out of the car.

"What about you and Rhiannon Fleetwood?"

She stood by the opened window. "Up front, then. By having sex with her, a number times, and I enjoyed it, it forced her to be fake with all her puritanical preaching. I told Lynton not to use her, but he did, and I told him to get shot of her, which he was forced to do by circumstances. She thought she could stay on by revealing our behaviour to Lynton. Nah."

"I didn't know."

"She could have married Lynton: they'd have made a great pair. I really do have to go. I didn't fake my religion like her. Thanks to the lockdown I won't let her in. Bye."

"Crumbs. Bye."

I went back to Yojana's and waited outside. Diana and Yojana appeared, both of them with piercing nipples into their tops.

"Hang on," she said to Yojana and separated from her.

I said, "Come to the bethel, Diana, any time. You'll share my bed. Allie will sleep with Andrea for the time being. Roger and Marie are in the other room."

"Can I think about it over the weekend?"

"Of course. My mobile number is the same."

"Mine isn't. I'll send you a message and that will give you the contact. Yojana and I are going to risk taking our tops off."

That meant three of us, for half an hour, turning on to our fronts when the odd person passed by. I preferred nudity and some shade from the sea breeze, so ended up nude in the garden along with Allie, Roger and Marie. Tomorrow there we'd celebrate Naked Gardening Day.

Narrator: Linda Ordinations (Sunday 3rd May)

Ringling around, no one objected to Allie being a bishop and deacons being priested, so that I had the ability to walk away to the Anglican vicarage.

The hasty ordinations service was going out online, and coming in online. Roger was doing the honours with the technology. His sister, Marie, was watching the service as laity. It was to be led by Bishop Christine Vine, on video from her new house in Eslaforde. From Coniscotes to the north appeared Bishop Bill Masters and Bishop Pauline Junor together, where they now lived as one household. They were just beyond the Serninsea Marshes collection of parishes. The Reverend Deacons Kathleen and Winnie Lott appeared from Winnie's mother's house in Serninsea and the Reverend Deacon Peter Marshall was at his father's in Inglemire to the south. Kathryn Marshall was not involved. An essential participant was Bishop Dominic Himalaya from near Durham. Of course we were on screen to FLE others.

I explained. "We'll have a meeting at very short notice this week, but I could be Vicar of Serninsea on Sunday next and so we need to get our ordinations done now. We make the argument that the ordinations are legitimate now but when we can all gather physically we or you will do them again."

This was going to be a long service, because of the several stages it had to go through.

Bishop Dominic was going to release us all from the Free Liberal Ecclesia and then, at the end, take us back. He didn't like doing this, but accepted my request because of my potential loss and the need for the equality of the replacement - Allie. This meant that during the ordination process, we were part of Christine's Church.

Indeed, Bishop Christine started with her welcome, and pointed out that the service was under the auspices of the Ecclesia Albionis Catholico Orthodoxa or the Albion Catholic and Orthodox Ecclesia and its use of the altar table at the Serninsea Liberal Bethel. "In the matter of eternity, all our hands and actions point to that altar table. Bishop Linda, physically present at that altar table, known in holiness as Mar Reticulum, will become bishop of this Church, the Albion Catholic and Orthodox Ecclesia. The liturgy is authentic Liberal Catholic of a variety under the guidance of the Principatus Theocratic Confraternitati admissis in Ecclesia Albionis Catholico Orthodoxa."

Christine continued: "However, for the avoidance of doubt and as indicated we shall at the earliest opportunity repeat the liturgy physically in one place and ordain sub conditione at that forthcoming time. But in this time, in these places, we point to that place in Serninsea and claim this is one ordination service, just as Masses up and down the line re-enact the one crucifixion. The bread and wine of this service are around our locations, but the one altar table extends itself to all participants. This includes anyone taking part, who brings their own bread and red wine to their devices and participates in this service. We all connect with that altar table."

So what she meant was something like having a virtual setting for real presence.

She also explained that, "When we hear ordinarily, 'This is my body, it is given for you, do this in remembrance of me,' we understand that the ritual gift requires something from us, from our bodies given for the other. 'This is my blood' ordinarily surely means this is my life flowing around my body, and for this we just embrace life against death, held in a fluid. But in these days of Coronavirus, our ritualistic passing of fundamental sexual energy must be symbolised and made safe. We are not anti-science; the supernatural aspect does not overturn science."

Bishop Bill began with, "God was in Christ, reconciling the world. The peace of the God be always with us."

We said, "The peace of the God be always with us."

Moving between Bill and Pauline, we made our apologies to the divine, for forgiveness, and this moved us to the first substantive segment, incardination.

Bishop Dominic Himalaya said, "When I give your name, bow your head, and as according to denominational decisions made collectively by our clergy, you are each released from the Free Liberal Ecclesia.

"Bishop Linda Shrimpton, the Reverend Deacon Alfia Shrimpton, the Reverend Deacon Peter Marshall, the Reverend Deacon Winnie Lott, the Reverend Deacon Kathleen Lott."

Then alongside us two, the Reverend Andrea Lindsey raised her arms and said, "I declare that I have formally resigned from priestly ministry at Serninsea Parish in the National Church Diocese of Wytham in a letter to the diocesan Bishop Lynton Plimpton, otherwise known as Lynton Wytham. An email indicated receipt and acceptance with a formal letter to come. However, I was ordained priest and priest I remain."

Bishop Bill now said, "We have examined the deaconate and priestly ordinations of the Reverend Andrea Lindsey, investigating those involved in laying on of hands, and we are satisfied that she is indeed a bone fide priest."

At this point Bishop Christine incardinated us into the the Albion Catholic and Orthodox Ecclesia under the guidance of the Principatus Theocratic Confraternitati admissis in Ecclesia Albionis Catholico Orthodoxa. Each of us had to remove our ecclesiastical gowns and drop naked to the floor, lying upon them, in the direction of the altar table or, elsewhere, towards the screen showing the Serninsea altar table.

Bishop Christine named us as coming into her Church. "Mar Reticulum, Bishop Linda Shrimpton, formerly of the Free Liberal Ecclesia; the Reverend Andrea Lindsey, priest, formerly of the National Church, of the Anglican Communion, the Reverend Deacon Alfia Shrimpton, formerly of the Free Liberal Ecclesia, the Reverend Deacon Peter Marshall, formerly of the Free Liberal Ecclesia, the Reverend Deacon Winnie Lott, formerly of the Free Liberal Ecclesia, the Reverend Deacon Kathleen Lott, formerly of the Free Liberal Ecclesia."

There was a surprise in the next part. We had to say together, one by one, 'I give my fealty and collaboration to the bench of bishops: Bishop Christine Vine, known as Mar Werburga, elevated to Princess Divine Impactor the First, the Primus Bishop of the Albion Catholic and Orthodox Ecclesia, and to her sister and brother bishop successors.' I didn't know that she had become 'Princess Divine Impactor' and 'Primus Bishop', but I thought I should say it without laughter. Cameras picked up our sprawled bodies and mouthing the words we had to repeat.

With the words given we were all told to rise and wear our gowns again.

Christine now introduced the ordinations: "God gave a hierarchy of ministries. Bishops shepherd Christ's flock, guard the faith, proclaim the faith and lead the people in mission. Bishops ask their priests to represent them, where bishops cannot be present." (Actually, Christine's Church had no priests.) "Bishops gather God's people and lead them into celebrating the sacraments through which, in their local Church, they link with every Church in place and time. Deacons also gather God's people to represent, preach and teach, as directed by the bishop."

Then, remotely, across virtual space, we ordained Peter Marshall, Winnie Lott and Kathleen Lott as priests. I laid hands on Allie and she became a priest too.

Then came the making of a bishop into the Albion Catholic and Orthodox Ecclesia, and as a guiding member of the vanguard body, the Principatus Theocratic Confraternitati admissis in Ecclesia Albionis Catholico Orthodoxa.

Bishop Christine asked Bishops Bill, Pauline and me, "Do you believe Alfia Shrimpton to be of godly life and appropriate learning?"

We replied together, "We do."

"Is she called to this ministry?"

We replied together, "She is."

Bishop Christine asked Allie, "Do you believe that you are called into this episcopal ministry?"

"I do," Allie answered.

Then she gave her oath of continuing allegiance to the Albion Catholic and Orthodox Ecclesia and its Princess Archbishop, Mar Werburga, to work with her and other bishops in collective responsibility, and to develop with other bishops the guiding work of the Principatus Theocratic Confraternitati admissis in Ecclesia Albionis Catholico Orthodoxa.

Bishop Bill and Pauline handled the Hebrew Bible readings: Isaiah 42 v. 1-9 and Isaiah 61 1-3, the New Testament reading Acts 20 v. 17-35 and the Gospel readings: Matthew 18 v. 1-6 and Matthew 28 v. 16-20."

After the Gospel readings all said, "Alleluia, alleluia."

Next stage was for me to describe a bishop as moderator, promoter, and guardian of the Church's entire liturgical life to reveal the mystery of the Church, as in the Eucharist, led by the bishop, at which the priests fully assist and the deacons and people participate."

I now addressed Alfia. "Sister, remove your robe to the ground and lie front first naked on it in front of me." She did, revealing some pubic hair that seemed redder than ever. "Will you give your body and your life into this ministry that comes to you by the laying on of hands?"

She said, "Drawing upon the help of God, I will give my body and my life."

"Will you be faithful and constant in your approach?"

"Drawing upon the help of God, I will be faithful and constant."

"Do you further affirm your acknowledgment in the role of the historical witness of the Creeds and Seven Councils of the Worldwide Church?"

"Drawing upon the help of God, I do so acknowledge."

"Will you therefore preserve and develop the faith?"

"Drawing upon the help of God, I will do both."

The rest was to accept Church discipline, be faithful in prayer and action, to build the Church, be collegiate and in general show compassion.

"Will you live a principled and holy life and make your home a place of hospitality and welcome?"

"Drawing upon the help of God, I will live a principled and holy life and make my home welcoming."

As a result I asked for God's grace, that through this woman she would guide the Church in word and sacrament, baptise and nurture, preside and be collegiate regarding the the ordination of deacons, priests and bishops.

Leaving her on her front, Bishop Dominic took up the role of intercessions. This meant he participated in prayers without doing the controversial stuff.

Once done Princess Bishop Christine said, "O God, we give you thanks that you have called your servant Alfia Shrimpton to forward herself as bishop. All present bishops shall again lay hands across cyberspace and physically in Serninsea.

I said, "Alfia, arise; naked to the world, kneel on your ecclesiastic garment, and bow your head."

With all bishops having their hands outstretched to their cameras and mine on her head, Mar Werburga, Bishop Christine, called out: "O God, send down the Holy Spirit on your servant Alfia Shrimpton for the office and work of bishop in your Church. Fill this your servant with the grace and power which was given to your Apostles, that as a true shepherd she may feed and lead your flock, proclaiming the gospel of your salvation. Sustain her as she guards and develops the faith, and works the sacraments, and acts as teacher and guide. Use her to increase your Church and renew its ministry, in humility and authority, uniting the faithful in truth and love. In the name of our parental God, embodied in humanity, and animated through us all. Amen."

We all said, "Amen."

Now Allie was able to put on her robe. Bishop Christine now said, "Welcome Bishop Alfia. You had already received a Bible. Receive now from Bishop Linda a pectoral cross, and a mitre. Marie handed them to me and I gave them to Allie, the cross placed around her neck and the mitre on her head. (Actually, they were my spares!) Then, Marie gave me a pastoral staff, and, giving it to Allie, I said: "Take this staff as a sign of your pastoral office: keep watch over the whole flock in which the Holy Animator has appointed you to shepherd the Church of God."

I did the sign of the cross.

Christine named her: "Right Reverend Bishop Alfia Shrimpton, your holy name is Mar Bana-Bhuidseach. You are: Mar Bana-Bhuidseach, Bishop Alfia Shrimpton." Yes, she correctly pronounced the 'Bh' as a 'V'.

We now sang a hymn. It was called, Bread and Wine are of the Earth, from a Unitarian hymn book. This indicated the next stage, which was the Eucharist.

I conducted it, during which I explained that all the bread and wine in the various locations had been consecrated by me, and it included the bread and wine any viewers had brought to their devices. This was within the one Church, the Albion Catholic and Orthodox Ecclesia, I said. (Therefore, Dominic Himalaya took no presiding role.)

The final part of the service was Bishop Dominic asking Bishop Christine (the Princess Archbishop Mar Werburga) if she would release the following people from her Church: he did not use our ecclesiastical names. He called out these names to which she said, "Yes," each time. They were Bishop Linda Shrimpton, Bishop Alfia Shrimpton, the Reverend Andrea Lindsey, priest, the Reverend Peter Marshall, priest, the Reverend Winnie Lott, priest, and the Reverend Kathleen Lott, priest.

In that order he asked us if we wanted to join the Free Liberal Ecclesia each time to each name, to which we each said, "Yes."

That was it, followed by a hymn.

Yet it would all be repeated at a point where we could gather in one place, but in the meantime we would see if other Churches made statements to accept that these were proper ordinations. We assumed they were and this is all that mattered.

In conversation afterwards, Pauline, Bill and Christine had decided earlier that Christine, as primus of their Church, should be a Princess Bishop and she chose the name Divine Impactor (the First). She knew the legacy of the name Divine as both godly, heavenly, and prostitute, and the Impactor suggested making heavy blows for the Gospel.

"I am a primus bishop and not an archbishop because our bishops affirmed me and we keep our given roles, as we keep our dioceses, when becoming primus, and principal loyalty is to the bench of bishops in all its principles. In a sense all the bishops together are the Archbishop."

Allie approved of her ecclesiastical name, Mar Bana-Bhuidseach.

"What does it mean?"

"Female sorcerer - a witch."

I did not give the golden vote to Allie, the one I held in reserve, at this time. I'd hand that power over at the last minute, as I'd leave for the vicarage.

Narrator: Linda Collecting (Monday 4th May)

Two phone calls and one video call later with Diana, I drove to Yojana's parents' guest house to park towards the beach and for Diana and me to lug two suitcases into the SUV. Some of the luggage had come from a trip to her former home with items left outside. Fortunately these days had been cloudy and dry.

Diana and I got into the vehicle. I had some words for her.

"We have rearranged sleeping, right. Allie has gone into Andrea's room, and you are coming into mine on the top floor."

"I don't need looking after."

"Okay, so before we start let's not revert backwards. You used to lecture me on the difference between having a man and having a woman. You spun this line, until indeed you looked after me and then we went to the Caramel Club. And then you tried to isolate the Caramel Club. Well, you're coming into my bed not because I am going to look after you but because we can enjoy the company of each other."

"You're married to Allie. You changed your name. She's having a baby with you."

"I've been thinking. I can't approach Allie without putting on some kind of authority figure presentation, whereas I approach you definitely as an equal. We have known each other a long time and, whatever Allie and I have done and are doing, I am and always have been deeply in love with you."

"I made a great mistake with Sally Hughes. Anyone who calls herself something so different online has to be dodgy. I was hoping for some time of reflection. I've been a fool and I don't want to make a mistake with you."

"Changing one's name is getting rather frequent. Allie changed her name and now Christine has added another name set to her own collection."

"What?"

"Princess Divine Impactor. Bishop Allie has acquired an ecclesiastical name: Bana-Bhuidseach."

"Allie is your wife. You have sex with her. I need to stay somewhere, but..."

"I'm not asking for sex, but for love: you alongside me. You can reflect. We have long days in there: I'll have some afternoons making love with Allie. But we two can sleep alongside each other."

"Do what you want. I told you beggars can't be choosers."

"Oh, Diana. It's not going to be like that." I explained that we still have students coming in, who prepare food, and we go out distributing it, keeping our distances at every front door. We have since negotiated with the Sikhs as well as the Social Services and the NHS about doors to knock on. At least it gave the mornings shape. I told her of the new garden and of having little to do with our neighbour given that Allie cannot go next door to have her hair done.

Arriving at the bethel, parking at the front, and viewing the private door, Diana said, "Two bloody suitcases; all I've got to show for anything."

"Have you brought your editions of The Jacobite Gap Years?"

"What? I left them in Scotland, mate. Your man Seumas Caimbeul has the discs."

"Allie's man, not mine."

"That book series and television interpretation has caused me nothing but grief. I joined a literary cult. How Allie understands any Gaelic I don't know: I couldn't make head or tail of it but I was expected to learn it while meeting Lord Gordon's penis under a long kilt. And the other thing is, if you're related to someone as umpteenth cousin and a few removed, are you actually related to them at all?"

"You are if you keep fucking them, like she did."

I gave Diana keys to the private door and our own room. She lugged the suitcases while I took the SUV around the back, and squeezed it into its parking space. I could hear a noise from the garden, so took a look.

Inside was naked Allie and not Andrea Lindsey but nude Klärchen Sisse and her dog Dieter along with nude and tattooed Megan and her cocker spaniel Stoke.

Gesturing to bring Allie forward, which she did, I said, quietly, "We're not supposed to share with other households in the garden."

"She's lonely. Have some compassion."

"And Megan here?"

"Megan's moved in."

"Klärchen's not lonely, then."

"Just be more generous. Everyone is behaving themselves."

"Where is Andrea?"

"Andrea is talking to patients - she's doing phone appointments in the consultation room."

"I have to help Diana. Two flights of stairs and heavy luggage. Kiss me."

She kissed me.

But by the time I got upstairs to the third storey, Diana was in the open small lounge there outside the room.

"Where do you do the laundry?"

"The kitchen, bottom floor. We do it when the students have gone."

Inside the bedroom she had items to place and clothes to put in the wardrobe. Allie had removed hers already.

I said to Diana, "Let me look at you. I thought we'd lost you for good."

"You lost me for five minutes."

Now I kissed her on the lips, and she didn't move away.

"You see, Diana, I love you so much. You're not some flash in the pan. You are in here, somewhere."

"You'll have no resistance from me."

"That is precisely the wrong attitude."

"Things are not easy for me."

"I know." My hands were on her shoulders. "But this place is sanctuary. It is for Roger and Marie, and it is for all of us. And I know you love me, because you demonstrated it. And you had a stillborn once, and you called her Linda."

"That was a worst time than this."

"Diana. I'd like to make love to you. Can we undress and actually make love?"

"If you want."

"Diana, please."

"Yes."

"Good lass."

"My pubic hair is massive. That's how the Highlander women had it, they said."

She and her thick, dense, pubic hair, and what lay beyond it, received my attention. What I liked was I was able to examine her closely. I'd seen her nude so many times, but this was up front and personal. I licked her, I wetted my fingers from her juices within.

I presented myself to her, just as I am, and she commented upon the actual depth of my vagina.

Some forty five minutes later I was parting her hair from her eyes. The passion I had for Allie didn't match this: here was my life partner who'd made a recent mistake and several earlier.

"Help me see my children," Diana said.

"Yes, I will. Aardse has to be reasonable. Your relationship with him is finished, but they are your flesh and blood."

I soon told Allie that we'd made love, and she was free to enjoy Andrea however she liked. We'd still be mothers, but we had to be realistic about our emotional partners. "I don't want to lose you, but I think Andrea is better for you than me."

"I have an idea for you to consider," said Allie. "Take Diana to the vicarage. She can be your housekeeper over there. Then she sleeps with you there, and here too. She'll have a whole house to organise. She could run your diary as well."

"Wow. This is a really good idea. At the moment she'll do anything I ask. Bishop Allie, you're so, you know, intelligent. Yeah, I could take her with me."

Narrator: Linda Sarah, Diana and Andrea (Wednesday 13th May)

Sarah Deimos, Suffragan Bishop of Heretu was making a call.

"Am I on the big screen or a little screen and who can see me?"

"Which do you prefer?" I asked.

"You only."

"It's just me, in the vestry, and out there the screens are now... blank. Are you welcoming me back into the Anglican fold?"

"Am I fuck? What do you think you are doing? This is why I am calling. Please stop."

Diana approached the vestry and then wandered away a few feet (the door was lightly open).

I said, "Lynton Plimpton's tank has flattened all before it. The PCC has rolled over. I'm becoming Vicar of Serninsea. I'm taking Diana to be my housekeeper and my lover."

"I thought at least one person - you - had some sort of moral credibility."

"You don't approve of Diana being in the vicarage?"

"Not that. Crumbs, Harriet's here. That's their immorality. I have to hide her because we are sexual and you'd have a housekeeper when she's really a lover. That's what Roman Catholic male priests do: Hilfs."

"Hilfs?"

"Housekeepers I'd Like to Fuck."

"Sarah!"

"But more than that, you are religious I'll admit but you don't believe all the crunchy guff."

"I don't think moral and ethical standards come into it. I threw them out a while back. You might be confusing me with somebody else," I replied.

"Who?"

"No idea. There's no one left."

"You know about me and Jenny World lying through our teeth. You'll be doing the same. At least Andrea Plimpton has come to her senses. I need someone to talk to I know, like you, and who is unashamed about my Ms Leda. Come on, my sister joined your mob and she knows you like being in it. I just want to get out, when the moment is right."

"It seems I'm taking the shilling. Even Allie wants me to earn the dosh and donate. She's a bishop now, ready to take up the reins."

"There is a rumour coming from the Reverend Margaret McEnhill at Wytham diocesan HQ that Lynton Plimpton wants you as Bishop of Bolingbroke."

"That's gossip is doing its thing."

"So is he giving you what you want?"

"I don't want that but yes in other ways. It must be the shock of him losing Andrea and shoving me in a ready-made hole or two."

"From what I've heard, much via Middlesbrough, Andrea and he suited each other. She's ambitious; he's two-faced. A few got to know that she had to wipe his arse - and I don't mean figuratively. She had to do it when he was Suffragan Bishop of Sumorsæte. Here's the thing: he could have been in that sex cult and it's only a fluke that he wasn't. Instead of promoting you, he could have been oppressing you. Sumorsæte were glad to be rid of him, for all sorts of reasons, and now you've got him! Her brother Alan is just the same, and he's far more orthodox too."

"She wiped her brother's arse?"

"No, in marrying that suffragan, em, Bishop Vivienne Space, the Suffragan Bishop of Morchard, who is temporarily up in Middlesbrough - on loan, so to speak. There was a transfer fee of nil. He has ecclesiastical ambition, the fool. I don't know what they do in bed as he isn't in Middlesbrough. Maybe nothing ever. She's a gossip and is spreading some shit about Andrea. It's Linda, Harri - don't worry. She's a good egg. Anyway, I should know that if I come down there, to your vicarage, I can bring along Harriet and we stay in the one room?"

"Yes, of course. Hello Harri! So are you going to welcome me back in?"

"No I won't. Linda: you are a bloody fool. I'm not going to tell you lies. I do it too often, as so will you. All this does is tell me to make more of an effort to get out. I need somewhere to go, to pay my way."

Off she went. Sarah had made her point. In came Diana, who'd been outside the door walking back and forth in the shape of a snake.

"You were talking to someone."

"Sarah Deimos in Hartlepool. Full of passed on secrets, she is."

"Allie says that if I have secrets from you I'd better tell you. Especially if I am going to clean for you and do your washing."

"You still have some?"

"You know that your father took away my virginity."

"Well?"

"You should know how it came about."

"You were invited to our farm by me."

"Your dad wanted me to show him my private parts in more detail: to give his comments like educationally, this in a large shed. I thought naturists must have no barriers"

"You opened myself."

"Showed him. He said I had thicker labia than most, and also was rather gooey. He put his finger right in, you see and I let him do it. He told me about Lucinda's operations and that as a father he had a duty to see they'd worked."

"He never said such to me."

"He said you were an innocent and you knew it as 'cuddle time'. He told me that I seemed much more mature. He could tell if I was healthy and forming properly. I assumed you were normal."

"I am normal and I always was, and so was Lucinda."

"Sorry. Vaginaplasty or some weird name he told me then she'd had, but you hadn't. Well, of course you hadn't. He looked forward to see if you were functioning properly."

"Functioning properly?"

"Yes."

"I told your dad to try it out with my working vagina. In a box of pens and stuff he kept in a desk in that barn, he produced a ruler. There was a tap on a pipe close by and he washed it. Twelve centimetres it went in me - a bit of pain. So then he fucked me."

"What if he'd given you the stillborn?"

"I only lost my virginity to your father. I suppose Keith and then Adam followed on easily. I didn't lose my period after your father or after Keith. Your father withdrew and his sperm went over the ground. I'd never seen such before coming out."

"Did it put you off men?"

"No, but the person I fancied was... Ann Dromeghda, the teacher, always showing her legs and her tits. It wasn't just the boys she turned on. And I fancied you. I felt I was a bad girl. I was sort of pleased to experience what your dad did. I kept it from you because - according to your dad - telling you might have affected your growing up, your own sexual awakening sort of thing."

At this point there was a request to take a video call from Andrew Bibby.

"Hello Bishop Linda. We decided today, at our PCC meeting, as directed by the bishop, to offer you the post of Vicar of Serninsea. There will be a piece of paper to sign, and Bishop Lynton wants you to sign it in the vicarage. The papers will be there on Thursday and do it by two o'clock on Friday. Once done you move in on Saturday evening, your first set of services being on the Sunday coming. We need your answer."

"I want to have a meeting with my people here first. I've always sought their advice and consent, even if it is for the final time. Meanwhile, I'll want a new super king size bed for my bedroom in the vicarage, the bedroom that Colin Cromer used to have, and I want a double bed in the second bedroom for my housekeeper Diana King. Diana - show yourself to Andrew. I want her to live there rent free and be paid by the parish above the minimum wage for twenty hours a week work keeping the house and garden up to scratch."

"I'm sure the bishop can get someone to arrange that. Mo McArden, probably. And your wife will be living where?"

"In the Bethel. She's a bishop now. Andrea is her priest in the building. We have other priests elsewhere."

"So you'll separate from your wife?"

"No, we'll sleep in the same bed in the vicarage from time to time."

"No sex," he said.

"And plenty of trust," I replied.

"I will inform the bishop that you are first and finally seeking advice and consent from the people there."

"I expect to get it," I said back.

Thus the call confirming my appointment ended. I said to Diana. "There you go: I got you some spending money."

She said, "I don't want it. Your dad didn't abuse me. I saw him naked like I saw all your family, and I was doing this with reference to you. I could see all your body, unlike Ann Dromeghda's, and you could see mine. So, really, I invited your father into me. I wanted your father to show me. Keith and Adam were pushy. You didn't approach me, and I didn't know what to do because I wanted you. It's the fact that Adam didn't support me when he should have. And later I thought your father was a bit unusual."

"And you didn't know about Jenny and me?"

"No. Only something was going on, somewhere, somehow, but no one knew and no one was sure who was involved. I hoped to find out, but Adam and you both kept your mouths shut. Linda. I heard Sarah Deimos just now. She's right. You should not be going over there. I'll go with you - of course I will, but you are selling your soul. It pains me."

"Oh. I didn't realise you thought that way."

"In our Wednesday meetings and other times I've seen how you've changed. Don't go back. They were rotten people. I know the worst of them have gone but the vibe off that Lynton Plimpton is dodgy. I'd heard from the college that this Plimpton isn't much better than Barman. At least Barman was consistent. People think Plimpton's acting decisively for them and then he drops them from a height. You'll get in post and then he'll undermine you rotten to show he's in charge."

"He's offered Jeremy and me a free hand."

"At best he changes his mind erratically. And I heard rumours about his personal habits as well. He is always with Miss Cork in college and they go to the toilet together. He won't go on his own. I think he used to soil his underpants too easily and has ended up with a cleaning fetish. Miss Cork is a former nurse, probably on a retainer."

"Oh crumbs. Let me think one final time."

Narrator: Allie Linda's Necessary Meeting (Wednesday 6th May)

We were gathered for a meeting, intending to release Linda, and send her off to the vicarage. Roger Humphrey and Diana King were in the garden.

One screen section showed new priest Peter Marshall, and another had new priests Kathleen and Winnie Lott. All clergy were voters. Then on screen came Bishop Dominic Himalaya followed by Margaret Lindbeck, both of them bishops of the denomination in the north east. The Reverend Louise Deimos, sister of Sarah, popped up. Each person speaking triggered the movement to the centre of the screen, others of us along the top and bottom.

Now Adam appeared on screen from down the road. We then had a request for attendance as a visiting Church from Bishop Christine Vine, now a Primus Bishop of the Ecclesia Albionis Catholico Orthodoxa.

We clergy took a vote, and Christine was welcomed from her home, along with bishops Bill and Pauline from their home.

Marie Enfield was asked by Linda and co-opted to take the minutes as a guest on site.

I sat as bishop alongside our retiring bishop. Also on my other, right hand side, was the Reverend Andrea Lindsey, newly incardinated. The camera saw the three of us at once.

"Can't understand why you are doing this!" said Louise, jumping to centre-screen. Sarah and Hari could be seen in the background against a brighter window.

Margaret Lindbeck added, "You're back-peddalling, Linda."

Linda (with us replacing her) said that she would try to explain everything as best she could, and of decisions made and yet to be made.

Linda asked an important question. "Why did you ask to be present, Adam - as you are entitled?"

"Because I need to oversee the matter of money and the holding company, and who gets the golden vote to override any captured vote. Linda has this authority, but in the vicarage is forced to have no dealings with this place and so who will gain her protective power?"

Once the minutes of the last meeting were accepted, and no apologies received, and all visitors welcomed, Linda explained matters.

"As you all know, I've been head-hunted by Unitarians and Anglicans. I have been interviewed by both, formally by Unitarians and informally by local Anglicans - but enough for both of them to make their decisions. In the end, the Unitarians only offered training ahead of another application, and they turned out to be too clubby. They were also hostile to Free Catholicism in general and the Free Liberal Ecclesia in particular - and I am not."

Dominic Himalaya offered the opinion that the Unitarians could be quite accusatory regarding supposed interference and possessive of definitions of being Unitarian.

Linda continued. "In terms of clubbiness, it was soon pretty obvious to me that I knew my way around Anglicanism. Now why would I even consider it? After all, the Anglicans won't recognise my marriage properly, and some have strange views about my sexual identity thinking that I am a man. Most of all we have the split between the de jure and the de facto, which is the basis of contradiction between what is laid down and what is done. But the clubbiness of Anglicanism is precisely negotiating its duplicity, which runs from top to bottom - orthodoxy, sexuality, even how it treats ecumenical and other faith relationships."

Margaret Lindbeck said, "If you stray into fundamentalism, as Anglicanism does, this is what you get."

Louise said, "I had to get out and lose a lot of economic security."

Linda said, "Meanwhile, they recognise, as it has been legally established, that I am a bishop, and so they want me to be, 'Bishop Linda Plimpton, Vicar of Serninsea.' Given that I am a bishop there is talk of me becoming Suffragan Bishop of Bolingbroke..."

"Stop!" said Christine. "Listen. This is new information, and you all need to know it. I have been interviewed, informally, by the PCC of St. Sernin's."

Linda said, "What?"

Everyone went quiet.

I said, "Tha's a rum do!"

Christine explained. "Harold Crosland resigned from the PCC and others on it were not happy with their informal interview of you. Lynton Plimpton pushed them to offer you the post, because he sees this corner of the diocese to be run by you and Jeremy. But he got Harold Crosland back on the PCC on the basis that they interviewed me, informally of course, despite being in the Ecclesia Albionis Catholico Orthodoxa."

Linda said, "I think we need to know the outcome."

"There is no outcome. He also wants one of the suffragan bishops put in place."

"So could you become the replacement for John Barman?" Linda asked.

"Or Julian Worsley - but definitely only one suffragan."

I asked: "How did the PCC respond to you: presumably they didn't care for your escorting activities."

"No, actually, they regarded me as having a ministry to sex workers, of which there is a need in this town. They liked the fact that I am a property developer, owner, renter. They liked the fact that I have a strong ecclesiology. In fact they seemed to like me a lot."

Linda asked, "When did this informal interview happen?"

"Yesterday evening."

"After - after? - I was offered the post. The papers will be waiting for me in the vicarage - for me. Andrew Bibby contacted me."

"He did, but Harold Crosland didn't. They are both churchwardens."

Adam said, "Sounds like a churchwardens' power struggle going on."

Andrea asked if she could comment.

I replied. "I'd love to have your insight, because we could make decisions here and then I walk into the vicarage and find some sort of complication. Andrea, please!"

"Lynton does this. He sets things up, finds oppositions, acts to see how they might resolve, and then further acts to make a conflict that suits him. He does want, in all likelihood, Jeremy and you to run the parishes. But a number of people transferred from Serninsea Marshes to Serninsea after Jim Wilson vanished, and with Rhiannon Fleetwood appointed. Then a number of people left. Well, some will leave at your appointment, Linda, and you haven't handed over this Bethel as a slave church or Fresh Expressions. So you come with nothing. Christine has, well, her own money and resources. Have you asked for a salary, Bishop Christine?"

"I told the interviewers that I could be unpaid. I don't need common tenure either, because I don't need any sense of protection in employment."

Andrea said, "In the light of Bishop Christine's revelation, I would like to advise my Bishop Linda not to take up the PCC's offer. You see, they have a habit at the moment of employing and getting rid. First there was Rhiannon, and now there is me. Yes, you could say I designed my own downfall, but they didn't care for my appointment and my split with Lynton answered some of their prayers. So the PCC will be unhappy appointing you, my Bishop, and I'm afraid Bishop Lynton will drop his wish to have a 'team' of two running this corner of the diocese, just as it suits him. And, by the way, he has no commitment to any theology like the Right Reverend Derek Imperial, or his predecessor, the Right Reverend Lord Daniel Dimpleby."

I said, "I thought we were friends, Christine. Are you wielding the knife?"

"Not at all. You have first shout."

"I didn't know there was going to be a second shout."

"Oh what fun," said Adam, appearing on screen. "As regards the golden share, the golden vote, it looks like you could be keeping it, Linda. After all, you've never used it, and it is there to preserve religious continuity against people joining to create a religious takeover. And Ann and I would never have allowed it to have become Anglican. It would have become a small conference centre or something like that, after lockdown ends."

Bishop Dominic said, centre-screen, "Here the Presbyterian principle and limited membership by clergy offers its own protection; however, bits of property of all kinds have additional trustee protection. But I would respond by saying we would like to keep Linda among us and she can give episcopal guidance along with Bishop Allie, Mar Bana-Bhuidseach."

I asked Marie Enfield what had been prepared.

"There is this motion:

"We thank Bishop Linda for her guidance in the early stages of the Serninsea Liberal Bethel, especially within the Free Liberal Ecclesia, and wish her well in her move back to Anglicanism. Bishop Allie Shrimpton, Mar Bana-Bhuidseach, will provide guidance to her clergy, and all the clergy will continue to vote on policy. We welcome Peter Marshall, Kathleen Lott and Winnie Lott as priests of this Church, the Free Liberal Ecclesia. A reserve vote overriding the clergy vote will be held by - blank - to be used in emergency situations only on the judgement of - blank."

I said, "I have another motion, please write this down:

"Bishop Linda Shrimpton stays as our bishop, in partnership with our new Bishop Alfia Shrimpton, Mar Bana-Bhuidseach. These bishops will provide guidance to their clergy, and all the clergy will continue to vote on policy. We welcome Peter Marshall, Kathleen Lott and Winnie Lott as priests of this Church, the Free Liberal Ecclesia. A reserve vote overriding the clergy vote will stay with Bishop Linda Shrimpton, to be used in emergency situations only on the judgement of Bishop Linda Shrimpton."

There was spontaneous applause in the Bethel and on screen from the various locations.

I said, putting us on screen, "Have you got that, Marie? Yes? Good. Happy, Bishop Linda?"

"I think this has to be the way," she said.

I said, "All clergy present, including from the north east as representing the denomination, please vote."

Marie said, "Everyone has voted in favour."

Linda now said, "Thank you everyone for showing such confidence in me. Bishop Christine, perhaps I can address you. Recently some of the folk around here broke lockdown rules. Do you fancy just about breaking lockdown rules? Let's go to the vicarage. I'll arrive at 2 p.m. and then leave the back way as you arrive at 2:15 p.m.. I will not be signing any papers. They will be yours to sign."

Christine jumped to centre-screen. "If you really want to break lockdown rules, come to palindromic base 2 and 8 regarding Toulouse Road at midday. Do you remember that? Don't say it! You don't want it minuted."

Linda said to Marie, and therefore everyone, "Just put that we will go separately into the vicarage where Christine will sign the papers if she so wants and I will not."

Then Bishop Bill spoke and came centre-screen. "Bishop Pauline Junor and myself, Bishop William Masters, would like to state that we wish our Bishop Primus, Mar Werburga, Princess Apostle Divine Impactor the First, godspeed in her new role. We shall release her and continue the Church and its structure that she created. We shall hold our own Bishops' Council meeting to this effect."

I said, "Yes, you can minute that comment from our guests and add that as a Bishop in the Free Liberal Ecclesia I wish your Church well.

"So do I," I said, as Bishop Allie.

"We carry on. Thank you everyone!" Linda called out.

The meeting was closed formally.

The screen went blank. Linda then said, "Thank you Marie for your help and thank you Andrea for your timely intervention and advice. I feel free and liberated."

Marie said, "I'll go and join Roger, Diana and Klärchen with Megan and their dogs in the garden. It's good with the fire and the solar lights, though it is still light out there, just about."

There was one text message I wanted to send out, shown to Allie and Andrea.

Good evening Bishop Lynton. This evening the clergy of the Serninsea Liberal Bethel of the Free Liberal Ecclesia agreed that I should view and act upon the transfer papers to be left for me in the vicarage tomorrow, Thursday 7th May. I will arrive at 2 pm sharp.

The two of them smiled at me as it was sent off.

Narrator: Linda Brutality Denied (Thursday 7th May)

I arrived at once of Christine's houses, 73 Toulouse Road, but a message inside told me to go to 14 Languedoc Street. This was two doors from Annie's camera operation, now shared with Marie Healand. When I went in, Christine was leaning against a far wall, naked, and close to me on a table were a selection of long whips and canes.

"Oh, I see," I said.

"No you don't," she replied. "This should have been in reverse. You should have sacrificed your individualist ego for the larger service of the Church. I would have struck you in approval, whatever my particular approval is worth."

"You want me to strike you?"

"Yes."

"Why? I mean, you are making your sacrifice, giving up your miniature Church, your ideas too."

"Do it!" she said. "If you don't want to get close to me, that whip is long and the cat o'nine tails is one of the largest I've got."

"Christine. I'm breaking the law even being in this same room as you. Look, I'm through with all this. Once I wanted to punish and correct Allie but I couldn't do it. She now has my permission to take a lover. My other sacrifice is I could have drawn a decent salary, with a secure position in the National Church again: a Rural Dean position to pick up immediately and a likely suffragan bishop role."

"You'd have been the next diocesan bishop."

"Oh, come on."

"They dumped an incompetent administrator and taken on someone more like a bull in a china shop. Your ego has prevented you doing the right thing."

"So my ego, is it? I could have taken Diana off to the vicarage and lived with her and said sod off to all and sundry. And, meanwhile, you do nothing to tackle patriarchy. You'll enjoy everything, whereas I carry on subsisting."

"Then you undress and I will crack the whip at you. Show you mean it."

"From patriarchal guiding society to orgasmic divine revelation. You added the names 'Divine Impactor'."

"I shall set up what John Barman did."

"What?"

"Do you want me to box your ears, Linda? They seem to be useless."

"No, it's not right, Christine, not right at all. Meet the new boss, same as the old boss, in fact the very same. Patriarchal Anglicanism, and nothing to correct it. And this Lynton Plimpton is a potential sex pest if others perform his anus-located duties."

"I can handle him. I can do arseholes. Listen, Barman was a theological liberal. I'm not. Those instruments are still in front of you. You could show your contempt for me.. I suspect Bishop Lynton needs what I can offer. You've never tackled the need for ecclesiastical authority: patriarchy is irrelevant category and a sociological misapplication."

"I'm going to queue up at the supermarket and I'll not see you at the vicarage. You'll be called what, Bishop Christine, Vicar of Serninsea?"

"If they want me. I wanted to praise the Holy Spirit for your choice to be back in the apostolic fold. And you walked away."

"Well, I'm not. The Goose has me cooked differently. You wipe the diocesan's bottom - and no doubt much else besides."

"Jógvan has joined the Albion Church. You know that he covers the Faroe Islands and Shetland. His wife Oddvør is going to leave the Fólkakirkjanboth in the Faroe Islands and join him, Bill and Pauline. But I won't be with them..."

"As you now take the shilling."

"But I do believe in proper ecclesiastical authority and there is, like it or not, a relationship with the State."

"You could be the one ending up pontificating in the House of Lords."

"Then I really will need a bishop to beat me."

"Well, your own ego is on display, achieving 'proper ecclesiastical authority' indeed; you're puffed up for your new job."

"Don't say that. Not without striking me. And you'd be different?"

"I'd at least have campaigned to remove the bench of bishops. They should not be there. Maybe there could be one or two clergy along with Sikh, Jewish and Muslim leaders. Anyway, Wytham isn't automatic. Bishop Derek was always upset that he didn't follow his predecessor as Lord Bishop."

"Sign those papers, Linda. It is your authority to do it, not your ministers'. Nothing will give me more of a thrill to see you've signed them. You could be a national leader, Linda, a voice for the Gospel in all its senses. You could put them right about sex and sexuality. I'll then carry on as an independent. So I'm not puffed up about that role."

"I'm going."

"It is right for a bishop to strike a bishop! It should hurt and mark the body. You disappoint me. Stay and fulfil your duty!"

"Sorry, Christine, but I've more important things to do, like shopping, and don't ask me to share the same roomspace again, not until we can. It's called proper authority during a medical emergency."

Narrator: Linda Who's Signing? (Thursday 7th May)

I could hear a machine noise coming from behind the large detached vicarage, and it was Mo McArden with a grasscutter. Planting and weeding at the edges were Sheila Gillespie and Evie Waite. Both kneeling with some distance between them, Evie said that they realised there would be a big change again at the parish.

Inside I went. The place had been cleaned, presumably by the parish hiring a company or by volunteers. Some books for the study shelves had been dropped in. Leslie Paul's Son of Man was not to my taste. My preferred Machoveč's A Marxist Looks at Jesus wasn't on the shelves. I thought about donating mine, but it was too late. I wasn't coming back.

I looked at the papers on the table and a sheet for explanation.

Bishop (not in Anglican office) Linda Shrimpton. Please sign with several signatures for the appointment documents for the Parish of Serninsea in the Diocese of Wytham PCC and the diocesan bishop, Lynton Wytham. The pink paper statement is for your solemn promise that you will not engage in sexual relations with your wife Alfia Shrimpton during your appointment or as an Anglican clergyperson. On the green paper is a statement that you will not be a member of the Free Liberal Ecclesia or involved in activity with the Serninsea Liberal Bethel, although of course you can still go in there for social gatherings among friends and meet your wife. The grey sheet is for your statement of orthodoxy and to use only Anglican forms of worship - you will also assent to your orthodoxy and standard of conduct at worship services on your first Sunday. The yellow sheet is your agreement to move into the vicarage within the week of appointment, to live there, to use it for church meetings, and keep a welcoming household. Your wife can live in the same property, perhaps occupying a separate bedroom. (There is no restriction on where your wife lives with you.) Your housekeeper will be employed on a part time minimum wage and can rent a vicarage room formally from the parish. You will also become Rural Dean.

I looked at all four documents. Four! A few moments on and the doorbell went. I did not open the door, but Harold Crosland did from the outside. I looked down the corridor to the front door.

He asked, "Have you signed?"

"No."

"Good job I brought these then. I'll read the text and then you can leave by the back door."

"Bishop (not in Anglican office) Christine Vine. Please sign with several signatures for the appointment documents for the Parish of Serninsea in the Diocese of Wytham PCC and the diocesan bishop, Lynton Wytham. On the green paper is a statement that you will not be a member of the Ecclesia Albionis Catholico Orthodoxa (The Catholic Orthodox Albion Church) or involved in any of its activities, although of course you can still meet your former colleagues socially. The yellow sheet is your agreement to move into the vicarage within the week of appointment, to live there, to use it for church meetings, and keep a welcoming household. The grey sheet is to sign to use only Anglican forms of worship. You will also declare your orthodoxy and standard of conduct at worship services on your first Sunday. You will also become Rural Dean."

"That's a lot simpler than mine. Let's face it, she's not married. She has clients instead."

"She has a ministry to sex workers."

"Of course she does. I wonder if she will sign it with her old still present name or her new one? Remember to call her 'Princess Apostle'. I'm going."

I left via the back door. Jim Sayle was carrying a box of grass for the recycling bin.

"You've got the Right Reverend Christine Vine, Mar Werburga, Princess Apostle Divine Impactor the First."

"Is that what she is called?"

"She's worked hard for those titles. I'll walk back to my bethel."

Back there I kissed both Allie and Diana. I said, "Eeny meany miney mo: out goes you," touching Allie. "Come on Diana."

"That's racist," said Allie.

"I removed the racist bit, you Kanaka," I said to her.

In my bedroom I undressed Diana in front of me and indicated she should do the same to me.

Looking at her I said, "You're too wild in the country for me. Trouble is, Allie took all the blades. I want to get vigorous, this time. What a big hand I've got!"

"All my births were through my vagina."

I laid her down and started navigating my way through her forest and started with two fingers.

Concentrating, I heard Allie's voice next to us. "Aardse is downstairs, outside the front door, waiting."

"Better get dressed, Diana. Allie, tell him to go the tenfoot." So we dressed as Allie went downstairs ahead of us. Diana and I went together through the backdoor we used to get to the garden.

"I heard you'd be moving to the vicarage today and have her as your cleaner. But I knocked and they've got someone else."

"Because you heard wrongly. She is beside me. Why are you here?"

"The kids are pestering me."

"Can you please do more than go through your solicitor?" I asked him.

"It's why I am here. So, go on then, what happened, in Scotland? You did a disappearing stunt."

"We didn't suit one another; it was a fantasy. I don't want to get back with you - I just want to see my children."

"You're a lesbian, aren't you? Our marriage produced two kids - well lesbians can't."

I said, "My wife is pregnant. Look, relationships are complicated, Aardse. Diana is bisexual."

"Rubbish. You either ride one horse or the other. You bat for one team or the other."

"You surprise me," I said. "I didn't know you had such a narrow attitude."

Diana said, "You don't know that her father took away my virginity."

"What, deliberately?"

"It wasn't an accident," I said. "So you are surprised at that."

"You said it was Keith Jupitas. The father of the child you lost was Adam Magellan."

"Yeah: they are both still men. No, it was her father. I kept quiet - and later I realised it was wrong."

Diana started crying so Aardse stepped back.

I put my arm around her. "Hey, Diana! Look he's come here so that's progress."

She rubbed her eyes. "The truth is in Scotland I wasn't Sally's only lover. In fact, I wasn't really her lover at all. She seduced people like me from the Internet. She wanted me to go with a man, and the man was an aristocratic character from The Jacobite Gap Years."

"Lord Gordon?" he asked.

"Yeah. How do you know that?"

"First on the list of possibles, that's all. You went on about him and how magnificent he was, when you were reading this drivel."

I said, "Perhaps that's why Sally coupled you with him, the one playing him."

"Presumably. She was developing a group of people who were re-enacting the story. I got out. I escaped to the minister of religion we'd met when I thought we were lovers."

"Huh. Lovers!" said Aardse.

"Come on! We'd gone stale, you and me. Seumas Caimbeul is a nice bloke but bonkers. I didn't have a problem being naked with him, especially as his housekeeper joined in. Being naked was the true me. Linda was responsible for that."

"After her father? Ugh!"

"I was deluded, then."

"Right," he said. "I've had to explain to the kids that they know of friends with parents who've split and joined with others, and some have two mummies and two daddies as well. They think because you've come back alone that we can get together again. I've said we can't. You can tell them that you love Linda instead, even though she's married to another woman. She'll be living with you. Is she living with you?"

"Yes," I said.

"Are you divorcing Allie?"

"Nope. Allie has a lover called Andrea."

"The one who's supposed to have done lurid acts in the parish church?"

"Yeah. In the vicarage, actually."

"Blimey. You all suit each other. You've always been like this, Linda... What's your surname now?"

"Shrimpton, same as Allie."

"Do you love my wife? She won't be, of course."

"Very much."

"You always did."

"Yes."

"Do you love Linda?"

"It's not easy for me, this. I'm adapting."

"You can explain it to Ruben and Luuk. I'll go and get them. You can have two hours. We'll work out some sort of rota. Do you want to go to a Family Court?"

"Not if we can do it sensibly," she said.

"So are you the cleaner here, then?"

"Am I?"

"No, you are not. That was just bollocks to have you inside the vicarage. Just contribute, Diana."

Aardse went from the tenfoot shaking his head and returned elsewhere (at the front) with the two boys. I left Diana to play with them indoors. He was back two hours later on the dot, with a sheet suggesting a schedule. He stayed outside, posted the sheet and received the children.

After they'd gone she said, "I don't want sex now. I'll sit in the Consulting Room. I'll be in the mood another time, for you."

"And me for you too," I said.

"I do... Yes, I enjoy it. Thank you."

There was a knock on the door, with an hour of light still to go.

"Jeremy, Lindy!" I said, through the letter box.

"We won't come in - social distancing, not visiting, and all that."

I said, "I end up breaking the rules at times - can't help it."

Jeremy said, "Lindy and I are installed. We are holding meetings, catching up on administration, getting the technology into a few key churches. So Christine has taken up the vicar role here. I hope she doesn't try and boss us around, being a bishop too. I'm sure I can give folks something uplifting in the first sermon, on the 17th."

"She might be bossy. Tell you what. For your first sermon, let's compare and contrast. We'll do the Anglican lectionary here. We'll both refer to Ascension being uniquely Christian. Let's mention naturism - can you?"

"Yes, and advertise the other sermon. By the way, Penny Schofield works alongside Margaret McEnhill now in Anglican Wytham HQ. It's how I know the Archbishop of All England, Bill Rothach, wanted you in the Bishop of Scredington role."

"This is nuts."

"But now the diocesan has made one of his vital decisions to keep the Bolingbroke name. He hopes Christine will bring the parish here back to some sort of health."

"And yours?"

"It really is moribund. The young people that Jim Wilson attracted have all gone. We could gather everyone into one building with plenty of room to spare. So many churches and hardly any people. I might start a naturist centre in one of them. It's got boundary walls and some outbuildings. Could be a Naturist Fresh Expressions. You'd come along to that?"

"Of course."

"Pity we couldn't make it a team here."

"I had a call from Sarah Deimos telling me not to do it."

"Hot news. Margaret rang me tonight. Sarah Deimos indeed has told the acting Bishop of Tees that she is leaving. Sarah is not going to make a statement. She wants to go quietly. I wonder if she'll be joining your mob?"

"I doubt it. She is not the same as Louise."

"No. She won't have lost her beliefs, like Louise, so it's all a bit strange."

"She might have," I said. "Louise didn't, really, but found your Church to be too two-faced. Didn't you lose your specific beliefs?"

"Still religious, still recoverable. But yes to sermon comparisons. Well, we were on our walk so I'll see you around."

"Bye Lindy. You happy?"

"I've told him: after lockdown we should visit Bever Wood at least once a week."

"And I'll come with you, if you do, with Diana most likely. That would be really good."

Narrator: Linda Those Now Anglican (Sunday 10th May)

We heard that the Anglican parish was doing a service in the afternoon, being broadcast on the Internet and by Sea TV. Having given our service, online, Allie, Andrea, Diana and I put on Sea TV for the live relay.

She called herself, "Bishop Christine Vine, Vicar of Serninsea," but here she was co-ordinating her service with her diocesan bishop Lynton Plimpton, in Wytham, and with the Archbishop of All England, the Most Reverend William Blair Rothach, in Kent. The Archbishop was aided by his own chaplain, the Rev. Antonio Segarra. So this was one local service with opt-ins from around the country.

Christine started the sermon and how bishops are there to consider and to guide. They often turn guidance into organisation, and this is why they were often considered managers. But really others should do the tasks. But she said the guidance wasn't theirs alone, but divine and of impact through the bishops' personalities.

There was a pause. William Blair Rothach took over. I had hoped for some sort of theological exposition, but it was mostly about trying to do online what he had wanted to do personally, and how far the online could be personal. He had wanted to travel the country and listen, but now everything had to be through the screen. "God has yet more light and truth to break forth through our technology," he said, and we were able to isolate and yet communicate in the face of a disease. But he would call upon individuals and learn as much as he could remotely.

What I did not expect - not at all - was that he would want to talk to me. Of course I responded positively to his later computer call, and asked Allie to sit alongside me.

"When I saw you last," he said, "you were both attending a conference and now you two are married! "

"Yes we are," I said.

And I remember Allie for your learning of Gaelic. Recently I acquired a Foirceadul Aith-ghearr Cheasnuighe, not original but a facsimile as published in Edinburgh in 1779."

Allie said, "The... questioning of doctrine?"

"The Doctrine of Questioning. Published in Perth, translated by the Synod of Argyll. But I'm not wanting to talk about this. I was hoping that Lynton Plimpton would have persuaded you to return to the fold. I was disappointed to hear that he had not succeeded."

"The PCC was hostile. I couldn't go through the compromises, get back inside the narrow box. I have made a lot of sacrifices to set up this independent Bethel, and am prepared to continue with its hardships because it is precious."

"I admire the avoidance of non-commitment. The new parish bishop, as she is a bishop, takes the view that you could have sacrificed yourself into the role she has now occupied. I indeed would like you to reconsider rejoining."

"She has the job now."

"We still need a suffragan bishop. Had you become Vicar of Serninsea, you might have been one of the names placed in front of the Prime Minister, should the diocesan of Wytham bolt to Middlesbrough on the basis that the Tees diocese in the northern province thinks he is a decisive manager."

"What?"

"Bishop Vivienne Space, still the Suffragan Bishop of Morchard, is standing in as diocesan temporarily. She doesn't want to move there and neither does Alan Lindsey."

"I'm afraid that, not unlike in John's Gospel, I am where I am," I said in the manner of his own speaking.

"Ah, an 'I am' statement. Very clever. No. How are you enjoying being bishop, Allie?"

"Early days. There's not much to do at the moment."

"Right, well, I'm going to talk to various other locals, also online of course, about being local. Some of those conversations, but not ours, will go out to the public. I want to show that the Church cares and does so from its bishops and clergy. Goodbye to both of you."

"Oh boy," I said, once he'd gone.

"Second chance," said Allie. "The guy at the very top wants you in, and he pulls strings."

"I am not a puppet," I replied.

"Others are, though."

It wasn't long before there was another on screen communication.

"I'm gone, we're gone. Harri and I are moving to stay with Louise. She wants me to join her mob, your mob. You gave me the motivation to finally stop the charade. But then I heard you'd turned them down. Good on you."

"I couldn't go through with it, but it seems they are persistent. Makes no difference. Did you announce your real you to the congregation you visited?" I asked Sarah Deimos.

"Nope. I preached the Gospel. I told them what the Church wants them to hear. I then said in the announcements that I was resigning and gave no reason. I wrote my letter of resignation - technically I remain a bishop here for a few weeks but I'm not doing anything more in public outreach. We're collecting our belongings and moving out."

"And, indeed, Harri?"

"She regrets it, but understands it. She might try to reconvert me, but it's a barren wicket. I'm updating my entry on the Secular Clergy Website, as one who has acted to go, serving out my notice. But no more services and I will refuse all requests for next Sunday and the Sunday after. Hey, they are trying to headhunt Lynton Plimpton to get him in as our - their - diocesan. What utter plonkers they are, as he'd be a right disaster. And he's a dirty bastard too."

"The new Vicar of Serninsea is very expensive for things like that."

"It's why she kept one client on - Sir Sanjay Bunker. He pays her very well. She's lost all her other clients as part of her self-sacrifice, ha ha. I'll be sad to lose all the gossip. Heard the other stuff going about? A certain disruptive individual?"

"No."

"Rhiannon Fleetwood is yet another one to change her name. Everybody's doing it," Sarah started singing."

"To what?"

"Sara, without an aich, Buckingham."

"What, another Fleetwood Mac name?"

"Changing her stance too, because she's always been a fake."

"She once slagged me off with all that crap from Oliver O'Donovan and N. T. Wright about transgender folk indulging in Gnosticism - she got also it wrong by applying it to us intersex - and she used the Nashville Statement. Allie heard her, didn't you?"

"Yeah."

Sarah said, "She won't peddle those views again. They're no longer helpful to her."

I thanked Sarah for her friendship, wished her the best, and would welcome her and Harriet to stay with us if she came down our way.

Anglican versus FLE Sermons (Sunday 17th May 2020)

I had a message from Lindy Peacock.

Linda. I view today with sadness. I'm not leaving or anything, but I wish I was stuck in Bever Wood, even with no one there. It was my spiritual home. Now we have a bunch of clapped out churches and Jeremy has been tricked that he can re-live his dreams. But there is nothing here. He knows it. He says he will stamp his freedom on to the pulpit. So what? For what purpose? Yes, sadness. I'm pleased you avoided becoming the Vicar of Serninsea. Jeremy will work with Christine. All the best to Allie. All support to Diana. Love you. Lindy.

I watched his output. Jeremy was back in Anglican gear, to use Common Liturgies and what seemed now its dogmatic and stodgy sentences. He advised the audience, wherever they were, to have ready a piece of bread and drink of wine that they had to finish in the context of the service. The Eucharist was his only service going online today. His one present member of the congregation was Lindy. Anglican Eucharists cannot be sole affairs, unlike for Independent Sacramentalists.

The readings were Acts 17: 22-31, read by an out of view remaining churchwarden, Harold Shapley; 1 Peter 3 13-22, read by Lindy; and John 14 15-21, read by Jeremy himself. Then there was his sermon, and he seemed to have some key notes.

"The Gospel reading is part of what is called the Farewell Sermon, and this is where we get to the unique part of Christianity. Resurrection is not unique to Christianity: it's Jewish, as is a messiah. It's the second coming that's unique to Christianity, and thus the necessary end to the resurrection experiences. To have a second coming means a first going. He'll come back. And he says we won't be left without assistance in the meantime.

"It's very clear that Jesus says the Father will send the Spirit. The Filioque clause, that the Spirit also proceeds from the Son, is added later in the Western tradition. The Orthodox don't have it, but we do. The Council of Seleucia-Ctesiphon in Persia in about 410 CE may have been its first introduction. The controversy is elsewhere in John's Gospel as well: In John 16: 13-15 Jesus also says of the Holy Spirit: 'he will take what is mine and declare it to you.' Is that proceeding from? Then we have John 20: 20-22: 'He breathed on them and said: "Receive the Holy Spirit".' Is that to proceed from? Elsewhere there are other texts about the spirit of Christ and similar.

"Perhaps this strikes us as angels on the head on a pin stuff, but did Churches split over this matter - at least ostensibly. There was more to it; there always is. But the Eastern Orthodox said goodbye to the Western Catholic on this basis.

"Sorry, but I give it to them, and yet later I'll read a creed that says otherwise.

"Doctrinal games, you might say, but the doctrine isn't there. Neither is the Trinity. The Bible doesn't exclude the potential of the Trinity, but the Trinity doctrine isn't developed there. Indeed, if you make the Bible a doctrine book, then the Trinity gets denied. I have an independent colleague in Serninsea. Check out her sermon today. I'm not sure if she upholds the Trinity, at least in some form, but she is part of a group that can have it or deny it. Jesus does get deified in this later Gospel of John, but he isn't God the Son yet.

"First the resurrection belief encouraged an 'adoptionist' and 'exaltation', theology - God adopted Jesus as divine at the resurrection and so Jesus was a human who became God. Then Mark has it that divinity started with baptism, and so Jesus was always divine and human in his ministry. But then others said he was born divine and thus the Spirit impregnates Mary. Paul in 2 Philippians regarded Jesus as being in the incarnational form of God and self-emptying in the flesh. And then John's Gospel says in the beginning Christ was incarnate divine - a God who became human, and thus no need for a Virgin Birth.

"We clergy in training confront these issues, so why shouldn't you who are viewing and listening now?

"The question of resurrection is often posed as a last remaining miracle, the one that must stay. We recall the late Bishop of Middlesbrough, Dafydd Jersey, who retired to Boroughbridge. He used to refer to the guiding work of God as full of signs and wonders in the New Testament period, whereas we seem to be bereft because we are scientific and secular. They had belief and miracle and we have regularity and doubt. And he asked, Why are we not guided like them? Why would God do this to us? His questioning was thus the other way around to what most people thought - he was doubting about us now, not doubting their guidance from God. He believed in the resurrection, when people said he didn't.

"So what do we do? We were left to the risk of faith (and belief) as he often called it. His main theologians were Barth and Bultmann. He understood the limitations of doing history and so it was all about we secular-deprived today having to live in the effort of faith and wrestling with the revelation. We do this prompted by the Spirit, the guide: that which we were promised in the Farewell Sermon.

"Bishop Jersey. wasn't quite right. We have chaos as in the butterfly effect, but then deep chaos produces mathematical patterns. These patterns interact and produce equilibria. Chaos operates itself but who knows what nudges an active God can make. It just seems superfluous to many and history doesn't do miracles or divine intervention as explanations. History does do institutions and its people that believe in miracles and divine interventions and are motivated to act according to such beliefs. History seeks out documents that record such actions; the New Testament contains potentially records of early Churches' beliefs.

"But, whatever I might think, my task here is to represent the guidance of the diocesan bishop. Personalities matter, persons matter, and the bishop matters. He's here to protect the faith. I'm one of his extended hands, not one of his critics. From exaltation to Incarnation, it's all about persons in Christianity. So the Spirit activates through persons and personalities starting with the eternal Christ who was also fully human. As many of you will know, the symbol of this part of the world, the goose, is a symbol of the Holy Spirit, the part that relates to surprises. But it is we who express the surprise.

"So much of Christianity seems to be guided by the genius of Saint Paul. Actually, I think Paul comes across as a bit confused and inconsistent, in part thanks to others writing in his name what they thought he might have written. He says the Spirit it isn't found in shrines and human hands but then he says it is. Acts and Paul's letters don't exactly always agree, and only seven letters are reliably by Paul. It's the Pauline Church that succeeds, and who succeeds writes the interpretation that matters. Paul influences the Gospels, except that Paul was uninterested in the life of Christ and the Gospels are, instead, history-like and biography-like.

"I'd like to think that the Spirit prompted the diocesan bishop to promote my appointment here. So let me talk about this. You know that I was caretaker and my fiancé was a receptionist at the naturist club where we are still members. It's called Bever Wood on land of a former colliery. At the moment it's out of bounds to many. Had we not come here we'd have been one of four as a household there. There are just two people resident at present. You can see Lindy and me as naturists by searching on the Internet. Don't worry: we only do naturism at appropriate times and in appropriate places. My aforementioned independent colleague in Serninsea, with her wife, and her friend, are naturists too. Of course Lindy and I have met them, as naturists: they are our friends.

"You also know that I was divorced by my ex-wife, also a naturist. The relationship with Lindy and divorce from Emily was such that I was denied Permission to Officiate. But this water is under the bridge and Lindy and I shall marry. The bishop has acted with compassion and perhaps timing. My naturist friend, however, is married to a woman, and to have come over to us she must have avoided sexual relations with her own wife. It's daft. I support equal marriage and blessings. I reject the view that we could end up as an institution blessing sin.

"You will note that I'm theologically liberal and have returned to a more or less liberal diocese, although down in the south we have an evangelical charismatic stronghold. While I was away in my exposed flesh communing with the world, I examined some of my core beliefs and became more liberal; I became more panentheist, seeing God in everything but still distinct. There was a liberal of sorts bishop, sometimes called a radical, who was notorious over twenty years before Dafydd Jersey. John Robinson had a personalist understanding of God. He disliked systematic thought. He, however, always said we must start with Christ, and end with Christ, the heart of our faith. But Christ was a man, truly a man, starting at the other end.

"The Bible writers, and Jesus for that matter, didn't have a clue about evolution, or the various species of humans, of which only one is left. But which human species was Adam? Homo Erectus? Homo Sapien? Jesus was as genetic as the rest of us. If he's fully human, as claimed, then at death the brain rots fast, and isn't recoverable. The miracle of the resurrection, which history cannot do directly, must therefore be immense.

"To me, Easter faith is about him, written by others, because the texts are theological and say most about expectation of change, of authority through persons who saw Christ: through communities and ritual identity using real, material people and happenings. The texts say the resurrection appearances stopped and Christ himself says you won't see these any more, and thus after ascension we instead have a Spirit for guidance.

"As a naturist I find God in nature, but also in people and personalities. When you're naked, there really is just that person in front of you, and you're denied the creative deception of clothing. But, whether clothed or not, we engage with one another, and we have time to stop and stare and reflect. Sunday is a time to stop and stare and reflect, and engage, even engage online. Christ ascended into the heavenly realm.

"Amen."

Harold Shapley, as a server, boomed out his voice from somewhere and said, "I report to all viewers and listeners that I have asked the Archdeacon, The Venerable Radclyffe Solsbury, if he believes that the Reverend Jeremy Symes, the appointed Vicar of Serninsea Marshes, accepts the Creeds and observes the historic formularies of the National Church in England. He has left me this message. It states: He has demonstrated to me that he believes the Creeds and observes the historical formularies of the National Church in England. I asked the Archdeacon if he is of good character, who strives to live the godly life in the context of being an Anglican minister, and is faithful to the Gospel? The Archdeacon, The Venerable Radclyffe Solsbury, has also written to me, I have examined the Reverend Jeremy Symes, and he is of good character, who will strive to live the godly life as an Anglican minister and will be faithful to the Gospel."

The Creed did follow, and soon he presided over a Eucharist and hoped others would join in at home, guided by the Spirit.

Well, to me there was a gap between what he said and those creeds, and not just on a clause about whether the Spirit proceeded from the Father and the Son.

Here was my sermon, with a few notes too, that also went online:

"I could have become Vicar of Serninsea. I'd have said 'farewell' to here but hello to the Anglican parish as extended south. But I stayed independent. If I had have moved, I'd have preached on Jesus giving his Farewell Sermon. Jeremy Symes has given that sermon in his new parish of the Serninsea Marshes. Well, let me talk about the Farewell Sermon from a Free Liberal Ecclesia perspective. You might like to compare mine and his sermons.

We've also done the Bible readings the Anglicans have been doing today.

"The Father, asked by Christ, sends a Counsellor, and this is the notion of the Holy Spirit as the active guide, and also why the resurrection of Christ was a closed, rounded-off period of forty days, to explain to early Christians why Jesus should no longer appear to them.

"They lived in signs and wonders, but they weren't going to be visited any more - so to speak.

"In the story the resurrected Christ had done his job, conferring authority and fellowship by appearing. The communities had been expectant of the coming Kingdom, but by the time we have John's Gospel people are still waiting.

"Thus we get in the annual calendar the uniqueness of Christianity which is not resurrection but the second coming. To have a second coming needs an ascension, coming up ritually this Thursday.

"Personally I don't think there ever was a Farewell Sermon, but then there wasn't someone going around after Jesus had died. Once you're dead you're dead.

"Captain Kirk and the others used to go into the energiser. They got munched up, transmuted and came out reconstituted at the other end. What came out at the other end had all the memories and attributes of the originals, but the people who went in were finished off. When they went in they were destroyed. They died. Even on the strongest 'event' basis of the resurrection, even if Jesus truly died he cannot be continuous with anything going around afterwards.

Far more likely at a time of expectation, beaten men had to conclude Christ was either a messiah to return or was nothing, and some, maybe a few, had visions of him after his death and so their leader was still active after death. From this theological explanation a whole load more theology came about, much of it initiated out by Paul who, of course, claimed to have a resurrection encounter.

"The resurrection is writing, literature, faith in words, about authority and sending forward, about expectant charismatic messianic Jewish and non-Jewish early Christian communities. It's mythology.

"Bishop Allie here is a sympathiser of radical art with radical theology - what is called, sometimes, 'the mystery of things'. And it is about things. She is nodding. The idea of that art provided idealised transcendent meaning has been overtaken by the subjectivity of viewing paint on the canvas from different viewpoints. Also, the Spirit, like energy, has to be in some container. The mystery of things is about, specifically, applying paint as paint, and the mystery of doing art. Yes? She says, 'Yes.' And the transcendent meaning is lost to the painting act that has to be resolved by the subjective viewer, and that is a bit like the observer resolving quantum science. I give you chaos and interacting systems.

"So it is your resurrection, your life ahead, and what you make of everyone you encounter.

"The Spirit is also in the materiality of things. This is seen within what Allie has taught me about gift-exchange through rituals in communities: people making an effort to exchange with others to make added value. It's a theological economics. Just as we buy and sell to increase wealth, so we see benefits in other exchanges. We talk but we get conversation, we have sex but we make love, we give and receive tokens of presents but we get connection with others.

"I'm puzzled," said Diana nearby.

"Well, you put material effort in and get a spiritual reward, although the Spirit does manifest itself in the material. I said this sermon wouldn't relate to people's lives."

Allie said, "No, it does. People get closer to other people all the time by putting in effort."

"So there's a danger of getting all spiritual as if with sensations of things that go bump in the night. The clever part of resurrection is that it is about bodies and supposed realities. Culture and biology go together.

"Just to remind everyone, as I guide you: this is the Free Liberal Ecclesia, as represented in this parish, and there is one altar table here, so when you sit at home with your bread and wine you are crossing space and time to here. It's not woo-woo, but practicality. Beyond this ritual understanding, no one has to accept any creed and you can think your own thoughts. It is you as a subject that realises, resolves, the objective reality. It's your art you are viewing or even making. Your deity is the deity; because the many becomes the one through you, and this applies to everyone's pattern in their own situations. In the end the guidance you receive is your own in interaction with others: your conscience, your situation, yours to work out along with others, yours to gain and yours to lose.

"Amen."

Lindy had a message afterwards.

Jeremy tried to make his statement free and honest, but it wasn't and yet he's had a furious message from Harold Shapley because he says it made him and the Archdeacon look like an idiot. I viewed your service and that was free. Shapley may resign and go to Christine's church but won't only because everything here is so weak. I've told Jeremy. Nine months and if things aren't settled he should consider something else.

Lindy's message told me that I had done the right thing. It won't be easy but our small refuge of organised religion from organised religion will continue to be where I live and function.

Chapter 39 Much Later Reopens

Narrator: Diana Experimental Worship (Sunday 23rd May 2021)

Today was the grand reopening of ordinary physical worship on site. Allie wanted it to be experimental and so there were flashing coloured lights and always some minimalist dance music in the background. Some folk were invited.

Roger and Marie chose to excuse themselves; they wanted to remain withdrawn. Kathryn had the children with her: little Diana Sally Shrimpton, Solange Lott and Simon Peter Marshall. The three kiddies were growing up together. Yes, Allie and Linda named their child after me, because my stillborn had been called Linda.

Hans Meyer was invited, whom we'd met distributing meals. He was an older chap who knew Linda's naturist family at Saxiclite. He'd now ventured outdoors.

Naturists Louise Saraga with James Saraga, Sally Torrance and Paula Campbell came along and asked about the Gymnology group. Linda told them and Hans Meyer it was happening very soon and would involve Anglican Jeremy Symes. They'd all seen Linda and Jeremy's very recent video from Ingle Upper Drain - the naturist vicar and herself as an independent bishop.

Rose Barnes of Wytham Unitarians came instead of invited Charley Darley, who was busy. Paula Mason, the previous Liberal Democrat MP for Wytham City, and known to the Unitarians, was also invited, and so came with Rose. (She'd since been replaced by a Conservative MP.)

My newish friend the Reverend Georgie Smith came along, unseen during Covid isolation. I made sure I kissed her on both face cheeks regardless of Novel Covid, despite Andrea Lindsey shaking her head.

Allie asked her to consider attending with us more often and even volunteering. She expressed an interest in the Gymnology meeting, adding, "I'm still Christocentric."

"No problem," Allie said.

"I don't like Christine's services. Charism is derived from ecclesia and fellowship, it doesn't formulate it."

Alfred Burger and Sally Morgan, residents of the Titansea Grand Hotel, had come along. I wondered if this experiment in worship would suit them.

Doctor Cyprian Laney and Doctor Chaudhry Gujjar were invited by Andrea Lindsey, and they attended with nurses Yvonne Curzon and Mabel Thorp. I think they were curious to see inside.

Linda's contacts who came along included James Taylor, Executive Director of Sales, Andrew Hindley, a long time expert in semiconductors, and lately flat screen technologies, and Lesley Francis, understanding the quantum computer, all at Fast East Electronics Ltd (FEEL). They'd seen Serninsea Liberal Bethel videos. Another of her contacts, Furqan Ahmed, of ConnectSernin, came along with curiosity.

The Reverend Caitriona Williamson arrived and said that she was still interested in chakras. Allie gave her some literature about the Free Liberal Ecclesia. She seemed a bit weirder than her colleague, the soon to be Vicar of Serninsea, the Reverend Anna Ozga. Linda knew them both at the Wytham's Anglican female ordinands' retreat, and so did that turncoat Christine Vine, thus enabling herself to become, as soon, the Bishop of Bolingbroke.

Linda was pleased to see Andrew Walter, disabled ex-firefighter and amateur psychoanalyst, with Laura Kingswood. They'd followed Christine Vine and Linda out of the Anglicans, but Christine going back into the Anglicans again probably confused them.

Labhaoise Vlahos and Ann Dromeghda came along, also invited. Earlier in the week, they had brought in new replacement seats including two sofas, more than replacing those they had taken.

Adam Magellan brought Jenny World, who had just returned from hospital to move in with Adam. Was her secularity like mine? Still, this was a place to socialise. Jenny seemed passive and quiet.

The Reverend Fatima Tamuuz, independent now, was in town again with young daughter Akemi and came to us rather than Christine's church service. They lived in Tamworth. Thus Allie met her distant cousin. Fatima found Jenny for a quick pre-service chat.

Sarah Deimos came with brand new wife Harriet, her brother the Reverend Duncan Deimos and her sister the Reverend Louise Deimos. Sarah also found Jenny for a chat. The three were staying at Yojana's Maa Skelter Guest House - her parents had now put Yojana in charge.

Yojana Asthana herself - Linda said she was very welcome - sat with Annie Fenwick and Marie Healand. Their webcam display had seen them gain consistent and growing income. They were one of the more popular webcam presentations on Goosechat, still owned by the outgoing Vicar of Serninsea.

I overheard Allie agree to be a naked guest to paint Munch's The Scream on Annie's body and Klimt's The Kiss on Marie's. Andrea wasn't too happy, mentioning getting paint in their vaginas and anuses. I bet it would end with The Kiss fucking The Scream.

I imagined Georgie and me painted like that, but there was no money in it.

Mr. Jerry Grant, a customer of the massages, was told by the Reverend Kathleen that massages would not resume for some time. The Reverend Winnie joined her from seeing Kathryn with the children.

Allie's hairwashing friends Klärchen Sisse and Megan Furley had left Dieter and Stoke for a maximum hour and a half next door.

There were four others present we did not know, some of whom had watched services online.

For her sermon, Allie decided to ad-lib somewhat. First of all she said, "We're moving worship onwards today. We are modernising it and make it more connected to contemporary culture. You're seeing this already with our background meditative music, using new coloured lights and then a selection of hymns as songs, really. But the Communion will also be different - you'll see.

"Genuinely, some of us have worried whether small churches will continue after the lockdown and closures with the Novel Covid pandemic. But this is a good turnout! We still have our building, which is secure, and we have had our newer garden in good use. We have good financial supporters, even among our clergy.

"We'll stay online, but physical presence is preferred. Our friend Bishop Christine, briefly the Vicar of Serninsea, taught us the theory of one Church and one altar table: when online we have the divine eternity of the Eucharistic act to overcome space and time. We were thus ordained, but directly we had the chance we were then ordained in physical proximity sub conditione. We thank Bill and Pauline and Margaret Lindbeck for their consecrating actions; unfortunately Christine could not be with us. She very soon will be Bishop of Bolingbroke, as their Reverend Anna Ozga takes on full duties up the road. Sorry that Cait Williamson didn't get the job, who seems to be floating around these parts. What are you living on?"

"I inherited rather well. I like your worship."

"And still we must take precautions. You all came in carefully through the double doors but for social distancing reasons I will ask you to leave in single file by the single door beyond the staircase, that was our private doorway; it's also the way out if you to want visit the garden because you will only be able to come in through the Conference Room door.

"At our re-opening I state that in this denomination and in this bethel it is not for Bishop Linda or me to tell you what to believe."

"Hey," said Caitriona. "Have you with all this far-out innovation thought about using AI in this bethel?"

"We could..." Allie said, puzzled.

That's a joke, by the way," Cait added.

Linda said, "Book of Joshua, I think."

That was one up on Professor Allie!

"Okay. Our coherence is around our practices. Nevertheless there are theological pointers. We agree that there is beauty and we find it in simplicity, but fractal mathematics says that from iterated simplicity can come complexity in a combination of asymmetry. Social empathetic care and attention enhances the quality of life. Such examples form what Peter Berger, a sociologist of religion, called 'signals of transcendence'.

"Ritual is orderly. It's like art. It has multiple viewpoints and stays within its own action. You'd expect me to promote art and creativity, and this is what I want to do in renewing worship. Divinity is actually about beauty and life-quality, assisted by some prophetic figures in history.

"In this denomination we have a plurality of inputs: Christian, Humanist, Pagan, Jewish, Sikh, Eastern. You are free to agree or disagree. We have open discussion. You can change your mind and that's in any direction. But what we do is practice simplicity and beauty, care, and creativity, and we still ritualise food and drink to suggest transformation. We are Free Catholics or High Protestants by our selection of symbolic actions.

"By the way, we do biblical readings but your view of what is Holy Scripture is up to you and your study. We also read from other books of religious identity and depth: we will use the Sutras, the Bhagavad Gita, the Qu'ran, and so on. We certainly will use the fifth Gospel of sayings. We have forms and structures but we don't have boundaries. And that's where I'd like to leave this short homily - with you."

There followed slides to the music on the screens containing slogans like "Spirit", 'Mystical Christ', 'Buddha Dharma', 'Way, Truth, Life', 'The Beauty of Holiness', and 'Transcendence'. There were various images and patterns including several of geese. There followed the Eucharist Service element, with simpler text versions of the various stages observed.

*The bread be broken.
The bodies of those broken for us
Our sacrificial living is our Dharma.
Present our bodies as a living sacrifice.
The wine be outpoured.
Forgive others.
Forget yourself for a moment.
This is my body, the material substance .
Remember, remember.
This is my blood, the dynamic energy.
Meditate!*

There was distribution of pieces of bread, and red wine from a central goblet with red fruit juice from another central goblet to individual glasses. Linda, Andrea and Peter offered pieces of bread, Winnie and Allie offered wine, and Kathleen offered fruit juice. It did not take too long. I partook as a friendship thing. However, there were nearly fifty adults in the building, needing those added seats - including comfy sofas.

The rapid feedback for the service was that it didn't quite work. (It did for Caitriona!) The 'liberal Charismatic' approach certainly did not attract charismatics.

This church had not only survived the pandemic but had shown its potential to thrive. Yes, many of them were invited guests and would not be back, but videos made showed the crowd to surely encourage further enquiries.

Linda and Lindy announced not only the Gymnology Group meeting but a brief summer mission to Bever Wood naturist Centre. All would be explained, but resident numbers would be severely limited because accommodation was in demand.

We had refreshments afterwards, trying to sit with spacing, with kitchen crockery used to capacity. Then spontaneous demands happened. I'd have stripped off and joined a naturist quarter, so Linda, with genuine regret, persuaded them to wait for the Gymnology session; some wanted to have mikveh sessions, but again Linda referred to Novel Covid restrictions. So a number of folks were disappointed, and the police did pay a visit as we socialised.

The place had a future!

Narrator: Linda Gymnology Resumes (Monday 24th May 2021)

Late afternoon I showered with Diana. We helped each other dry and she did like to use the hair dryer across her full body. We added a little talcum powder for a minimal scent. But it was clothes on for travel purposes.

Little Diana was asleep with Allie, so we four took her to Peter's, now back at the Investigations Agency site with Kathryn, to join the two children he had fathered (although he was daddy to Simon only and not Solange). Kathryn, Kathleen and Winnie joined us in the SUV and with a full load we now headed north to the Serninsea Marshes vicarage.

"Clothes off!" Lindy said, as the six of us walked in. Now as naked as her, carrying one of their small towels, I said to her (only), "You'll be glad you're both going back. Is it a month or so to go now?"

"26th July we leave here for the last time and we're back as caretaker and receptionist. We gave it a go, here, but he could not get back into this glove. Anna Ozga gets the lot, and she's welcome to them. Christine is going to shut all but two of the churches; she runs rings around disappointed Lynton, a bit like Barman did with Derek Imperial."

"Which is the other one staying open?" I asked.

"St. Peter's at the northern end. All nine in between are finished. Heritage England are interested in only one of those, St. Cyprian, facing out to sea."

Lindy had been hairy at Bever Wood. She was flat chested with incredibly long nipples, and strong, large thighs. But now she (and he too) had shaved below, revealing her pubic meanness. Jeremy was pencil thin in the penis department and thin anyway. I did wonder if it mainly lengthened or thickened when aroused. When I met him placing crockery in the lounge, we hugged and I pressed my breasts into him because I knew he felt a sense of failure as well as relief.

"From that very first sermon it did not work, and not just contrasting the sermon with yours. The pastoral side was dead, and those remaining did not approve."

I was also sensitive about Caitriona Williamson's arrival among us. "I'd have done Serninsea Marshes," she said. "Linda, I dyed my pubes silvery-white. Was that right?"

"Not necessarily," I said. "White hair on your head does match dark below."

"Black."

"Yes."

"You're so bare, smooth."

"I'd suggest one thing or the other."

The long lounge taking Jeremy's attention had two six foot trestle tables laid out with cloths, cutlery and crockery added on to them. Now there was another table deposited outside, but by whom I did not know. There was a fire going, using a modified coal product and processed wood. We needed to keep us naked folks really warm!

He said, "I'd like to talk to you and Allie about actually opening a chapel at Bever Wood."

"Oh what a brilliant idea!" I exclaimed. "Not just a mission again, then. You'll actually join our denomination?"

"Absolutely. Yes, I've been paid a good salary here but we will both have paid jobs again at the centre."

Brand new to us, Mel Tin and Heather Well, females, turned up as arranged. They were older middle aged, unmarried partners of some ten years.

Also new, and in touch before as a single male, was Marshes resident Adrian Street.

When he introduced himself he asked me, "Why are you smiling?"

"Adrian Street was a glam wrestler. My dad hated him, but I rather liked him when I saw my father's collection of wrestling videos. His wife was Miss Linda."

"Glam? He wore make up?"

"Yeah."

"I hate to disappoint you. I am a completely straight up and down heterosexual."

"You don't disappoint me."

The actual dining room was turned into a kind of waiting area, its table folded down and pushed to a wall. I returned to those waiting there, sat on their towels. Louise Saraga with James Saraga, Sally Torrance and Paula Campbell were in there. They'd heard about Bever Wood re-opening, and the same was true of Saxiclite. I spoke with them of the limited accommodation space there, and they thought they might make a day visit during our mission.

The risky invitee entered: Emily Symes. She was keeping that surname. In a way she was making peace with Jeremy and Lindy. Indeed her attitude had helped Jeremy become a priest again. Emily, however, attended soon to be Anna Ozga's church down at Caffenmere, after finding a new (absent here) partner, now part of the huge Serninsea and Serninsea Marshes joint parish.

I said, "Unfortunately, naturists get divorced too. I did. Reconciliation is the name of our game so it's great to see you here."

"I won't take the blame for anything," she replied.

"Quite."

"The Symes name is as much mine as his. Unless I remarry."

Both Kathleen and Allie were dealing with some drips from their breasts. I insisted that natural events were to be expected and accepted. It was amazing how all three women were restoring their bodies, but I'd noticed how Allie's stomach was softer to the touch when we made love. Allie's solution was for me to go into the kitchen and drink from her breasts, so Winnie did the same with Kathleen in the kitchen to relieve the pressure. Lindy asked if she could have a taste, so two glasses were produced, and Lindy got to compare them. She declared that they were both pretty much the same taste.

I had attended Allie at the birth, in the Serninsea clinic where there was a small maternity unit. I was the mother, as she was. It was a huge experience for me, to see our baby emerge through Allie's sweat and effort. Diana we called her from the beginning, and she was soon given to me to hold, and then passed to Allie to go straight to her breast.

Three who'd enquired and were welcomed into the Seninsea Marshes vicarage were a gay couple, David McCormack and John Jackson, with rather many tattoos each. They brought in the third table, to go in the lounge acting as the dining room. Alec Cheyne, a man of some wealth, was a cousin of Jeremy, creating endowments for good causes, and rather well endowed himself. He kind of made up for Jeremy's shortfall, ha ha.

Reaffirming her confidence among those she trusted, the (retired) Reverend Georgie Smith arrived. Her testicles were low, and I knew now that for forty years she'd never worn knickers or underpants. This seemed to me so risky, but she'd managed it, sitting and standing in front of her congregation at the UPCC chapel, now abandoned.

Jeremy came in to tell us that extra food was being ordered in. The high numbers were unexpected. Hans Meyer came in and said hello, and went out again.

Belinda Jack again brought along her mother Madge and Flòraidh MacLean. Also visiting was Annie Fenwick and Marie Healand, also with a penis of course, but now Megan arrived with Klärchen. I'd seen Klärchen in the shower, with her redhead hourglass body. I was delighted to hear that Salome Lichtblau was looking after three dogs, that Salome was back on the scene as a friend.

The numbers meant that Lindy and Jeremy's cooker and microwaves had been bursting full of food. Two slow cookers had been on the go, and a couple of box ovens were busy too, but a phone call brought more food in via a very surprised pizzas delivery man, whose expression suggested he'd walked into a stereotypical porn film.

"I won't stay," he said in the crowded house, with so much flesh on display. With him gone we gathered at the tables. I stood, with Diana sat to my right and Allie to my left and Andrea to her left.

Gymnology Session

I said, "First, I'd like to thank Jeremy and Lindy for hosting this Gymnology session, and providing the coming meal. This is quite an ecumenical gathering, with many gender and sexuality varieties here. Just a reminder: the naturist ethic is not to stare at the apparently unusual. Folks who've come back after first exposure are showing bravery once again and we do have some local first timers."

Adrian Street said, "I've had a visit to Saxiclite and the hosts here checked me out."

Lindy said, "It has to be done. But you came to see us and indeed attended our services."

First was a vegetable soup Lindy had made; Lindy and Jeremy served. "This now is a broth for people of the bethel and beyond, a soup of God from a house of God," said Lindy, who then smiled a lot.

I said to Georgie, "Pity Charley couldn't come over."

Georgie responded, Linda: Charley was not a relationship. Yes, it's a shame he's not here."

Diana said something slightly shocking, even concerning: "The great thing about naturist gatherings is seeing what I've been missing: I've been missing some cock."

"Diana," said Georgie, "Marie and I here have breasts with our penises, so does that put you off?"

"Nope..." she replied.

I said, "So let's develop this. This is supposed to be gymnology? Well, perhaps we can do some gymnosophy about our trans and intersex breasts. Jeremy? Lindy?"

Jeremy then said, "This would be an excellent contribution. Let's put you on the spot, Georgie."

Georgie thus stood up, revealing again such 'cock' that might interest Diana. "So males and females are born with the same breast anatomy, and, basically, oestrogen grows breasts in women and mainly testosterone prevents the growth of breasts in men. Breasts are usually smaller on trans women due to our broader shoulders and the width of the rib cage. I'm fifty-nine and I developed breasts from my early twenties. My libido reduced then my body fat redistributed. I was very pleased as this happened. What about you, Marie?"

Marie stood and said, "I started younger than you, but I am not yet thirty. I have had enhancements, and my webcam work is to pay off the loan that let me have them done."

"My muscle mass decreased, my skin became softer and then I noticed the breasts growing. My hair thickened too and it is a decent head of hair at this age. I've taken phytoestrogenic herbs, such as fenugreek, fennel, wild yam root and red clover; but even with their use, Hormone Replacement Therapy has always been my steady method. Progestin shapes breasts, helping develop milk ducts, so I've had that. People who take HRT should be aware of the dangers, as in maybe mood swings, possible deep vein thrombosis, gallbladder disease, even breast or liver cancer, nausea and even vomiting. But I've taken oestrogen for so long now. I've avoided all operations except I've had electrolysis and laser treatment for the removal of facial hair. I had voice coaching to raise my voice."

Marie said she had taught herself to feminise her voice.

Georgie concluded her speech. "I suggest I sit now and we continue with the soup. Neither of us two here look like blokes in frocks. I've convinced people in close proximity of my femininity."

Marie said, "Annie and I now live and work together. She's just a mate. She's always fancied you, Allie."

Andrea commented, "Everyone fancies Allie. Anyway, thanks to Linda's generosity, I've got her close."

Emily then said, dangling her soup spoon, "So you have some sort of four-way thing going on?"

I said over to her, "Not quite. Allie and I are married, and it is undiluted, but we have lovers."

Emily continued: "Well, let me be bold too. As Jeremy and Lindy well know, I kicked up a stink with their affair. Barman suspended him and Jeremy left the ministry, and then it turned out that Bishop Barman was utterly two-faced."

"Completely," I said.

"Now they've dragged him back, and he doesn't like it anyway."

"Barman?" I asked, puzzled.

"No, Jeremy."

"It's both of us," said Lindy. "This place has failed and we don't fit. We're lucky to get our jobs and the naked life back."

"What's Christine doing about all her other matters?" I asked.

Jeremy said, "Marie? You seem to know most about Goosechat."

Marie said, "Because I organise Goosechat now. Sara Buckingham is the bishop's personal chaplain, after he was not accepted for the Tees diocese. Christine's playing a careful game as about to be suffragan bishop and she's asked Sara to look after above the casino. I get a salary now as well as perform."

I said, in reaction, "Just a minute. You mean Christine is employing Rhiannon Fleetwood to organise her orgies?"

"I think those orgies are dead. The space might be organised for other events."

Lindy then said, "Don't choke on your soup, Linda. Most people seem to be finishing theirs."

"Okay. I suppose Christine's set up some theocratic society."

"Theocratic Guidance Society for the English National Church," said Jeremy.

"Simplified from what it was. It's more like a think tank now. I ignore it and most people do."

Andrea, not Allie, said, "Something like: Ductu pro Societate Anglicana National Ecclesia Theocratic."

"Ductu Soup," I said. "Marxism, isn't it Allie?"

Allie said, "I swear she's gone crackers since taking Diana as her lover."

"Don't blame me," said Diana. "She was always this way."

"I'm a citizen of Freedonia," I said.

"There's fruit later," said Lindy, an announcement lost on most people. (At the end of Duck Soup, Mrs. Teasdale begins singing the Freedonia national anthem in her operatic voice causing the Marx Brothers' characters to throw fruit at her instead of at Trentino.)

After the soup there was a vegetarian nut roast for everyone, a huge thing Lindy had made and cooked in sections, with potatoes and carrots and peas with a vegetarian gravy. Some could have vegetarian pizza without nuts as brought in. In fact this choice made up the numbers. So I helped by choosing that, whilst having a taste of Allie's portion.

After much chat and distribution of the fruit, we arrived at the scheduled high brow Gymnology conversation, led by Georgie as intended, and her second contribution.

"I gave a lecture at my retirement at the Bethel. I was very critical of both Christine's top down ecclesiology of ministry and lack of doctrine at the Bethel. I promoted a free and full faith as promoted by Bernard Lord Manning.

"I was much criticised and told, I suppose, that I lacked a philosophy or even a strategy of the theology. Was I dialectical, like your brother Alan, Andrea, or was I promoting a postmodern identity - the evangelical route? So I went back to Manning during lockdown indeed, and decided that he was confused. He had no basis for saying what he did, other than it was the right result. He was a supernaturalist, but the right result was what these Church fathers and Reformists had produced. One should arrive at it freely, to avoid diluting it like the Unitarians or getting the order wrong regarding the fellowship of the Ecclesia.

"Manning said history can be used to prove anything, but Christ was historical because he was there. I don't think any of us doubt that much. But he meant the Gospel was historical, and revealed then, and in the texts, and in the Reformation, and in the simpler obedient Ecclesia in Word and Sacrament."

I had to say, "History cannot do miracles, only documents showing belief in miracles."

"But I think the issue for him was arriving at and keeping that full faith, and personal confessions that added into the fellowship. So it really was about identity, and in a way the focus on identity leaves the supernatural to either be there or not be there. I suppose it is there. But the importance is identity, I think, in maintaining the recognisable faith. It is about performance. So I have shifted to a postmodern Lindbeck-Frei position.

I'm more Frei than Lindbeck, I think. Funnily enough, his 1974 book, The Eclipse of Biblical Narrative, was hot when I started training, and I rejected it for its surveying and dodging the supernatural. Hans Frei preferred the Quaker Meeting to Anglicanism when in England, and became a Baptist minister in America and was then drawn to Anglicanism! His Ph.D took nine years to complete, under the sociologist of religion Richard Niebuhr, on Karl Barth and his views as they formed on revelation. He came to oppose human-based anthropocentric theology."

The doorbell rang.

Lindy asked everyone to be super quiet and went to answer the front door by putting on a dressing gown. A local undertaker, Brian Lee, wondered if he could arrange a funeral regarding a sudden death. He apologised and said he'd return early next morning if they were in bed.

Lindy said, "I don't think he believed me. He looked at all the parked cars and there was quite some heat coming out of the house. It's not as if I'd been upstairs! Sorry, Georgie."

"In 1975 his adult education course was published as The Identity of Jesus Christ; this thus coupled with The Eclipse, a survey of the drift of theology in the former two centuries. So it is about identity. But also it was about Churches - and in his heart he was still a Quaker, but for the most part his theology didn't match that as he stayed awkwardly Anglican.

"Like many, he solved a theological problem by dealing in history, whilst seeing that history was infused with theology. It gets complicated, this stuff. His historical focus became more social and thus we get similar to Lindbeck's cultural-linguistic understanding - that we are what we express. So there is history there, and also in the popular identity given to Jesus from the mid-eighteenth century onwards. Thus we get to the Bible and theology as being Christian self-description.

"So that's where I am."

"But he is anthropological," I said, "because it's about how people understood this identity. It's like Lindbeck rejects general culture with its individualism and then produces one of the most cultural of approaches - he freezes Christian culture as collective Church identity. And this is what we do not do at the Bethel. We deny what Allie calls 'indexicality' or the frozen expectations of what constitutes Church. We do something different. We have enough, as minimal, for identity and shape, and then we let it all hang out."

It was clear that we weren't reaching everyone with this discussion. It was good to get Georgie's update, but that is all what it was.

Jeremy then said, "So what she's saying is that her lecture on expressing a free and full faith has behind it an a-historical institutional position of recognition, despite this Bernard Lord Manning claiming history in this Gospel material."

"Yes," said Georgie. "I'm sorry for those who didn't understand it. I'm pleased now I talked about breasts."

After some chatting Jeremy said he would reserve some accommodation for a Summer Mission at Bever Wood, Friday night at the end of July until Monday morning.

"I have a surprise for Linda," Jeremy said. "I've been thinking. I'd like to join the Free Liberal Ecclesia, like Louise Deimos did, and like Linda and her team did."

"Wow," I said.

"I did chat to Louise, just to see."

I said, further, "Louise here joined it when it was the Free Liberal Church. You can join us, Georgie."

"With my beliefs?"

"Absolutely."

We all thanked Lindy and Jeremy for their efforts at making such a pleasant evening event. I also said that we did not always have to discuss theology but appreciated Georgie's orthodoxy explained.

There followed some movement about the house, with chatting, some going into and out of their sitting room and unused dining room.

Diana and a few were helping to clean pots in the kitchen. But Jeremy, Andrea and I told Madge and Flòraidh that there were quite a few naturist clergy, a well-kept secret in some naturist vicarages.

The meeting wound down. There were some smaller group conversations and people drifted away. This wish of Jeremy's meant a likely base for the Free Liberal Ecclesia at Bever Wood.

Narrator: Diana Georgie Joins Us for a Swim (Wednesday 26th May)

Georgie Smith called in and had a late breakfast from the kitchen.

"I don't think my talk made a lot of sense to people at the dinner."

Linda said, "You never know what people pick up. They'd have learnt that theology today has to take into account ordinary secular ways of thinking. That was the problem with your original talk, upon which you reflected. It seemed to be anchored nowhere, the free and full faith notion."

I then said that Georgie was welcome to join Linda and me on a trip to the dykes.

"Dykes to dykes?"

"You could say that - a bit."

Linda drove her SUV to the corner of the road nearest Ingle Under Drain. Georgie, Linda and I walked down the footpath with our towels to the bridge, and sat down on its bank, using the arch of the bridge for a modicum of privacy as had been done before. We three left our clothes and towels under the footbridge and went for a swim south west before returning.

I liked Georgie. Her talk didn't just fit the prevailing wind. I liked her female form but it came with that attraction below. Far from striking me as strange, she was just right.

Laying on the grass of the sheltering inner wall of the dyke, picking up the sun, I said, "I meant what I said. I miss cock."

"I happen to have one," said Georgie, "And your lover here allowed me to experience its use, because I'd never experienced it before."

"I hadn't told her," Linda said. (Maybe not: it raised the possibilities!)

"I'm very sorry," said Georgie.

"I'm not shocked at all," I responded, tapping my thigh. "That's Linda,"

"Retirement has turned out to be quite a surprise," said Georgie.

"Taking advantage of us heathens," Linda said, as I nodded vigorously to Georgie.

Linda looked away as I put my hand out to feel her penis.

Linda muttered, "Forty years of restraint and you're off your leash."

I said, "Shut up, Linda." I put my mouth to her partial erection, and looked up into Georgie's eyes.

"We are in the open," Linda said, and so we returned to the bethel.

I took Georgie upstairs and Linda stayed downstairs.

I told Georgie: "We're not messing about here. Aardse, my husband, knew what I needed, and I want it now. Fucking, Georgie: I want fucking."

She wasn't as efficient as Aardse, of course, but once she got going she enjoyed it, and the point is so did I. For all Linda's hand work and tongue effort, she couldn't beat a good old determined fuck.

Chapter 40 Much Later - Expansion

Narrator: Linda Summer Mission to Bever Wood (Friday July 30th 2021)

The need to deposit the children - Diana Sally Shrimpton, Solange Lott and Simon Peter Marshall - in the care of Kathryn and Peter (working with Adam) meant that we were slightly late in leaving Serninsea for Bever Wood in the SUV.

Lindy assumed that I'd have a room with Allie, which was fine, but there was an additional bed, to add Andrea. Georgie Smith was going to share with Diana. When Allie, Andrea, Diana and I finished at reception (removing clothes), Jeremy Symes, back in his job there, told me that my father was resident. So Diana and I moved our luggage to our room and then I said I would "disappear" for a while, leaving behind my pectoral cross.

Going to see daddy, I was surprised to meet the Reverend Caitriona Williamson. She had made her own way there. She had white hair on top and now wild black and white around her crotch. She was happily Anglican but was trying out, "A spirituality of the dancing body."

Whereas Cait was sleeping in her vehicle, daddy had a small cabin in the woods. It turned out he had looked at Bever Wood's reopening timetable of events, spotted the launch and reckoned I would be there. He soon told me, inside, "Your mother is with Leila in Llanidloes and says they're not returning to the farm." He came forward and cupped and pressed my breasts, first my left and then my right.

"Daddy, you shouldn't do that."

"I'll do what I want with my own daughter."

"Do you want me to help try and get the family back together again. I'd go to Wales."

"You could try to persuade your mother. Anyway, where's your daughter? When can I meet my granddaughter?"

"We're lucky to have so many mums and the children growing up together. They're in Serninsea."

"I'm told you're more with Diana the elder these days and that Allie your redhead is all over someone else."

"Daddy, you deceived Diana. You told her things about naturists that weren't true."

"Which she's since discovered, but I made her into a woman that very moment."

"You disturbed her sense of self. She became pregnant from Adam Magellan, which would never have happened had you not done what you did. The damage you did has gone on and on."

"Rubbish. She's been fine: married and kids. If she's with you now, she and I can go over old times."

"And getting divorced - not as fast as me because they're sorting out the future for their children."

"When are you going to give your father back some of his cuddle time?"

"Never. I think this has to stop."

"You'd better change your attitude soon, young lady, because I'm likely to sell that Welsh farm and come over to Serninsea Marshes again. You can start living with your dad and leave the rest of them in Wales."

"I have a life in Serninsea and it is in that Bethel. I don't want you to come again to Serninsea Marshes."

He made a movement to grasp my crotch. I stepped backwards quickly enough.

"No, daddy, I mean what I say. In fact, I'd like you to leave us all alone. I was envious of Lucinda but I was naive."

"Not how you're going to solve family problems."

"Please leave us all alone. I know you've come a long way but you're not a part of what we are doing."

"My own daughter."

"Well, mummy is protecting Leila and Dyfed is keeping Lucinda from you, obviously."

"Make it worth my while and I'll bugger off."

"What?"

"You know what I mean."

"So long as you then leave."

"Should I? You can definitely come to me in Wales soon, to see if you can help repair the family."

"If you don't leave, I'll tell everyone here with me to ignore you. I'll warn the management. So where do you want me?"

"Not enough. I'm seeing me old mate Krzysztof, staying at a pub because you lot grabbed all the beds. Add him in, and I'll tell him I'm cutting it short."

"He's seventy-five. And we didn't take all the beds."

"Ageist, are we? He's always admired your body and Lucinda's. He's always wanted an opportunity, knowing I took Lucinda to a far room in the farmhouses."

"Call him over, then; let's get it done. You will go?"

"I keep my word."

So it was that the fat, hairy, retired farmer came into the small cabin.

"We meet after a long time," Krzysztof Stäblein said to me. "Open access is it?"

I nodded to meet my side of the bargain.

Daddy lay on a single bed in the cabin, and thus I leaned over him and took him into my mouth, this while Krzysztof groped me from behind.

I said, "I've always thought the two blokes together with a woman should all experience each other."

This meant I sat on daddy's erect upward penis and separated my backside for Krzysztof.

"You don't need gleitmittel in there?"

"No."

He struggled to get up on the bed around daddy's legs, and went into my backside. "I see what you mean," he said. "It's a bit odd, this, feeling Len's like a couple of gay boys. How deep can I go?"

"As deep as you like."

Daddy after a time declared his enjoyment at the scene, but wanted to swap.

"Time I experienced my daughter's arse, Krys."

"Spongey and soft, Len; go for it."

So they got up and switched positions and I resumed my position.

Soon Krzysztof Stäblein ejaculated up into me. Daddy asked me to look around at him, the result of which he kneeled on the side of the bed and I took his sperm into my mouth.

Daddy then insisted that I stand between the men and hold them to direct their piss into the toilet. I was pleased that was all they wanted.

After this I washed my face and my thighs of sperm, and rinsed my mouth with glasses of water. The two discussed their success with me.

Daddy then announced he'd leave the locality, but Krzysztof Stäblein also said he'd check out but only to return to the pub.

Half an hour on daddy and his friend went to reception, and both drove off once their bags were in their respective cars.

I attempted to shake away the experience, wearing the cross again. I saw Louise Saraga with James Saraga, Sally Torrance and Paula Campbell arrive in the Saragas' camper van. They had special permission to drive it into the woods as a place to stay. It meant a reduced fee. They still had to go to reception, and so I went with them, and received some updates.

First of all, daddy and friend were going to leave anyway. Secondly, my mummy was expected and she and daddy had not wanted to meet. Third, Gretta Cox-Jenkins was on her travels.

Bishop Margaret Lindbeck and Bishop Dominic Himalia arrived together at the Bever Wood car park. I went out with Allie and Andrea to welcome them in.

"Oh my goodness," said Dominic. "The moment has arrived."

"Me too," said Margaret. "If I say I've got cold feet, they're lower down than my real concern."

"What?" I asked.

"About these tights and knickers coming off."

"You'll warm up," I said. "And what about the Deimos clan?"

"We left them on the A1(M). They fancied a longer break, having come over from the A19, and perhaps to pluck up courage."

Some of us had a quiet chuckle outside reception, as did Lindy, Andrea and Allie, when Bishop Lindbeck and Bishop Dominic Hilalia emerged, both wearing bishop's crosses like me. "Margaret, Dominic: you cannot cover yourself up with your hands! Carry your towel; sit on it before you sit on anything else. You both look fine, and we have every shape and size here. You can wear a mask over your mouth and nose if you want."

"I want to wear one over my fanny."

Andrea told her, "You can't catch Novel Covid up your fanny," offering medical advice.

"My pubes are a mess."

"No they're not," Allie said. "The natural look is prized among naturists. Mine are only developing back."

"I'm tiny," said Bishop Dominic. "Have some sympathy for first timers, Linda."

I said, "Honestly. Ten minutes among similar company and you'll wonder what all the fuss was about. Your other lot are here."

Dominic said to Margaret, "Come on, Scarper!" They ran off, outside. They'd booked a newly installed glamping pod out in the wood, with twin beds.

Allie, Andrea and I went only into the car park. Here we met the Reverend Louise, the Reverend Duncan and the inactive Bishop Sarah with her new wife Harriet Deimos.

We each kissed each one of them on the cheek.

Sarah held Harri's hand. "Well, here we are. We go public, you and me, big time. Who'd have thought it? If we end up in the Hartlepool press, it matters not a jot."

"Rather not," said Harri.

The three siblings and the wife went through reception, guided by Lindy. They soon went to their rooms, rather directly.

Back outside Salome Lichtblau drove a white van in, and from the front seats also emerged Klärchen Sisse and Megan Furley. Megan opened the back doors so to see Hendrik, a golden labrador, Dieter, a German Shepherd, and Stoke, a cocker spaniel jump out.

Salome stayed with the dogs while Klärchen and Megan went through reception. Emerging naked, Salome then went via reception.

Klärchen said to me, "I hope it helps improve things further, us coming here. We have been told the dogs must behave or go on leads. But we like being as naked as our dogs outside. We have a glamping space in the woods and must find it."

"I think it's great all three of you have come here," I said.

"All six of us," said Klärchen.

"But the dogs are discriminated against," said tattooed Megan. "They're not allowed in the main building and so we'll miss some inside events. People are the problem, not dogs."

I split from them, and found Allie and Andrea coming along. We three found the stream in the woods. Sat there, Kathleen and Winnie approached us with news that they'd agreed to split up at night, so that Duncan could be with Kathleen and Louise with Winnie. These were the only two rooms inside with twin single beds.

Kathleen also said, "Kathryn is worried that she's using more of her milk up than Allie or me.

"That's not how it works," said Andrea.

Nevertheless, by the stream, I took one breast and Andrea the other for drinks and to relieve the pressure Allie felt. Kathleen was just going to dispose of excess milk among the trees.

Later coming our way, Sarah was the most hirsute, mass black haired throughout, up to her belly button, and under her arms. She was the polar opposite of me. Harriet was hairless, most like me and so unlike her missus. Stubby Duncan seemed to be neat. Louise was a light brunette with a pubic landing strip.

He said to me, "Do you realise, this is the first time my sisters have seen my wotsit since we were young children?"

I said to Louise, with a smile, "Don't stare at your brother."

Sarah said, "Do you realise I've shared a bath with all of them - as a kid with them and these days with Harri."

Allie and Andrea started to cackle.

Later, inside, alone, I found Diana with Georgie playing cards in the games room. "How goes it?" I asked Diana.

"Showing Georgie the ropes, yeah. People keep staring but you knew this would happen."

"Yes, and Marie Healand has the same issue here."

"Er, your father?" asked Diana.

"He's gone."

"Oh. Was he easy to persuade?"

"Em... Er..."

"Can't say I'm unhappy that he's gone. Sorry."

"My mother will be arriving."

But when I walked into the dining area, who should turn around and see me but the rather rounded five foot woman using walking sticks. (She wasn't wearing a cross.) "Yeah, I was right," she said. "I quoted your name and why they let me in - rules of nudity and so on."

"Gretta."

"Yup, I'm on tour and looking for various places to stay and I saw about your launch online. And I see you're wearing the pectoral cross I gave you."

"Of course I am. Are you still a Lutheran?"

"Nah, I'm touring again. I met your dad; and now I hear he's gone!"

"Back to mid-Wales."

Allie and Andrea came in. "Allie, Andrea, this is Canadian Bishop Gretta Cox-Jenkins, whom I knew a while back and she was pretty clever at detecting my preferences and orientations."

Allie said, "Linda's mentioned you from time to time. Disgusting theology and the like."

"Absolutely disgusting," said Gretta. "Now if I can't share a room with one of you, I'm going to have to find a pub or something pretty quickly."

"Gosh. Allie and Andrea are with me; Diana is with Georgie for overnight moral support."

"Is that what you call it?" commented Gretta.

"Yes, actually. Andrea, can you sleep between us two, or Allie sleep between you and me? That would release the single bed for Gretta."

"I don't get to sleep with you, Linda?" asked the Canadian.

"The maths doesn't quite work out."

"Well, with a bed here, come and be my witness at reception."

Lindy was buzzed over from the kitchen and was now able to charge Gretta a fee for staying over.

"You don't wanna fuck now?" she asked me at the room.

"Well, thank you for the offer," I said back to her. "It's tea time. Dinner. And you paid for dinner?"

"Oh I paid for all meals before. Actually, Lindy first allowed me to sleep in the hire car. A few people are going to be sleeping in their vehicles these nights."

The dining room was busier than I'd ever seen it. Louise and James Saraga were smiling and Sally Torrance and Paula Campbell found a table in the far corner.

"We've had differences," Gretta said to me. "My Lutheran congregation supported my more radical theology but not the sexual theology. I advocated non-monogamy and sexual touching and toilets that were open to view."

I said, "We are a little bit more reserved than that."

Then it emerged that, to be lovers, Allie and Andrea would have Diana and Georgie's room, so Diana and Georgie came in with us, and Georgie would take the third bed. That meant that Gretta and Diana would be either side of me.

For the rest of the day we could relax. The business of the Free Liberal Ecclesia would begin the next day.

However, there was one more person to greet, who'd responded to a message sent days back by Allie and Andrea. It was the Reverend Seumas Caimbeul, all the way from Tigh na h' Iobairte. Because he expected to stay in a nearby pub, we were naked and he was clothed as we greeted him in the car park. We'd see him tomorrow. However, the cabin my father had stayed in was already occupied. So we had to let Seumas go to recover from his long journey.

Narrator: Diana Spells (Saturday July 31st)

I didn't want to miss seeing again my one-time refuge man performing with Andrea and Allie. Seumas Caimbeul was beyond the car park and in the woods. He'd registered as non-residential.

Geogie was less keen so I said, "Come on let's see these silly sods do what they do."

Allie and Andrea ahead carried blunt if shiny athames to where the stream flowed. On our way Anglican the Reverend Caitriona Williamson asked if she could join us.

"More the merrier."

Caitriona knew that it was the Caol Loch Ailse Coven and members of Serninsea Eclectic Coven.

First they created a circle of divination. It was done with the three of them moving their arms in an imaginary circle. There were no candles or representative objects.

Seumas raised his arms, and called out: "The Circle is cast. O Queen of magick, gather the sprites of nature, to bring about good influences, and bless this place and all that happens here."

Then Seumas paused. "This fresh stream," he said, "could so be coupled with a virgin man or woman, to really represent the new, the untouched, the clear and bright... But, alas, virgins are difficult to find these days."

"I'm a virgin," said Caitriona alongside us. "I've exposed my body and surrounded myself by other exposed bodies, and I talk about the chakras, and the body, but I'm still a virgin."

I muttered to Georgie, "And I'm here to see cock and have cock, all right Cock?"

Seumas commented, "It's amazing how the Goddess provides, don't you think? Would you stand bare footed legs apart in the flowing water of the stream? By the way, I love your dark and light pubes."

"Yes of course."

So we and a few others watched this Anglican participate.

"Face downstream. Yeah. So I think we draw upon freshness using our virgin here and call for fruitfulness, including for our virgin."

Allie said, "Caitriona. Take and bless our athames in the water for us, and touching each one on your pubic area, so that we can do a ceremony of insertion."

"Don't you want me to insert?"

"Well you can but it is a big ask when you are not used to our levels of activity."

Allie offered her athame. Caitriona said, definitely into it, "I cleanse and purify this athame in the purity of the water and into my virginal sex." She said this three times, washing, inserting and handing back the three blades.

Seumas dropped to a squat and placed his blessed athame between Allie's pubic lips, saying, "Goddess, cleanse and refresh your priest in this forest." He removed it.

So Allie used these words for my athame in and out of Andrea, and then Seumas separated his backside for an insertion and removal by Andrea.

Caitriona started doing a dance with her hands together above her head like in a Hindu chant, her feet splashing in the water.

I said to Georgie, "I swear that these people are bonkers."

Seumas said, "As Maiden of the forest, the laughing God of the greenwood, may the strength of the new work upon life thrusting ahead. Bring us refreshing rain, bring us warm sun, for the lifeforce to direct its arrow, evident in flowing water and all the greenery, and bless all the sources of our nourishment."

All four sat of them in the stream. He said, "The Circle is dissolved."

Caitriona rejoined us two and said, "There goes my chance again."

We went into the dining area, at which I spotted Charley Darley, with his healed chest and bare vulva. He came over, saying, "Hello everyone. I don't know..."

"Caitriona," I said. "She's an Anglican."

"Found you at last, you reverend wizard," Charley said to Seumas. So the two Unitarian ministers went off to parley and confer at their own table.

Narrator: Linda Assistance (Saturday July 31st)

It was after breakfast and Allie came in and told me about Caitriona's situation. Allie went off to find her plus Georgie, and soon there was a knock on the door and they came in.

Caitriona said that my pectoral cross between my breasts was shining into her eyes. (I was sat in a chair.)

"Your hopes among nudity are not being met."

"Story of my life, bishop."

"Hmm. And with all that you've said about the chakras, and inner sexual strength, the yoni centre... Whereas in fact you lack experience."

"Georgie, we'd like your assistance, as you realise. I first met Caitriona when we were both ordinands, before being priested. She's still looking for a parish."

"Not surprised. I didn't speak well towards Anglicans."

"She is very heterodox for an Anglican. Can you help her? Roger, my friend, didn't come this time."

"How did I get to this? I used to be a respectable minister, the last UPCC in Serninsea, and since I've known you and Diana I've turned into some sort of a whore."

"Neither of you need tell anyone. Self-sacrifice time, Georgie? I'll make it worth your while."

"Well, why don't you join in?"

I wasn't sure if Georgie was being sarcastic or not. I decided to take her at her word. "I'll assist. Caitriona, take hold of Georgie's penis and really feel its both softness and its resistance."

As a result Caitriona walked closer to Georgie and both stood close together facing each other. Caitriona grasped Georgie's penis and explored the feeling in her grip.

I said, "Not too hard a grip. Manipulate."

"Ooh it is getting larger - thicker and longer."

"Good," I said.

I indicated that both should go to the double bed.

Georgie said, "I've never seen black and white before. I'm just boring brunette, I suppose."

"Show Georgie," I said to Caitriona.

Caitriona had plenty of stretchy labia and fleshiness for Georgie to investigate, and Georgie opened her up for a full, deep inspection.

I said, "Do the deed, Georgie. Best ejaculate on the outside."

So with me watching, Georgie climbed aboard Caitriona, and developed a good rhythm. It wasn't too long before she withdrew and spilt her sperm on to Caitriona's double-coloured pubic hair.

I said, "Wow, Georgie, you've come such a long way so quickly."

After finally rubbing her penis down Caitriona's thigh, Georgie asked, "Are we done?"

"Yes. But can you hold on?"

"Hold on to what?"

"You know what I mean. Caitriona - come close."

She came close such that I licked around Caitriona's dyed hair to consume and clean.

"Coming to Allie's lecture? One and a half hours' time."

"Yes, of course. I will shower first. Strange sensations inside me."

"Yeah, they're unusual at first. It's how you develop them, really, as you experience them again and again, and with different people. See you later. Georgie, show me."

I cleaned her penis in my mouth.

"It's such a pleasant mixture of flavours," I said. "Her and you. You're not up to having a second go?"

"Blimey, Linda. Not long ago I wasn't even sure I could use this at all."

"I want you to have really good experiences, Georgie. See you later."

Narrator: Diana Theology of Naturism Lecture (Saturday July 31st)

I should be interested in this - maybe ideology rather than theology. Not counting Gretta Cox-Jenkins, nor Seumas, nor Charley, also not counting those known from the Durham area and Serninsea, we had sixteen other people listening, sat on their towels on seats. Linda seemed to have a smile on her face.

"I'm Bishop Allie Shrimpton of the Free Liberal Ecclesia based in the Serninsea Liberal Bethel, and I've been asked to lecture on A Theology of Naturism."

"Nudity is something we explore in the bethel itself. We are often nude: in the building and in the new garden. But we also embrace sexuality, and we do not maintain that nudity is nothing to do with sex."

Yeah. I was wondering how often I'd been stuck between Linda's thin thighs.

"At Serninsea we do uphold a consensual, loving intimacy, often non-monogamous, of sharing sexual pleasure. It is more intimate than 'swinging' or recreational sex because it's more about relationships."

You don't say!

"We deliberately chose 'bethel' to name our church because it sounds like 'brothel' - except our brothel is about gift-exchange and not contract.

"So much Christian theology on sex is fixated on binary opposites. But that's not the only biblical mythology. The other is Eve out of Adam as continuation - at least indicating a movement by which one gender can become another. Our Bishop Linda is intersex, if outwardly wholly female, and we have here two friends of ours who are transgender. Marie Healand presents herself online as in between, and Georgie Smith has presented herself as female despite going to school as a boy called George. Georgie initially transitioned at university, and presented herself as female at theological college, and in effect set them a challenge - which they accepted in, really, a groundbreaking way. Except no one said any more afterwards. Georgie's ministry was as a female, when if you didn't ask you didn't tell, and if you did ask she didn't tell. Her venture into naturism, however, has opened up all sorts of questions long suppressed. Doctrinally we're very different.

"The unfamiliar in between is there to see - I'm thinking of theologian Susannah Cornwall's approaches to dynamic families and identities. Georgie when nude cannot hide behind her skirt any longer.

"Let's give them a round of applause!

"My latest painting is The Madonna and her Female Lover, mystical and queer. It's on my phone so look at it if interested.

"We are pleased here that we have here denominational representatives from the North East of England as well as ourselves from the County of Foss. But they are all trying out naturism for the first time: Bishops Margaret Lindbeck and Dominic Hilalia are exposed like never before, and the Reverends Louise and Duncan Deimos are brother and sister. I'd add that ex-Anglican bishop Sarah Deimos is also here with wife Harri Deimos, and we've never seen them in the bare flesh until now.

"Let's give them a round of applause!

"Naturists do tend to be more liberal about sexual matters. We note the high rates of Novel Covid transmission in some of the major naturist resorts abroad. But now, here, reopened, restrictions are personal and optional; some of you are wearing face masks.

"The Reverend Jeremy and Lindy Symes work here and he's opening a chapel of our denomination. I'll talk theologically about naturism specifically.

"We are supposedly in God's image, and, if so, God made nothing more beautiful and dignified than the human body. If we see ourselves nude, then we see an insight into divine joy. It's not about looking perfect: we have it revealed who we are and who we are not. We are not for this fashion or that, and you can't beat what's underneath any clothing.

"I go further than this. Self-pleasuring and social pleasuring enhance the body's functions. We do, however, recommend preparedness and emotional intimacy before any observation of or participating in physical intimacy.

"At Serninsea we have done massages and these are about to resume. They are what they are, but they can be interpreted sexually as well as stress-relieving. We do include clitoral or penis stimulation for clients. These massages are enclosed and private within the bethel. We have not had massage parties.

"In fact we have split from someone who includes orgies as routes to divine sex. She's become an Anglican again, so good luck with that one.

"Naturism may be one means to enhance intimacy. By the way, pubic hair is not a coat: if your vulva is able to be visible, it should be visible. Let the dogs see the rabbits.

"Myself: I'm known for wearing leathers and PVC and they are sexy. Transport me back to the nineteenth and eighteenth centuries, and they'd consider me nude. They'd see my arse, my curves, my breasts. For them, I may as well be wearing nothing.

"I follow my wife in that I don't wear a bra and I don't wear knickers. In fact, I did skip them often before I knew her. Sometimes I will wear knickers during a heavy period. Being CAIS intersex, she doesn't have periods.

"I recall my mother, aunt and same-age male cousin accompanying me when I was measured and fitted for a bra for the first time. It's a rite of passage.

"It was a bad move. Let me refer to these notes. Wearing a bra might actually make breasts sag because the pectoral muscles are relaxed, resulting in greater breast sagging. A bra won't reduce back pain. Having no bra on helps circulation thanks to no straps. Bras affect our circadian rhythms so they should not be on at sleeping time. Bras trap sweat against the body and might assist infection.

"And as for knickers, I claim there is a danger of bacteria travelling from your back passage to your vagina. Knickers cause me irritation especially rubbing against my vulva. Nothing is causing irritation now! PVC or leather provides some all-round support, I think, out there in clothes land.

"But I am here to talk theology and naturism. Eden was visioned as a naked paradise, including the vegetarian ideal. Then, with the supposed fall, it was said that God provided animal skins and furs to clothe us against the cold as well as meat to feed us.

In Genesis 2:25, 3:11, God never even told Adam and Eve they were naked. Adam, after sinning, noticed that he was naked and afraid. From then on biblical texts view clothing as part of modesty and being practical, but sometimes nudity was associated with prophecy.

"In Micah 1:8, prophets were identified in the nude. In 1 Samuel 19:23-24, Saul, Samuel and others prophesied naked "all day long" after the Holy Spirit of God came on them. In Isaiah 20:2-4, Isaiah was commanded by God to be naked for three years as a sign.

"The word of the Lord came through Ezekiel chapter 16 verse 7 regarding Israel, and a bit of intersex going on:

"You grew up and became tall and arrived at full womanhood; your breasts were formed, and your hair had grown; yet you were naked and bare. (New Revised Standard Version)

"But then God gets angry as God says, in verses 10 and 11:

"I clothed you with embroidered cloth and with sandals of fine leather; I bound you in fine linen and covered you with rich fabric. I adorned you with ornaments: I put bracelets on your arms, a chain on your neck..."

"But you trusted in your beauty, and played the whore because of your fame, and lavished your whorings on any passer-by. You took some of your garments, and made for yourself colourful shrines, and on them played the whore; nothing like this has ever been or ever shall be. You also took your beautiful jewels of my gold and my silver that I had given you, and made for yourself male."

"God commanded Isaiah to be both naked and barefoot for three years. King David danced naked in the City of David to celebrate the return of the Ark. Michal criticised him for dancing nude and so she was rebuffed and was childless until her death (II Samuel 6:20-23).

"Touching the testicles of a revered superior was how a subordinate accepted the validity of a statement or vow, according to Hebrew, Greek and Roman custom. Testify, testimony, and testament relate to the word testes.

"We arrive at Jesus, who thought the body more important than concern with clothes, as in Matthew 6:25 and Luke 12: 22-23.

"The last supper with Jesus has this in the New Revised Standard version at John 13: 4-5:

"...so he got up from the meal, took off his outer clothing, and wrapped a towel around his waist. After that, he poured water into a basin and began to wash his disciples' feet, drying them with the towel that was wrapped around him."

"Christ was then not only naked on the cross but he also left the linen cloths in the tomb when he rose (John 20:5).

"In the Gospel of Thomas, Jesus associates his return with a time when nudity carries no shame.

"Further on in time, in John 21:7, Peter, one of the twelve disciples of Jesus, fished naked. In Galatians 5:16 and Titus 1:15 a transformed and purified heart is seen as stronger than clothing to prevent lust and sinning.

"So the theology of clothing is: minimal clothing to stop lust, simple clothing, modest clothing, and when it is right to have embellished clothing. Nudity was and will be again.

"Time for some history to get to naked groups. The early Church baptised men, women, and children together nude. For baptisms, Saint Hippolytus of Rome (c.200 CE) demanded total nudity; women were to remove even jewelry and combs. Saint Cyril of Jerusalem (c.350 CE) addressed those to be baptised:

"You are now stripped and naked, in this also imitating Christ on the Cross."

"Saint Chrysostom (c.400 CE) instructed that the priest stripped off the candidate's clothing before leading them into the water. Theodore of Mopsuestia (c.400 CE) said:

"Adam was naked at the beginning, and not ashamed. This is why your clothing must be taken off as baptism restores right relation to God.

"Ordinary mixed nude bathing did take place among Christians until the late 300s CE.

"Well, these practices didn't last. Western Christianity after Augustine of Hippo developed notions of original sin, and the naked body was seen as encouraging lust, especially Christian naturists displaying themselves among non-Christians. Eastern Orthodoxy, like Judaism, doesn't hold with original sin. It's not directly biblical but a tradition via interpretation.

"By the 400s CE, St. Jerome considered it immoral for a Christian virgin to bathe in the nude at all.

So we can see how nudity was regarded as an ideal state, lost into the complications of living, and then frowned upon as the religion became traditional.

Then we get to the Reformation and Jan Hus, the radical Anabaptist based preacher and his Hussites. The 15th-century version of the Adamites emerged from within the Hussites and particularly with the Taborites. In 1421, the Adamite leader, Peter Kanis, was expelled from the Taborites. The few hundred that left are said to have removed their clothes and perhaps were a bit sexually free. The Taborites had the upper hand in exercising power and the naturist religious didn't last long.

"Other Anabaptist related Christian Naturists were the Naaktloopers or naked walkers. On February 11th, 1535, Eleven Anabaptists stripped and ran naked through the streets of Amsterdam proclaiming the 'naked truth'. They were later executed.

"Let's jump forward. In the 1920s, New Jersey Dutch Reformed minister Ilesley Boone was the leader launching American Christian Naturism.

"A number of theological writers have brought Christianity and Naturism together. The best known Anglican, arguably, was the Very Reverend William Ralph Inge, Dean of St Paul's Cathedral. He was narrowly liberal in theology, because he was also anti-democratic, gloomy, a eugenicist. Alive between 1860 and 1954, he was pro-naturism, and supporting the publishing of Maurice Parmelee's book, The New Gymnosophy: Nudity and the Modern Life. Parmelee was a sociologist who went in depth regarding the cultural, aesthetic, ethical, philosophical, and hygienic aspects of naturism. It's also of interest to feminists and those interested in censorship. Parmelee rejected Platonism in that he states that the aesthete seeking beauty is not a genuine gymnosophist, even though aesthetics comes into naturist considerations. Religious rites in the nude aren't a clear gymnosophy either, he thinks, because symbolic or mystical meaning goes beyond the simple basis for nudity.

"We even have slight revision among the Roman Catholics. Pope John Paul II in Love and Responsibility, published in 1981, stated:

"Nakedness itself is not immodest... Immodesty is present only when nakedness plays a negative role with regard to the value of the person, when its aim is to arouse concupiscence, as a result of which the person is put in the position of an object for enjoyment.

"I've focussed on Christianity, I realise. In Buddhism, having a pure mind without desires matters, not clothing as such. Buddhists want to avoid craving, including for the flesh. What about simplicity via nudity? In all honesty, there is a bias against nudity. There is in Islam where Paradise is not on earth; the female body tempts the male mind, so the female covers herself in loose, body-concealing material. Judaism wears clothes based on general social norms, and perhaps slightly more conservative, but the Mikveh is private nudity in a religious setting. Hinduism and Jainism is more mixed, so we have naked holy men renouncing everything, some nude sensual aesthetics, and celebrating sex as holy in art. But the West went more secular.

"However, naturism is, in our age of the diffusion of the sacred, one of those transcending values that can be regarded by some sociologists as a substitute religion of its own.

It has its own temples: naturist clubs where the sacred rules apply and removal of clothes is compulsory. You become a member and are entitled to privileges, such as accommodation, meeting places, facilities. You put material effort in, and get the idealised benefit of being naked together. Nakedness is a transcendent value. We have practices and manners: the use of the towel, for example, towards cleanness for others.

"Children are still raised into naturism in a setting that has become nervous of adults, children and sexuality. There is and was opposition to naturism, as indeed I have mentioned coming from traditional religions. Naturism was Darwinian before religions could adapt themselves. We embrace the environment of which we are a part.

"More specifically and historically, naturism has become is what Gymnosophy used to be, a practice with philosophical intention. It includes the spiritual, political and health aspects.

"In Germany, sociologist Heinrich Pudor said nude athletics and communal nudity in sunlight and fresh air contributed to both physical and mental health. The French promoted naturisme at the same time. This was in the 1920s. It combined with free thinking, vegetarianism and more radical political thought.

"But, then, what about beauty? We have to be careful with Platonism; it holds with the perfect heavenly, classical, nude body. Platonism does thus have a negative side - body fascism, to be avoided.

"Now we would say - and we do in Serninsea: 'Nude when possible, clothed when practical.'

"What we don't want is nudity to sell products. We don't want sexualized nudity for profit. Clothes do this.

"Bizarrely, we can say, 'When everybody is naked, nobody is naked.' It is a statement of normality and egalitarianism. It is not a reversion to the savage, or idealism, nor is it like the naked Hindu ascetic. We want to be middle-way, ordinary, the usual. Civilisation indoors does not need clothing as an essential.

"It's good to quote Maurice Parmelee from his book, ending chapter 1:

"Gymnosophy stands for simplicity, temperance and continence in every walk of life. ...it connotes a thoroughgoing change in the outlook upon and mode of life.

"Theology links nudity with hope from pure origins and restored destinations. But nudity is really not to be noticed. It is only noticed because others do differently. In the context of them, we are us, and we choose to be naked.

"Thank you very much."

Our Professor Knowall received a decent applause.

Questions and Discussion

Suddenly, on finishing, Gretta Cox-Jenkins said, "You mentioned Cornwall. You are aware of the Argentinian Althaus-Reid and Indecent Theology?"

"Yes, Linda introduced her work to me."

"Okay. You seem to be hedging your bets. She says that the Religious Left has failed to stand for sexual freedom. I think you are too. You married to have a child, instead of saying we can raise children outside marriage and have full reproductive rights."

"Well, actually, our child has two mothers by legal necessity but there are three children growing up together. They have various mothers and breast feeders too. Back at Serninsea now, Kathryn has two breasts but three kids to satisfy."

"It's just that I didn't hear much liberation theology, queer theology, feminist theology, and postcolonial theology. Big deal regarding mythology of one sex range versus two sexes."

"I was addressing naturism and I thought I was tackling the thorny subject of sexuality among naturists. So often people deny naturism has anything to do with sex."

"You've obviously not been to the wilder beachers of Cap-d'agde."

"But I did mention high rates of Covid transmission and was I thinking of Cap-d'agde in France."

"Just that naturist people masturbate and fuck in public."

"And catch Novel Covid."

"Are you being censorious?"

"No, I am being realistic."

"What about Middlesbrough and Hartlepool?" Gretta asked.

Suddenly Sarah Deimos spoke up. "It's all closed down, that behaviour. It wasn't properly consensual. Vivienne Space, calling herself Bishop Vivienne Lindsey after the marriage, has been discovering just what's been going on. After all, I didn't know what was happening under my nose. What was unpleasant in our area hit Linda in Serninsea like a bus at full speed."

"You resigned," said Gretta.

"Different reasons. I wanted out anyway. I was on the Secular Clergy Website. I'm here but only because of my brother and sister coming along. We are a family."

"You hid Harriet."

"Yes I did, but we're married now."

I suddenly said, "Marriage is broad. Mine was outwardly conventional but my background wasn't."

Allie then said, "Thanks Diana. Gretta, we would rather stick to the topic, which is naturism and theology, not marriage. Indecent Theology was introduced."

"You don't do orgies."

"No, because they were not properly consensual and too surface based. We have orientated towards people to people as relationships, one way or another."

Linda stood. "We are not promoting, say, the prostitution that is rife in our area."

"Wow," said Caitriona Williamson. "It's all happening."

"Well, I'm sorry," said Gretta. "It's not happening. You all disappoint me so much. Christine has sold out."

Marie Healand stood up. "I value these latest friendships. It's why I've taken the risk of being here, despite performing on a webcam."

Allie said, "And I have performed. Full-blown pornography, actually."

I wasn't surprised people in the audience gasped.

Kathleen stood up. "There's a now Anglican ministry to local prostitutes. But three of us here are in the Serninsea Vestal Virgins, a woman's group that keeps a flame going for local concerns."

Gretta said, "Groups like yours broke away from Anong's group. Anong was a Thai-style Buddhist in her Danadeha Group. Her name means Beautiful Woman and the group name derived from 'Giving of the Body'. She'll be sixty-two now and breaks every taboo going."

Kathleen continued, "We constantly learn about local sex workers and pray for them, and from time to time do something practical to help."

Sarah said, "Hartlepool had and has a prostitution difficulty."

Gretta, walking on her sticks, said: "I love that woman, Anong. Christians can affirm the dirty materiality this Buddhist promotes. She and I deconstruct and break down oppressive sexual regimes. Your ethos is otherwise. Goodbye, everyone!"

Then Georgie next to me stood up. "I think you've got Indecent Theology wrong. Yes, it includes sexual liberation but it is a thoroughgoing for the purposes of social justice. I've spent a whole career in ministry, hidden. I've worn skirts with a hanging penis out of sight. In the end, once retired, I then had to redeem myself. That's why I approached Charley there, a Unitarian for goodness sake, and asked Marie about her experiences, and asked Linda and Diana here for assistance, so that I could lay myself bare. Literally. They, who were in the UPCC congregation are not best pleased. They think I was a secretly sexual immoral deceiver. But, firstly, the UPCC institution was a deceiver. Behind my skirt I delivered heteronormality, and everyone thought I was the real deal woman. I was fooling my congregation to meet the institutional requirement. My one inner knowledge was that I never wore knickers or underpants - and I was a virgin. But I am a virgin no more. Not thanks to Charley. Sorry for having to state that. And some naturists do find me threatening."

I thought she was going to mention me for a second.

Charley Darley then said, "Marcella Althaus-Reid considered Church on the lines of betrayal until she joined the Metropolitan Community Church and that restored her inside the Christian communion."

"Yes?" Allie asked, to a man with his hand up.

"I'm Henry Hull. Men get excluded. Men have to come to this in pairs with a woman, whereas women can come alone. I don't know about a trans woman."

Jeremy stood up. "It's been an issue of contention in naturist settings for a long time. We are changing the policy. If two men are married or have a civil partnership we will take them as members. We will look at single male applicants but we have to get them to open up their history with evidence. We accept psychological tests. We have to be so careful these days. Children are another contentious area where we accept them but everyone is nervous these days, and maybe with good reason."

Another, a woman, said, "Many of us here are post-menopausal anyway. We still have sex but naturism isn't directly part of it."

"You are?" Allie asked.

"Julie Fremont."

Allie said, "Sex is part of naturism. It is for teenage naturists, those seeking a partner, those who are fascinated by erogenous zones. We introduce a Church to this mixture."

Charley Darley had a contribution. "Seumas Caimbeul over there and I are considering setting up a Unitarian Naturist Association. It'll be interesting to see who 'comes out' and joins that."

I asked, "Does naturism have a theology if, like me, you're not religious?"

Allie answered. "It's a good question. My answer is yes."

"So is mine," said Linda. "It's the sacred quality of what we do, derived from intra-subjective empathy."

Allie had an announcement. "Tomorrow we incardinate Jeremy and establish a branch of the Free Liberal Ecclesia here. It means, basically, there will be a chapel and ministry available. The pattern will be an Open Table Eucharist - everyone can partake - which is a religious practice you can interpret in entirely your own way. Bishop Linda will preach tomorrow. It's great that this place is open again. But Covid is still around so mind how you mix."

Caitriona said, "Practise inner healing."

I said, being secular, "I don't know what that means."

"The inner sacred. Meditate and let the chakras do their work."

Narrator: Linda More for Georgie (Saturday July 31st)

I asked Georgie to come to my room, shaking off Diana.

I said to her. "I'd have recommended you learn a lot from Gretta Cox-Jenkins but she's walked out disappointed."

"Learn what, precisely? What do you want, Linda?"

"She would have taken you to places unknown. I want to play with you now."

"I'm not some sort of play-thing."

But on arriving at our room, with a huge smell of shit from the bathroom opposite, Gretta was in there.

I said, "I thought you were going."

"Well, I had needs, and then I thought, while evacuating, why should I deny myself either of these gender-bending beauties?"

"But you should be as good as your word," I suggested.

"Not one of my strongest points," said Gretta. "I like to be flexible. So what do you say?"

Georgie said, "I'm being so different here. I don't know."

"Then I suggest you stay with her. It'll be new," I said to Georgie.

Gretta said, "Give me an hour and a half. By then I promise I'll be gone. You can collect Georgie here."

When I later saw Diana, I said she should avoid our room for the time being.

It was more like an hour and a quarter when I went back, accompanied by Diana.

We found Geogie laid out on the double bed as if she'd been like that for a while.

"Let me look at you," I said, for her breasts were red and her penis looked sore.

I lifted her penis carefully, and it was also a bit weepy.

"Oh crumbs," said Diana.

"Teeth, mouth," said Georgie. "My balls are emptied. What we did I daren't say."

I asked Georgie if she could turn over on to her front. I then separated her bottom cheeks and the redness repeated.

"Is your hair wet?" Diana asked.

"She's disgusting," said Georgie. "Disgusting all round. Who is this Anong?"

"A filthy Buddhist, yes," I said.

So I decided to move Georgie more to being on her side and got close, with Diana on the other side.

There was a knock on the door, and it was Annie Fenwick.

"I've just seen my mate Marie. Someone called Gretta who's scarpered in a taxi."

I left Diana with Georgie. I found Marie Healand similarly laid out on a bed. She had all the same red areas, as I inspected them.

I said to Annie, "I think I've made a mistake."

Narrator: Linda Sermon (Sunday 1st August 2021)

My sermon was written out. "What I'd like to do for my sermon is discuss our notion of equality of ministry, particularly gender. It relates to Allie's lecture yesterday.

"For Paul, turning to unnatural sex is a consequence of falling into sin. If you don't worship God, you are more likely to practise homosexuality. There's an absence of biblical counter-arguments, unlike with women leaders.

"Thus, when others wanted to reconsider me for Anglican ministry, I was expected to give a no sex undertaking even while being allowed to transfer-in when married to a woman. I said 'no' to such a condition.

"As Free Catholics or High Protestants, we do not regard the Bible as having any special privilege, or indeed Paul - or even Jesus, for that matter; the fact is that I can and will say that the biblical anthropology is wrong. We believe in human evolution and a theology that derives from actual biology and cultural practice.

"But there is a question of consistency here. The Church can change its mind, but can it do so on anything? The mainly Calvinist Thirty-nine Articles do not have the place they had, but they still indicate broad continuities such as salvation guided by Scripture. It's a situation that has tied someone like the Archbishop of All England in knots. He was very kind to me and wanted me in, but in the end I would not enter his institutional trap. My one time colleague, who was a Liberal Catholic bishop, and has inclusive views and practices on sexuality, was able to rejoin the Anglicans because she thinks the Church writes Scripture all the time.

"The priest we shall incardinate today also did what she did, but came to the conclusion he'd made a mistake. We all make mistakes. This Church, our corner of the greater Church, learns and changes. He can practise ministry here with us, and this service is his launching pad.

"So I want to discuss who we are. We go back to April 1914 when a small group of Unitarian and Free Christian ministers attended a three day retreat at Flowery Field Church near Manchester. They formed A Society of Free Catholics. Flowery Field's minister, the Reverend John Stone Burgess, joined others nearby and one from Evesham, but the big name became the Reverend Joseph Morgan Lloyd Thomas, Minister at Old Meeting in Birmingham.

"These men were on the right wing of that denomination, in some ways, and spilled beyond. Christ was 'God's supreme gift for the salvation of the world' revealed in the 'continuity and solidarity of the Christian Church'. They wanted 'ordered worship with the due administration of sacraments' - liturgical indeed.

"The symbolic, sacramental and Catholic movements had already underlined romanticism elsewhere. We're talking about the impact of The Oxford Movement and the more moderate Lux Mundi as sacramentalist movements. Even the Church of Scotland Presbyterians introduced coloured glass and statues! Some Methodists interpreted Wesley as an early Anglo-Catholic because his method was disciplined worship around the Eucharist - the evangelical populist side came later. Unitarians had built Victorian Gothic churches and oblong preaching chapels were turned ninety degrees with added coloured windows. They adopted liturgies, adapted and yet maintained a fairly conservative direction by the Reverend James Martineau among others.

"Alongside, Roman Catholic Modernism was fashionable; but from 1907 it was condemned and identified Modernists were excommunicated. F. D. Maurice left the Unitarians for the Broad Church Anglicans. His Christian socialism was adopted by the Free Catholics. The Broad Church arguably had impetus from the nineteenth century liberal book Essays and Reviews.

"Around 1920 the Free Catholics had 300 and rising members, mainly women, of whom ninety were clergy. The suggestion is twenty-five were Anglican, eighteen Congregational, ten mostly Wesleyan Methodists, ten from the Unitarians, and one ex-Unitarian bishop, Ulric Vernon Herford, of his own Church of Divine Love. This important chap was vegetarian, cycled around Oxford (again!), often wearing a brown habit. He did ordain some folk, including the leading Congregationalist minister to priest, William Edwin Orchard, based at the Kings Weigh House in Mayfair. He joined in 1916. From the Kings Weigh House came the first woman ordained as a trinitarian minister in Britain, Constance Todd, in 1917, whose spiritual practice included devotion towards the Virgin Mary. There was a Brother Douglas, by the way, a Unitarian monk.

"But it did not last. It disbanded in 1928. William Edwin Orchard was basically a Roman Catholic in dogma and practice, and that's where he ended up. Joseph Morgan Lloyd Thomas was broader, if trinitarian, and he ended up back in education. He said creeds but the Society further promoted a sacramentalism free from dogmas and creeds.

"The Protestant Truth Society targeted the Mayfair chapel, and the socialist views of Orchard also attracted a hostile press.

"Some Unitarian chapels have retained 'high' practices, but the Christian side has since united its denominational and broader camps and the broader side became more interfaith and humanist.

"So Free Catholicism is a 'bad memory' institutionally in that denomination because of its disruptive impact. It was divisive, possibly elitist, and its Unitarian followers often rejected Unitarian identity. Therefore Free Catholicism has moved out of that denomination and is now continued elsewhere.

"Let's consider a group unaffected by high symbolic worship. The Quakers have an identity based on practice. They worship in silence or have people stand and give spontaneous sermons or reflections. This draws on the theology of waiting on the Holy Spirit, of which the small sermons are a part. But many Quakers today are interfaith or humanist. Some meditate and take on Buddhist reasoning.

"In a similar way Free Catholicism or High Protestantism coheres through a basic Christian-plus practice, via the retention of symbolic eating and drinking at the heart of worship. The basic structure of ritual eating and drinking can be accompanied with all manner of content.

"There is a parallel with Liberal Catholics of a similar period of time, but they were associated with Theosophy and then a more magical interpretation of sacramental activity. They retain a commitment to apostolic succession. I like ordered clergy as well as ordered worship, but I don't hold to any supernatural or magical views as to its chain of continuity. It really is just about practice, and identity, and the interpretation is then yours. Amen.

"So, using a Unitarian tradition of 'answer back', because what I say is not definitive, does anyone have a comment?"

Georgie Smith did. "I still maintain that the essence of the Christian Bible - the Gospel - was first proclaimed and people gathered around it in fellowship. 'Kirk' derives from belonging to the Lord or house of the Lord - Kyrios congregation. Ekklesia means the assembly called together and gathers around God's revelation. 'Ecclesia' is preferred in the New Testament, and is dynamic. Therefore I maintain that you cannot have the sacramental witness and then any type of interpretation. Indeed the witness of the Word includes the acts of the sacrament - Lord's Supper and Baptism, although I accept the upper room is not the institution of the Eucharist. You're not as hardline as Liberal Catholics but you're in the same territory of error. It's why I wouldn't join you."

Allie spoke up. "We have a more anthropological view of feeding and drinking with each other. Thus, like Louise Deimos does, we can bring in Krishna and Buddha and add to the mix. We also accept all the main secular causal narratives: quantum entanglement, the relativity of space and time, evolution as a version of chaos and systemic interaction, and we add in naturism as a kind of absence of hiding places."

"For much as I like you two, Linda and Allie, you are a theological jelly."

Seumas Caimbeul had a comment. "It's like we still use the four elements and four winds associated with them in these islands. They are a means of symbolism for further reflection. We are not anti-science. We are alchemist in the sense of secrecy and self-preservation, but we are chemists like any modern person. Spells are just means of goodwill, and the important point is the practice of goodwill. So we neo-Pagans have made a similar shift, and why I can be both Unitarian and Pagan - what Unitarians call Earth Spirit as a school."

"Yes," I said, "And you folk have arrived at a place where it makes sense, and that's where I am in this grouping, and delighted that Jeremy Symes is joining us any second now."

Allie said, "The sacred is much broader now, and why naturism has a theology."

Incardination

With Bishops Allie, Dominic and Margaret alongside me, I said to Jeremy, "Please kneel before us. Recite the Oath of Incardination (which you signed earlier)."

"I, Jeremy Symes, fifty-one years of age, under divine grace, kneeling before you, the Right Reverend Mothers and Father, seeing you directly and touching with my hand this Holy Book, declare that I am here in good faith and good intent.

"I embrace the ecclesiastical traditions of this particular Church, the Free Liberal Ecclesia, as we profess to be part of the Church Universal.

"I recognise the place of Holy Church as the crucible for ministering and teaching the faith, and I promise and swear true obedience to the leadership forms of this Free Liberal Ecclesia.

"I shall follow the practices of this Church, particularly regarding baptism, the Eucharist, seeking renewal, performing rites for relationships, and agreed worship practices. The Sacred Scriptures are to be interpreted in good faith.

"The governance of the Church shall not take away my liberties to believe according to serious and faithful study.

"With the help of God, I promise and swear to maintain and profess this faith, and I shall strive, as far as possible, that this faith shall be professed to all who come to me.

"So help me God."

Allie, Dominic, Margaet and I all said together, "Welcome into our Church, priest, the Reverend Jeremy Symes."

Then we made our way from this meeting room to the shallow end of the indoor swimming pool.

Narrator: Linda Launch (Sunday August 1st)

I was stood with Bishops Allie, Margaret and Dominic, with the Reverend Jeremy and Lindy Symes ready to use the steps down into the pool and then walk until able to submerge within the water.

Jeremy and Lindy we knew had removed all jewellery, and all orifices were clear.

Margaret said, "Final part of today's service: launching the chaplaincy. Blessed are You, Source of all Life, Who has kept us alive and sustained us, and enabled us to reach this day."

I then said, "Holy Spirit, ever guide us. We have been participating, today, in a solemn act of worship and now we make our new assembly here, to go out and make disciples of faith; and may God bless us all.

"Our swimming pool stands in for a mikveh, a holy place of total submersion where the old life is recognised but ended for a new life to begin. The Reverend Jeremy of our Church and his wife Lindy will submerge and emerge. They'll emerge to begin the Chaplaincy of the Free Liberal Ecclesia at Bever Wood Naturist Centre.

"O God, you created the universe from a womb of water. You made us all naked in your image, pure and holy, according to your divine will. Each body of beauty has rhythms like the sun and moon, and the seasons, and the Holy Days. We bless God's sacred name and ask for a blessing on this couple as they embark on this special ministry."

"May God bless you and keep you. May God be gracious to you. May God show you kindness and grant you peace."

"Hold hands together, walk into the water until it is deep enough to submerge, and do so completely before coming up for fresh air again."

They walked down the steps into the water, Lindy going first and Jeremy with his arm on her shoulder. They walked on, Jeremy's right hand clasping Lindy's left hand, and then together went under, Lindy taking her spare hand above her head so that her long hair, all of it, went within the water. They turned under the water, and then emerged upwards, to gasp into the air above, and walk their way out, releasing their hands together for practical purposes as she went up the steps first.

Bishop Margaret then said, "Let us give praise to God that they submerged and emerged into new hope."

"Now let us leave here and go to a room nearby. It has been chosen to be a chapel, a space for contemplation."

So we all moved to a corridor, a room door open. Inside was an altar table at the far end and candles to light. A dripping Jeremy lit them. There was no cross.

Bishops Dominic, Margaret, Allie and myself said together, "O God bless this chapel of the Free Liberal Ecclesia, for its service to all naked souls who may need it."

We went in and poured bottled water on our fingers. We then shook our fingers over the altar table. "Bless this altar table and make it holy," we said together.

Wet Lindy said, "This is a ministry I can support with enthusiasm."

Jeremy said, "It's for the pastoral needs of everyone who comes into this Naturist Centre, regardless of beliefs and commitments. We will provide open table services for all here, offering inclusive content regarding both beliefs and gender. On big occasions we can use larger spaces. We will register for weddings. Lindy."

"Other religious leaders and secular people carrying out ministry will be able to use these spaces. The chapel as a whole will be added to the facilities list of the brochure both printed and online. In this spirit, perhaps the Scottish Unitarian minister can do a formal opening?"

"Tha mi a' cur an cèill gu bheil an caibeal seo fosgailte. I declare that this chapel is open."

We left literature on the Free Liberal Ecclesia in that allocated room.

The rest of the day was open for relaxation.

Lindy said they might build a plunge pool to obey mikveh regulations as at Serninsea.

More Family

The biggest surprise was the arrival of my mother and Leila. They registered, and were to squeeze into our room overnight. Mother's breasts seemed even larger; Leila seemed thinner and bare around her pubes - very unlike her mother.

Mummy informed me. "Leila and I have a place in Syerston, close to the Fosse Way. Well, the wider family has seen to it for a simple rent. We are going to view it tomorrow, after we leave here. Dyfed is selling up and he will move with Lucinda to open his businesses over in Machynlleth. Your father is staying at the farm, but I will demand my share so perhaps he will have to sell some or part of it."

"It's all very sad, really."

"I'll say to you what I've said to Lucinda. Don't use your father as a model for anything. He's not the idealist we once thought. If you've copied some of his behaviour - don't."

I'd not heard her speak like this before, and I felt a shiver of accuracy there. Perhaps I'd been domineering and even exploitative for my pleasures. It was sort of pathological; change would be slow, perhaps. At least I'd asked him to leave (but he'd got his pound of his daughter's flesh).

I felt the same about Gretta Cox-Jenkins too, that via me she'd used Georgie and Marie for her own ends, rather as did the previous Bishop of Bolingbroke.

Leila was quiet. All she said was, "No more learning Welsh. But I might go to Machynlleth too, and then I'd continue."

Narrator: Linda Linda's Initiation (Monday August 2nd 2021)

With a room vacated on Sunday to be taken by Diana and Georgie, Leila and mummy were able to sleep in my room. After breakfast, they left for the short trip to Syerston, in the area where our family had roots.

My wife then asked me, "Would you like to join us. We're talking about making us two completely equal in terms of inherited ordinations."

I agreed. Having signed consent documents indoors, I walked to the edge of the car park. Allie and Andrea were in open green and gold gowns, and positioned themselves either side of me as we walked into the woods and to the stream. At the stream was a cushioned and cloth-covered long table with a candle at the near end and three athames laid in parallel at the far end. Behind it was High Priest Seumas Caimbeul also wearing an open green and gold gown.

I heard someone in a small nearby curious group mutter, "Where's Angel Blake?"

Ha ha. She was played by Linda Hayden - not me! - in The Blood on Satan's Claw (Tigon, 1971).

The small crowd included Klärchen Sisse, Megan Furley and Salome Lichtblau with their three dogs. Annie Fenwick and Marie Healand turned up, and so did Diana with Georgie.

Allie introduced us to the gathering. "This is the Reverend Seumas Caimbeul, High Priest Seumas Tursachan, from Tigh na h' Iobairte naturist retreat centre near Ceann Loch Raineach in Scotland, and he is a High Priest of the Caol Loch Ailse Coven. This is the Reverend Doctor Andrea Adela Lindsey, High Priest Andrea Moonglow of the Serninsea Eclectic Coven, and I am Mar Bana-Bhuidseach, Bishop Alfia Shrimpton, High Priest Alice Moonbright of the Serninsea Eclectic Coven. Today Mar Reticulum, Bishop Linda Shrimpton, already a first degree witch as Linda Bodleian, will be elevated to High Priest in the Serninsea Eclectic Coven."

Allie had to warn everyone. "So, ladies and gentlemen, normally these two intended initiation rites would be carried out within the privacy and secrecy of the Coven. Observers are at least first degree initiates, as indeed was Linda Bodleian. However, we cannot resist the lure of the outside and the woodland; but the managers insist that you can continue using these facilities. So we warn you that in elevating our candidate Linda Bodleian to High Priest, some of our rituals will mystify you, and ritualistic sexual activity will take place. If you don't want to see it, please leave. If you do observe, please use your discretion and do not spread our secrets."

Andrea Moonglow said, "This prepared table is for your initiations but it sits in a circle where, to the north we have incense smoking, to the east a simple stone, to the south candles and to the west a dish of water. If an animal like a dog drinks from there, let it."

Seumas Tursachans said, "In your name, Maiden of the forest, blessed Lady of the water and streams, we built this circle. In your freedom among this natured setting we ask for your presence and blessing. Banish guilt and lead us to understanding."

Alice Moonbright then said, "Linda Bodleian, walk three times around the altar table and stop in front of Seumas Tursachan."

I did this and paused to face the Scottish minister.

He stated: "I ask the Pure Life Force that through her power she heals to my touch and prepares you for your change to become a priest of the Coven."

He touched my forehead with his right hand fingers and he said, "Ateh - Thou."

His right hand cupped my left breast and he said, "Malkuth - the Kingdom."

His left hand touched my right shoulder and he said, "Ve Guburah - we can say Power."

His right hand touched my left shoulder and he said, "Ve Gudulah - we can say Glory."

His right hand cupped my right breast and he said, "Le Olahm - Eternity in Being."

So I realised they were from the Qabbalistic Cross, or Kabbalah in Judaism.

Alice Moonbright called me to her and she did and said the same, and then Andrea Moonglow called me to her and she did and said the same. Interestingly, in doing these pentangles, no one had touched my yoni.

Now Seumas said, "We are in the woods. See that tree to the east? It has a certain simplicity, and it has the beauty of form and content, for learning, art and craft, poetry, song, instrumental music. Accept the blessing of the East."

Now Andrea said, "That tree to the south has its life and energy, individuality, zeal, and vitality. Here are desires, passions, and appetites. We love and hate, but we have joy. Accept the blessing of the South."

Allie then said, "That tree to the west has compassion. It is for gift over contract. Here you are one for others, and their sacrifices as well as your own. Everyone is on the road to truth. Allow for failures - theirs and yours - and make progress part by part. Accept the blessing of the west."

It was back to Seumas. "The northern tree stands firm; it is for obedience."

There are proper times when to obey, as in obeying the findings of wisdom and experience. Identify the masters of learning and wisdom, and follow them. Accept the blessing of the north."

Seamas continued: "By the trees of beauty, life, compassion and obedience, it may be said, 'Though the world does perish and falls away, these remain."

Allie said, "Please climb carefully on to the altar table and lie along its length, the athames beyond your head, your legs and feet either side of the light."

Andrea said, "Say: I pledge at this circle and all it represents to be true always to the Art and its secrets."

I responded as told.

Seumas said, "To never abuse the Art or my own powers..."

I responded as told.

Allie said, "And to keep this pledge always in my mind, body, and spirit."

I responded with her given words."

High Priest Seumas Tursachans now declared, "Linda Bodleian, you have now completed the second initiation. We can stop now. Remember that to continue does involve intimate bodily insertion and sexual contact. There will be sexual intercourse and I will deposit semen, the life force."

"I cannot get pregnant. Continue."

He said, "Then stay on the altar. I will pick up the candle and you move down to the edge making your legs wide and off the table. High Priest Andrea Moonglow, deliver the marks of the pentangle from the candle."

She first dripped hot wax on to my forehead and she said, "Ateh."

She next dripped hot wax on to my left breast and she said, "Malkuth."

She next dripped hot wax on to my right shoulder and she said, "Ve Guburah."

She next dripped hot wax on to my left shoulder and she said, "Ve Gudulah."

Finally she dripped hot wax on to my right breast and she said, "Le Olahm."

High Priest Alice Moonbright was instructed to do the same.

But High Priest Seumas Tursachans did not. He scooped up some twigs from the ground and lightly touched me with them from my breasts to my legs.

He said, "This is symbolic pain by ritual purification; and High Priests, let us prepare with love."

Each of them kissed my body, and all three of them picked up an athame each and each athame was dipped into the flowing stream.

There were some gasps from the observers as (not online this time!) Andrea and Allie facing each other inserted the blades into their vaginas and moved the handles clockwise.

Seumas had cause to address the people observing: "Don't worry, they are shiny but completely blunt." At this point his athame came into me, and although it was blunt its point did push where I have no cervix. So there was pressure, and might even have made a mark.

"Your vagina within is the centre of your bodily power, and the origin of all things. We adore it."

Well, was it? My vagina was a pouch, and was only ever a pouch.

Nevertheless, Andrea and Allie climbed on to my body, so that I could see Andrea's widened vulva and vagina. Allie on my breasts faced Andrea and they started kissing. Seumas stood at the table end, widened my vulva and inserted his lingam into me, thrusting in and out.

This High Priest said, "By sacred seed and root, and stem and bud, and flower and fruit, do I invoke you, queen of space, dew of body, in your avenue to your spiritual womb."

That was a neat revision!

Andrea said, "By dew from my holy body, down the avenues, liquids of my life falling, do I invoke you with sacred sustenance."

I put out my tongue and received this one-time Anglican priest's juices.

Allie further said, as I felt his penis continue to thrust inside me, "The Gods and Goddesses be praised! I knead her breasts to make her glad and glorious."

Seumas brought himself to a climax. His semen was coming out of me as I lay there.

Seumas said, "The ninefold kiss." He kissed around my vulva three times, Allie did each nipple once, Andrea my mouth, Seumas my stomach and then on top of each foot.

The women got off me and stood together to the side.

Then High Priest Seumas Tursachans said, "O Secrets of secrets that are hidden within the being of all lives, you have changed Linda Bodleian ontologically for all time. Linda Bodleian, you are now a High Priest."

High Priest Andrea Moonglow said, "Encourage our hearts, let the blood enrich, let the light shine, for there is no part of us that is not divine. But, Linda Bodleian, you are now special: get off the altar table and walk around it once."

When I had done this, Alice Moonbright, my wife, had a necklace for me. Seumas Tursachans put his hand to it and so did Andrea Moonglow. They placed it over my head. Andrea Moonglow and Alice Moonbright only said together, "You receive this necklace as a token of the sacred circle and the continuous interaction of life. Wear it to show a sign of commitment to all the principles and purposes of the Serninsea Eclectic Coven."

Seumas said, "High Priest Linda Bodleian: congratulations! The Great Rite is over. Linda Bodleian, do receive your Magickal Amulets and Talismans for magickal enhancement."

Andrea brought them on a tray and I took the tray. "Here is your wand made of wood, to cast a circle. As initiated into the third degree, you are now able to initiate others, either alone or with others from the second degree upwards.

It turned out Annie had recorded this on her mobile phone. We refused her wish to show it on Goosechat, but she still agreed to send Linda a copy.

Return to Serninsea

Soon we left Bever Wood, and went home. That night I slept with Allie, who told me that my lovemaking would be enhanced forever. Andrea and Diana shared a bed for one night as Georgie went home. Georgie and Diana would stay as friends with mutual benefits.

We had a betheh to develop and children to raise. The future was ours to make.

Klärchen Sisse offered to sell her end house on the basis that the enlarged betheh could be developed with extra accommodation in which she, Megan Furley and Salome Lichtblau and their dogs would be guaranteed two rooms and full access to the garden and building beyond the dining and meeting area. This was a likely development involving financing and oversight by Ann Dromeghda, Labhaoise Vlahos and Adam Magellan.

Many might suggest that the book The Jacobite Gap Years series of books and television is a take on Outlander series of books: Outlander/ Cross Stitch (1991), Dragonfly in Amber (1992), Voyager (1993), Drums of Autumn (1996), The Fiery Cross (2001), A Breath of Snow and Ashes (2005), An Echo in the Bone (2009), Written in My Own Heart's Blood (2014), Go Tell The Bees That I Am Gone (2021), and that Gabriëla Daffron derives very loosely from the best-selling author Diana Gabaldon. Whilst any imitation is flattery the supposed fiction within this fiction is quite different. 'Gabriëla Daffron' wrote:

Book one - The Jacobite Gap Years: An Seumasach Nuadh

Book two - The Jacobite Gap Years: An Nighean

Book three - The Jacobite Gap Years: An Sgioba

Lighiche means Physician; ban-lichtne is a female healer, wisewoman, or conjure woman; ban-lighiche is a female physician or healer.

If there is a real-world Liberal Apostolic Ecclesia then there is no relation between it and the one of fiction in this story. Nor should anyone imply that denominations in reality sharing similar characteristics or same names as in this story have anything to do with each other. There is a kind of Free Catholic and High Protestant group in the north east, but I have made up the Free Liberal Church/ Ecclesia from imagination and only relating to past history of around a hundred years ago.
